minister or serve; it was variously applied and pointed out all those who were employed in helping the bodies or souls of men; whether apostles, bishops, or those whom we call deacons. Some remark, that there were two orders of deacons: 1. Διακονοι της τραπεζης, deacons of the TABLE, whose business it was to take care of the alms collected in the church, and distribute them among the poor, widows, &c. 2. Διακονοι του λογου, deacons of the WORD, whose business it was to preach and variously instruct the people. It seems that after the persecution raised against the apostolic church, in consequence of which they became dispersed, the deaconship of tables ceased, as did also the community of goods; and Philip who was one of these deacons, who at first served tables, betook himself entirely to preaching of the word, see chap. viii. 4, &c. In the primitive church, it is sufficiently evident that the deacons gave the bread and wine in the Eucharist to the believers in the church; and carried it to those who were absent. Just. Mar. Apol. ii. p. 162. they also preached, and in some cases administered baptism. See Suicer on the words Διακονος, Κηρυσσω, and Βαπτισμα. But it appears they did the two last by the special authority of the bishop. In the ancient Roman church, and in the Romish church, the number of seven deacons, in imitation of those appointed by the apostles, was kept up; and in the council of Neocæsaræa it was decreed that this number should never be exceeded, even in the largest cities; vide Concil. Neocæsar. Canon. xiv. Other churches varied this number; and the Church of Constantinople had not less than one hundred. Deacons were ordained by the bishops, by imposition of hands. None was ordained deacon till he was twenty-five years of age, and we find that it was lawful for them to have wives. See Suicer under the word Διακονος, and see the note on Matt. xx. 26.

In the church of England, (the purest and nearest to the apostolic model in doctrine and discipline of all national churches) a deacon receives ordination by the imposition of the hands of a bishop, in consequence of which he can preach, assist in the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and in general perform any sacred office except consecrating the elements, and pronouncing the absolution. No person in this church can be ordained deacon, till he be twenty-three years of age, unless by dispensation from the Abp. of Canterbury. There were deaconnesses both in the apostolic and primitive church who had principally the care of the women; and visited and ministered to them in those circumstances in which it would have been improper for a deacon to attend. They also assisted in preparing the female candidates for baptism.

At present, the office for which the seven deacons were appointed, is, in the church of England, filled by the church-wardens and overseers of the poor; in other churches and religious socities, by elders, stewards, &c. chosen by the people, and appointed by the minister.

Verse 5. Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost] A person every way properly fitted for his work; and thus qualified to be the first martyr of the Christian church.

Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch] A heathen Greek, who had not only believed in the God of Israel, but had also received circumcision; and consequently, was a proselyte of the covenant; for had he been only a proselyte of the gate, the Jews could not have associated with him. On the word proselyte, see the note on Exod. xii. 43. As this is the only proselyte mentioned here, we may presume that all the rest were native Jews. From this Nicolas, it is supposed that the sect called Nicolaitans, mentioned Rev. ii. 6, 15. derived their origin. Dr. Lightfoot doubts this, and rather inclines to derive the name "from ניכולא nicola, let us eat together; those brutes encouraging each other to eat meats offered to idols, like those in Isai. xxii. 13. who said let us eat flesh and drink wine, &c." Both Irenæus and Epiphanius derive this sect from Nicolas the deacon. Clemens Alexandrinus gives this Nicolas a good character, even while he allows that the sect who taught the community of wives, pretended to derive their origin from him. See on Rev. ii. 6.

Verse 6. And when they had prayed] Instead of και and, the Codex Bezæ reads οτινες who, referring the act of praying to the apostles, which removes a sort of ambiguity. The apostles prayed for these persons, that they might in every respect be qualified for their office, and be made successful in it. And when they had done this, they laid their hands upon them; and by this rite, appointed them to their office. So then, it plainly appears that the choice of the church was not sufficient: nor did the church think it sufficient; but as they knew their own members best, the apostles directed them, ver. 3. to choose those persons whom they deemed best qualified according to the criterion laid down by the apostles themselves, that they should be of honest report, and full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom. Let us examine the process of this business. 1. There was an evident necessity that there should be more helpers in this blessed work. 2. The apostles called the disciples together, that they might consider of this necessity, and provide for it, ver. 3. 3. They directed the disciples to choose out, from among themselves such persons as they judged the most proper for the work. 4. They gave them the criterion, by which their choice should be directed; not any man, not every man, not their nearest relative, or best beloved friend; but such as were of honest report, whose public character was known to be unblemished; and men, who were full of the Holy Ghost, the influence of which would keep all right within, and direct their hearts into all truth; and men, who were known to be men of prudence and economy, for not every good and pious man may be proper for such a work. 5. Seven persons being chosen by the disciples according to this criterion, are presented to the apostles for their approbation and confirmation. 6. The apostles, receiving them from the hands of the church, consecrated them to God by prayer, imploring his blessing on them and their labour. 7. When this was done, they laid their hands upon them in the presence of the disciples, and thus appointed them to this sacred and important work: for it is evident they did not get their commission merely to serve tables, but to proclaim, in connexion with and under the direction of the apostles, the word of life. Let no man say, that any of the things here enumerated was unnecessary; and let no church pretend or affect to do without them. 1. No preacher or minister should be provided till there is a place for him to labour in, and necessity for his labour. 2. Let none be imposed upon the church of Christ who is not of that church; well known and fully approved by that branch of it with which he was connected. 3. Let none be sent to publish salvation from sin, and the necessity of a holy life, whose moral character cannot bear the strictest scrutiny among his neighbours and acquaintance. 4. Let none, however moral, or well reported of, be sent to convert souls, who has not the most solid reason to believe that he is moved thereto by the Holy Ghost. 5. Let those who have the power to appoint, see that the person be a man of wisdom, i. e. sound understanding; for a witling or a blockhead, however upright, will never make a Christian minister: and that he be a man of prudence, knowing how to direct his own concerns, and those of the church of God, with discretion. 6. Let no private person, nor number of private members in a church, presume to authorize such a person, though in every way qualified to preach the gospel; for even the 120 primitive disciples did not arrogate this to themselves 7. Let the person be brought to those, to whom God has given authority in the church; and let them, after most solemnly invoking God, lay their hands upon him, according to the primitive and apostolic plan, and thus devote him to the work of the ministry. 8. Let such an one from that moment consider himself the property of God and his church, and devote all his time, talents, and powers, to convert sinners, and build up believers in their most holy faith. 9. And let the church of God consider such a person as legitimately and divinely sent; and receive him as the ambassador of Christ.

Verse 7. The word of God increased] By such preachers as the apostles and these deacons, no wonder the doctrine of God increased, became widely diffused and generally known; in consequence of which, the number of the disciples must be greatly multiplied: for God will ever bless his own word, when ministered by those whom he has qualified to proclaim it.

A great company of the priests were obedient to the faith.] This was one of the greatest miracles wrought by the grace of Christ: that persons so intent on the destruction of Christ, his apostles, and his doctrine, should at last espouse that doctrine, is astonishing; and that they who had withstood the evidence of the miracle of Christ should have yielded to the doctrine of his death and resurrection, is worthy of note. And from this we may learn, that it is not by miracles that sinners are to be converted unto God, but by the preaching of Christ dying for their offences, and rising again for their justification.

Instead of Ἱερεων priests, a few MSS. and the Syriac, read Ιουδαιων Jews; for the copyists seem to be struck here with two difficulties. 1. That such persons as these priests could be converted. 2. That the word οχλος company, or multitude, could with propriety be applied to this class, which must have been inconsiderable in their numbers, when compared with the rest of the Jews. To preserve the ancient reading, which is undoubtedly genuine, some have altered the text by conjecture; and by putting a comma after οχλος, and a και before των ἱερεων, make the text read thus: And a great multitude, and some of the priests, were obedient to the faith. This conjecture is unnecessary, as there is no such difficulty here, as to require so desperate an expedient, which is not recommended by the evidence of a single MS. or Ver-

In the twenty-four courses of priests, there was not a multitude merely, but multitudes; indeed the number of ecclesiastics at Jerusalem was enormous. A great company out of these might be converted, and yet multitudes be left behind.

Verse 8. Stephen, full of faith and power] Instead of faith, πιστεως; χαριτος grace, is the reading of ABD. several others, the Syriac of Erpen, the Coptic, Armenian, Vulgate, and some of the Fathers. This reading Griesbach has admitted into the text. Some MSS. join both readings. Stephen was full of faith, gave unlimited credence to the promises of his Lord: he was full of grace; receiving the fulfilment of those promises, he enjoyed much of the unction of the Divine Spirit; and much of the favour of his God; and in consequence, he was full of power, δυναμεως of the divine energy, by which he was enabled to work great wonders and miracles among the people.

Verse 9. The synagogue—of the Libertines, &c.] That Jews and proselytes from various countries had now come up to Jerusalem to bring offerings, and to attend the feast of pentecost, we have already seen, chap. ii. The persons mentioned here, were foreign Jews, who appear to have had a synagogue peculiar to themselves at Jerusalem, in which they were accustomed to worship when they came to the public festivals.

Various opinions have been entertained concerning the Libertines mentioned here: Bp. Pearce's view of the subject appears to me to be the most correct.

"It is commonly thought, that by this name is meant the sons of such Jews as had been slaves, and obtained their freedom by the favour of their masters: but it is to be observed, that with these Libertines, the Cyrenians and Alexandrians, are here joined as having one and the same synagogue for their public worship. And it being known that the Cyrenians (ch. ii. 10.) lived in Lybia, and the Alexandrians in the neighbourhood of it; it is most natural to look for the Libertines too in that part of the world. Accordingly we find Suidas, in his Lexicon, saying, upon the word Λιβερτῖνοι, that it is ονομα του ἐθνους, the name of a people. And in Gest. Collationis Carthagini habitæ inter Catholicos et Donatistas; published with Optatus's works, Paris, 1679, (No. 201. and p. 57) we have these words: Victor episcopus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ LIBERTINENSIS dixit, Unitas est illic; publicam non latet conscientiam. Unity is there: all the world knows it. From these two passages it appears, that there was in Lybia a town or district called Libertina, whose inhabitants bore the name of Λιβερτινοι Libertines, when Christianity prevailed there. They had an episcopal see among them, and the above mentioned Victor was their bishop at the council of Carthage, in the reign of the Emperor Honorius. And from hence it seems probable that the town or district, and the people, existed in the time of which Luke is here speaking. They were Jews (no doubt), and came up as the Cyrenian and Alexandrian Jews did, to bring their offerings to Jerusalem, and to worship God in the temple there. Cunæus, in his Rep. Hebr. ii. 23. says, that the Jews who lived in Alexandria and Lybia, and all other Jews who lived out of the Holy Land, except those of Babylon and its neighbourhood, were held in great contempt by the Jews who inhabited Jerusalem and Judea; partly on account of their quitting their proper country, and partly on account of their using the Greek language, and being quite ignorant of the other. For these reasons it seems probable that the Libertines, Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, had a separate synagogue (as perhaps the Cilicians and those of Asia had); the Jews of Jerusalem not suffering them to be present in their synagogues, or they not choosing to perform their public service in synagogues where a language was used which they did not understand."

It is supposed also, that these synagogues had theological, if not philosophical schools attached to them; and that it was the disciples or scholars of these schools who came forward to dispute with Stephen; and were enraged, because they were confounded. For it is not an uncommon custom with those who have a bad cause, which can neither stand the test of scripture nor reason, to endeavour to support it by physical when logical force has failed; and thus "Prove their doctrine orthodox,

"By apostolic blows and knocks."

In the reign of Queen Mary, when popery prevailed in this country, and the simplest women who had read the Bible were an overmatch for the greatest of the popish doctors; as they had neither scripture nor reason to allege, they burned them alive, and thus terminated a controversy which they were unable to maintain. The same cause will ever produce the same effect: the Libertines, Cicilians, Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, pursued this course: Stephen confounded them by Scripture and reason; and they beat his brains out with stones! This was the most effectual way to silence a disputant, whose wisdom they could not resist. In the same way were the Protestants treated, when by Scripture and reason they had shewn the absurdity and wickedness of that antichristian system, which the fire and the sword were brought forth to establish. These persecutors professed great concern at first for the souls of those whom they variously tortured, and at last burned: but their tender mercies were cruel, and when they gave up the body to the flames, they most heartily consigned the soul to Satan. Scires è sanguine natos: their conduct proclaimed their genealogy.

Verse 10. They were not able to resist the wisdom, &c.] He was wise, well exercised, and experienced in divine things; and, as appears by his defence, in the following chapter, well versed in the Jewish history. The spirit by which he spake, was the Holy Spirit, and its power was irresistible. They were obliged either to yield to its teachings, or were confounded by its truth. Several MSS. add to this verse, because he reproved them with boldness, they could not resist the truth. This reading is not genuine, though it exists (but in different forms) in some good MSS.

Verse 11. Then they suborned men] Ὑπεβαλον they made under-hand work; got associated to themselves profligate persons, who for money would swear any thing.

Blasphemous words against Moses, and against God,] This was the most deadly charge they could bring against him. We have already seen, Matt. ix. 4. that blasphemy, when against GOD, signifies speaking impiously of his nature, attributes, or, works; and when against men, it signifies speaking injuriously of their character, blasting their reputation, &c. These false witnesses came to prove that he had blasphemed Moses, by representing him as an impostor, or the like; and GOD, by either denying his being, his providence, the justice of his government, &c.

Verse 12. And they] The Libertines, &c. mentioned before, stirred up the people; raised a mob against him; and, to assist and countenance the mob, got the elders and scribes to conduct it, who thus made themselves one with the beasts of the people, whom they collected; and then, all together, without law or form of justice, rushed on the good man, seized him, and brought him to a council, who, though they sat in the seat of judgment, were ready for every evil work.

Verse 13. Against this holy place] The temple, that it shall be destroyed.

And the law] That it cannot give life, nor save from death. It is very likely that they had heard him speak words to this amount, which were all as true as the Spirit from which they proceeded; but they gave them a very false colouring, as we see in the succeeding verse.

Verse 15. Saw his face as it had been the face of an angel.] Sayings like this are frequent among the Jewish writers, who represent God as distinguishing eminent men, by causing a glory to shine from their faces. Rabbi Gedalia said, that "when Moses and Aaron came before Pharaoh, they appeared like those angels which minister before the face of the Lord: for their stature appeared greater, and the splendour of their face was like the sun, and their eyes like the wheels of the sun; their beards like clusters of grapes, and their words like thunder and lightning; and that through fear of them, those who were present fell to the earth."

The like is said of Moses, in Debarim Rabba, fol. 75. that "when Sammael (Satan) came to Moses, the splendour of his face was like the sun; and himself resembled an angel of God." The Reader may find several similar sayings in Schoettgen.

It appears that the light and power of God which dwelt in his soul, shone through his face; and God gave them this proof of the falsity of the testimony which was now before them: for as the face of Stephen now shone as the face of Moses did when he came down from the Mount, it was the fullest proof that he had neither spoken blasphemous words, either against Moses or God; else this splendour of heaven had not rested upon him.

The history of the apostolic church is a series of wonders. Every thing that could prevent such a church from being established, or could overthrow it when established, is brought to bear against it. The instruments employed in its erection and defence, had neither might nor power, but what came immediately from God. They work, and God works with them: the church is founded and built up, and its adversaries, with every advantage in their favour, cannot overthrow it. Is it possible to look at this, without seeing the mighty hand of God in the whole! He permits devils and wicked men to work, to avail themselves of all their advantages; yet counterworks all their plots and designs, turns their weapons against themselves, and promotes his cause by the very means that were used to destroy it. How true is the saying, there is neither might nor counsel against the Lord.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. Are these things so?] Hast thou predicted the destruction of the temple? And hast thou said that Jesus of Nazareth shall change our customs, abolish our religious rites and temple-service? Hast thou spoken these blasphemous things against Moses, and against God? Here was some colour of justice: for Stephen was permitted to defend himself. And in order to do this, he thought it best to enter into a detail of their history from the commencement of their nation; and thus shew how kindly God had dealt with them, and how ungraciously they and their fathers had requited Him. And all this naturally led him to the conclusion, that God could no longer bear with a people, the cup of whose iniquity had been long overflowing; and therefore they might expect to find wrath, without mixture of mercy.

But how could St. Luke get all this circumstantial account? 1. He might have been present, and heard the whole; or, more probably, he had the account from St. Paul, whose companion he was, and who was certainly present when St. Stephen was judged and stoned, for he was consenting to his death, and kept the clothes of them who stoned him. See chap. vii. 58. viii. 1. and xxii. 20.

Verse 2. Men, brethren, and fathers] Rather, brethren and fathers, for ανδρες should not be translated separately from αδελφοι. Literally it is men-brethren, a very usual form in Greek; for every person knows that ανδρες Αθηναιοι and ανδρες Περσαι should not be translated men-Athenians and men-Persians, but simply Athenians and Persians. See Acts xvii. 22. So in Luke ii. 15. ανθρωποι ποιμενες should be translated shepherds, not men-shepherds. And ανθρωπος βασιλευς, Matt. xviii. 23. should not be translated man king, but king, simply. By translating as we do, men, brethren, and fathers, and putting a comma after men, we make Stephen address three classes, when in fact there were but two, the elders and scribes, whom he addressed as fathers; and the common people, whom he calls brethren. See Bp. Pearce and see chap. viii. 27.

The God of glory appeared, &c.] As Stephen was now vindicating himself from the false charges brought against him, he shews that he had uttered no blasphemy, either against God, Moses, or the temple; but states, that his accusers, and the Jews in general, were guilty of the faults with which they charged him. That they had from the beginning rejected and despised Moses, and had always violated his laws. He proceeds to state that there is no blasphemy in saying that the temple shall be destroyed: they had been without a temple till the days of David; nor does God ever confine himself to temples built by hands, seeing he fills both heaven and earth; that Jesus is the prophet of whom Moses spoke; and whom they had persecuted, condemned, and at last put to death; that they were wicked and uncircumcised in heart and in ears; and always resisted the Holy Ghost as their fathers did. This is the substance of St. Stephen's defence as far as he was permitted to make it: a defence which they could not confute; containing charges which they most glaringly illustrated and confirmed, by adding the murder of this faithful disciple, to that of his all glorious master.

Was in Mesopotamia] In that part of it where Ur of the Chaldees was situated, near to Babel, and among the rivers (Tigris and Euphrates) which gave the name of Mesopotamia to the country. See the note on Gen. xi. 31.

Before he dwelt in Charran] This is called Haran in our translation of Gen. xi. 31; this place also belonged to Mesopotamia, as well as Ur, but is placed west of it, on the maps. It seems most probable that Abraham had two calls, one in Ur and the other in Haran. He left Ur, at the first call, and came to Haran; he left Haran at the second call, and came into the promised land. See these things more particularly stated in the notes on Gen. xii. 1.

Verse 4. When his father was dead] See the note on Gen. xi. 26.

Vere 5. Gave him none inheritance] Both Abraham and Jacob had small parcels of land in Canaan; but they had them by purchase, not by God's gift; for as Abraham was obliged to buy a burying place in Canaan Gen. xxiii. it is obvious he had no inheritance there.

And to his seed after him] See Gen. xii. 7. and xiii. 15. and the note there.

Verse 6. That his seed should sojourn in a strange land] See Gen. xv. 13, 14.

Four hundred years.] Moses says, Exod. xii. 40. that the sojourning of the children of Israel in Egypt—was 430 years. See the note there. St. Paul has the same number, Gal. iii. 17. and so has Josephus Ant. lib. ii. cap. 1. sect. 9. in Bell. lib. v. cap. 9. sect. 4. St. Stephen uses the round number of 400, leaving out the odd tens, a thing very common not only in the sacred writers, but in all others, those alone excepted, who write professedly on chronological matters.

Verse 7. Will I judge] Κρινῶ εγω. I will punish, for in this sense the Greek word is frequently taken. "When" says Bp. Pearce, "a malefactor is brought before a judge; the judge does three things: 1. he tries or judges him; 2. he then gives his judgment or sentence; and 3. he puts the law in execution, and punishes him. Hence κρινω at different times, signfies each of these things; and the sense of the word is to be determined by the context. Here it signifies to punish, as κριμα is used for punishment, in Rom. xiii. 2. 1 Cor. xi. 29. compared with ver. 30, 31." The Egyptians to whom the Israelites were in bondage, were punished by the ten plagues described Exod. vii, viii, ix, x, xi, xii.

Verse 8. He gave him the covenant of circumcision] That is, he instituted the rite of circumcision, as a sign of that covenant which he had made with him and his posterity. See Gen. xvii. 10, &c.

And so Abraham begat Isaac] Και ουτως and thus, in this covenant, he begat Isaac: and as a proof that he was born under this covenant, was a true son of Abraham and inheritor of the promises, he circumcised him the eighth day; and this cumcised him the eighth day: [a] and Isaac begat Jacob; and [b] Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 ¶ [c] And the patriarchs, moved with envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: [d] but God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, [e] and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

11 [f] Now there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Chanaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 [g] But when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first:

13 [h] And at the second time Joseph was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 [i] Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and [k] all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

15 [l] So Jacob went down into Egypt, [m] and died, he, and our fathers, rite being observed in the family of Isaac, Jacob and his twelve sons were born under the covenant; and thus their descendants the twelve tribes, being born under the same covenant, and practising the same rite, were, by the ordinance of God, legal inheritors of the promised land, and all the secular and spiritual advantages connected with it.

Verse 9. And the patriarchs] The twelve sons of Jacob thus called, because each was chief or head of his respective family or tribe.

Moved with envy] Ζηλωσαντες; we translate ζηλος variously—zeal, or fervent affection, whether its object be good or bad, is its general meaning; and ζηλοω signifies to be indignant, envious, &c. See the note on chap. v. 17. The brethren of Joseph hearing of his dreams, and understanding them to portend his future advancement, filled with envy, (with which no ordinary portion of malice was associated,) sold Joseph into the land of Egypt, hoping by this means to prevent his future grandeur: but God, from whom the portents came, was with him; and made their envy, the direct means of accomplishing the great design.

Verse 10. Gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh] God gave him much wisdom, in consequence of which, he had favour with the king of Egypt. See the whole of this remarkable history explained at large, Gen. xli.—xlv.

Verse 14. Threescore and fifteen souls.] There are several difficulties here, which it is hoped the Reader will find satisfactorily removed in the note on Gen. xlvi. 20. It is well known that in Gen. xlvi. and in Deut. x. 22. their number is said to be threescore and ten; but Stephen quotes from the Septuagint, which adds five persons to the account, which are not in the Hebrew text. Machir, Gilead, Sutelaam, Taham, and Edem; But see the note referred to above.

Verse 16. And were carried over into Sychem] "It is said, Gen. l. 13. that Jacob was buried in the cave of the field of Machpelah before Mamre. And in Josh. xxiv. 32. and Exod. xiii. 19. it is said that the bones of Joseph were carried out of Egypt by the Israelites, and buried in Shechem, which Jacob bought from the sons of Hamor the father of Shechem. As for the eleven brethren of Joseph, we are told by Josephus, Ant. lib. ii. cap. 8. sect 2. that they were buried in Hebron, where there father had been buried. But since the books of the Old Testament say nothing about this, the authority of Stephen (or of Luke here) for their being buried in Sychem, is at least as good as that of Josephus for their being buried in Hebron." Bp. Pearce.

We have the uniform consent of the Jewish writers that all the patriarchs were brought out of Egypt, and buried in Canaan, but none, except Stephen, mentions their being buried in Sychem. As Sychem belonged to the Samaritans, probably the Jews thought it too great an honour for that people to possess the bones of the patriarchs; and therefore have carefully avoided making any mention of it. This is Dr. Lightfoot's conjecture; and it is as probable as any other.

That Abraham bought for a sum of money] Two accounts seem here to be confounded; 1. the purchase made by Abraham of the cave and field of Ephron, which was in the field of Machpelah: this purchase was made from the children of Heth, Gen. xxiii. 3, 10, 17, 2. The purchase made by Jacob from the sons of Hamor or Emmor, of a sepulchre in which the bones of Joseph were laid; this was in Sychem or Shechem, Gen. xxxiii. 19. Josh. xxiv. 32. The word Abraham therefore, in this place, is certainly a mistake; and the word Jacob, which some have supplied is doubtless more proper. Bp. Pearce supposes that Luke originally wrote ὁ ωνησατο τιμης αργυριου, which he bought for a sum of money: i. e. which Jacob bought, who is the last person of the singular number, spoken of in the preceding verse. Those who saw that the word ωνησατο bought, had no nominative case laid in [a] the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 ¶ But when [b] the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, [c] the people grew and multiplied in Egypt, 18 Till another king arose which knew not Joseph.

19 The same dealt subtilly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, [d] so that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 [e] In which time Moses was born, and [f] was [g] exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was [i] mighty in words and in deeds.

23 [k] And when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

joined to it, and did not know where to find the proper one, seem to have inserted Αβρααμ Abraham in the text, for that purpose, without sufficiently attending to the different circumstances of his purchase, from that of Jacob's.

Verse 18. Which knew not Joseph.] That is, did not approve of him, of his mode of governing the kingdom, nor of his people, nor of his God. See the note on Exod. i. 8.

Verse 19. The same dealt subtilly] Ουτος κατασοφισαμενος, a word borrowed from the Septuagint, who thus translate the Hebrew נתחכמה לו nithchokmah lo, let us deal wisely with it, i. e. with cunning and deceit, as the Greek word implies; and which is evidently intended by the Hebrew. See Gen. xxvii. 35. thy brother came with subtilty, which the Targumist explains by בחוכמא be-chokma, with wisdom, that is cunning and deceit. For this the Egyptians were so remarkable, that αιγυπτιαζειν to egyptize, signified, to act cunningly, and to use wicked devices. Hence the Jews compared them to foxes, and it is of them that Cant. chap. ii. 15. is understood by the Rabbins. Take us the little foxes which spoil our vines; destroy the Egyptians, who having slain our male children, sought to destroy the name of Israel from the face of the earth.

To the end they might not live.] Might not grow up and propagate, and thus build up the Hebrew nation.

Verse 20. Moses—was exceeding fair] Αστειος τω Θεω, was fair to God, i. e. was divinely beautiful. See the note on Exod. ii. 2.

Verse 22. In all the wisdom of the Egyptians] Who were at that time, the most intelligent and best instructed people in the universe. Philo says, Moses was taught arithmetic, geometry, poetry, music, medicine, and the knowledge of hieroglyphics. In Sohar Kadash, fol. 46. it is said, "that of the ten portions of wisdom which came into the world, the Egyptians had nine, and that all the inhabitans of the earth, had only the remaining portion." Much of the same nature may be seen in the Rabbins, though they apply the term wisdom here to magic.

Was mighty in words and in deeds.] This may refer to the glorious doctrines he taught, and the miracles he wrought in Egypt. Josephus Ant. lib. ii. cap. x. sect. 1. gives an account of his being general of an Egyptian army, defeating the Ethiopians who had invaded Egypt, driving them back into their own country, and taking Saba their capital, which was afterwards called Meroe. But this, like many other tales of the same writer, is worthy of little credit.

Verse 23. When he was full forty years old] This was a general tradition among the Jews: "Moses was 40 years in Pharaoh's court, 40 years in Midian, and 40 years he served Israel."

To visit his brethren] Probably on the ground of trying to deliver them from their oppressive bondage. This desire seems to have been early infused into his mind by the Spirit of God: and the effect of this desire to deliver his oppressed countrymen, was his refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; see Heb. xi. 24. and thus renouncing all right to the Egyptian crown, choosing rather to endure affliction with the people of God, than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

Verse 24. Smote the Egyptian] See this explained, Exod. ii. 11, 12.

Verse 25. He supposed his brethren would have understood, &c.] He probably imagined, that, as he felt from the divine influence, he was appointed to be their deliverer, they would 28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian yesterday?

29 [c] Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

30 [d] And when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina, an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, [e] I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

Verse 30. In a flame of fire in a bush.] See this and the following verses largely explained in the notes on Exod. iii. 1—8.

Verse 36. He brought them out, after that he had shewed wonders, &c.] Thus the very person whom they had rejected, and in effect, delivered up into the hands of Pharaoh that he might be slain; was the person alone, by whom they were redeemed from their Egyptian bondage. And does not St. Stephen plainly say by this, that the very person Jesus Christ, whom they had rejected and delivered up into the hands of Pilate to be crucified, was the person alone, by whom they could be delivered out of their spiritual bondage, and made partakers of the inheritance among the saints in light? No doubt they felt that this was the drift of his speech.

Verse 37. This is that Moses, which said—A prophet, &c.] This very Moses, so highly esteemed and honoured by God, announced that very prophet whom ye have lately put to death. See the observations at the end of Deut. xviii.

Verse 38. With the angel which spake to him] Stephen shews that Moses received the law by the ministry of angels; and that he was only a mediator between the angel of God and them.

The lively oracles] Λογια ζωντα, the living oracles. The doctrines of life, those doctrines, obedience to which entitled them, by the promise of God, to a long life upon earth, which spoke to them of that spiritual life which every true believer has in union with his God: and promised that eternal life which those who are faithful unto death, shall enjoy with him in the realms of glory.

Verse 39. In their hearts turned back again into Egypt] Became idolaters, and preferred their Egyptian bondage and their idolatry to the promised land, and the pure worship of God. See the whole of these transactions explained at large in the notes on Exod. xxxii.

Verse 42. Then God turned, and gave them up, &c.] He left them to themselves, and then they deified and worshipped the sun, moon, planets, and principal stars.

In the book of the prophets] As this quotation is found in Amos chap. v. 25. by the book of the prophets, is meant the twelve minor prophets; which in the ancient Jewish division of the sacred writings, formed only one book.

Have ye offered to me slain beasts] It is certain, that the Israelites did offer various sacrifices to God, while in the wilderness: and it is as certain, that they scarcely ever did it with an upright heart. They were idolatrous either in heart or act, in almost all their religious services, these were therefore so very imperfect, that they were counted for nothing in the sight of God; for this seems to be strongly implied in the question here asked, have ye offered to ME (exclusively and with an upright heart,) slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years? on the contrary, these forty years were little else than a tissue of rebellion and idolatry.

Verse 43. Ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them.] This is a literal translation of the place, as it stands in the Septuagint: but in the Hebrew text it stands thus: but ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the star of your God which ye made to yourselves. This is the simple version of the place, unless we should translate ונשאתם את סכות מלככם venasatem eth Sicuth malkekem, ye took SIKUTH your king, (instead of ye took up the tabernacle of your MOLEK), as some have done. The place is indeed very obscure, and the two texts do not tend to cast light on each other. The Rabbins say sikuth, which we translate tabernacle, is the name of an idol. Moloch is generally understood to mean the sun; and several persons of good judgment think that by Remphan or Raiphan is meant the planet Saturn, which the Copts call Ρηφαν Rephan. It will be seen above that instead of Remphan, or as some of the best MSS. have it Rephan, the Hebrew text has כיון Chiun, which might possibly be a corruption of ריפן Reiphan, as it would be very easy to mistake the כ caph for ר resh, and the vau shurek ו for ם pe. This emendation would bring the Hebrew, Septuagint, and the text of Luke nearer together; but there is no authority either from MSS. or Versions for this correction: however, as Chiun is mentioned in no other place, though Molech often occurs, it is the more likely that there might have been some very early mistake in the text; and that the Septuagint has preserved the true reading.

It was customary for the idolaters of all nations to carry images of their gods about them in their journies, military expeditions, &c. and these being very small, were enclosed in little boxes, perhaps some of them in the shape of temples called tabernacles; or as we have it Acts xix. 24. shrines. These little gods were the penates and lares among the Romans; and the telesms or talismans among the ancient eastern idolaters. The Hebrew text seems to refer to these when it says, the tabernacle of your Molech, and Chiun your images, צלמיכם tsalmeycem, your telesms, τους τυπους, the types or simulachres of your gods. See the note on Gen. xxxi. 19. Many of those small portable images are now in my own collection, all of copper or brass; some of them the identical penates of the ancient Romans; and others the offspring of the Hindoo idolatry; they are from an ounce weight to half a pound. Such images as these, I suppose the idolatrous Israelites, in imitation of their neighbours, the Moabites, Am- monites, &c. to have carried about with them: and to such the prophet appears to me, unquestionably to allude.

I will carry you away beyond Babylon.] You have carried your idolatrous images about; and I will carry you into captivity, and see if the gods in whom ye have trusted can deliver you from my hands. Instead of beyond Babylon, Amos, from whom the quotation is made, says, I will carry you beyond Damascus. Where they were carried, was into Assyria and Media; see 2 Kings xvii. 6. now this was not only beyond Damascus, but beyond Babylon itself; and as Stephen knew this to be the fact, he states it here, and thus more precisely fixes the place of their captivity. The Holy Spirit in his farther revelations, has undoubted right to extend or illustrate those which he had given before. This case frequently occurs, when a former prophecy is quoted in later times.

Verse 44. Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness] That is, the tabernacle in which the two tables of stone written by the finger of God were laid up, as a testimony that he had delivered these laws to the people; and that they had promised to obey them. As one great design of St. Stephen was to shew the Jews that they placed too much dependence on outward privileges; and had not used the law, the tabernacle, the temple, nor the temple-service, for the purpose of their institution; he labours to bring them to a due sense of this, that conviction might lead to repentance and conversion. And he farther shews, that God did not confine his worship to one place, or form. He was worshipped without any shrine, in the times of the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, &c. He was worshipped with a tabernacle, or portable temple in the wilderness. He was worshipped also in the fixed temple projected by David, but built by Solomon: he asserts farther that his infinite majesty cannot be confined to temples made by human hands; and where there is neither tabernacle nor temple, (in any part of his vast dominions,) he may be worshipped acceptably by the upright in heart. Thus he proves that neither tabernacle nor temple are essentially requisite for the true worship of the true God. Concerning the tabernacle to which St. Stephen here refers, the Reader is requested to consult the notes on Exod. xxv. 8, &c. and the subsequent chapters.

Speaking unto Moses] Ὁ λαλων who spake, as in the margin; signifying the angel of God who spake to Moses, or God himself. See Exod. xxv. 40.

Verse 45. Brought in with Jesus] That is, with Joshua, whom the Greek version, quoted by St. Stephen, always writes Ιησους Jesus; but which should constantly be written Joshua in such cases as the present, in order to avoid ambiguity and confusion.

Possession of the Gentiles] Των εθνων of the heathens, whom Joshua conquered, and gave their land to the children of Israel.

Verse 46. Desired to find a tabernacle] This was in David's heart, and it met with the divine approbation. See 2 Sam. vii. 2, &c. and see the purpose, Psal. cxxxii. 2—5. but as David had been a man of war, and had shed much blood, God would not permit him to build the temple; but he laid the plan and made provision for it, and Solomon executed the design.

Verse 48. The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands] Here St. Stephen evidently refers to Solomon's speech, 1 Kings viii. 27. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, the heaven, and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee, how much less this house that I have builded? Both Solomon and St. Stephen mean that the majesty of God could not be contained, not even in the whole vortex of nature; much less in any temple which human hands could erect.

As saith the prophet] The place referred to, is Isai. lxvi. 1, 2. Thus saith the Lord, the heaven is my throne, and the earth my footstool. Where is the house that ye build unto me? And where is the place of my rest, &c. with which the quotation by Stephen, agrees.

Verse 50. Hath not my hand made all these things?] Stephen certainly had not finished his discourse, nor drawn his inferences from the facts already stated: but it is likely, that as they perceived he was about to draw conclusions unfavourable to the temple and its ritual, they immediately raised up a clamour against him, which was the cause of the following very cutting address.

Verse 51. Ye stiff-necked] Σκληροτραχηλοι; a metaphor taken from untoward oxen, who cannot be broken into the yoke; and whose strong necks cannot be bended to the right or to the left.

Uncircumcised in heart and ears] This was a Jewish mode of speech, often used by the prophets. Circumcision was instituted not only as a sign and seal of the covenant, into which the Israelites entered with their Maker; but also as a type of that purity and holiness which the law of God requires; hence there was an excision of what was deemed not only superfluous but also injurious: and by this cutting off, the propensity to that crime which ruins the body, debases the mind, and was generally the forerunner of idolatry, was happily lessened. It would be easy to prove this, were not the subject too delicate. Where the spirit of disobedience was found; where the heart was prone to iniquity, and the ears impatient of reproof and counsel, the person is represented as uncircumcised in those parts; because devoted to iniquity, impatient of reproof, and refusing to obey. In Pirkey Eliezer chap. 29. "Rabbi Seira said. There are five species of uncircumcision in the world, four in man; and one in trees. Those in man are the following:

"1. Uncircumcision of the EAR. Behold their EAR is uncircumcised, and they cannot hearken, Jer. vi. 10.

"2. The uncircumcision of the LIPS. How shall Pharaoh hear me, who am of uncircumcised of LIPS? Exod. vi. 12.

"3 Uncircumcision of HEART. If then their uncircumcised HEARTS be humbled, Lev. xxvii. 41. Circumcise therefore the FORESKIN of your HEART, Deut. x. 16. Jer. iv. 4. For all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the HEART, Jer. ix. 26.

"4. The uncircumcision of the FLESH. Ye shall circumcise the FLESH of your FORESKIN, &c. Gen. xvii. 11."

Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost] 1. Because they were uncircumcised in heart; they always resisted the influences of the Holy Spirit, bringing light and conviction to their minds; in consequence of which, they became hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; and neither repented at the preaching of John, nor credited the glad tidings to them by Christ and the apostles. 2. Because they were uncircumcised in ears, they would neither hear nor obey Moses, the prophets, Christ, nor the apostles.

As your father did, so do ye.] They were disobedient children, of disobedient parents: in all their generations they had been disobedient and perverse. This whole people, as well as this text, are fearful proofs that the Holy Spirit, the almighty energy of the living God, may be resisted and rendered of none effect. This Spirit is not sent to stocks, stones, or machines, but to human beings endued with rational souls; therefore it is not to work on them with that irresistible, energy which it must exert on inert matter, in order to conquer the vis inertiæ or disposition to abide eternally in a motionless state, which is the state of all inanimate beings: but it works upon understanding, will, judgment, conscience, &c. in order to enlighten, convince, and persuade. If after all, the understanding, the eye of the mind, refuses to behold the light; the will determines to remain obstinate; the judgment purposes to draw false inferences; and the conscience hardens itself against every check and remonstrance; (and all this is possible to a rational soul, which must be dealt with in a rational way,) then, the Spirit of God being thus resisted, is grieved, and the sinner is left to reap the fruit of his doings. To force the man to see, feel, repent, believe, and be saved, would be to alter the essential principles of his creation, and the nature of mind; and reduce him into the state of a machine, the vis inertiæ of which was to be overcome and conducted by a certain quantum of physical force, superior to that resistance which would be the natural effect of the certain quantum of the vis inertiæ, possessed by the subject, on and by which this agent was to operate. Now, man cannot be operated on in this way, because it is contrary to the laws of his creation and nature; nor can the Holy Ghost work on that as a machine, which himself has made a free agent. Man therefore may, and generally does resist the Holy Ghost: and the whole revelation of God, bears unequivocal testimony to this most dreadful possibility, and most awful truth. It is trifling with the sacred text, to say, that resisting the Holy Ghost here, means resisting the laws of Moses, the exhortations, threatnings and promises of the prophets, &c. These it is true, the uncircumcised ear may resist; but the uncircumcised heart is that alone, to which the Spirit that gave the laws, exhortations, promises, &c. speaks: and as matter resists matter; so spirit resists spirit. These were not only uncircumcised in ear, but uncircumcised also in heart; and therefore they resisted the Holy Ghost, not only in his declarations and institutions; but also in his actual energetic operations upon their minds.

Verse 52. Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted] Ye have not only resisted the Holy Ghost, but ye have persecuted all those who have spoken to you in his name, and by his influence: thus ye prove your opposition to the Spirit himself, by your opposition to every thing that proceeds from him.

They have slain them, &c.] Isaiah, who shewed before of the coming of Christ, the Jews report, was sawn asunder at the command of Manasseh.

The coming of the Just One] Του Δικαιου, meaning Jesus Christ; emphatically called the just or righteous person, not only because of the unspotted integrity of his heart and life, but because of his plenary acquittal, when tried at the tribunal of Pilate. I find no fault at all in him. The mention of this circumstance served greatly to aggravate their guilt. The character of Just One, is applied to our Lord in three other places of Scripture, Acts iii. 14. xxii. 14. and James v. 6.

The betrayers and murderers] Ye first delivered him up into the hands of the Romans, hoping they would have put him to death; but when they acquitted him, then, in opposition to the declaration of his innocence, and in outrage to every form of justice, ye took and murdered him. This was a most terrible charge; and one against which they could set up no sort of defence. No wonder then, that they were instigated by the spirit of the old destroyer, which they never resisted, to add another murder to that, of which they had been so recently guilty.

Verse 53. By the disposition of angels] Εις διαταγας αγγελων. After all that has been said on this difficult passage, perhaps the simple meaning is, that there were ranks, διαταγαι, of angels attending on the divine Majesty when he gave the law: a circumstance which must have added greatly to the grandeur and solemnity of the occasion; and to this Psal. lxviii 17. seems to me, most evidently to allude. The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even many thousands of angels: the Lord is among them as in SINAI, in the holy place. It was not then by the mouths nor by the hands of angels, as prime agents, that Moses, and through him the people, received the law; but God himself gave it, accompanied with many thousands of those glorious beings. As it is probable they might be assisting in this most glorious solemnity, therefore St. Paul might say, Gal. iii. 19. that it was ordained by angels, διαταγεις δι' αγγελων, in the hand of a Mediator. And as they were the only persons that could appear, for no man hath seen God at any time; therefore the apostle might say farther, (if indeed he refers to the same transaction, see the note there,) the word spoken by angels was steadfast, Heb. ii. 2. But the circumstances of this case are not sufficiently plain to lead to the knowledge of what was done by the angels in this most wonderful transaction; only we learn from the use made of this circumstance by St. Stephen, that it added much to the enormity of their transgression, that they did not keep a law, in dispensing of which, the ministry of angels had been employed. Some think Moses, Aaron, and Joshua are the angels here intended; and others think, that the fire, light, darkness, cloud and thick darkness were the angels which Jehovah used on this occasion; and to which St. Stephen refers; but neither of these senses appears sufficiently natural, and particularly the latter.

They gnashed on him with their teeth.] They were determined to hear him no longer; were filled with rage against him, and evidently thirsted for his blood.

standing at the right hand of God. This was a fearful proof against them; for if Jesus was at the right hand of God, then they had murdered an innocent person; and they must infer, that God's justice must speedily avenge his death. They were determined not to suffer a man to live any longer, who could say he saw the heavens opened, and Jesus Christ standing at the right hand of God.

Verse 58. Cast him out of the city, and stoned him] They did not however wait for any sentence to be pronounced upon him; it seems they were determined to stone him first, and then prove, after it had been done, that it was done justly. For the manner of stoning among the Jews, see the note on Lev. xxiv. 23.

The witnesses laid down their clothes] To illustrate this whole transaction, see the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 59. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God] The word God, is not found in any MS. or Version, nor in any of the primitive Fathers except Chrysostom. It is not genuine and should not be inserted here: the whole sentence literally reads thus: And they stoned Stephen, invoking and saying, Lord Jesus receive my Spirit! Here is a most manifest proof that prayer is offered to Jesus Christ; and that in the most solemn circumstances in which it could be offered, viz. when a man was breathing his last. This is, properly speaking, one of the highest acts of worship which can be offered to God; and if Stephen had not conceived Jesus Christ to be GOD, could he have committed his soul into his hands?

We may farther observe, that this place affords a full proof of the immateriality of the soul; for he could not have commended his spirit to Christ, had he believed that he had no spirit; or in other words, that his body and soul were one and the same thing. Allowing this most eminent saint to have had a correct notion of theology; and that, being full of the Holy Ghost, as he was at this time, he could make no mistake in matters of such vast weight and importance; then these two points are satisfactorily stated in this verse; 1. That Jesus Christ is GOD; for Stephen died praying to him. 2. That the soul is immaterial; for Stephen in dying, commends his departing spirit into the hand of Christ.

Verse 60. He kneeled down] That he might die as the subject of his heavenly MASTER: acting and suffering in the deepest submission to his divine will, and permissive providence; and at the same time, shewing the genuine nature of the religion of his Lord, in pouring out his prayers with his blood in behalf of his murderers!

Lay not this sin to their charge.] That is, do not impute it to them, so as to exact punishment. How much did the servant resemble his Lord, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do! This was the cry of our Lord in behalf of his murderers; and the disciple, closely copying his Master, in the same spirit, and with the same meaning, varies the expression, crying with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge! What an extent of benevolence! And in what beautiful light does this place the spirit of the Christian religion! Christ had given what some have supposed to be an impossible command, love your enemies; pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you. And Stephen shews here in his own person, how practicable the grace of his Master had made this sublime precept.

He fell asleep.] This was a common expression among the Jews to signify death, and especially the death of good men. But this sleep is, properly speaking, not attributable to the soul, but to the body; for he had commended his spirit to the Lord Jesus, while his body was overwhelmed with the shower of stones cast on him by the mob.

After the word εκοιμηθη fell asleep, one MS. adds εν ειρηνη in peace; and the Vulgate has in Domino, in the Lord. Both these readings are true, as to the state of St. Stephen; but I believe neither of them was written by St. Luke.

The first clause of the next chapter should come in here, and Saul was consenting unto his death: never was there a worse division than that which separated it from the end of this chapter: this should be immediately altered, and the amputated member restored to the body to which it belongs.

1. Though I have spoken pretty much at large on the punishment of stoning among the Jews, in the note on Lev. xxiv. 23. yet, as the following extracts will serve to bring the subject more fully into view, in reference to the case of St. Stephen, the Reader will not be displeased to find them here.

Dr. Lightfoot sums up the evidence he has collected on this subject in the following particulars:

"I. The place of stoning was without the sanhedrin, according as it is said, bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp, Lev. xxiv. 14. It is a tradition, the place of ston- ing was without three camps. The Gloss tells us, that the court was the camp of the Divine Presence: the mountain of the temple, the camp of the Levites; and Jerusalem the camp of Israel. Now in every sanhedrin, in whatever city, the place of stoning was without the city, as it was at Jerusalem.

"We are told the reason by the Gemarists, why the place of stoning was without the sanhedrin, and again without three camps, viz. If the sanhedrin go forth and sit without the three camps, they make the place for stoning also distant from the sanhedrin, partly lest the sanhedrin should seem to kill the man; partly, that by the distance of the place, there may be a little stop and space of time before the criminal come to the place of execution, if peradventure any one might offer some testimony, that might make for him: for in the expectation of some such thing,

"II. There stood one at the door of the sanhedrin having a handkerchief in his hand, and a horse at such a distance as it was only within sight. If any one therefore say, 'I have something to offer in behalf of the condemned person,' he waves the handkerchief, and the horseman rides and calls back the people. Nay, if the man himself say, I have something to offer in my own defence, they bring him back four or five times one after another, if it be any thing of moment that he hath to say." I doubt they hardly dealt so gently with the innocent Stephen.

"III. If no testimony arise that makes any thing for him, then they go on to stoning him. The crier proclaiming before him, 'N. the son of N. comes forth to be stoned for such or such a crime. N. and N. are the witnesses against him; if any one have any thing to testify in his behalf, let him come forth and give his evidence.'

"IV. When they come within ten cubits of the place where he must be stoned, they exhort him to confess, for so it is the custom for the malefactor to confess, because every one that confesseth hath his part in the world to come, as we find in the instance of Achan, &c.

"V. When they come within four cubits of the place, they strip off his clothes, and make him naked.

"VI. The place of execution was twice a man's height. One of the witnesses throws him down upon his loins; if he roll on his breast, they turn him on his loins again. If he die so, well. If not, then the other witness takes up a stone, and lays it upon his heart. If he die so, well. If not, he is stoned by all Israel.

"VII. All that are stoned are hanged also, &c." These things I thought fit to transcribe the more largely, that the Reader may compare this present action, with this rule and common usage of doing it.

"1. It may be questioned, for what crime this person was condemned to die? You will say for blasphemy: for we have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses and against God. But no one is condemned as a blasphemer, unless for abusing the sacred name with four letters, viz. יהוה JEHOVAH. Hence it is, that although they oftentimes accused our Saviour as a blasphemer, yet he was not condemned for this, but because he used witchcraft, and deceived Israel, and seduced them into apostacy. And those are reckoned among persons that are to be stoned: He that evilly persuades; and he that draws into apostacy; and he that is a conjuror.

"2. It may farther be questioned, whether our blessed martyr was condemned by any formal sentence of the sanhedrin, or hurried in a tumultuary manner by the people, and so murdered: it seems to be the latter."

2. The defence of Stephen against the charges produced by his accusers, must be considered as being indirect; as they had a show of truth for the ground of their accusations, it would have been improper at once to have roundly denied the charge. There is no doubt that Stephen had asserted and proved JESUS to be the Christ or MESSIAH; and that the whole nation should consider him as such, receive his doctrine, obey him, or expose themselves to the terrible sentence denounced in the prophecy of Moses; whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him, Deut. xviii. 19. for they well knew that this word implied, that divine judgments should inevitably fall upon them. To make proper way for this conclusion, Stephen enters into a detail of their history, shewing that, from the beginning, God had in view the dispensation which was now opening; and that his designs were uniformly opposed by their impious forefathers. That, notwithstanding all this, God carried on his work, first, by revealing his will to ABRAHAM, and giving him the rite of circumcision, which was to be preserved among his descendants. Secondly, to MOSES and AARON, in Egypt. Thirdly, to the whole congregation of Israel, at Mount Sinai; and variously in the wilderness. Fourthly, by instituting the tabernacle-worship, which was completed in the promised land; and continued till the days of Solomon, when the temple was builded, and the worship of God became fixed. Fifthly, by the long race of prophets raised up under that temple, who had been all variously persecuted by their forefathers, who departed from the true worship, and frequently became idolatrous; in consequence of which God gave them up into the hands of their enemies, and they were carried into captivity. How far St. Stephen would have proceeded, or to what issue he would have brought his discourse, we can only conjecture; as the fury of his persecutors did not permit him to come to a conclusion. But this they saw most clearly, that from his statement, they could expect no mercy at the hand of God, if they persisted in their opposition to Jesus of Nazareth; and that their temple and political existence must fall a sacrifice to their persevering obstinacy. Their guilt stung them to the heart; and they were determined rather to vent their insupportable feelings by hostile and murderous acts, than in penitential sorrow and supplication for mercy. The issue was, the martyrdom of Stephen; a man, of whom the sacred writings give the highest character, and a man who illustrated that character in every part of his conduct. Stephen is generally called the proto-martyr, i. e. the FIRST martyr or witness, as the word μαρτυρ implies; the person who, at the evident risk and ultimate loss of his life, bears testimony to TRUTH. This honour, however, may be fairly contested, and the palm at least divided between him and John the Baptist. The martyrdom of Stephen, and the spirit in which he suffered, have been an honour to the cause for which he cheerfully gave up his life, for eighteen hundred years. While Christianity endures, (and it will endure till time is swallowed up in eternity) the martyrdom of Stephen will be the model, as it has been, for all martyrs, and a cause of triumph to the church of God.

3. I cannot close these observations without making one remark on his prayer for his murderers. Though this shews most forcibly the amiable, forgiving spirit of the martyr; yet we must not forget that this, and all the excellent qualities with which the mind of this blessed man was endued, proceeded from that HOLY GHOST, of whose influences his mind was full. The prayer therefore shews most powerfully the matchless benevolence of GOD. Even these most unprincipled, most impious, and most brutal of all murderers, were not out of the reach of HIS mercy! His Spirit influenced the heart of this martyr to pray for his destroyers; and could such prayers fail? No: Saul of Tarsus, in all probability, was the first fruits of them. St. Augustine has properly remarked, Si Stephanus non orasset, ecclesia Paulum non haberet. If Stephen had not prayed, the church of Christ could not have numbered among her saints, the apostle of the Gentiles. Let this example teach us at once the spirit that becomes a disciple of Christ, the efficacy of prayer, and the unbounded philanthropy of God.

CHAPTER VIII.

A general persecution is raised against the church, 1. Stephen's burial, 2. Saul greatly oppresses the followers of Christ, 3, 4. Philip the deacon goes to Samaria, preaches, works many miracles, converts many persons, and baptizes Simon the sorcerer, 5—13. Peter and John are sent by the apostles to Samaria, they confirm the disciples, and by prayer and imposition of hands they confer the Holy Spirit, 14—17. Simon the sorcerer seeing this, offers them money, to enable him to confer the Holy Spirit, 18, 19. He is sharply reproved by Peter, and exhorted to repent, 20—23. He appears to be convinced of his sin, and implores an interest in the apostles' prayers, 24. Peter and John having preached the gospel in the villages of Samaria, return to Jerusalem, 25. An angel of the Lord commands Philip to go towards Gaza, to meet an Ethiopian eunuch, 26. He goes, meets and converses with the eunuch, preaches the gospel to him, and baptizes him, 27—38. The spirit of God carries Philip to Azotus, passing through which, he preaches in all the cities till he comes to Cæsaria, 39, 40.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Saul was consenting unto his death.] So inveterate was the hatred that this man bore to Christ and his followers, that he delighted in their destruction. So blind was his heart with superstitious zeal, that he thought he did God service by offering him the blood of a fellow-creature, whose creed he supposed to be erroneous. The word συνευδοκων, signifies gladly consenting, being pleased with his murderous work! How dangerous is a party spirit, and how destructive may zeal even for the true worship of God prove, if not inspired and regulated by the spirit of Christ.

It has already been remarked, that this clause belongs to the conclusion of the preceding chapter; so it stands in the Vulgate, and so it should stand in every Version.

There was a great persecution] The Jews could not bear the doctrine of Christ's resurrection; for this point being proved, demonstrated his innocence and their enormous guilt in his crucifixion; as therefore, the apostles continued to insist strongly on the resurrection of Christ, the persecution against them became hot and general.

They were all scattered abroad—except the apostles.] Their Lord had commanded them, when persecuted in one city, to flee to another; this they did, but wherever they went they proclaimed the same doctrines; though at the risk and hazard and Samaria, except the apostles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and [a] made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, [b] he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women, committed them to prison.

of their lives. It is evident therefore, that they did not flee from persecution, or the death it threatened; but merely in obedience to their Lord's command. Had they fled through the fear of death, they would have taken care not to provoke persecution to follow them, by continuing to proclaim the same truths that provoked it in the first instance.

That the apostles were not also exiled, is a very remarkable fact; they continued in Jerusalem, to found and organize the infant church; and it is marvellous that the hand of persecution was not permitted to touch them. Why this should be we cannot tell; but so it pleased the great Head of the church. Bp. Pearce justly suspects those accounts in Eusebius and others, that state that the apostles went very shortly after Christ's ascension into different countries, preaching and founding churches. He thinks, this is inconsistent with the various intimations we have of the continuance of the apostles in Jerusalem; and refers particularly to the following texts, ver. 1, 14, and 25. of this chapter, chap. ix. 26, 27. xi. 1, 2. xii. 1, 2, 3, 4. xv. 2, 4, 6, 22, 23. chap. xxi. 17, 18. Gal. i. 17, 18, 19. ii. 1, 9. The church at Jerusalem was the first CHRISTIAN church; and consequently, the boast of the church of Rome, is vain and unfounded. From this time a new æra of the church arose. Hitherto the apostles and disciples confined their labours among their countrymen in Jerusalem. Now persecution drove the latter into different parts of Judea, and through Samaria; and those who had received the doctrine of Christ at the pentecost, who had come up to Jerusalem from different countries to be present at the feast, would naturally return, especially at the commencement of the persecution, to their respective countries, and proclaim to their countrymen the gospel of the grace of God. To effect this grand purpose, the spirit was poured out at the day of pentecost; that the multitudes from different quarters, partaking of the word of life, might carry it back to the different nations, among whom they had their residence. One of the Fathers has well observed, that "these holy fugitives were like so many lamps lighted by the fire of the Holy Spirit, spreading every where the sacred flame by which they themselves had been illuminated."

Verse 2. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial] The Greek word συνεκομισαν signifies not only to carry, or rather to gather up, but also to do every thing necessary for the interment of the dead. Among the Jews, and indeed among most nations of the earth, it was esteemed a work of piety, charity, and mercy, to bury the dead. The Jews did not bury those who were condemned by the sanhedrin, in the burying place of the fathers, as they would not bury the guilty with the innocent; and they had a separate place for those who were stoned, and for those that were burnt. According to the Tract. Sanh. fol. 45, 46. the stone wherewith any one was stoned, the post on which he was hanged, the sword by which he was beheaded, and the cord by which he was strangled, were buried in the same place with the bodies of the executed persons. As these persons died under the curse of the law, the instruments by which they were put to death were considered as unclean, and accursed, and therefore buried with their bodies. Among the ancients, whatever was grateful or useful to a person in life, was ordinarily buried with them; thus the sword, spear, shield, &c. of the soldier were put in the same grave; the faithful dog of the hunter, &c. &c. And on this principle the wife of a Brahman burns with the body of her deceased husband.

Made great lamentation over him.] This was never done over any condemned by the sanhedrin, they only bemoaned such privately; this great lamentation over Stephen, if the same custom then prevailed as afterwards, is a proof that Stephen was not condemned by the sanhedrin; he probably fell a sacrifice to the fury of the bigoted incensed mob; the sanhedrin not interfering to prevent the illegal execution.

Verse 3. Saul made havoc of the church] The word ελυμαινετο, from λυμαινω to destroy, devastate, ravage, signifies the act of ferocious animals, such as bears, wolves, and the like, in seeking and devouring their prey. This shews with what persevering rancour this man pursued the harmless christians; and thus we see in him, what bigotry and false zeal are capable of performing.

Entering into every house] For, however it might be to others, a Christian man's house was not his castle.

Haling men and women] Neither sparing age nor sex in the professors of Christianity. The word συρων, signifies dragging them before the magistrates, or dragging them to justice.

Committed them to prison] For, as the Romans alone had the power of life and death; the sanhedrin, by whom Saul was employed, chap. xxvi. 10. could do no more than arrest and imprison, in order to inflict any punishment short of death. It is true, St. Paul himself says that some of them were put to death, see chap. xxvi. 20. but this was either done by Roman authority, or by what was called the judgment of zeal, i. e. when the mob took the execution of the laws into their own hands, and massacred those whom they pretended to be blasphemers of God: for, these sanctified their murderous outrage under the specious name of zeal for God's glory; and quoted the example of Phineas, as a precedent. Such persons as these formed a sect among the Jews; and are known in ecclesiastical history by the appellation of Zealots or Sicarii.

Verse 4. They that were scattered—went every where preaching] Thus the very means devised by Satan to destroy the church, became the very instruments of its diffusion and establishment. What are counsel, or might, or cunning, or rage, or malice against the Lord! whether they are excited by men or devils.

Verse 5. Then Philip] One of the seven deacons, chap. vi. 5. called afterwards Philip the Evangelist, chap. xxi. 18.

The city of Samaria] At this time there was no city of Samaria remaining: according to Josephus, Ant. lib. xiii. cap. 10. sect. 3. Hyrcanus had so utterly demolished it, as to leave no vestige of it remaining. Herod the great did afterwards build a city on the same spot of ground; but he called it Σεβαστη, i. e. Augusta, in compliment to the Emperor Augustus, as Josephus tells us, Ant. lib. xv. cap. 8. sect. 5. War, lib. i. cap. 2. sect. 7. and by this name of Sebasté or Augusta, that city, if meant here, would in all probability, have been called, in the same manner as the town called Strato's Tower, (which Herod built on the sea coasts, and to which he gave the name of Cæsarea, in compliment to Augustus Cæsar,) is always called Cæsarea, wherever it is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. Bp. Pearce.

As Sychem was the very heart and seat of the Samaritan religion, and Mount Gerizim the cathedral church of that sect; it is more likely that it should be intended than any other. See Lightfoot. As the Samaritans received the same law with the Jews; as they also expected the Messiah; as Christ had preached to and converted many of that people, John iv. it was very reasonable that the earliest offers of salvation should be made to them, before any attempt was made to evangelize the Gentiles. The Samaritans indeed, formed the connecting link between the Jews and the Gentiles; for they were a mongrel people, made up of both sorts, and holding both Jewish and Pagan rites. See the account of them on Matt. x. 5.

Verse 6. The people with one accord gave heed] He had fixed their attention, not only with the gravity and importance of the matter of his preaching; but also by the miracles which he did.

Verse 7. For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed] Hence it is evident that these unclean spirits were not a species of diseases; as they are here distinguished from the paralytic and the lame. There is nothing more certain than that the New Testament writers mean real diabolic possessions by the terms unclean spirits, devils, &c. which they use. It is absolute trifling to deny it. If we, in our superior sagacity, can shew that they were mistaken, that is quite a different matter!

Verse 8. There was great joy in that city.] No wonder, when they heard such glorious truths; and were the subjects of such beneficent miracles.

Verse 9. A certain man, called Simon] In ancient ecclesiastical writers, we have the strangest account of this man: they say that he pretended to be the Father, who gave the law to Moses; that he came in the reign of Tiberius in the person of the Son; that he descended on the apostles on the day of pentecost, in flames of fire, in quality of the Holy Spirit; that he was the Messiah, the Paraclete, and Jupiter; that the woman who accompanied him, called Helena, was Minerva, or the first intelligence; with many other extravagancies which probably never had an existence. All that we know to be certain on this subject is, that he used sorcery, that he bewitched the people, and that he gave out himself to be some great one. This might be sufficient, were not men prone to be wise above what is written.

Our word sorcerer from the French sorcier, which, from the Latin sors, a lot, signifies the using of lots to draw presages concerning the future; a custom that prevailed in all countries, and was practiced with a great variety of forms. On the word lot see the note Lev. xvi. 8, 9. and Josh. xiv. 2.

The Greek word μαγευων signifies practising the rites or science of the Magi, or مغان Mughan, the worshippers of fire among the Persians; the same as ماجوس Majoos, and ماجوسيان Majooscean, from which we have our word magician. See the note on Matt. ii. 1.

And bewitched the people of Samaria] Εξισων, astonishing, amazing, or confounding the judgment of the people, from εξιστημι, to remove out of a place, or state, to be transported beyond one's self, to be out of one's wits; a word that expresses precisely the same effect which the tricks or leger-de-main of a juggler produces in the minds of the common people, who behold his feats. It is very likely that Simon was a man of this cast, for the East has always abounded in persons of this sort. The Persian, Arabian, Hindoo, and Chinese jugglers, are notorious to the present day; and even while I write this, (July, 1813,) three Indian jugglers lately arrived, are astonishing the people of London; and if such persons can now interest and amaze the people of a city so cultivated and enlightened, what might not such do among the grosser people of Sychem or Sebasté, eighteen hundred years ago?

That himself was some great one.] That the feats which he performed sufficiently proved that he possessed a most powerful supernatural agency, and could do whatsoever he pleased.

Verse 10. This man is the great power of God.] That is, he is invested with it, and can command and use it. They certainly did not believe him to be God; but they thought him to be endued with a great supernatural power.

There is a remarkable reading here in several MSS. which should not pass unnoticed. In ABCDE. several others, together with the Ethiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac, Vulgate, Itala, Origen and Irenæus, the word καλουμενη is added before μεγαλη, and the passage reads thus, This person is that power of God which IS CALLED the GREAT. This appears to be the true reading; but what the Samaritans meant by that power of God which they termed the Great, we know not. Simon endeavoured to persuade the people that he was a very great personage, and he succeeded.

Verse 12. But when they believed Philip] So it is evident that Philip's word came with greater power than that of Simon; and that his miracles stood the test in such a way as the feats of Simon could not.

Verse 13. Simon himself believed also] He was struck with the doctrine and miracles of Philip—he saw that these were real; he knew his own to be fictitious. He believed, therefore, that Jesus was the Messiah; and was in consequence baptized.

Continued with Philip, and wondered] Εξιστατο, he was as much astonished and confounded at the miracles of Philip; as the people of Samaria were at his leger-de-main. It is worthy of remark, that εξιστατο comes from the same root, εξιστημι, as the word εξισων, in ver. 9. and if our translation bewitched be proper there, it should be retained here; and then we should read, Then Simon himself believed and was baptized, and continued with Philip, being BEWITCHED, beholding the miracles and signs which were done. We may see, from this circumstance, how improper the term bewitched is, in the 9th and 11 verses.

Verse 14. The word of God] The doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ.

They sent unto them Peter and John.] There was no individual ruler among the apostles, there was not even a president of the council: and Peter far from being chief of the apostles, is one of those sent with the same commission and authority as John, to confirm the Samaritans in the faith.

Verse 15. When they were come down] The very same mode of speaking, in reference to Jerusalem formerly, obtains now in reference to London. The metropolis in both cases is considered as the centre; and all parts, in every direction, no matter how distant, or how situated, are represented as below the metropolis. Hence we so frequently hear of persons going up to Jerusalem; and going down from the same. So, in London the people speak of going down to the country: and in the country, of going up to London. It is necessary to make this remark; lest any person should be led away with the notice, that Jerusalem was situated on the highest ground in Palestine. It is a mode of speech, which is used to designate a royal or imperial city.

Prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost.] It seems evident from this case, that even the most holy deacons, though full of the Holy Ghost themselves, could not confer this heavenly gift on others. This was the prerogative of the apostles, and they were only instruments; but they were those alone by which the Lord chose to work. They prayed and laid their hands on the disciples, and God sent down the gift; so, the blessing came from God by the apostles, and not from the apostles to the people. But for what purpose was the Holy Spirit thus given? certainly not for the sanctification of the souls of the people; this they had on believing in Christ Jesus; and this the apostles never dispensed. It was the miraculous gifts of the Spirit which were thus communicated; the speaking with different tongues, and those extraordinary qualifications which were necessary for the successful preaching of the gospel; and doubtless many, if not all of those on whom the apostles laid their hands, were employed more or less in the public work of the church.

Verse 17. Then laid they their hands on them] Probably only on some select persons, who were thought proper for public use in the church. They did not lay hands on all, for certainly no hands in this way were laid on Simon.

Verse 18. When Simon saw, &c.] By hearing these speak with different tongues, and work miracles.

He offered them money] Supposing that the dispensing this Spirit belonged to them, that they could give it to whomsoever they pleased; and imagining, that as he saw them to be poor men they would not object to take money for their gift: and it is probable that he had gained considerably by his juggling; and therefore could afford to spare some, as he hoped to make it all up, by the prophet which he expected to derive from this new influence.

Verse 20. Thy money perish with thee] This is an awful declaration; and imports thus much, that if he did not repent, he, and his ill-gotten goods would perish together; his money should be dissipated, and his soul go into perdition.

That the gift of God may be purchased] Peter takes care to inform not only Simon, but all to whom these presents may come, that the Spirit of God is the gift of God alone, and consequently cannot be purchased with money; for what reward can He receive from his creatures, to whom the silver and the gold belong, the cattle on a thousand hills, the earth and its fulness!

Verse 21. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter] Thou hast no part among the faithful, and no lot in this ministry. That the word κληρος which we translate lot, is to be understood as implying a spiritual portion, office, &c. see proved in the note on Numb. xxvi. 55.

Thy heart is not right] It is not through motives of purity, benevolence, or love to the souls of men, that thou desirest to be enabled to confer the Holy Ghost; it is through pride, vain glory, and love of money: thou wouldst now give a little money that thou mightest by thy new gift, gain much.

Verse 22. Repent therefore of this thy wickedness] St. Peter did not suppose his case to be utterly hopeless; though his sin, considered in its motives and objects, was of the most heinous kind.

If perhaps the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee.] His sin, as yet, only existed in thought and purpose; and therefore it is said, if perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven.

Verse 23. The gall of bitterness] A Hebraism for excessive bitterness; gall, wormwood, and such like, were used to express the dreadful effects of sin in the soul; the bitter repentance, bitter regret, bitter sufferings, bitter death, &c. &c. which it produces. In Deut. xxix. 18. idolatry and its consequences are expressed, by having among them a root that beareth GALL and WORMWOOD. And in Heb. xii. 15. some grievous sin is intended, when the apostle warns them lest any root of BITTERNESS springing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled.

Bond of iniquity] An allusion to the mode in which the Romans secured their prisoners, chaining the right hand of the prisoner to the left hand of the soldier who guarded him; as if the apostle had said, thou art tied and bound by the chain of thy sin; justice hath laid hold upon thee, and thou hast only a short respite before thy execution, to see if thou wilt repent.

Verse 24. Pray ye to the Lord for me] The words of Peter certainly made a deep impression on Simon's mind; and he must have had a high opinion of the apostles' sanctity and influence with God, when he thus commended himself to their prayers. And we may hope well of his repentance and salvation; if the reading of the Codex Bezæ, and the margin of the latter Syriac, may be relied on: Pray ye to the Lord for me, that none (τουτων των κακων) OF ALL THOSE EVILS which ye have spoken, (μοι) TO ME, may come upon me: (ος πολλα κλαιων ου διελιμπανεν) WHO WEPT GREATLY and DID NOT CEASE. That is, he was an incessant penitent. However, favourably this or any other MS. may speak of Simon; he is generally supposed to have 'grown worse and worse, opposing the apostles and the Christian doctrine, and deceiving many cities and provinces by magical operations; till being at Rome, in the reign of the emperor Claudius, he boasted that he could fly, and when exhibiting before the emperor and the senate, St. Peter and St. Paul being present, who knew that his flying was occasioned by magic, prayed to God that the people might be undeceived, and that his power might fail; in consequence of which he came tumbling down, and died soon after of his bruises.' This account comes in a most questionable shape, and has no evidence which can challenge our assent. To me, it and the rest of the things spoken of Simon the sorcerer, appear utterly unworthy of credit. Calmet makes a general collection of what is to be found in Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Tertullian, Eusebius, Theodoret, Augustin, and others on the subject of Simon Magus; and to him, if the Reader think it worth the pains, he may refer. The substance of these accounts is given above, and in the note on ver. 9. and to say the least of them, they are all very dubious. The tale of his having an altar erected to him at Rome, with the inscription Simoni sancto Deo, "To the Holy God Simon," has been founded on an utter mistake, and has been long ago sufficiently confuted. See the inscriptions in Gruter, Vol. I. p. xcvi. inscript. No. 5, 6, 7.

Verse 25. And they, when they had—preached—returned to Jerusalem] That is, Peter and John returned, after they had borne testimony to, and confirmed the work which Philip had wrought.

Verse 26. Arise, and go toward the south] How circumstantially particular are these directions! Every thing is so precisely marked, that there is no danger of the apostle missing his way. He is to perform some great duty; but what he is not informed. The road which he is to take, is marked out; but what he is to do in that road, or how far he is to proceed, he is not told! It is GOD who employs him, and requires of him implicit obedience. If he do his will, according to the present direction, he shall know by the issue, that God hath sent him on an errand worthy of his wisdom and goodness. We have a similar instance of circumstantial direction from God in Chap. ix. 11. Arise go into the street called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one Saul of Tarsus, &c. And another instance, still more particular, in chap. x. 5, 6. Send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter; he lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea side. God never sends any man on a message, without giving him such directions as shall prevent all mistakes and miscarriages, if simply and implicitly followed. This is also strictly true of the doctrines contained in his word: no soul ever missed salvation, that simply followed the directions given in the word of God. Those who will refine upon every thing; question the divine testimony and dispute with their Maker; cannot be saved. And how many of this stamp are found, even among Christians, professing strict godliness!

Gaza, which is desert.] Αὕτη ἐστιν ἔρημος, this is the desert, or, this is in the desert. Gaza was a town about two miles and a half from the sea side; it was the last town which a traveller passed through, when he went from Phœnicia to Egypt; and was at the entrance into a wilderness, according to the account given by Arrian in Exped. Alex. lib. 2. cap. 26. p. 102. [Ed. Gronov.] that it was the last inhabited town, as a man goes from Phœnicia to Egypt, ἐπὶ τῇ ἀρχῇ τῆς Ἐρήμου, on the commencement of the desert. See Bp. Pearce.

Dr. Lightfoot supposes that the word desert is added here, because at that time the ancient Gaza was actually desert, having been destroyed by Alexander, and μετουσα ἐρημος, remaining desert, as Strabo, lib. xvi. p. 1102. says; and that the angel mentioned this desert Gaza, to distinguish it from another city of the same name, in the tribe of Ephraim, not far from the place where Philip now was. On this we may observe, that although Gaza was desolated by Alexander the Great, as were several other cities, yet it was afterwards rebuilt by Gabinius. See Josephus Ant. lib. xv. cap. v. sect. 3. And writers of the first century, represent it as being flourishing and populous in their times. See Wetstein.

Schoettgen thinks that ερημος desert, should be referred, not to Gaza, but to οδος the way; and that it signifies a road that was less frequented. If there were two roads to Gaza from Jerusalem, as some have imagined (see Rosenmuller), the eunuch might have chosen that which was desert, or less frequented, for the sake of privacy, in his journeying religious exercises.

Verse 27. A man of Ethiopia] Ανηρ Αιθιοψ should be translated an Ethiopian, for the reasons given on chap. vii. ver. 2.

An eunuch] See this word interpreted, on Matt. xix. 12. The term eunuch was given to persons in authority at court, to whom its literal meaning did not apply. Potiphar was probably a eunuch only as to his office; for he was a married man. See Gen. xxxvii. 36. xxxix. 1. And it is likely that this Ethiopian was of the same sort.

Of great authority] Δυναστης a prefect, lord-chamberlain of the royal household; or, rather, her treasurer, for it is here said, he had charge of all her treasure, ην επι πασης της γαζης αυτης. The Greek word Γαζα Gaza is generally allowed to be Persian, from the authority of Servius, who, in his comment on Æn. lib. i. ver. 118.

Apparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto;
Arma virúm, tabulæque, & Troïa GAZA per undas.

"And here and there above the waves are seen
"Arms, pictures, precious goods, and floating men.
DRYDEN.

The words of Servius are, "Gaza Persicus sermo est, et significat divitias; unde Gaza urbs in Palæstina dicitur, quod in ea Cambyses rex Persarum cum Ægyptiis bellum inferret divitias suas condidit." GAZA is a Persian word, and signifies RICHES: hence Gaza, a city in Palestine, was so called, because Cambyses, king of Persia, laid up his treasures in it, when he waged war with the Egyptians. The nearest Persian word of this signification which I find is, گنج gunch, or ganz, and گنجا guncha, which signify a magazine, store, hoard or hidden treasure. The Arabic خزانة chuzaneh, comes as near as the Persian, with the same meaning. Hence مخزن makhzen, called magazen by the Spaniards, and magazine by the English; a word which signifies a collection of stores or treasures, or the place where they are laid up. It is scarcely necessary to remark, that this name is given also to certain monthly publications, which are, or profess to be a store of treasures, or repository of precious or valuable things.

But who was Candace? It is granted that she is not found in the common lists of Ethiopic sovereigns, with which we have been favoured. But neither the Abyssinians nor the Jews admitted women in their genealogies. I shall not enter into this controversy, and shall content myself with quoting the words of Mr. Bruce. "It is known," says he, "from credible writers engaged in no controversy, that this Candace reigned upon the Nile in Atbara, near Egypt. Her capital also was taken in the time of Augustus, a few years before the conversion of the slave by Philip; and we shall have occasion often to mention her successors and her kingdom, as existing in the reign of the Abyssinian kings, long after the Mohammedan conquest: they existed when I passed through Atbara, and do undoubtedly exist there to this day." Bruce's Travels, Vol. II. page 431.

It does not appear, as some have imagined, that the Abyssinians were converted to the Christian faith by this eunuch, nor by any of the apostles; as there is strong historic evidence that they continued Jews and Pagans for more than three hundred years after the Christian æra. Their conversion is with great probability attributed to Frumentius, sent to Abyssinia for that purpose by Athanasius, Bp. of Alexandria, about A. D. 330. See Bruce, as above.

The Ethiopians mentioned here, are those who inhabited the isle or peninsula of Meroë, above and southward of Egypt. It is the district which Mr. Bruce calls Atbara, and which he proves formerly bore the name of Meroë. This place, according to Diodorus Siculus, had its name from Meroe, daughter of Cambyses, king of Persia; who died there in the expedition which her father undertook against the Ethiopians. Strabo mentions a queen in this very district named Candace: his words are remarkable. Speaking of an insurrection of the Ethiopians against the Romans, he says, Τουτων δ' ησαν και οι της βασιλισσης στρατηγοι της Καυδακης, η καθ' ημας ηρξε των Αιθιοπων, ανδρικη τις γυνη, πεπηρωμενη τον οφθαλμον, "Among these were the officers of Queen CANDACE, who in our days reigned over the Ethiopians. She was a masculine woman, and blind of one eye." Though this could not have been the Candace mentioned in the text, it being a little before the Christian æra; yet it establishes the fact, that a queen of this name, did reign in this place; and we learn from others, that it was a common name to the queens of Ethiopia. Pliny, giving an account of the report made by Nero's messengers, who were sent to examine this country, says, Ædificia oppidi (Meroës) pauca: regnare fœminam CANDACEN; quod nomen multis jam annis ad reginas transiit. Hist. Nat. lib. vi. cap. 29. ad fin. They reported, that "the edifices of the city were few: that a woman reigned there of the name of Candace; which name had passed to their queens succesively, for many years." To one of those queens, the eunuch in the text belonged: and the above is sufficient authority to prove that queens of this name, reigned over this part of Ethiopia.

Had come to Jerusalem for to worship] Which is a proof that he was a worshipper of the God of Israel; but how came he acquainted with the Jewish religion? Let us for a little, examine this question. In 1 Kings x. 1, &c. we have the account of the visit paid to Solomon by the queen of Sheba; the person to whom our Lord refers, Matt. xii. 42. and Luke xi. 31. It has been long credited by the Abyssinians that this queen, who by some is called Balkis, by others Maqueda, was not only instructed by Solomon in the Jewish religion, but also established it in her own empire on her return: that she had a son by Solomon named Menilek, who succeeded her in the kingdom; and from that time till the present, they had preserved the Jewish religion. Mr. Bruce throws some light upon this subject, the substance of what he says is the following; "There can be no doubt of the expedition of the queen of Sheba; as Pagan, Moor, Arab, Abyssinian and all the countries round, vouch for it, nearly in the terms of Scripture. Our Saviour calls her queen of the South: and she is called in 1 Kings x. 1, &c. 2 Chron. ix. 1, &c. queen of Sheba or Saba; for Saba, Azab and Azaba all signify the south: and she is said to have come from the uttermost parts of the earth. In our Saviour's time the boundaries of the known land southward, were Raptum or Prassum; which were the uttermost parts of the known earth, and were with great propriety so styled by our Lord. The gold, myrrh, cassia, and frankincense which she brought with her, are all products of that country. The annals of the Abyssinians, state that she was a pagan when she left Saba or Azab, to visit Solomon; and that she was there converted and had a son by Solomon, who succeeded her in the kingdom, as stated above. All the inhabitants of this country, whether Jews or Christians, believe this; and farther, that the 45th Psalm was a prophecy of her journey to Jerusalem; that she was accompanied by a daughter of Hiram, from Tyre; and that the latter part of the Psalm, is a prophecy of her having a son by Solomon, and of his ruling over the Gentiles." Travels, Vol. II. page 395, &c. All this being granted, and especially the scripture fact of the queen of Sheba's visit, and the great probability, supported by uninterrupted tradition, that she established the Jewish religion in her dominions, on her return; we may at once see that the eunuch in question, was a descendant of those Jews; or that he was a proselyte in his own country, to the Jewish faith; and was now come up at the great feast, to worship God at Jerusalem. Mr. Bruce may be right; but some think that Saba, in Arabia Fælix, is meant; see the note on Matt. xii. 42.

Verse 28. Sitting in his chariot, read Esaias the prophet.] He had gone to Jerusalem to worship; he had profited by his religious exercises, and even in travelling, he is improving his time. God sees his simplicity and earnestness, and provides him an instructor, who should lead him into the great truths of the gospel; which, without such an one, he could not have understood. Many, after having done their duty, as they call it, in attending a place of worship, forget the errand that brought them thither; and spend their time on their return, rather in idle conversation, than in reading or conversing about the word of God. It is no wonder that such should be always learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

Verse 29. Then the Spirit said unto Philip] This holy man having obeyed the first direction he received from God; and gone southward, without knowing the reason why; it was requisite that he should now be informed of the object of his mission: the Spirit said unto him, go near and join thyself, &c. The angel who had given him the first direction had departed; and the influence of the Holy Spirit now completed the information. It is likely that what the Spirit did in this case, was by a strong impression on his mind, which left him no doubt of its being from God.

Verse 30. Heard him read the prophet Esaias] The eunuch it seems, was reading aloud, and apparently in Greek, for that was the common language in Egypt: and indeed almost in every place, it was understood. And it appears that it was the Greek version of the Septuagint that he was reading, as the quotation below is from that Version.

Verse 31. How can I, except some man should guide me?] he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place of the scripture which he read was this, [a]"He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, [b]and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

b Luke 24. 27. ch. 18. 28.——c ch. 10. 47.

This is no proof that "the Scriptures cannot be understood without an authorized interpreter," as some of the papistical writers assert. How could the eunuch know any thing of the gospel dispensation, to which this Scripture referred? That dispensation had not yet been proclaimed to him; he knew nothing about Jesus. But where that dispensation has been published; where the four Gospels and the apostolic epistles are at hand, every thing relative to the salvation of the soul, may be clearly apprehended by any simple upright person. There are difficulties, it is true, in different parts of the sacred writings, which neither the pope nor his conclave can solve: and several, which even the more enlightened protestant cannot remove: but these difficulties do not refer to matters in which the salvation of the soul is immediately concerned: they refer to such as are common to every ancient author in the universe. These difficulties being understood, add to the beauty, elegance, and justness of the language, thoughts, and turns of expression; and these, only the few who are capable of understanding, are able to relish. As to all the rest, all that relates to faith and practice, all, in which the present and eternal interest of the soul is concerned, "the wayfaring man, though a fool, (quite illiterate) shall not err therein."

That he would come up, and sit with him.] So earnestly desirous was he, to receive instruction relative to those things which concerned the welfare of his soul.

Verse 32. The place of the scripture] Περιοχη της γραφης, the section, or paragraph.

Verse 33. In his humiliation, his judgment was taken away] He who was the fountain of judgment and justice, had no justice shewn him, (mercy he needed not) in his humiliation; viz. that time in which he emptied himself, and appeared in the form of a servant.

Who shall declare his generation] Την γενεαν αυτου; answering to the Hebrew דורו doro, which Bp. Lowth understands as implying his manner of life. It was the custom among the Jews, when they were taking away any criminal from judgment to execution, to call out and enquire whether there was any person who could appear in behalf of the character of the criminal? whether there was any who, from intimate acquaintance with his manner of life, could say any thing in his favour? This circumstance I have noticed before, and it has been particularly remarked in the case of Stephen; see at the end of chap. xii. In our Lord's case, this benevolent enquiry does not appear to have been made; and perhaps to this breach of justice, as well as of custom, the prophet refers: and this shews how minutely the conduct of those bad men was known 700 years before it took place. God can foreknow what he pleases; and can do what he pleases; and all the operations of his infinite mind are just and right. Some think that who shall declare his generation? refers to his eternal sonship; others to his miraculous conception by the Holy Spirit, in the womb of the virgin; others, to the multitudinous progeny of spiritual children, which should be born unto God, in consequence of his passion and meritorious death. Perhaps the first, is the best and most natural sense.

Verse 34. Of whom speaketh the prophet this] This was a very natural inquiry: for in the text itself, and in its circumstances, there was nothing that could determine the meaning, so as to ascertain whether the prophet meant himself or some other person; and the very inquiry shews that the eunuch had thought deeply on the subject.

Verse 35. Began at the same scripture] He did not confine himself to this one scripture, but made this his text; and shewed from the general tenor of the sacred writings, that Jesus was the Christ, or Messiah; and that in his person, birth, life, doctrine, miracles, passion, death, and resurrection, the scriptures of the Old Testament were fulfilled. This preaching had the desired effect, for the eunuch was convinced of the truth of Philip's doctrine; and desired to be baptized in the name of Jesus.

Verse 36. See, here is water] He was not willing to omit the first opportunity that presented itself, of his taking upon himself, the profession of the gospel. By this we may see, that Philip had explained the whole of the Christian faith to him; and the way by which believers were brought into the Christian church.

Verse 37. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.] He believed that Jesus, whom Philip preached to him, was THE CHRIST or Messiah; and consequently the Son of God.

This whole verse is omitted by ABCG. several others of the first authority, Erpen's edit. of the Arabic; the Syriac, the Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, and some of the Slavonic; almost all the critics declare against it as spurious. Griesbach has left it out of the text; and professor White in his Crisews says, "Hic versus, certissime delendus," this verse, most assuredly, should be blotted out. It is found in E. several others of minor importance, and in the Vulgate and Arabic. In those MSS. where it is extant, it exists in a variety of forms, though the sense is the same.

Verse 38. And they went down] They alighted from the chariot into the water. While Philip was instructing him, and he professed his faith in Christ, he probably plunged himself under the water, as this was the plan which appears to have been generally followed among the Jews, in their baptisms: but the person who had received the confession of faith, was he to whom the baptism was attributed, as it was administered by his authority.

Verse 39. The Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip] Perhaps this means no more than, the Holy Spirit suggested to the mind of Philip that he should withdraw abruptly from the eunuch; and thus leave him to pursue his journey, reflecting on the important incidents which had taken place. Some suppose that the angel of the Lord, and the spirit of the Lord, are the same person throughout this chapter. There is a remarkable reading in the Codex Alexandrinus which exists thus in two lines:

ΠΝΑΑΓΙΟΝΕΠΕΠΕCΕΝΕΠΙΤΟΝΕΥΝΟΥΧΟΝ
The spirit of the Lord fell upon the eunuch:
ΑΓΓΕΛΟCΔΕΚΥΡΙΑCΕΝΤΟΝΦΙΛΙΠΠΟΝ.
But the angel of the Lord snatched away Philip.

This reading is found in several other MSS. and in some Versions. Many think that the spirit or angel of God carried off Philip in some such manner as the Apocrypha represents the transportation of Habakkuk, who was taken up by the hair of the head, and carried from Judea to Babylon! For such an interposition, there was no need. When Philip had baptized the eunuch, the Spirit of God shewed him that it was not the will of God that he should accompany the eunuch to Meroë, but on the contrary, that he should hasten away to Ashdod; as God had in that, and the neighbouring places, work sufficient to employ him in.

Verse 40. Philip was found at Azotus] From the time he left the eunuch, he was not heard of till he got to Azotus; which according to Dr. Lightfoot, was about 34 miles from Gaza; and probably it was near Gaza that Philip met the eunuch. The Azotus of the New Testament, is the Ashdod of the Old. It was given by Joshua to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 47. It was one of the five lordships which belonged to the Philistines; and is a seaport town on the Mediterranean sea, between Gaza on the south, and Joppa or Jaffa on the north. Herodotus reports, lib. ii. cap. 157. that Psammeticus king of Egypt, besieged this city 29 years; which, if true, is the longest siege which any city or fortress ever endured.

Preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea.] This was Cæsarea in Palestine, formerly called Strato's tower, built by Herod the Great, in honour of Augustus. There was an excellent harbour here, made by Herod; and after the destruction of Jerusalem, it became the capital of the whole land of Judea. It must be always distinguished from Cæsarea Philippi, which was an inland town, not far from the springs of Jordan. Whenever the word Cæsarea occurs, without Philippi, the former is intended. As Philip preached in all the cities of Palestine till he came to Cæsarea, he must have preached in the different cities of the Philistine country; Ashdod, Akkaron, and Jamnia, and also in the principal parts of Samaria; as these lay in his way from Gaza to Cæsarea. As there was a readier disposition to receive the word in those places, the Spirit of the Lord, under whose guidance he acted, did not suffer him to accompany the eunuch to Abyssinia. It appears from chap. xxi. 8. that Philip settled at Cæsarea where he had a house and family; four of his unmarried daughters being prophetesses. It is likely that his itinerant mission ended here; though he continued occasionally to perform the work of an evangelist; and to bring up his family in the knowledge and fear of God, which is the most imperious duty that any master of a family can be called on to perform; and which it is impossible for any man to accomplish by substitute. And which none can neglect without endangering his own salvation.

CHAPTER IX.

Saul, bent on the destruction of the Christians, obtains letters from the high-priest, authorizing him to seize those whom he should find at Damascus, and bring them bound to Jerusalem, 1, 2. On his way to Damascus, he has a divine vision, is convinced of his sin and folly, is struck blind, and remains three days without sight, and neither eats nor drinks, 3—9. Ananias a disciple, is commanded in a vision, to go and speak to Saul, and restore his sight, 10—16. Ananias goes and lays his hands on him, and he receives his sight, and is baptized, 17—19. Saul, having spent a few days with the Christians at Damascus, goes to the synagogue, proclaims Christ, and confounds the Jews, 20—22. The Jews lay wait to kill him, but the disciples let him over the walls of the city, in a basket, by night, and he escapes to Jerusalem, 23—25. Having wished to associate with the disciples there, they avoid him; but Barnabas takes and brings him to the apostles, and declares his conversion, 26, 27. He continues in Jerusalem preaching Christ, and arguing with the Hellenistic Jews, who endeavour to slay him; but the disciples take him to Cæsarea, and send him thence to his own city Tarsus, 28—30. About this time, the churches being freed from persecution, are edified and multiplied, 31. Peter heals Eneas at Lydda, who had been afflicted with the palsy eight years; in consequence of which miracle, all the people of Lydda and Saron are converted, 33—35. Account of the sickness and death of a Christian woman named Tabitha, who dwelt at Joppa; and her miraculous restoration to life by the ministry of Peter, 36—41. Gracious effects produced among the inhabitants of Lydda by this miracle, 42, 43.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter] The original text is very emphatic, ετι εμπνεων απειλης και φονου, and points out how determinate Saul was, to pursue and accomplish his fell purpose of totally destroying the infant church of Christ. The mode of speech introduced above, is very frequent in the Greek writers; who often express any vehement, and hostile affection of the mind by the verb πνεειν, to breathe, to pant; so Theocritus Idyll. xxii. ver. 82.

Εν μεσσον συναγον, φονον αλλαλοισι πνεοντες.

They came into the assembly, breathing mutual slaughter.

Euripides has the same form, πυρ πνεουσα και φονον, breathing out fire and slaughter. Iphig. in Taur.

And Aristophanes more fully, referring to all the preparations for war:

Αλλα πνεοντας δορυ και λογχας και λευκολοφους τρυφαλειας,
Και πηληκας, και κνημιδας και θυμους επταβοειους,

Ranæ. ver. 1048.

They breathed spears, and pikes, and helmets, and crests, and greaves, and the fury of redoubted heroes.

The figure is a favourite one with Homer: hence μενεα πνειοντες Αβαντες, the Abantes breathing strength.—Il. ii. 536. and how frequently he speaks of his fierce countrymen, as, μενεα πνειοντες Αχαιοι, the Greeks breathing strength, see Il. iii. 8. xi. 508. xxiv. 364. which phrase an old Scholiast interprets, being filled with strength and fury. St. Luke who was master of the Greek tongue, chose such terms as best expressed, a heart desperately and incessantly bent on accomplishing the destruction of the objects of its resentment. Such, at this time, was the heart of Saul of Tarsus; and it had already given full proof of its malignity, not only in the martyrdom of Stephen, but also in making havoc of the church; and in forcibly entering every house, and dragging men and women, whom he suspected of Christianity, and committing them to prison. See chap. viii. 3.

Went unto the high-priest] As the high-priest was chief n all matters of an ecclesiastical nature, and the present business was pretendedly religious; he was the proper person to apply to for letters by which this virulent persecutor might be accredited. The letters must necessarily be granted in the name of the whole sanhedrin, of which, Gamaliel, Saul's master was at that time the head; but the high-priest was the proper organ, through whom this business might be negotiated.

Verse 2. Letters to Damascus to the synagogues] Damascus, anciently called דמשק Damask and דרמשק Darmask, was once the metropolis of all Syria. It was situated at 50 miles distance from the sea; from which it is separated by lofty mountains. It is washed by two rivers, Amara or Abara, which ran through it, and Pharpar, called by the Greeks Chrysorrhœa, the golden stream, which ran on the outside of its walls. It is one of the most ancient cities in the world, for it existed in the time of Abraham: Gen. xiv. 15. and how long before, is not known The city of Damascus is at present a place of considerable trade, owing to its being the rendezvous for all the pilgrims from the north of Asia, on their road to and from the temple of Mecca. It is surrounded with pretty strong walls, which have nine gates; and is between four and five miles in circumference. It contains about 100,000 inhabitants, some say more, the principal part of whom are Arabs and Turks, with whom live in a state of considerable degradation, about 15,000 Christians. Damascus, like other places of importance, has passed through the hands of many masters. It was captured and ruined by Tiglath Pileser, who carried away its inhabitants to Kir, beyond the Euphrates, about 740 years before the Christian æra: and thus was fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, chap. xvii. 1—3. and that of Amos, chap. i. 4, 5. It was also taken by Sennacherib, and by the generals of Alexander the Great. Metellus and Lælius, seized it, during the war of Pompey with Tigranes; before Christ 65. It continued under the dominion of the Romans, till the Saracens took possession of it in A. D. 634. It was besieged and taken by Teemour lenk, A. D. 1400, who put all the inhabitants to the sword. The Egyptian Mamelukes repaired Damascus when they took possession of Syria: but the Turkish emperor Selim having defeated them at the battle of Aleppo in 1516, Damascus was brought under the government of the Turks, and in their hands it still remains. In the time of St. Paul, it was governed by Aretus, whose father Obodas, had been governor of it under Augustus. Damascus is 112 miles south of Antioch; 130 N. N. E. of Jerusalem; and 270 S. S. W. of Diarbek. Longitude 37°. East. Latitude 33°. 45′ North. The fruit tree called the Damascene, vulgarly Damazon, and the flower called the Damask rose, were transplanted from Damascus to the gardens of Europe: and the silks and linens, known by the name of Damasks, were probably first manufactured by the inhabitants of this ancient city.

Any of this way] That is, this religion, for so דרך derec in Hebrew, and ὁδός hodos in Hellenistic Greek, are often to be understood. דרך יהוה derec Yehovah, the way of the Lord, implies the whole of the worship due to him, and prescribed by himself: the way or path in which he wills men to walk, that they may get safely through life; and finally attain everlasting felicity. The Jewish writers designate the whole doctrine and practice of Christianity by a similar expression, דרך הנוצרים derec hanotsarim, the way, doctrine, or sect of the Christians.

Whether they were men or women] Provided they were Jews; for no converts had as yet been made among the Gentiles: nor did the power of the high-priest and sanhedrin extend to any but those who belonged to the synagogues. Pearce.

In every country where there were Jews and synagogues, the power and authority of the sanhedrin and high-priest were acknowledged: just as papists in all countries, acknowledge the authority of the pope. And as there can be but one pope, and one conclave; so there could be but one high-priest, and one sanhedrin; and this is the reason why the high-priest and sanhedrin at Jerusalem, had authority over all Jews, even in the most distant countries.

Verse 3. Suddenly there shined round about him] This might have been an extraordinary flash of the electric fluid, accompanied with thunder; with which, God chose to astonish and confound Saul and his company; but so modified it, as to prevent it from striking them dead. Thunder would naturally follow such a large quantity of this fluid, as appears to have been disengaged at this time; and out of this thunder, or immediately after it, Christ spoke in an awful and distinct voice, which appears to have been understood by Saul only.

I am Jesus whom thou persecutest] "Thy enmity is against me and my religion; and the injuries which thou dost to my followers, I consider as done to myself."

The following words making 20 in the original, and 30 in our version, are found in no Greek MS. The words are, It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks: and he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? and the Lord said unto him. It is not very easy to account for such a large addition which is not only not found in any Greek MS. yet discovered, but is wanting in the Itala, Erpen's Arabic, the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, and most of the Slavonian. It is found in the Vulgate, one of the Arabic, the Ethiopic, and Armenian; and was probably borrowed from chap. xxvi. 14. and some marginal notes. It is wanting also in the Complutentian edition, and in that of Bengel. Griesbach also leaves it out of the text.

It is hard for thee, &c.] Σκληρον σοι προς κεντρα λακτιζειν. This is a proverbial expression, which exists not only in substance, but even in so many words, both in the Greek and Latin writers. Κεντρον kentron, signifies an ox goad, a piece of pointed iron stuck in the end of a stick; with which the ox is urged on, when drawing the plough. The origin of the proverb seems to have been this: sometimes it happens that a restive or stubborn ox, kicks back against the goad, and thus wounds himself more deeply: hence it has become a proverb to signify the fruitlessness and absurdity of rebelling against lawful authority; and the getting into greater difficulties by endeavouring to avoid trifling suffering. So the proverb Incidit in Scyllam qui vult vitare Charybdim. Out of the cauldron into the fire. "Out of bad, into worse." The saying exists almost in the apostolic form, in the following writers. EURIPIDES, in Bacch. ver. 793.

Θυοιμ' αν αυτῳ μαλλον, η θυμουμενος
Προς κεντρα λακτιζοιμι θνητος ων, Θεῳ.

"I, who am a frail mortal, should rather sacrifice to him who is a God, than by giving place to anger, kick against the goads."

And ESCHYLUS in Agamemnon, ver. 1633.

Προς κεντρα μη λακτιζε.
Kick not against the goads.

And again in Prometh. Vinct. ver. 323.

Προς κεντρα κωλον εκτενεις, ορων οτι
Τραχυς μοναρχος ουδ' υπευθυνος κρατει.

"Thou stretchest out thy foot against goads, seeing the fierce monarch governs according to his own will."

Resistance is of no use, the more thou dost rebel, the more keenly thou shalt suffer. See the Scholiast here.

PINDAR has a similar expression, Pyth. ii. ver. 171—5.

Φερειν δ' ελαφρως
Επαυχενιον λαβοντα
Ζυγον γ' αρηγει. Ποτι κεντρον δε τοι
Λακτιζεμεν, τελεθει Ολισθηρος οιμος.

"It is profitable, to bear willingly the assumed yoke. To kick against the goad, is pernicious conduct."

where see the Scholiast who shews that "it is ridiculous for a man to fight with fortune: for if the unruly ox, from whom the metaphor is taken, kick against the goad, he shall suffer still more grievously."

TERENCE uses the same figure. Phorm. Act I. scen. 2. ver. 27.

Venere in mentem mihi istæc: nam inscitia est
Adversum stimulum calces.——

"These things have come to my recollection, for it is foolishness for thee to kick against a goad."

OVID has the same idea in other words, Trist. lib. ii. ver. 15.

At nunc (tanta meo comes est insania morbo)
Saxa malum refero rursus ad icta pedem.
Scilicet et victus repetit gladiator arenam;
Et redit in tumidas naufraga puppis aquas.

But madly now I wound myself alone,
Dashing my injured foot against the stone;
So to the wide arena wild with pain
The vanquished gladiator hastes again;
So the poor shatter'd bark, the tempest braves,
Launching once more into the swelling waves.

Intelligent men in all countries, and in all ages of the world, have seen and acknowledged the folly and wickedness of fighting against God; of murmuring at the dispensations of his providence, of being impatient under affliction; and of opposing the purposes of his justice and mercy. The words contain an universal lesson; and teach us patience under affliction, and subjection to the sovereign will of God: and they especially shew the desperate wickedness of endeavouring by persecution, to hinder the dissemination of the truth of God in the earth. He that kicks against this goad, does it at the risk of his final salvation. The fable of the viper and the file is another illustration of this proverb: it gnawed and licked the file, till it destroyed its teeth, and wasted away its tongue. The maxim in the proverb should be early inculcated on the minds of children and scholars; when chastised for their faults, resistance and stubbornness produce increased coercion and chastisement. And let parents and masters learn that the oft repeated use of the goad and ferula, seldom tend to reclaim, but beget obduracy and desperation. The advice of Columella to the ploughman, having some relation to the proverb in the text, and a strong bearing on this latter part of the subject, is worthy of the most serious regard, "Voce potius quam verberibus terreat; ultimaque sint opus recusantibus remedia, plagæ. Nunquam stimulo lacessat juvencum, quod retrectantem calcitrosumque eum reddit: nonnunquam tamen admoneat flagello." COLUMELLA, De Re Rustica, lib. ii. cap. 2. in fine. "Let the husbandman intimidate his oxen more by his voice than by blows, to which he should never have recourse but in extreme cases. A young steer should never be goaded, for this will induce him to kick and run back; but on proper occasions the whip, as an incentive to activity, may be profitably used." In reference to the same subject, which all concerned, should feel to be of the greatest importance, I shall close with the advice of one greater than the Roman agriculturalist; Fathers provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged; Coloss. iii. 21. but bring them up (εν παιδειᾳ και νουθεσιᾳ Κυριου) in the discipline and admonition of the Lord, Eph. vi. 4. using the authority that God has given you, with a steady hand, actuated by a tender and feeling heart.

Verse 6. Trembling] Under a strong apprehension of meeting the judgment he deserved.

And astonished] At the light, the thunder and the voice.

Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?] The word Κυριε Lord, is here to be understood in its proper sense, as expressing authority and dominion: in the 5th verse it appears to be equivalent to our word Sir.

The pride of the pharisee is now brought down to the dust; and the fury of the persecutor is not only restrained, but the lion becomes a lamb. What wilt thou have me to do? Wilt thou condescend to employ me among thy meanest servants?

Go into the city and it shall be told thee, &c.] Jesus could have informed him at once, what was his will concerning him; but he chose to make one of those very disciples whom he was going to bring in bonds to Jerusalem, the means of his salvation. 1. To shew that God will help man by man, that they may learn to love and respect each other: 2. That in the benevolence of Ananias he might see the spirit and tendency of that religion which he was persecuting; and of which he was shortly to become an apostle.

Verse 7. Stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.] The men were ειστηκει stupified, hearing της φωνης the voice or thunder, but not distinguishing the words, which were addressed to Saul alone; and which were spoken out of the thunder, or in a small still voice, after the peal had ceased. The remarkable case 1 Kings xix. 11—13. may serve to illustrate that before us. And he said go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord; and the Lord passed by and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord: and after the wind an earthquake: and after the earthquake a fire; and after the fire a still small voice: and when Elijah heard it he wrapped his face in his mantle and went out and stood in the entering in of the cave, and behold there came a voice unto him and said, WHAT DOST THOU HERE, ELIJAH! The thunder must have been heard by all; the small still voice by Saul alone. This consideration amply reconciles the passage in the text with that in chap. xxii. 9. where Paul says, they that were with me, saw the light and were afraid, but they heard not the voice of him that spake with me. They had heard the thunder which followed the escape of the lightning, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to Saul: they did not hear the words, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, &c. but they saw and heard enough to convince them that the whole was supernatural; for they were all struck down to the earth with the splendor of the light, and the sound of the thunder, which I suppose took place on this occasion. It has been a question among divines, whether Jesus Christ did really appear to Saul on this occasion. The arguments against the real appearance, are not strong. St. Luke tells us that those who were with him heard the voice but they saw no man; which is a strong intimation that he saw what they did not. Ananias, it seems, was informed that there had been a real appear- ance, for in addressing Saul, ver. 17. he says, the Lord Jesus that APPEARED unto THEE in the way as thou camest, &c And Barnabas intimates thus much, when he brought him before the apostles at Jerusalem, for he declared unto them how he had SEEN the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken unto him: and chap. xxii. 14. where the discourse of Ananias is given more at large, he says, The God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldst know his will and SEE that JUST ONE, and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth: so we find that hearing the voice, or words of his mouth, was not what is called the appearance; for besides this, there was an actual manifestation of the person of Christ. But St. Paul's own words 1 Cor. ix. 1. put the subject out of dispute: Am I not an apostle? Am I not free? HAVE I NOT SEEN JESUS CHRIST IN THE FLESH? to which may be added, 1 Cor. xv. 8. And last of all, HE WAS SEEN OF ME ALSO, as of one born out of due time.

Verse 8. When his eyes were opened, he saw no man] Instead of ουδενα no man, the Codex Alexandrinus, the Syriac, Vulgate, and some others, have ουδεν nothing. He not only saw no man, but he saw nothing, being quite blind; and therefore was led by the hand to Damascus, μη βλεπων, being without sight.

Verse 9. Neither did eat nor drink.] The anxiety of his mind and the anguish of his heart were so great that he had no appetite for food; and he continued in total darkness and without food for three days, till Ananias proclaimed salvation to him in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Verse 10. A certain disciple—named Ananias] A general opinion has prevailed in the Greek church, that this Ananias was one of the 72 disciples, and that he was martyred; and they celebrate this martyrdom on the first of October. It has been farther stated, that his house was turned into a church, which remains to the present day, though now occupied as a Turkish mosque: but even the Mohammedans have the tradition, and treat his memory with great respect. However this may be; from chap. xxii. 12. we learn what is of more importance, that he was a devout man, according to the law, having a good report of all the Jews that dwelt there. See on ver. 17.

To him said the Lord in a vision] Εν ὁραματι, in a strong impression made upon his mind, which left no doubt concerning its heavenly origin; nor of the truth of the things represented by it. It is very probable that the whole took place in a dream.

Verse 11. Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight] How very particular is this direction! and it was necessary that it should be so, that he might see the whole to be a divine communication: the house was probably one in which Saul was accustomed to reside when at Damascus; and where he was known as a native of Tarsus.

Tarsus was a city of Cilicia, seated on the Cnydus, and now called Tarasso. It was at one period, the capital of all Cilicia; and became a rival to Alexandria and Athens in the arts and sciences. The inhabitants, in the time of Julius Cæsar, having shewn themselves friendly to the Romans, were endowed with all the privileges of Roman citizens: and it was on this account, that St. Paul claimed the rights of a Roman citizen; a circumstance which on different occasions, was to him and the cause in which he was engaged, of considerable service.

Behold, he prayeth] He is earnestly seeking to know my will, and to find the salvation of his soul: therefore, go speedily and direct him. Some have laid needless stress on these words, as if they intimated, that "though Saul as a Pharisee, had often said his prayers, yet he had never prayed them till now." This is not correct; he could himself testify that while he was a Pharisee, he had lived in all good conscience towards God: and consequently in that time, made many faithful and fervent prayers: but he was praying now for instruction, and his prayers were speedily answered.

Verse 12. Hath seen in a vision] While God prepares Ananias by a vision, to go and minister to Saul; he at the same time prepares Saul by another vision, to profit by this ministry.

Verse 13. Lord, I have heard by many of this man] This was all done in a dream, else this sort of reasoning with his Maker would have been intolerable in Ananias. Saul had been a notorious persecutor; many could testify of his outrageous acts against the poor followers of Christ.

Thy saints] That is, the Christians or followers of Christ. Αγιοι signifies not only holy persons, but also consecrated persons; from α negative, and γη the earth; persons who are separated from all earthly uses, and consecrated to the service of God alone.

Verse 14. And here he hath authority, &c.] Ananias had undoubtedly heard of Saul's coming, and the commission he had received from the chief priests; and he was about to urge this as a reason why he should have no connexion with so dangerous a man.

Verse 15. Go thy way] He was thus prevented from going farther in his reasoning on this subject.

He is a chosen vessel unto me] The word σκευος in Greek, and כלי keley in Hebrew, though they literally signify a vessel, yet they are both used to signify any kind of instrument, or the means by which an act is done. In the Tract. Sohar Exod. fol. 87. on these words of Boaz to Ruth, chap. ii. ver. 9. When thou art athirst, go unto the vessels and drink, &c. there are these remarkable words, "כלי keley, vessels; that is the righteous, who are called the vessels or instruments of Jehovah: for it is decreed that the whole world shall bring gifts to the king Messiah; and these are the vessels of the Lord: vessels, I say, which the holy and blessed God uses, although they be brittle; but they are brittle only in this world, that they may establish the law and the worship with which the holy and blessed God is worshipped in this world; neither can this ministry be exercised but by vessels or instruments."

This mode of speech was common also among the Greek and Roman writers. So POLYBIUS, speaking of Damocles, Excerpta, Vol. III. lib. xiii. [Edit. Ernesti,] says, Ην ὑπηρετικον σκευος, και πολλας εχων εφορμας εις πραγματων οικονομιαν. "He was a useful instrument, and fit for the management of affairs." We find Paul in 1 Thess. iv. 4. using the same word σκευος, for the body, agreeable to the expression of Lucretius, iii. 441. Corpus quod VAS quasi constitit ejus. "The BODY, which is the VESSEL or instrument of the soul." See Bp. Pearce on this passage.

Chosen vessel.—Σκευος εκλογης is properly a Hebraism, for an excellent or well adapted instrument. Every reader of the Bible must have noticed how often the word chosen is used there to signify excelling or eminent: so we use the word choice, "choice men," eminent persons; "choice things," excellent articles. So in Jerem. xxii. 7. they shall cut down thy choice cedars וכרתו מבחר ארזיך vecaretu MIBCHAR arazeyca; και εκκοψουσι τας εκλεκτας κεδρους σου, SEPT. They shall cut the most EXCELLENT of thy cedars; or thy cedar trees, which are the most excellent of their kind, they will cut down. Whoever considers the character of St. Paul, his education, attainments in natural knowledge, the distinguished part he took, first against Christianity; and afterwards on the fullest conviction, the part he took in its favour; will at once perceive, how well he was every way qualified for the great work, to which God had called him.

To bear my name before the Gentiles] To carry the ensign of the cross among the Greeks and Romans; and by the demonstration of the Spirit, to confound their wisdom and learning; and prove, that neither salvation nor happiness could be found in any other. Hence he was emphatically called, the apostle of the Gentiles, 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11. See also Gal. ii. 7, 8. and Eph. v. 8.

Verse 16. How great things he must suffer] Instead of proceeding as a persecutor, and inflicting sufferings on others; I will shew him how many things he himself must suffer, for preaching that very doctrine, which he has been hitherto employed in persecuting. Strange change indeed! And with great show of reason, as with incontrovertible strength of argument, has a noble writer, Lord Lyttleton, adduced the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, and his subsequent conduct, as an irrefragable proof of the truth of Christianity.

Some think that the words, I will shew him, &c. refer to a visionary representation which Christ was immediately to give Saul, of the trials and difficulties which he should have to encounter; as also of that death, by which he should seal his testimony to the truth. If so, what a most thorough conviction must Saul have had of the truth of Christianity; cheerfully and deliberately to give up all worldly honours and profits, and go forward in a work which he knew a violent death was to terminate!

Verse 17. Brother Saul] As he found that the Head of the church had adopted Saul into the heavenly family; he made no scruple to give him the right hand of fellowship; and therefore said, brother Saul.

The Lord, even Jesus] Of what use is this intrusive word even here? It injures the sense. St. Luke never wrote it; and our translators should not have inserted it. The Lord Jesus, the sovereign Jesus who appeared unto thee in the way, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. Christ could have cured him as miraculously by his own power, without human means, as he had enlightened his heart without them; but he will honour man by making him his agent, even in working miracles.

Verse 18. There fell from his eyes as it had been scales] This was real: he had been so dazzled with the brightness of the light, that we may suppose the globe of the eye, and particularly the cornea, had suffered considerable injury. The structure of the cornea was doubtless much disturbed, and the whole of that humour would be rendered opaque, and incapable of permitting the rays of light to pass through the different humours to the retina; where all the images of things transmitted through the lenses, or humours, are distinctly painted. In the miraculous cure, the membrane was restored to its primitive state, and the opaque matter separated from the cornea, in the form of thin laminæ, or scales. This being done, the light would have as free a passage as formerly, and the result would be distinct vision.

And be filled with the Holy Ghost.] So it appears, that the Holy Spirit was given to him at this time; and probably by the imposition of the hands of Ananias. To say, that it would be degrading to an apostle, to receive the Holy Ghost by means of one who was not an apostle; is a very flimsy argument against the evidence which the text affords, that Saul did receive this Spirit by the ministry of Ananias: besides, Saul was not an apostle at this time; he was not even a Christian; and the Holy Ghost, which he received now, was given more to make him a thorough Christian convert, than to make him an apostle. No person will deny that he was baptized by Ananias: and certainly there was as strong an objection against an apostle receiving baptism from one who was not an apostle, as their could be in receiving the Holy Spirit from such a person. It is very likely that Ananias was either one of the seventy disciples commissioned by Jesus Christ himself; or one of those who had been converted on the day of pentecost. If he were the former, any authority that man could have, he had. But, who was the instrument, is a matter of little importance; as the apostleship, and the grace by which it was to be fulfilled, came immediately from Jesus Christ himself. Nor has there ever been an apostle, nor a legitimate successor of an apostle, that was not made such by Christ himself. If we consider the authority, as coming by man, or through any description of men; we should be arrested and confounded by the difficult question, Who baptized the apostles? Jesus Christ baptized no man, John iv. 2. Who then baptized Peter? Can the Roman conclave answer this question? I trow not. It would be as difficult to answer it, as to prove Peter's supremacy. We have no evidence who baptized the apostles, who themselves baptized so many others. The truth is, none but Christ ever made an apostle; and none but himself can make and qualify a Christian minister.

And arose, and was baptized.] That he was baptized by Ananias, there is every reason to believe; as he appears to have been the chief Christian at Damascus. As baptism implied, in an adult, the public profession of that faith into which he was baptized; this baptism of Saul proved, at once, his own sincerity, and the deep and thorough conviction he had of the truth of Christianity.

Verse 19. When he had received meat, he was strengthened] His mind must have been greatly worn down under his three days' conviction of sin, and the awful uncertainty he was in concerning his state: but when he was baptized, and had received the Holy Ghost, his soul was divinely invigorated; and now, by taking food, his bodily strength, greatly exhausted by three days' fasting, was renewed also. The body is not supported by the bread of life; nor the soul, by the bread that perisheth: each must have its proper aliment, that the whole man may be invigorated, and be enabled to perform all the functions of the animal and spiritual life, with propriety and effect.

Then was Saul certain days with the disciples] Doubtless under instructions, relative to the doctrines of Christianity; which he must learn particularly, in order to preach them successfully. His miraculous conversion did not imply, that he must then have a consummate knowledge of every Christian doctrine. To this day we find that even the genuine Christian convert has a thousand things to learn; and for his instruction he is placed in the church of Christ, where he is built up on his most holy faith, by the ministry and experience of the disciples. Without the communion of saints, who is likely to make a steady and consistent Christian; even though his conversion should have been the most sincere, and the most remarkable?

Verse 20. Preached Christ in the synagogues] Instead of Χριστον Christ, Ιησουν Jesus, is the reading of ABCE. several others of high importance, together with the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Slavonic, and Vulgate.

The great question to be determined for the conviction of the Jews, was, that JESUS was the Son of God. That the Christ, or Messiah, was to be the Son of God, they all believed. Saul was now convinced that Jesus, whom they had crucified, and who had appeared to him on the way, was the Son of God, or Messiah; and therefore as such he proclaimed him. The word Christ should be changed for Jesus, as the latter is, without doubt, the genuine reading.

The first offers of the grace of the gospel were uniformly made to the Jews. Saul did not at first offer Jesus to the heathens at Damascus; but to the synagogues of the Jews.

Verse 21. Is not this he that destroyed them] Ὁ πορθησας. The verb πορθειν has three acceptations in the Greek writers. 1. To treat one as an enemy, to spoil him of his goods. 2. To lead away captive, to imprison. 3. To slay. Paul was properly πορθων a destroyer, in all these senses. 1. He acted as the most determined enemy of the Christians: Being exceedingly mad against them, he persecuted them to strange cities, chap. xxvi. 11. 2. He shut up many of the saints in prison, chap. viii. 3. ix. 14. xxvi. 10. 3. He persecuted them unto death; gave his voice against them, that they might be destroyed; and was a principal instrument in the martyrdom of Stephen. He breathed threatenings and slaughter. See chap. vii. 58. viii. 1. ix. 1. xxvi. 10, 11. Therefore these three meanings of the original word are all exemplified in the conduct of Saul.

Verse 22. Confounded the Jews] Συνεχυνε; overwhelmed them so with his arguments, that they were obliged to blush for the weakness of their own cause.

Proving that this] ουτος this person, viz. JESUS, is very Christ; εστιν ὁ Χριστος is THE CHRIST, or Messiah. See on ver. 21.

Verse 23. And after that many days were fulfilled] What follows relates to transactions which took place about three years after his conversion; when he had come a second time to Damascus, after having been in Arabia. See Gal. i. 17, 18. What he did in Arabia, we know not; he probably preached Christ in different Jewish synagogues; but with what fruit, we are not told. St. Luke who could not have been ignorant of this part of his history, passes it over in silence; and any assertion, at this distance of time, relative to his employment in Arabia for those three years, must be both foolish and impertinent.

Verse 24. They watched the gates day and night to kill him.] At this time Damascus was under the government of Aretas, king of Arabia; who was now at war with Herod, his son-in-law, who had put away his daughter, in order to marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. As Herod was supported by the Romans, Saul's enemies might intimate that he was in league with them or Herod; and as the gates of the city were constantly watched and shut, that no spy might enter, and no fugitive get away, they thought it would be easy to apprehend him; and doubtless got orders for the different officers at the gates to be on the look-out, that he might not be permitted to escape.

Verse 25. Let him down by the wall] Favoured, probably, by a house built against or upon the wall, through the window of which they could lower him in a basket; and by this means he made his escape. His escape was something similar to that of the spies at Jericho, Josh. ii. 15

Believed not that he was a disciple] They did not suppose it possible that such a person could be converted to the faith of Christ. The full power of divine grace, in the conversion of the soul was not yet completely known.

Verse 27. Barnabas—brought him to the apostles] That is, to Peter and James; for others of the apostles he saw none Gal. i. 19. It appears that he went up at this time to Jerusalem, merely to see Peter, with whom he abode fifteen days, Gal. i. 18. How it came that the apostles and church at Jerusalem had not heard of Saul's conversion, which had taken place three years before, is not easy to be accounted for. The following considerations may help: 1. It is certain that intelligence did not travel speedily in those primitive times; there were few open roads, and no regular posts, except those between military stations. 2. Though there were many Jews in Damascus, and several Christians; yet the city was heathen, and under a heathen king, with whom the Jews at Jerusalem could have little commerce. 3. Though Herod had married the daughter of Aretas; yet, as he had put her away, there were great animosities between the two courts, which at last broke out into an open war: this must have prevented all social and commercial intercourse. 4. The Christians were at that time greatly persecuted by the Jews; and therefore the few that dwelt at Damascus could have little connection, if any, with their brethren at Jerusalem. 5. It might be the interest of the Jews at Jerusalem, supposing they had heard of it, to keep the fact of Saul's conversion as quiet as possible that the Christian cause might not gain credit by it. 6. They might have heard of his conversion; but either did not fully credit what they had heard, or were not satisfied that the person who now presented himself was the man; for it is not likely that all the Christians at Jerusalem had been personally acquainted with Saul.

Verse 28. He was with them, coming in and going out] Freely conversing and associating with them; but this seems to have continued only fifteen days. See Gal. i. 18.

Verse 29. Disputed against the Grecians] That is, the Hellenistic Jews, viz. those who lived in Grecian cities, spoke the Greek language, and used the Septuagint Version for their scriptures. And thus the Syriac Version has interpreted this place. See the note on chap. vi. 1. where this subject is largely explained.

Verse 30. They brought him down to Cæsarea] Calmet contends that this was Cæsarea of Palestine, and not Cæsarea Philippi; it being his opinion, and indeed that of others, that where this word occurs without any addition, in the New Testament, Cæsarea of Palestine is meant; and not Cæsarea Philippi. See on chap. viii. 40.

Sent him forth to Tarsus.] This was his own city; and it was right that he should proclaim to his own countrymen and relatives that gospel, through which he was become wise to salvation.

Verse 31. Then had the churches rest] Instead of αι εκκλησιαι, the churches, ABC. several others, the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Vulgate, have η εκκλησια, the church. Every assembly of God's people was a church; the aggregate of these assemblies was, THE CHURCH. The word ειρηνη, which we translate rest, and which literally signifies peace, evidently means, in this place, prosperity; and in this sense, both it, and the Hebrew שלום shalom are repeatedly used. But what was the cause of this rest or success? Some say, the conversion of Saul, who, before, made havoc of the church: but this is not likely, as he could not be a universal cause of persecution and distress, however active and virulent he might have been, during the time of his enmity to the Christian church. Besides, his own persecution, related above, shews that the opposition to the gospel continued with considerable virulence three years after his conversion: therefore, it was not Saul's ceasing to be a persecutor, that gave this rest to the churches. Dr. Lardner, with a greater show of probability, maintains that this rest edified; and walking in the fear of the Lord, [a] and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

was owing to the following circumstance: Soon after Caligula's accession to the imperial dignity, the Jews at Alexandria suffered very much from the Egyptians in that city; and at length their oratories were all destroyed. In the third year of Caligula, A. D. 39. Petronius, who was made president of Syria in the place of Vitellius, was sent by the emperor to set up his statue in the temple at Jerusalem. This was a thunder-stroke to the Jews, and so occupied them, that they had no time to think of any thing else; apprehending that their temple must be defiled, and the national religion destroyed, or themselves run the risk of being exterminated, if they rebelled against the imperial decree.

The account given by Josephus will set this in a clear point of view. "Caligula sent Petronius to go with an army to Jerusalem to set up his statues in the temple; enjoining him, if the Jews opposed it, to put to death all that made resistance, and to make all the rest of the nation slaves. Petronius therefore marched from Antioch into Judea, with three legions, and a large body of auxiliaries raised in Syria. All were hereupon filled with consternation, the army being come as far as Ptolemais. The Jews then gathering together, went to the plain near Ptolemais, and entreated Petronius in the first place for their laws, in the next place for themselves. Petronious was moved with their solicitations; and, leaving his army and the statues, went into Galilee, and called an assembly of the heads of the Jews, at Tiberias; and having exhorted them, without effect, to submit to the emperor's orders, said, 'Will ye then fight against Cæsar?' They answered, that they offered up sacrifices twice every day for the emperor and the Roman people; but that if he would set up the images, he ought first of all to sacrifice the whole Jewish nation; and that they were ready to submit themselves, their wives and children, to the slaughter." Philo gives a similar account of this transaction. See Lardner's Credibility, Works, Vol. I. p. 97, &c.

It appears, therefore, that as these transactions took place about the time mentioned in the text, that their persecution from the Romans, diverted them from persecuting the Christians; and THEN had the churches rest throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria; the terror occasioned by the imperial decree having spread itself through all those places.

Were edified] Οικοδομουμεναι; a metaphor taken from a building. 1. The ground is marked out; 2. the ichnograph, or dimensions of the building ascertained; 3. the foundation is digged; 4. the foundation stone laid; 5. the walls builded up, with course upon course; 6. the top-stone brought on; 7. the roof raised, and the whole covered in; and, 8. the interior part fitted up and adorned, and rendered convenient for the intended inhabitant. This figure frequently occurs in the sacred writings, especially in the New Testament. It has its reason in the original creation of man: God made the first human being as a shrine or temple, in which himself might dwell. Sin entered, and the heavenly building was destroyed. The materials, however, though all dislocated, and covered with rubbish, and every way defiled, yet exist; no essential power or faculty of the soul having been lost. The work of redemption consists in building up this house as it was in the beginning; and rendering it a proper habitation for God. The various powers, faculties, and passions, are all to be purified and refined by the power of the Holy Spirit; and order and harmony restored to the whole soul. All this is beautifully pointed out by St Peter, 1 Epist. chap. ii. 4, 5. To whom (Jesus Christ) coming as unto a LIVING STONE, chosen of God and precious, ye also as LIVING STONES, are BUILT UP a spiritual HOUSE, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices to God by Jesus Christ. And St. Paul, who, from his own profession as a tent-maker, could best seize on the metaphor, and press it into this spiritual service, goes through the whole figure at large, in the following inimitable words: Ye are the HOUSEHOLD of God, and are BUILT upon the FOUNDATION of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief CORNER-STONE, in whom all the BUILDING, FITLY FRAMED together, groweth unto a HOLY TEMPLE in the Lord: in whom ye also are BUILDED together for a HABITATION of God, through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 19—22. Edification signifies, therefore, an increase in the light, life, and power of God; being founded on the doctrine of Christ crucified, having the soul purified from all unrighteousness, and fitted, by increasing holiness, to be a permanent residence for the ever blessed God.

Walking in the fear of the Lord] Keeping a continually tender conscience; abhorring all sin; having respect to every divine precept; dreading to offend him, from whom the soul has derived its being and its blessings. Without this salutary fear of God, there never can be any circumspect walking.

In the comfort of the Holy Ghost] In a consciousness of their acceptance and union with God, through his Spirit; by which, solid peace and happiness are brought into the soul; the truly religious man knowing and feeling that he is of God, by the Spirit which is given him: nothing less can be implied in the comfort of the Holy Ghost.

Were multiplied.] No wonder that the church of God increased, when such lights as these shone among men. This is a short, but full and forcible description of the righteousness, purity, and happiness of the primitive church.

Verse 32. As Peter passed through all quarters] Δια παντων, Bp. Pearce thinks, should be translated not through all quarters, but through all the saints. The churches having rest, the apostles made use of this interval of quiet, to visit the different congregations, in order to build them up on their most holy faith. Of Saul, we hear no more till chap. xi. 30. which is supposed to be about five years after this time; eight in all, from his conversion. Peter, it seems, had continued in Jerusalem, all the time that the churches were in a state of persecution throughout the whole land. Great as he was, he never evidenced that steady, determinate courage, by which St. Paul was so eminently distinguished; nor did he ever suffer half so much for God and his truth.

To the saints] The Jews, who had been converted to Christianity.

Which dwelt at Lydda] A town in the tribe of Ephraim almost on the border of Judea, and nigh unto Joppa: it was about ten leagues from Jerusalem, and was afterwards known by the name of Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter.

Verse 33. A certain man named Eneas] This name has been celebrated in the annals of heathen poetry, in that beautiful work of the poet Virgil, called the Æneid; which gives an account of the misfortunes, travels, wars, &c. of a Trojan prince of this name, after the destruction of his native city Troy. On the difference of names which so frequently occurs in some parts of the Scriptures, Calmet makes the following judicious remarks: As both Greek and Hebrew, or Syriac, were commonly spoken in Palestine, most persons had two names, one Greek and the other Hebrew. Thus Peter was called Cephas in Hebrew, and Petros in Greek. Paul was called Saul in Hebrew, and Paulos in Greek. The person in ver. 36. Tabitha in Hebrew, and Dorcas in Greek. And the paralytic person cured by Peter, Hananiah in Hebrew, and Aineas in Greek. So Thomas was the Hebrew name of the apostle, who in Greek was called Didymus.

Had kept his bed eight years] This was occasioned by a palsy; and now inveterate and hopeless, through its long standing.

Verse 34. Jesus Christ maketh thee whole] Not Peter, for he had no power, but what was given him from above. And as an instrument, any man could heal with this power, as well as Peter; but God chose to put honour upon those primitive preachers of his word, that men might see that they were commissioned from heaven.

Arise, and make thy bed] Give now full proof that Jesus Christ HAS made thee whole, by arising, and by making thy bed. He was at home, and therefore was not commanded, as the paralytic person, to take up his bed; but he was ordered to make it, that all might see that the cure was perfect.

Verse 35. All that dwelt in Lydda and Saron saw him] Saron was that champaign country that lay between Joppa and Lydda. The long affliction of this man had been well known, and his cure, consequently, became a subject of general examination: it was found to be real. It was known to have been performed by the grace and mercy of Christ; and the consequence of all this conviction was, that all these people became Christians.

Verse 36. Now there was at Joppa] This was a sea-port town on the coast of the Mediterranean sea, about a day's journey from Jerusalem. It is supposed to be the same which is called in the Old Testament Japho, which belonged to the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 46. It is at present called Jaffa; and is still a place of considerable note.

A certain disciple named Tabitha] This word is more properly Syriac, than Hebrew. ܛܒܝܬܐ tebitho is the word in the Syriac Version, and is their manner of writing the Hebrew צבי tsebi; the ט teth being changed for the צ tsaddi. The word ܛܒܐ tabio, and the feminine ܛܒܝܬܐ tabitho, have the same meaning as the Hebrew צבי tsebi, and the Greek Δορκας, Dorcas, and signify the gazel or antelope: and it is still customary in the East, to give the names of beautiful animals to young women. The comparison of fine eyes to those of the antelope, is continually occurring in the writings of the Arabic and Persian poets. The person in the text probably had her name in the same way. She was very beautiful, and was therefore called Tabitha and Dorcas.

This woman was full of good works] She spent her life in acts of kindness and charity. Her soul was full of love to God and man; and her whole time was filled up with works of piety and mercy.

called [a] Dorcas: this woman was full [b] of good works and alms deeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in [c] an upper chamber.

38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there; they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not [d] delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them.

a Or, Doe, or, Roe.——b 1 Tim. 2. 10. Titus 3. 8.

c Ch. 1. 13.——d Or, be grieved.

Verse 37. She was sick, and died] Even her holiness and usefulness could not prevent her from sickness and death. Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return, is a decree that must be fulfilled, even on the saints; for the body is dead, sentenced to death, because of sin, though the Spirit be life because of righteousness.

Whom when they had washed] Having the fullest proof that she was dead, they prepared her for her interment. In most nations of the world, it was customary to wash their dead before they buried them; and before they laid them out, to lie in state, as Homer tells us, was the case with the body of Patroclus:

Ως ειπων, ἑταροισιν εκεκλετο διος Αχιλλευς,
Αμφι πυρι ϛησαι τριποδα μεγαν οφρα ταχιϛα
Πατροκλου λουσειαν———
Και τοτε δη λουσαν τε, και ηλειψαν λιπ' ελαιῳ———

Iliad. xviii. 343.

"So saying, he bade his train surround with fire
A tripod huge, that they might quickly cleanse
Patroclus, from all stains of clotted gore.
They on the blazing hearth a tripod placed,
Infus'd the water, thrust dry wood beneath,
And soon the flames encompassing around
Its ample belly, warmed the flood within.
Soon as the water in the singing brass
Simmer'd, they bath'd him, and with limpid oil Anointed.
They stretch'd him on his bed, then cover'd him
From head to feet with linen texture light,
And with a wide unsullied mantle last."

COWPER.

The waking or watching of the dead, was also practised among the ancient Greeks, as we learn from a preceding paragraph, where Achilles, addressing his dead friend Patroclus, tells him,

Τοφρα δε μοι παρα νηυσι κορωνισι κεισεαι αυτως·
Αμφι δε σε Τρωαι και Δαρδανιδες βαθυκολποι
Κλαυσονται, νυκτας τε και ηματα δακρυχεουσαι.

Il. xviii. 338.

"Mean time, among
My lofty gallies thou shalt lie, with tears
Mourned day and night, by Trojan captives fair
And Dardan, compassing thy bier around."—COWPER.

A similar description is given by Virgil of the funeral obsequies of Misenus, Æneid vi. ver. 212.

Nec minus interea Misenum in littore Teucri
Flebant & cineri ingrato suprema ferebant.
* * * * * * * *
Pars calidos latices et aëna undantia flammis
Expediunt, corpusque lavant frigentis & unguunt
Fit gemitus: tum membra toro defleta reponunt,
Purpureasque super vestis velamina nota
Conjiciunt, &c.

"Meanwhile, the Trojan troops with weeping eyes
To dead Misenus pay his obsequies.
First from the ground a lofty pile they rear
Of pitch-trees, oaks and pines, and unctuous fir:
The fabric's front, with cyprus twigs they strew;
And stick the sides with boughs of baleful yew,
The topmost part, his glitt'ring arms adorn;
Warm waters then in brazen cauldrons borne,
Are poured to wash his body, joint by joint;
And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint.
With groans and cries Misenus they deplore.
Then on a bier with purple cover'd o'er
The breathless body, thus bewail'd they lay.

DRYDEN.

These rites, in many respects, resemble those still used among the native Irish. See the account of the funeral ceremonies of the Egyptians, in the notes on Gen. chap. l. 2. The primitive Christians washed the bodies of their dead, not only out of decency and affectionate repect to them; but as a token of their firm belief in the resurrection of the dead.

Verse 38. Sent to Peter—desiring that he would not delay to come] Tabitha died at Joppa, and Peter was at Lydda, about four leagues distant. But why did they send for Peter? We cannot tell. It is not likely that they had any expectation that he should raise her from the dead; for none of the apostles had as yet raised any: and if God did not chuse to restore Stephen to life, this favour could not be reasonably expected, in behalf of inferior persons. However, they might hope that he who cured Eneas at Lydda, might cure Dorcas; for it is probable that they had sent for Peter before she died: and in this sense we might understand the απεϛειλαν of the text.

ἱματια, the outer and inner garments. These, it appears, she had made for the poor, and more particularly for poor widows, in whose behalf she had incessantly laboured.

Verse 40. Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed] It was not even known to Peter, that God would work this miracle: therefore he put all the people out, that he might seek the will of God by fervent prayer, and during his supplications, be liable neither to distraction nor interruption, which he must have experienced, had he permitted this company of weeping widows to remain in the chamber.

And turning—to the body] Σωμα; the lifeless body, for the spirit had already departed.

Said, Tabitha, arise] During his wrestling with God, he had, undoubtedly, received confidence that she would be raised at his word.

And when she saw Peter, she sat up] As Dorcas was a woman so eminently holy, her happy soul had doubtless gone to the paradise of God. Must she not therefore be filled with regret to find herself thus called back to earth again? And must not the remembrance of the glories she had now lost, fill her with dislike to all the goods of earth? No: for, 1. as a saint of God, her Maker's will must be her's; because she knew that this will must be ever best. 2. It is very likely that in the case of the revivescence of saint or sinner, God mercifully draws a veil over all they have seen or known, so that they have no recollection of what they have either seen or heard. Even St. Paul found it impossible to tell what he had heard in the third heaven, though he was probably not in the state of the dead. Of the œconomy of the invisible world, God will reveal nothing. We walk here by faith, and not by sight.

Verse 41. Saints and widows] In primitive times, the widows formed a distinct part of the christian church.

Verse 42. Many believed in the Lord.] That is, in Christ Jesus, in whose name and through whose power they understood this miracle to be wrought. This miracle, as well as that at Lydda, was not only the mean of strengthening the faith of the disciples, and gaining credit to the cause of Christianity; but also of bringing many sincere converts to the Lord, so that the church was thereby both builded up and multiplied.

Verse 43. He tarried many days in Joppa] Taking advantage of the good impression made on the people's minds by the miracle, he preached to them the great truths of Christianity; and thus established them in the faith.

Simon a tanner.] Whether the original word βυρσευς signifies a tanner or a currier, is of little consequence. The person who dealt in the hides, whether of clean or unclean animals, could not be in high repute among the Jews. Even in Joppa, the trade appears to have been reputed unclean; and therefore this Simon had his house by the sea-side. See chap. x. 6. Of the trade itself, the Talmudists speak with great contempt; they reckon it among blemishes. See proofs in Schoettgen.

1. Thus terminates what has not been improperly called the first period of the Christian Church, which began at the day of pentecost, chap. ii. and continued to the resurrection of Dorcas; a period of about eight years. During the whole of this time, the gospel was preached to the Jews only, no Gentile being called, before Cornelius; the account of whose conversion, and the divine vision that led to it, are detailed in the following chapter. Salvation was of the Jews: theirs were the fathers, the covenants, and the promises; and from them came Christ Jesus; and it was right that they should have the first offer of a salvation, which, while it was a light to lighten the Gentiles, was to be the glory of the Israelitish people. When they utterly rejected it, then the apostles turned unto the Gentiles. Among them the Christian church was founded; and thus the reprobates became the elect; and the elect became reprobates. Reader! behold the goodness and severity of God! towards them that fell, severity; but towards thee goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou shalt be cut off, Rom. xi. 22. Thou canst only stand by faith; and be not high-minded, but fear. Nothing less than Christ dwelling in thy heart by faith, can save thy soul unto eternal life.

2. The conversion of Saul of Tarsus is one of the most remarkable facts, recorded in the history of the Christian church. When we consider the man; the manner in which he was brought to the knowledge of the truth; the impression made on his own mind and heart by the vision he had on his way to Damascus, and the effect produced in all his subsequent life, we have a series of the most convincing evidences of the truth of the Christian religion. In this light he ever viewed the subject himself; the manner of his conversion he ever appealed to, as the most proper apology for his conduct; and on several most important occasions, he not only refers to it, but enters into a detail of its circumstances, that his hearers might see that the excellency of the power was of GOD and not of man.

Saul of Tarsus was not a man of a light, fickle, and uncultivated mind. His natural powers were vast, his character the most decided, and his education, as we learn from his historian, and from his writings, was at once both liberal and profound. He was born and brought up in a city which enjoyed every privilege of which Rome itself could boast; and was a successful rival both of Rome and Athens in arts and science. Though a Jew, it is evident that his education was not confined to matters that concerned his own people and country alone. He had read the best Greek writers, as his style, allusions, and quotations sufficiently prove; and in matters which concern his own religion, he was instructed by Gamaliel, one of the most celebrated doctors the synagogue had ever produced. He was evidently master of the three great languages which were spoken among the only people who deserved the name of nations: the Hebrew, and its prevailing dialect, the Chaldaio-Syriac; the Greek, and the Latin; languages which, notwithstanding all the cultivation through which the earth has passed, maintain their rank, which is a most decisive superiority over all the languages of the universe. Was it likely that such a man, possessing such a mind, cultivated to such an extent, could have been imposed on or deceived? The circumstances of his conversion forbid the supposition: they do more: they render it impossible. One consideration on this subject will prove, that imposture in this case was impossible: He had no communication with Christians; the men that accompanied him to Damascus were of his own mind; virulent, determined enemies to the very name of Christ: and his conversion took place in the open day, on the open road, in company only with such men as the persecuting high-priest and sanhedrin thought proper to be employed in the extermination of Christianity. In such circumstances, and in such company, no cheat could be practised. But was not he the deceiver? The supposition is absurd and monstrous, for this simple reason, that there was no motive that could prompt him to feign what he was not; and no end that could be answered by assuming the profession of Christianity. Christianity had in it such priciples as must expose it to the hatred of Greece, Rome, and Judea. It exposed the absurdity and folly of Grecian and Roman superstition and idolatry; and asserted itself to be the completion, end, and perfection of the whole Mosaic œconomy. It was therefore hated by all those nations; and its followers despised, detested, and persecuted. From the profession of such a religion so circumstanced, could any man, who possessed even the most moderate share of common sense, expect secular emolument or advantage? No! Had not this apostle of the Gentiles the fullest conviction of the truth of Christianity, the fullest proof of its heavenly influence on his own soul, the brightest prospect of the reality and blessedness of the spiritual world, he could not have taken one step in the path which the doctrine of Christ pointed out. Add to this, that he lived long after his conversion, saw Christianity and its influence in every point of view; and tried it in all circumstances. What was the result? the deepest conviction of its truth; so that he counted all things dross and dung in comparison of the excellency of its knowledge. Had he continued a Jew, he would have infallibly risen to the first dignities and honours of his nation; but he willingly forfeited all his secular privileges, and well-grounded expectations of secular honour and emolument, and espoused a cause, from which he could not only have no expectation of worldly advantage, but which, most evidently and necessarily, exposed him to all sorts of privations, sufferings, hardships, dangers, and death itself! These were not only the unavoidable consequences of the cause he espoused; but he had them fully in his apprehension, and constantly in his eye. He predicted them, and knew that every step he took was a progressive advance in additional sufferings, and the issue of his journey must be a violent death!

The whole history of St. Paul proves him to be one of the greatest of men; and his conduct after he became a Christian, had it not sprung from a divine motive, of the truth of which he had the fullest conviction, would have shewn him to be one of the weakest of men. The conclusion therefore is self-evident, that in St. Paul's call there could be no imposture; that in his own mind there could be no deception, that his conversion was from heaven; and the religion he professed and taught, the infallible and eternal truth of Jehovah. In this full conviction, he counted not his life dear unto him, but finished his rugged race with joy, cheerfully giving up his life for the testimony of Jesus; and thus his luminous sun set in blood, to rise again in glory. The conversion of St. Paul is the triumph of Christianity; his writings, the fullest exhibition and defence of its doctrines; and his life and death, a glorious illustration of its principles. Armed with the history of Paul's conversion and life, the feeblest believer needs not fear the most powerful infidel. The ninth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, will ever remain an inexpugnable fortress to defend Christianity, and defeat its enemies. Reader, hath not God so done his marvellous works that they may be had in everlasting remembrance?

CHAPTER X.

An angel appears to Cornelius, a centurion, and directs him to send to Joppa, for Peter to instruct him in the way of salvation, 1—6. He sends accordingly, 7, 8. While the messengers are on their way to Joppa, Peter has a remarkable vision, by which he is taught how he should treat the Gentiles, 9—16. The messengers arrive at the house of Simon the tanner, and deliver their message, 17—22. They lodge there that night, and on the morrow Peter accompanies them to Cæsarea, where they find Cornelius and his friends assembled, waiting the coming of Peter, 23, 24. Peter makes an apology for his coming, and enquires for what purpose Cornelius had sent for him, 25—29. Cornelius answers, 30—33. And Peter preaches unto him Jesus as the Saviour of the world, and the Judge of quick and dead, 34—43. While he speaks, the Holy Ghost descends on Cornelius and his company; and they spake with new tongues, and magnify God, 44—46. Peter commands them to be baptized in the name of the Lord, 47, 48.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

I have already observed (see the conclusion of the preceding chapter) that hitherto the apostles confined their labours among the Jews and circumcised proselytes; not making any offer of salvation to the Gentiles: for they had fully imbibed the opinion, that none could enter into the kingdom of God, and be finally saved, unless they were circumcised, and became obedient to the law of Moses. This prejudice would have operated so, as finally to prevent them from preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, had not God, by a particular interposition of his mercy and goodness, convinced Peter, and through him all the other apostles, that he had accepted the Gentiles as well as the Jews; and would put no difference between the one and the other, purifying their hearts by faith, and giving the Gentiles the Holy Ghost, as he had before given it to the Jews. The means which he used to produce this conviction in the minds of the apostles, are detailed at length in the following chapter.

Verse 1. There was a certain man in Cæsarea] This was Cæsarea of Palestine, called also Strato's Tower, as has been already noted; and the residence of the Roman procurator.

A centurion] Εκατονταρχης, the chief or captain of 100 men, as both the Greek and Latin words imply. How the Roman armies were formed, divided, and marshalled, see in the notes on Matt. xx. A centurion among the Romans was about the same rank as a captain among us.

The band called the Italian band] The word σπειρα, which we translate band, signifies the same as cohort or regiment, which sometimes consisted of 555 infantry and 66 cavalry; but the cohors prima, or first cohort, consisted of 1105 infantry and 132 cavalry, in the time of Vegetius. But the cavalry are not to be considered as part of the cohort, but rather a company joined to it. A Roman legion consisted of ten cohorts; the first of which surpassed all the others, both in numbers and in dignity. When in former times the Roman legion contained 6000, each cohort consisted of 600, and was divided into three manipuli; but both the legions and cohorts were afterwards various in the numbers they contained. As there were doubtless many Syrian auxiliaries, the regiment in question was distinguished from them as consisting of Italian, i. e. Roman soldiers. The Italian cohort is not unknown among the Roman writers: Gruter gives an inscription, which was found in the Forum Sempronii, on a fine table of marble, nine feet long, four feet broad, and four inches thick; on which are the following words:

L. MAESIO. L. F. POL
RVFO. PROC. AVG.
TRIB. MIL. LEG. X.
APOLLINARIS. TRIB
COH. MIL. ITALIC. VOLUNT
QVAE. EST. IN. SYRIA. PRAEF
FABRVM. BIS.

See Gruter's Inscriptions, p. ccccxxxiii—iv.

This was probably the same cohort as that mentioned here by St. Luke; for the tenth legion mentioned in the above inscription was certainly in Judea, A. D. 69. Tacitus also mentions the Italica legio, the Italic legion, lib. i. c. 59. which Junius Blœsus had under his command in the province

3 [a] He saw in a vision evidently, about the ninth hour of the day, an angel of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon whose surname is Peter:

of Lyons. We learn from the Roman historians, that the fifth, tenth, and fifteenth legions were stationed in Judea: and the third, fourth, sixth, and twelfth in Syria. The Italic legion was in the battle of Bedriacum, fought A. D. 69. between the troops of Vitellius and Otho; and performed essential services to the Vitellian army. See Tacitus, Hist. lib. ii. cap. 41. The issue of this battle was the defeat of the Othonians, on which Otho slew himself; and the empire was confirmed to Vitellius.

Wherever he sees it necessary, St. Luke carefully gives dates and facts, to which any might have recourse who might be disposed to doubt his statements: we have had several proofs of this in his Gospel. See especially chap. i. 1, &c. and iii. 1, &c. and the notes there.

Verse 2. A devout man] Ευσεβης from ευ well, and σεβομαι I worship. A person who worships the true God, and is no idolater.

One that feared God] Φοβουμενος τον Θεον, one who was acquainted with the true God, by means of his word and laws; who respected these laws, and would not dare to offend his Maker and his Judge. This is necessarily implied in the fear of God.

With all his house] He took care to instruct his family in the knowledge, which he himself had received; and to establish the worship of God in his house.

Gave much alms] His love to God led him to love men; and this love proved its sincerity by acts of beneficence and charity.

Prayed to God alway.] Felt himself a dependent creature: knew he had no good, but what he had received; and considered God to be the fountain whence he was to derive all his blessings. He prayed to God alway; was ever in the spirit of prayer, and frequently in the act. What an excellent character is this! and yet the man was a Gentile! He was what a Jew would repute common and unclean, see ver. 28. He was therefore not circumcised; but, as he worshipped the true God, without any idolatrous mixtures, and was in good report among all the nation of the Jews, he was undoubtedly what was called a proselyte of the gate, though not a proselyte of justice; because he had not entered into the bond of the covenant by circumcision. This was a proper person, being so much of a Jew and so much of a Gentile, to form the connecting link between both people; and God chose him that the salvation of the Jews might with as little observation as possible be transmitted to the Gentiles. The choice of such a person, through whom the door of faith was opened to the heathen world, was a proof of the wisdom and goodness of God. The man who was chosen to this honour, was not a profligate Gentile; nor yet a circumcised proselyte. He was a Gentile, amiable and pure in his manners: and, for his piety and charitableness, held in high estimation among all the nation of the Jews. Against such a person they could not, with any grace, be envious, though God should pour out upon him the gift of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 3. He saw in a vision evidently] The text is as plain as it can be, that an angel of God did appear to Cornelius. This was in a vision, i. e. a supernatural representation; and it was φανερως manifestly, evidently made; and at such a time too, as precluded the possibility of his being asleep; for it was about the ninth hour of the day, answering to our three o'clock in the afternoon, (see note on chap. iii. 1.) the time of public prayer, according to the custom of the Jews: and while Peter was engaged in that sacred duty. The angelic appearance to Cornelius was something similar to that made to Daniel, chap. ix. 20—23. and that especially to Zachariah, the father of John Baptist, Luke i. 11, &c.

Verse 4. Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial] Being all performed in simplicity and godly sincerity, they were acceptable to the Most High.

Come up for a memorial: this form of speech is evidently borrowed from the sacrificial system of the Jews. Pious and sincere prayers are high in God's estimation; and therefore are said to ascend to him, as the smoke and flame of the burnt-offering appeared to ascend to heaven.

These prayers and alms came up for a memorial before God: this is a manifest allusion to the meat-offering, which in Lev. ii. 16. is said to be אזכרה azkerah, a memorial, (speaking after the manner of men,) to put God in remembrance that such a person was his worshipper, and needed his protection and help. So the prayers and alms of Cornelius ascended before God as an acceptable sacrifice, and were recorded in the kingdom of heaven, that the answers might be given in their due season.

Verse 6. Simon a tanner] See the note on chap. ix. 43.

What thou oughtest to do.] From this it appears that matters of great moment had occupied the mind of Cornelius.

whose house is by the sea side: [a] he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, [b] Peter went up upon the house-top to pray about the sixth hour:

He was not satisfied with the state of his own soul, nor with the degree he possessed of religious knowledge; and he set apart a particular time for extraordinary fasting and prayer, that God might farther reveal to him the knowledge of his will. Perhaps he had heard of Jesus, and had been perplexed with the different opinions that prevailed concerning him; and now prayed to God that he might know what part he should take; and the answer to this prayer is, "Send to Joppa for Simon Peter, he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." This clause, so explanatory, is wanting in almost every MS. and version of note. Griesbach and some others have left it out of the text.

Verse 7. And a devout soldier] It has already been remarked that Cornelius had taken care to instruct his family in divine things; and it appears also that he had been attentive to the spiritual interests of his regiment. We do not find that it was then, even among the Romans, considered a disgrace for a military officer to teach his men lessons of morality, and piety towards God.

Verse 8. He sent them to Joppa.] It has been properly remarked, that from Joppa, Jonah was sent to preach to the Gentiles of Nineveh: and from the same place Peter was sent to preach the gospel to the Gentiles at Cæsarea.

Verse 9. On the morrow, as they went on their journey] From Joppa to Cæsarea was about twelve or fifteen leagues; the messengers could not have left the house of Cornelius till about two hours before sun-set; therefore, they must have travelled a part of the night, in order to arrive at Joppa, the next day, towards noon. Calmet. Cornelius sent two of his household servants, by way of respect to Peter; probably the soldier was intended for their defence, as the roads in Judea were by no means safe.

Peter went up upon the house-top to pray] It has often been remarked, that the houses in Judea were builded with flat roofs, on which people walked, conversed, meditated, prayed, &c. The house-top was the place of retirement; and thither Peter went for the purpose of praying to God.

Verse 10. He became very hungry] It seems that this happened about dinner-time; for it appears that they were making ready, παρασκευαζοντων dressing the victuals for the family. The dinner among the ancients was a very slight meal; and they had no breakfast: their supper was their principal meal. And in very ancient times, they ate only once in the day. Supper was the meal at which they saw their friends, the business of the day being then finished.

He fell into a trance] Επεπεσεν επ' αυτον εκστασις, an extasy fell upon him. A person may be said to be in an extasy when transported with joy or admiration; so that he is insensible to every object, but that on which he is engaged. Peter's extasy is easily accounted for: he went up to the house-top to pray: at first he felt keen hunger; but being earnestly engaged with God, all natural appetites became absorbed in the intense application of his soul to his Maker. While every passion and appetite was under this divine influence, and the soul, without let or hindrance, freely conversing with God, then the visionary and symbolical representation mentioned here, took place.

Verse 11. And saw heaven opened] His mind now entirely spiritualized, and absorbed in heavenly contemplation, was capable of discoveries of the spiritual world; a world, which with its πληρωμα, or plenitude of inhabitants, surrounds us at all times; but which we are incapable of seeing, through the dense medium of flesh and blood, and their necessarily concomitant earthly passions. Much, however, of such a world and its œconomy may be apprehended by him who is purified from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; and who has perfected holiness in the fear of God. But this is a subject to which the enthusiast in vain attempts to ascend. The turbulent working of his imagination, and the gross earthly crudities which he wishes to obtrude on the world as revelations from God, afford a sufficient refutation of their own blasphemous pretensions.

A great sheet knit at the four corners] Perhaps intended to be an emblem of the universe, and its various nations, to the four corners of which the gospel was to extend; and to offer its blessings to all the inhabitants, without distinction of nation, &c.

great sheet knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; [a] for I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, [b] What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 ¶ Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made enquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

A.M.cir.4045. A. D. cir. 41. An. Olymp. cir. CCV. 1.

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there?

20 [d] Arise, therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

Verse 12. All manner of four-footed beasts, &c.] Every species of quadrupeds, whether wild or domestic; all reptiles, and all fowls. Consequently, both the clean and unclean were present in this visionary representation: those that the Jewish law allowed to be sacrificed to God, or proper for food; as well as those which that law had prohibited in both cases: such as the beasts, that do not chew the cud; fish, which have no scales; fowls of prey, and such others as are specified in Lev. xi. where see the notes.

Verse 13. Rise, Peter; kill and eat.] Θυσον και φαγε, sacrifice and eat. Though this verb is sometimes used to signify the slaying of animals for food; yet, as the proper notion is to slay for the purpose of sacrifice, it appears to me to be better to preserve that meaning here. Animals that were offered in sacrifice, were considered as given to God; and when he received the life, the flesh was given to those who offered the sacrifice that they might feed upon it: and every sacrifice had in it the nature of a covenant; and covenants were usually made by eating together on the flesh of the sacrifice offered on the occasion; God being supposed to be invisibly present with them, and partaking of the feast. The Jews and Gentiles are certainly represented by the clean and unclean animals in this large vessel: these, by the ministry of the gospel, were to be offered up a spiritual sacrifice to God. Peter was to be a prime instrument in this work; he was to offer them to God, and rejoice in the work of his hands. The spirit of the heavenly direction seems to be this: "The middle wall of partition is now to be pulled down; the Jews and Gentiles are called to become one flock, under one shepherd and bishop of souls. Thou, Peter, shalt open the door of faith to the Gentiles, and be also the minister of the circumcision. Rise up; already a blessed sacrifice is prepared: go and offer it to God, and let thy soul feed on the fruits of his mercy and goodness, in thus shewing his gracious design of saving both Jews and Gentiles by Christ crucified."

Verse 14. Common or unclean.] By common, κοινον, whatever was in general use among the Gentiles, is to be understood; by ακαθαρτον, unclean, every thing that was forbidden by the Mosaic law. However, the one word may be considered as explanatory of the other. The Rabbins themselves, and many of the primitive Fathers, believed that by the unclean animals forbidden by the law, the Gentiles were meant.

Verse 15. What God hath cleansed] God, who made at first the distinction between Jews and Gentiles, has a right to remove it, whenever and by whatever means he pleases: he, therefore, who made the distinction for wise purposes, between the clean and the unclean, now pronounces all to be clean. He had authority to do the first; he has authority to do the last. God has purposed that the Gentiles shall have the gospel preached to them: what he therefore has cleansed, "that, call not thou common."

Verse 16. This was done thrice] For the greater certainty, and to make the deeper impression on the apostle's mind.

And the vessel was received up again into heaven.] Both Jews and Gentiles came equally from God; and to him, both, by the preaching of the gospel, shall again return.

Verse 17. While Peter doubted—the men—stood before the gate] In all this we find an admirable display of the œconomy of Providence. Cornelius prays and has a vision which prepares him to receive instruction from Peter: Peter prays, and has a vision which prepares and disposes him to give instruction to Cornelius. While he is in doubts and perplexity what the full meaning of the vision might be, the messengers, who had been despatched under the guidance of an especial Providence, came to the door: and the Holy Spirit gives him information that his doubts should be all cleared up, by accompanying the men who were now enquiring for him. How exactly does every thing in the conduct of Providence occur: and how completely is every thing adapted to time, place, and occasion! all is in weight, measure, and number. Those simple occurrences, which men snatch at and press into the service of their own wishes, and call them providential openings, may, indeed, be links of a providential chain, in reference to some other matter: but unless they be found to speak the same language in all their parts, occurrence corresponding with occurrence; they are not to be construed as indications of the Divine will in reference to the claimants. Many persons, through these misapprehensions, miscarrying, have been led to charge God foolishly for the unsuccessful issue of some business in which their passions, not his providence, prompted them to engage.

Verse 21. Which were sent unto him from Cornelius] This clause is wanting in almost every MS of worth; and in almost all the Versions.

Behold, I am he whom ye seek] A sudden unexpected speech, like the address of Æneas to Dido; when the cloud in which he was involved, suddenly dissipated, and he appeared with the exclamation, ——coram quem quæritis, adsum!

Æn. lib. i. 595.

What is the cause wherefore ye are come?] He still did not know the full import of the vision; but being informed by the Holy Spirit, that three men were seeking him, and that he should go with them, without scruple, he instantly obeyed; and finding them at the door, desired to know why they sought him?

Verse 22. Cornelius the centurion, &c.] They give him the simple relation which they had received from their master. For the character of Cornelius, see the comment on verse 2.

To hear words of thee.] But of what kind they could not as yet tell.

Verse 23. Then called he them in, &c.] They had already walked a long journey in a short time, and needed refreshment; and it was thought expedient that they should rest that night with Simon the tanner.

Certain brethren from Joppa] They were six in number, as we learn from chap. xi. 12. It was necessary that there should be several witnesses of the important transactions which were about to take place as on no slight evidence, would even the converted Jews believe, that repentance unto life, and the Holy Spirit, should be granted to the Gentiles.

Verse 24. His kinsmen and near friends.] Συγγενεις, his relatives, and αναγκαιους φιλους, his necessary friends; but the Syriac makes αναγκαιους an epithet, as well as συγγενεις, and thus the passage may be read, his kinsmen, his domestics, and his friends. It appears that he had collected the whole circle of his intimate acquaintance, that they also might profit by a revelation which he expected to come immediately from heaven: and these amounted to many persons; see ver. 27.

Verse 25. Fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.] As Peter's coming was announced by an angel, Cornelius might have supposed that Peter himself was an angel, and of a superior order; seeing he came to announce what the first angel was not employed to declare; it was probably, in consequence of this thought, that he prostrated himself before Peter, offering him the highest act of civil respect; for there was nothing in the act, as performed by Cornelius, which belonged to the worship of the true God. Prostrations to superiors were common in all Asiatic countries. The Codex Bezæ, and the latter Syriac, in the margin, read this verse differently from all other MSS. and Versions; thus, But as Peter drew nigh to Cæsarea, one of the servants ran before, and told that he was 26 But Peter took him up, saying, [a] Stand up; I myself also am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how [b] that it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but [c] God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common or unclean.

come: then Cornelius leaped up, and met him, and falling at his feet, he worshipped him. This is a very remarkable addition, and relates circumstances that we may naturally suppose did actually take place.

Verse 26. I myself also am a man.] "I am not an angel; I am come to you simply on the part of God, to deliver to you the doctrine of eternal life."

Verse 27. And as he talked with him] Cornelius had met Peter at some short distance from his house, and they conversed together, till they went in.

Verse 28. Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing, &c.] He addressed the whole company, among whom it appears, there were persons well acquainted with Jewish customs; probably some of them were Jewish proselytes.

But God hath shewed me, &c.] He now began to understand the import of the vision which he saw at Joppa. A Gentile is not to be avoided, because he is a Gentile; God is now taking down the partition wall which separated them from the Jews.

Verse 29. I ask—for what intent ye have sent for me?] Peter had been informed of this by the servants of Cornelius, ver. 22. but as all the company might not have been informed of the circumstances, he, as it were, invites him to tell his story afresh, that his friends, &c. might be the better prepared to receive the truth, which he was about to dispense, in obedience to his divine commission.

Verse 30. Four days ago, I was fasting until this hour] It was then about three o'clock in the afternoon; and it appears that Cornelius had continued his fasts from three o'clock the preceding day to three o'clock the day following; not that he had fasted four days together, as some suppose; for even if he did fast four days consecutively, he ate one meal on each day. It is however necessary to remark that the word νηστευων, fasting, is wanting in ABC. one other: the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Vulgate: but it has not been omitted in any edition of the Greek Testament.

Verse 31. Thy prayer is heard] See the note on ver. 4. Cornelius prayed, fasted, and gave alms. It was in this way, he looked for salvation; not to purchase it; a thought of this kind does not appear to have entered into his mind: but these were the means he used to get his soul brought to the knowledge of the truth. The Reader must recollect, that in the case of Cornelius, there was no open vision; he used the light and power which God had already given; and behold how mightily God increased his gifts! He that hath, i. e. that uses what he has, shall receive; and no man can expect any increase of light or life, who does not improve the grace already given.

Verse 33. Are we all here present before God] Instead of before GOD, the Codex Bezæ, Syriac, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Vulgate, read before THEE. The people were all waiting for the preacher, and every heart was filled with expectation; they waited as before God, from whose messenger they were about to hear the words of life.

Verse 34. God is no respecter of persons] He does not esteem a Jew, because he is a Jew; nor does he detest a Gentile, because he is a Gentile. It was a long and deeply rooted opinion among the Jews, that God never would extend his favour to the Gentiles; and that the descendants of Jacob only, should enjoy his peculiar favour and benediction.

Of this opinion was St. Peter, previously to the heavenly vision mentioned in this chapter. He was now convinced that God was no respecter of persons; that as all must stand before his judgment seat, to be judged according to the deeds done in the body; so, no one nation or people, or individual, could expect to find a more favourable decision than another, who was precisely in the same moral state: for the phrase respect of persons, is used in reference to unjust decisions in a court of justice, where through favour, or interest, or bribe, a culprit is acquitted; and a righteous or innocent person condemned. See Lev. xix. 15. Deut. i. 16, 17. and xvi. 19. And as there is no iniquity (decisions contrary to equity) with God, so he could not shut out the pious prayers, sincere fasting, and benevolent alms-giving of Cornelius; because the very spring whence they proceeded was his own grace and mercy. Therefore he could not receive even a Jew into his favour (in preference to such a person,) who had either abused his grace, or made a less godly use of it than this Gentile had done.

Verse 35. But in every nation he that feareth him, &c.] In every nation he, who according to his light and privileges, fears God, worships him alone, (for this is the true meaning of the word,) and worketh righteousness, abstains from all evil, gives to all their due, injures neither the body, soul, nor reputation of his neighbour, is accepted with him. It is not therefore the nation, kindred, profession, mode or form of worship, that the just God regards; but the character, the state of heart and the moral deportment. For what are professions, &c. in the sight of that God who trieth spirits, and by whom actions are weighed! He looks for the grace he has given, the advantages he has afforded, and the improvement of all these. Let it be observed farther, that no man can be accepted with this just God, who does not live up to the advantages of the state in which Providence has placed him: why was Cornelius accepted with God, while thousands of his countrymen were passed by? Because he did not receive the grace of God in vain: he watched, fasted, prayed, and gave alms, which they did not. Had he not done so, would he have been accepted? certainly not: because it would then appear, that he had received the grace of God in vain, and had not been a worker together with him. Many irreligious men, in order to get rid of the duties and obligations of Christianity, quote this verse in their own favour, while they reject all the gospel besides; and roundly assert, as they think on the authority of this text, that they need neither believe in Jesus Christ, attend to his gospel, nor use his ordinances; for, if they fear God and work righteousness, they shall be infallibly accepted with him. Let such know, that if they had been born, and still were living in a land where the light of the gospel had never shone, and were there, conscientiously following the glimmering ray of cœlestial light which God had granted; they might, with some show of reason, speak this way; but as they are born, and live under the gospel of Jesus Christ, God, the just Judge, will require that they fear him, and work righteousness ACCORDING to the LIGHT afforded by that very GOSPEL. The sincerity, watching, praying, fasting, and alms-giving of Cornelius, will not be sufficient for them who, as it may be justly said, live in splendors of Christianity. In such a state, God requires that a man shall love him with all his heart, soul, mind, and strength; and his neighbour as himself. In the face of such a requisition as this, how will the poor heathen virtue of one, born in the pale of Christianity, appear? and if God requires all this, will not a man need all the grace that has been brought to light by the revelation of Jesus Christ, to enable him to do it?

Verse 36. The word which God sent, &c.] Few verses in the New Testament have perplexed critics and divines more than this. The ancient copyists seem also to have been puzzled with it; as the great variety in the different MSS. sufficiently prove. A foreign critic makes a good sense by connecting this with the preceding verse thus, In every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him, according to that doctrine which God sent unto the children of Israel, by which he published peace (i. e. reconciliation between Jews and Gentiles) by Jesus Christ who is Lord of all: and because Lord of all, both of Jews and Gentiles, therefore he must be impartial; and because impartial, or, no respecter of persons, therefore, in every nation whether Judea, Greece, or Italy, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

I believe τον λογον the word, in this verse, should be translated, that doctrine; and probably ῥημα, which we translate that word, in verse 37, should be omitted, as it is in the Codex Bezæ, and its Itala Version: and if ὁν which is in ver. 36. be even left out, as it is in ABC. Coptic and Vulgate, the whole may be literally read thus. As to the doctrine sent to the children of Israel, preaching the glad tidings of peace (ευαγγελιζομενος ειρηνην,) by Jesus Christ, he is Lord of all, ye know what was done (το γενομενον,) through all Judea, beginning after the baptism which John preached. Jesus, who was from Nazareth, whom God anointed with the Holy Ghost and with mighty power, (δυναμει) went about doing good, and healing all that were tyrannically oppressed (καταδυναστευομενους) by the devil, for God was with him. Critics have proposed a great variety of modes, by which they suppose these verses may be rendered intelligible; and the learned Reader may see many in Wolfius, Kypke, Rosenmuller and others. Kypke contends that the word Κυριος, Lord, is to be understood adjectively, and ought to be referred to λογος, and the 36th verse will then stand thus, The word which he sent to the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ, that word has authority over all. This amounts nearly to the same sense with the expositions given above; and all proclaim this truth, which the apostle laboured to establish, namely, that God intended the salvation of all men by Jesus Christ; and therefore proclaimed reconciliation to all, by him who is Lord, maker, preserver, redeemer, and judge of all. And of this the apostle was now more convinced, by the late vision; and his mission from him who is Lord of all, to Cornelius a heathen, was a full illustration of the heavenly truth: for the very meeting of Peter, once a prejudiced Jew; and Cornelius, once an enlightened Gentile, was a sort of first fruits of this general reconciliation; and a proof that Jesus WAS LORD of ALL.

Verse 37. That word—ye know] This account of Jesus of Nazareth, ye cannot be unacquainted with; because it has been proclaimed throughout all Judea and Galilee, from the time that John began to preach. Ye have heard how he was anointed with the Holy Ghost, and of the miracles which he performed; how he went about doing good, and healing all kinds of dæmoniacs, and by these mighty and beneficent acts, giving the fullest proof that God was with him. This was the exordium of Peter's discourse; and thus he begins from what they knew, to teach them what they did not know.

St. Peter does not intimate that any miracle was wrought by Christ, previously to his being baptized by John. Beginning at Galilee. Let us review the mode of Christ's manifestation. 1. After he had been baptized by John, he went into the desert, and remained there forty days. 2. He then returned to the Baptist who was exercising his ministry at that time at Bethany, or Bethabara; and there he made certain disciples, viz. Andrew, Bartholomew, Peter, and Philip. 3. Thence he went to the marriage at Cana in Galilee, where he wrought his first miracle. 4. And afterwards he went to Capernaum in the same country, by the sea of Galilee, where he wrought many others. This was the manner in which Christ manifested himself; and these are the facts, of which Peter presumes they had a perfect knowledge; because they had been for a long time notorious through all the land.

Verse 38. God anointed Jesus of Nazareth] Here the apostle refers to Christ as the promised Messiah; for as Messiah signifies the anointed one, and Christ has the same signification in Greek; and the Messiah according to the prophets, and the expectation of the Jews, was to work miracles, Peter proclaims Jesus as the Messiah; and refers to the miracles which he wrought, as the proof of it. This delicate, but forcible allusion is lost by most readers.

Verse 39. We are witnesses of all] In this speech St. Peter may refer not only to the twelve apostles, but to the six brethren whom he had brought with him.

Whom they slew] As the truth of the resurrection must depend on the reality of the death of Christ, it was necessary that this should be stated, and shewn to rest on the most indubitable evidence.

Verse 40. Him God raised up the third day] He lay long enough under the power of death, to prove that he was dead; and not too long, lest it should be supposed that his disciples had time sufficient to have practised some deceit or imposture: and to prevent this, the Jews took care to have the tomb well guarded, during the whole time which he lay there.

Verse 41. Not to all the people] In the order of divine Providence, the public were to be no longer instructed by Jesus Christ personally: but it was necessary that those who were to preach redemption in his name, should be thoroughly furnished to this good and great work; therefore, the time he spent on earth, after his resurrection, was devoted to the instruction of his disciples.

Witnesses chosen before of God] That is, God chose such men to attest this fact, as were every way best qualified to give evidence on the subject; persons who were always to be found; who might at all times be confronted with those, if any such should offer themselves, who could pretend to prove that there was any imposture in this case; and persons, who, from the very circumstances in which they were placed, must appear to have an absolute conviction of the truth of all they attested. The first preachers of the gospel must be the witnesses of its facts: and these first preachers must be put in such circumstances as to demonstrate, not only that they had no secular end in view, nor indeed could have any; but also that, they should be able to evince that they had the fullest conviction of the reality of the eternal world, and of their master's existence in glory there; as they carried their lives continually in their hands, and regarded them not, so that they might fulfil the ministry which they had received from their Lord, and finish their course with joy.

But why was not Christ, after his resurrection, shewn to all the people? 1. Because it was impossible that such a thing could be done without mob and tumult. Let it only be announced "Here is the man who was dead three days, and who is risen from the dead!" what confusion would be the consequence of such an exposure! Some would say, This is he; others, He is like him, and so on; and the valid testimony must be lost in the confusion and multitude. 2. God chose such witnesses, whose testimony should be unimpeachable; the men who knew him best, and who by their depositions in proof of the fact, should evidently risk their lives; and, 3. as multitudes are never called to witness any fact, but a few selected from the rest, whose knowledge is most accurate and whose veracity is unquestionable; therefore, God shewed not Christ risen from the dead, to all the people, but to witnesses chosen by himself, and they were such as perfectly knew him before, and who ate and drank with him after his resurrection; and consequently had the fullest proof and conviction of the truth of this fact.

Verse 42. And he commanded us to preach] By thus assuring them that Jesus Christ was appointed to judge the world, he at once shewed them the necessity of subjection to him, that they might stand in the day of his appearing.

The Judge of quick and dead.] The word quick we retain from our ancient mother tongue, the Saxon cpican, to live, hence cpic and cpica, life, and cpice, grass: and from this our quicks, quick-set-hedges, fences made of living thorns, &c. By quick and dead, we are to understand, 1. all that had lived from the foundation of the world, till that time; and all that were then alive. 2. All that should be found alive at the day of judgment, as well as all that had died previously.

Verse 43. To him give all the prophets witness] See Isai. ix. 6. lii. 7. liii. 5, 6. lix. 20. Jer. xxxi. 34. Dan. ix. 24. Mic. vii. 18, &c. and Zech. xiii. 1. As Jesus Christ was the sum and substance of the law, and the Mosaic dispensation; so all the prophets bore testimony, either directly or indirectly to him; and indeed without him and the salvation he has promised, there is scarcely any meaning in the Mosaic œconomy, nor in most of the allusions of the prophets.

Remission of sins.] The phrase αφεσιν ϗμαρτιων, means simply the taking away of sins; and this does not refer to the guilt of sin, merely; but also to its power, nature, and consequences. All that is implied in pardon of sin, destruction of its tyranny, and purification from its pollution, is here intended: and it is wrong to restrict such operations of mercy, to pardon alone.

Verse 44. While Peter yet spake] It is not very likely that the words recorded by St. Luke are all that the apostle spoke on this occasion: but while he continued to discourse with them on this subject, the Holy Ghost fell on all them that heard the word; and his descent was known by their being enabled to speak with different kinds of tongues. In what manner this gift was bestowed, we cannot tell; probably it was in the same way in which it had been given on the day of Pentecost; for as they spake with tongues, which was the effect of the descent of the Spirit, as flaming tongues on the heads of the disciples, on the day of Pentecost; it is very likely that the same appearance now took place.

Verse 45. They of the circumcision—were astonished] Because it was a maxim with them, that the Shechinah or divine influence could not be revealed to any person who dwelt beyond the precincts of the promised land. Nor did any of them believe that the Divine Spirit could be communicated to any Gentile. It is no wonder, therefore, that they were amazed when they saw the Spirit of God so liberally given as it was on this occasion.

Verse 46. And magnify God.] They had got new hearts as well as new tongues; and having believed with the heart unto righteousness, their tongues made confession unto salvation; and God was magnified for the mercy which he had imparted.

Verse 47. Can any man forbid water.] These had evidently received the Holy Ghost, and consequently were become members of the mystical body of Christ; and yet St. Peter requires that they shall receive baptism by water, that they might become members of the Christian church. In other cases, they received baptism first, and the Spirit afterwards, by the imposition of hands: see chap. xix. 4—6. where the disciples who had received only the baptism of John, were baptized again with water in the name of the Lord Jesus; and after even this, the apostles prayed, and laid their hands on them, before they were made partakers of the Holy Ghost. So we find that Jesus Christ had his water baptism, as well as John: and that even he who gave the baptism of the Holy Ghost, required the administration of water baptism also. Therefore the baptism of the Spirit did not supersede the baptism by water; nor indeed can it; as baptism, as well as the supper of our Lord were intended not only to be means of grace; but standing irrefragable proofs of the truth of Christianity.

Verse 48. To be baptized in the name of the Lord.] That is, in the name of Jesus Christ; which implied their taking upon them the public profession of Christianity; and believing on Christ Jesus as their saviour and sovereign; for as they were baptized in his name, they professed thereby to be his disciples and followers.

Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.] They felt the necessity of farther instruction, and prayed him to continue his ministry a little longer among them; and to this he no doubt consented. This was, properly speaking, the commencement of the Christian church, as composed of Jews and Gentiles, partaking of the same baptism, united under the same Head, made partakers of the same Spirit; and associated in the same aggregate body. Now was the middle wall of partition broken down, and the Gentiles admitted to the same privileges with the Jews.

1. God is wonderful in all his works, whether they be works of creation, providence, or grace. Every thing proclaims his power, his wisdom, and his goodness. Every where we learn this truth, which is indispensably necessary for all to know, who desire to acknowledge God in all their ways, that "there is nothing which concerns their present or eternal welfare in which God does not interest himself." We often, to our great spiritual detriment, lose sight of this truth; because we think that the MAJESTY of God is too great to be occupied with those common occurrences by which we are often much affected, in things which relate not only to our present, but also to our eternal interests. This is impossible; for God is our father, and being every where present, he sees our state, and his eye affects his heart.

2. Let the Reader examine the chain of providence, (composed indeed of very minute links), brought to light in the conversion of Cornelius, the instruction of Peter, and opening the door of faith to the Gentiles, and he will be convinced that "God has sway every where, and that all things serve the purposes of his will." We have already seen how particularly, both by gracious and providential workings, God prepared the mind of Cornelius to receive instruction; and the mind of Peter to give it: so that the receiver and giver were equally ready to be workers together with God. This is a general œconomy. He who feels his want may rest assured, that even then, God has made the necessary provision for his supply; and that the very sense of the want, is a proof that the provision is already made. Why then should we lose time in deploring wretchedness, for the removal of which God has made the necessary preparations? Mourning over our miseries, will never supply the lack of faith in Christ; and very seldom tends even to humble the heart.

3. As the eye of God is ever upon us, he knows our trials as well as our wants; and here also, he makes the necessary provision for our support. We may be called to suffer, but his grace will be sufficient for us; and as our troubles increase, so shall the means of our support. And even these trials and temptations will be pressed into our service, for all things work together for good to them that love God, Rom. viii. 28.

4. We must beware neither to despise outward rites in religion, or to rest in them. Most people do either the one or the other. God gives us outward helps, because he knows we need them. But do we not sometimes imagine ourselves to be above that, which, because of our scantiness of grace, is really above us. We certainly may over-rate ourselves, and under-rate God's bounties. He who is taught by the Spirit of God will be saved from both,

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. And the apostles and brethren that were in Judea] According to Calmet, Judea is here put in opposition to Cæsarea, which, though situated in Palestine, passed for a Greek city, being principally inhabited by Pagans, Greeks, or Syrians.

Verse 2. Contended with him] A manifest proof this, that the primitive church at Jerusalem (and no church can ever deserve this name but the Jerusalem church) had no conception of St. Peter's supremacy, or of his being prince of the apostles. He is now called to account for his conduct, which they judged to be reprehensible; and which they would not have attempted to do, had they believed him to be Christ's vicar upon earth, and the infallible head of the church. But this absurdam is every where refuted in the New Testament.

Verse 3. Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised] In a Jew, this was no small offence; and as they did not know the reason of St. Peter's conduct, it is no wonder they should call him to account for it; as they considered it to be a positive transgression of the law and the customs of the Jews. There is a remarkable addition here in the Codex Bezæ, which it will be well to notice. The second verse of the chapter begins thus:

Now Peter had a desire for a considerable time to go to Jerusalem: and having spoken to the brethren, and confirmed them, speaking largely, he taught them through the countries, (i. e. as he passed to Jerusalem,) and as he met them, he spoke to them of the grace of God. But the brethren who were of the circumcision disputed with him, saying, &c.

was, sent from Cæsarea unto me.

12 And [a] the spirit bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover, [b] these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house.

13 And [c] he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, [d] as on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, [e] John indeed baptized with water; but [f] ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

17 [g] Forasmuch then as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; [h] what was I, that I could withstand God?

ning, and expounded it by order] Εξετιθετο αυτοις καθεξης. This is the very style of St. Luke: see his Gospel, chap. i. ver. 3. To remove their prejudice, and to give them the fullest reasons for his conduct, he thought it best to give them a simple relation of the whole affair; which he does, as we have seen in the preceding chapter, with a few additional circumstances here: see the notes before.

Verse 12. These six brethren] Probably pointing to them, being present, as proper persons to confirm the truth of what he was delivering.

Verse 14. Thou and all thy house shall be saved.] This is an additional circumstance: before, it was said, chap. x. 6. Peter shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do; and in ver. 33. who when he cometh shall speak unto thee. But in Peter's relation, the matter is more explicitly declared, he shall tell thee words, whereby thou and thy house shall be saved. He shall announce to you all, the doctrine of salvation.

Verse 16. Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.] These words are very remarkable. The words of our Lord, as quoted chap. i. 5. to which St. Peter refers here, have been supposed by many to be referred to the apostles alone; but here it is evident, that St. Peter believed they were a promise made to all Christians, i. e. to all, whether Jews or Gentiles, who should believe on Jesus Christ. Therefore, when he saw that the Holy Ghost fell upon those Gentiles, he considered it a fulfilment of our Lord's promise, ye, that is, all that will believe on me, shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost—not many days hence, i. e. in a short time this Spirit shall be given, which is to abide with you for ever. Hence we learn, that the promise of the Holy Spirit is given to the whole body of Christians; to all that believe on Christ as dying for their sins, and rising for their justification.

Verse 17. God gave them the like gift, &c.] Viz. the Holy Spirit, and its various gifts and graces, in the same way, and in the same measure in which he gave them to us Jews. What was I, that I could withstand God? It was not I who called them to salvation: it was God; and the thing is proved to be from God alone, for none other could dispense the Holy Spirit.

Verse 18. They held their peace] Their prejudices were confounded; they considered the subject, and saw that it was from God: then they glorified him, because they saw that he had granted unto the Gentiles repentance unto life. As the word μετανοια, which we translate repentance, signifies literally a change of mind, it may be here referred to a change of religious views, &c. And as repentance signifies a change of life and conduct from evil to good, so the word μετανοια may be used here to signify a change from a false religion to the true one; from idolatry, to the worship of the true God. Rosenmuller thinks, that in several cases, where it is spoken of the Jews, it signifies their change from a contempt of the Messiah, to reverence for him, and the consequent embracing of the Christian religion.

The Christians who were present, were all satisfied with St. Peter's account and apology; but it does not appear that all were ultimately satisfied, as we know there were serious disputes in the church afterwards on this very subject. See chap. xv. 5, &c. where Christian believers, from among the Pharisees, insisted that it was necessary to circumcise the converted Gentiles, and cause them to keep the law of Moses. This opinion was carried much farther in the church at Jerusalem afterwards, as may be seen at large in chap. xxi.

Verse 19. The persecution that arose about Stephen] That is, those who were obliged to flee from Jerusalem, at the time of that persecution in which Stephen lost his life. See chap. viii. 1.

a Ch. 6. 1. & 9. 29.——b Luke 1. 66. ch. 2. 47.

c Ch. 9. 35.——d Ch. 9. 27.

Phœnice] Phœnicia, a country between Galilee and Syria, along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, including Tyre, Sidon, &c. It is often mentioned as a part of Syria. See chap. xxi. 2, 3.

Cyprus] An island of the Mediterranean Sea, over against Syria. See on chap. iv. 36.

Antioch] A city of Syria, built by Antiochus Seleucus, near the river Orontes; at that time one of the most celebrated cities of the East. For the situation of all these, see the Map accompanying this Book.

Unto the Jews only.] For they knew nothing of the vision of St. Peter; and did not believe that God would open the door of faith to the Gentiles. The next verse informs us, that there were others who were better instructed. See below.

Verse 20. Men of—Cyrene] The metropolis of the Cyrenaica, a country of Africa, bounded on the East by Marmarica, on the West by the Regio Syrtica, on the North by the Mediterranean, and on the South by the Sahara. Cyrene is now called Cairoan. This city, according to Eusebius, was built in the 37th Olympiad, about 630 years before Christ. In consequence of a revolt of its inhabitants, it was destroyed by the Romans; but they afterwards rebuilt it. It was for a long time subject to the Arabs; but is now in the hands of the Turks.

Spake unto the Grecians] Ἑλληνιστὰς, the Hellenists. Who these were we have already seen. Acts vi. and ix. 29. viz. Jews living in Greek cities, and speaking the Greek language. But instead of Ελληνιστας Grecians, Ἕλληνας Greeks, is the reading of AD*. Syriac, all the Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, some copies of the Itala; Eusebius, Chrysostom, Theophylact and Œcumenius. On this evidence, Griesbach has admitted it into the text; and few critics entertain any doubt of the genuineness of the reading. This intimates, that besides preaching the gospel to the Hellenistic Jews, some of them preached it to the heathen Greeks; for were we to adopt the common reading, it would be a sort of actum agere; for it is certain that the Hellenistic Jews had already received the gospel. See chap. vi. 1. And it is likely that these Cyprians and Cyrenians had heard of Peter's mission to Cæsarea; and they followed his example, by offering the Christian faith to the heathen. It is worthy of remark, that the Jews generally called all nations of the world Greeks; as the Asiatics, to the present day, call all the nations of Europe, Franks.

Verse 21. The hand of the Lord was with them] By the hand, arm, and finger of God, in the scripture, different displays or exertions of his power are intended. Here it means, that the energy of God accompanied them, and applied their preaching to the souls of all attentive hearers. Without this accompanying influence, even an apostle could do no good; and can inferior men hope to be able to convince and convert sinners without this? Ministers of the word of God, so called, who dispute the necessity, and deny the being of this influence, shew thereby, that they are intruders into God's heritage; and that they are not sent by him; and shall not profit the people at all.

A great number believed] That Jesus was the Christ: and that he had died for their offences, and risen again for their justification. Because the apostles preached the truth; and the hand of God was with them, therefore, a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord, becoming his disciples, and taking him for their portion.

Verse 22. The church which was in Jerusalem] This was the original, the mother church of Christianity; not the church of Rome; there were Christian churches founded in many places, which exist to the present day, before Rome heard the gospel of the kingdom. A Christian church means a company of believers in Christ Jesus, united for the purposes of Christian fellowship and edification in righteousness.

They sent forth Barnabas] It seems then, that the church collectively had power to commission and send forth any of its own members, whom it saw God had qualified for a particular work. There must have been, even at that time, an acknowledged superiority of some members of the church beyond others. The apostles held the first rank: the deacons (probably the same as those called prophets, as being next chosen,) the second: and perhaps those called evangelists, simply preachers of the truth, the third rank. Those who knew most of God and sacred things; who were most zealous, most holy, and most useful, undoubtedly had the pre-eminence, d Ch. 9. 30.——e Or, in the church.

Verse 23. Had seen the grace of God] That is, had seen the effects produced by the grace of God. By the grace of God, we are to understand, 1. his favour; 2. the manifestations of that favour, in the communication of spiritual blessings; and, 3. principles of light, life, holiness, &c. producing effects demonstrative of the causes from which they sprung. Barnabas saw that these people were objects of the divine approbation; that they were abundantly blessed and edified together, as a Christian church; and that they had received especial influences from God, by his indwelling Spirit, which were to them, incentives to faith, hope, and love; and also principles of conduct.

Was glad] Not envious because God had blessed the labours of others of his Master's servants; but rejoiced to find that the work of salvation was carried on by such instruments as God chose, and condescended to use. They who cannot rejoice in the conversion of sinners, because they have not been the means of it; or because such converts or their ministers have not precisely the same view of certain doctrines which they have themselves; shew that they have little, if any thing, of the mind that was in Christ, in them.

With purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.] These converts had begun well; they must continue and persevere: God gave them the grace, the principle of life and action; it was their business to use this. If they did not, the gift would be resumed. Barnabas well knew, that they must have the grace of God in them, to enable them to do any good; but he knew also, that its being in them, did not necessarily imply that it must continue there. God had taught him, that if they were not workers together with that grace, they would receive it in vain; i. e. the end for which it was given would not be answered. He therefore exhorted them τῃ προθεσει της καρδιας, with determination of heart; with set, fixed purpose and resolution, that they would cleave unto the Lord, προσμενειν τῳ Κυριῳ, to remain with the Lord; to continue in union and fellowship with him; to be faithful in keeping his truth, and obedient in the practice of it. To be a Christian is to be united to Christ, to be of one spirit with him: to continue to be a Christian, is to continue in that union. It is absurd to talk of being children of God, and of absolute final perseverance, when the soul has lost its spiritual union. There is no perseverance, but in cleaving to the Lord: he who in his works denies him, does not cleave to him. Such a one is not of God; if he ever had the salvation of God, he has lost it; he is fallen from grace: nor is there a word in the Book of God, fairly and honestly understood, that says, such a person shall absolutely and unavoidably arise from his fall.

Verse 24. For he was a good man] Here is a proper character of a minister of the gospel.

1. He is a good man: his bad heart is changed; his evil dispositions rooted out; and the mind that was in Christ implanted in him.

2. He is full of the Holy Ghost] He is holy, because the Spirit of holiness dwells in him: he has not a few transient visitations or drawings from that Spirit; it is a resident in his soul, and it fills his heart. It is light in his understanding; it is discrimination in his judgment; it is fixed purpose and determination in righteousness, in his will; it is purity, it is love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, meekness, temperance, and fidelity, in his affections and passions. In a word, it has sovereign sway in his heart; it governs all passions, and is the motive and principle of every righteous action.

3. He was full of faith. He implicitly credited his Lord; he knew that he could not lie; that his word could not fail: he expected not only the fulfilment of all promises, but also every degree of help, light, life, and comfort, which God might at any time see necessary for his church: he prayed for the divine blessing, and he believed that he should not pray in vain. His faith never failed, because it laid hold on that God who could not change. Behold, ye preachers of the gospel! an original minister of Christ. Emulate his piety, his faith, and his usefulness.

Much people was added unto the Lord.] No wonder, when they had such a minister, preaching, by the power of the Holy Ghost, such a gospel as that of Jesus Christ.

Verse 25. To Tarsus, for to seek Saul] The persecution raised against him, obliged him to take refuge in his own city, where, as a Roman citizen, his person was in safety. See chap. ix. 29, 30.

Verse 26. He brought him unto Antioch] As this city was the metropolis of Syria, and the third city for importance in the whole Roman empire, Rome and Alexandria alone being more eminent, Barnabas might think it expedient to have for his assistant a person of such eminent talents as Saul; and who was especially appointed by Christ to proclaim the gospel to the Gentiles. Saul appears also to have been a thorough master of the Greek tongue, and, consequently, the better qualified to explain the gospel to the Greek philosophers, and to defend it against their cavils. Barnabas also, being a native of Cyprus, chap. iv. 36. where the Greek language was spoken, was judged to be proper for this mission, perhaps on this account, as well as on account of his disinterestedness, holiness, and zeal.

And the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch.] It is evident they had the name Christians from CHRIST their master; as the Platonists and Pythagoreans had their name from their masters, Plato and Pythagoras. Now, as these had their names from those great masters, because they attended their teaching, and credited their doctrines; so the disciples were called Christians, because they took Christ for their teacher, crediting his doctrines, and following the rule of life laid down by him. It has been a question, by whom was this name given to the disciples? Some think, they assumed it; others, that the inhabitants of Antioch gave it to them; and others, that it was given by Saul and Barnabas. This latter opinion is favoured by the Codex Bezæ, which reads the 25th and 26th verses thus: And hearing that Saul was at Tarsus, he departed, seeking for him; and having found him, he besought him to come to Antioch; who, when they were come, assembled with the church a whole year, and instructed a great number; and there, they first called the disciples at Antioch, Christians.

The word χρηματισαι in our common text, which we translate were called, signifies, in the New Testament, to appoint, warn, or nominate by divine direction. In this sense the word is used Matt. ii. 12. Luke ii. 26. and in the preceding chapter of this book, ver. 22. If therefore the name was given by divine appointment, it is most likely that Saul and Barnabas were directed to give it; and that, therefore, the name Christian is from God, as well as that grace and holiness which are so essentially required and implied in the character. Before this time, the Jewish converts were simply called, among themselves, disciples, i. e. scholars; believers, saints, the church, or assembly: and by their enemies, Nazarenes, Galileans, the men of this way, or sect; and perhaps by other names, which are not come down to us. They considered themselves as one family; and hence the appellation of brethren was frequent among them. It was the design of God to make all who believed of one heart, and one soul, that they might consider him as their father, and live and love like children of the same household. A Christian, therefore, is the highest character which any human being can bear upon earth; and to receive it from God, as those appear to have done, how glorious the title! It is however worthy of remark, that this name occurs in only three places in the New Testament, here, and in chap. xxvi. 28. and in 1 Pet. iv. 16.

Verse 27. Came prophets from Jerusalem] Though the term prophet is used in the New Testament simply to signify a teacher, (see the note on Gen. xx. 7. where the subject is largely explained,) yet here it evidently means also, such as were under divine inspiration, and foretold future events. This was certainly the case with Agabus, ver. 28. though perhaps his ordinary character was that of a teacher or preacher. It seems from various scriptures, Rom. xii. 1 Cor. xiii, & xiv. that the prophets of the New Testament were, 1. Teachers or preachers in general. 2. Persons who, on special occasions, were under the influence of the Divine Spirit, and then foretold certain future events. 3. Persons who recited hymns to the honour of God in the public assemblies of the Christians. 4. Persons who prayed in those assemblies, having sometimes the gift of tongues, at other times not. From Ephes. ii. 20. and iii. 5. we learn that the prophets of the Christian church were inferior to the apostles; but from ver. 11. of Eph. iii. we see that they were superior to all other teachers, even to evangelists and pastors.

Verse 28. Agabus] This prophet, of whom we know nothing, is once more mentioned, chap. xxi. 10. He was probably a Jew, but whether converted now to Christianity, we cannot tell.

Great dearth throughout all the world] The words εφ' ὁλην την οικουμενην probably here mean, the land of Judea; though sometimes by this phrase, the whole Roman empire is intended. In the former sense the disciples appear to have understood it, as the next verse informs us; for they determined to send relief to their brethren in Judea, which they could not have done had the famine been general. It does not appear that they expected it to extend even to Antioch in Syria, where they then were, else they would have thought of making provision for themselves.

It is well known from history, that there were several fa- mines in the reign of Claudius. Dion Cassius, lib. lx. mentions a severe famine in the first and second year of the reign of Claudius, which was sorely felt in Rome itself. This famine, it is supposed, induced Claudius to build a port at Ostia, for the more regular supply of Rome with provisions.

A second famine happened about the fourth year of this reign, which continued for several years, and greatly afflicted the land of Judea. Several authors notice this, but particularly Josephus, Ant. lib. xx. cap. 5. sect. 2. where having mentioned Tiberius Alexander, as succeeding to the procuratorship in the place of Cuspius Fadus, he says, that "during the government of these procurators, a great famine afflicted Judea." Επι τουτοις δη και τον μεγαν λιμον κατα την Ιουδαιαν συνεβη γενεσθαι.

A third famine is mentioned by Eusebius, in An. Abrahami, which commences with the calends of October. A. D. 48. which was so powerful "in Greece, that a modius (about half a bushel of grain) was sold for six drachms," about three shillings and sixpence English. Vid. Euseb. in Chron. edit. Scalig. The same author mentions another famine in Rome, in the tenth year of Claudius, of which Orosius gives the details, lib. vii.

A Fourth famine, which took place in the eleventh year of Claudius, is mentioned by Tacitus, Annal. lib. xii. sect. 43. in which there was so great a dearth of provisions, and famine in consequence, that it was esteemed a divine judgment. Frugum quoque egestas, et orta ex ea fames, in prodigium accipiebatur. At this time, the same author tells us, that in all the stores of Rome, there were no more than fifteen days' provision; and had not the winter been uncommonly mild, the utmost distress and misery must have prevailed.

It may now be enquired, to which of these famines in the reign of Claudius does the prophecy of Agabus refer? Most learned men are of opinion, that the famine of which Agabus prophesied was that mentioned above, which took place in the fourth year of this emperor, A. D. 47. This famine is particularly mentioned by Josephus, Ant. lib. xx. cap. 2. sect. 5. who describes it as "a very great famine, in which many died for want of food."—"That Helena, Queen of Adiabene, who had embraced the Jewish religion, sent some of her servants to Alexandria, to buy a great quantity of corn; and others of them to Cyprus, to buy a cargo of dried figs, which she distributed to those who were in want." And in cap. 5. sect. 2. he says, that this happened "when Tiberius Alexander succeeded Cuspius Fadus; and that under these procurators, the famine happened, in which Queen Helena, at a vast expense, procured relief to the Jews." Dr. Hudson's note on this passage in Josephus deserves to be copied: "This," says he, "is that famine foretold by Agabus, Acts xi. 28. which happened when Claudius was consul the fourth time, (A. D. 47,) and not that which happened when Claudius was consul the second time, and Cæsina was his colleague, (A. D. 42,) as Scaliger says, upon Eusebius, p. 174. Now when Josephus had said, a little after, cap. 5. sect. 2. that Tiberius Alexander succeeded Cuspius Fadus as procurator, he immediately subjoins, under these procurators, there happened a great famine in Judea. From this it is evident, that this famine must have continued several years, as it existed under both these procurators. Fadus, says Mr. Whiston, was not sent into Judea till after the death of Agrippa, i. e. towards the end of the fourth year of Claudius, in the end of A. D. 44. or beginning of 45. So that this famine foretold by Agabus, happened on the fifth, sixth, and seventh years of Claudius, A. D. 45. 46. and 47. See Whiston's Josephus: and see Krebs' Observat. in Nov. Test. on this place.

Verse 29. Then the disciples—determined to send relief] These were probably Gentile converts; and as they considered themselves receiving the spiritual blessings, which they now so happily enjoyed, through the means of the Christians in Judea; they resolved to communicate to them a portion of their temporal goods: and every man did this, according to his ability, i. e. he gave a certain proportion of the property with which the providence of God had entrusted him. The community of goods had for some time ceased.

Verse 30. And sent it to the elders] These probably mean, those who first believed on Christ crucified, either of the seventy disciples mentioned Luke chap. x. or the one hundred and twenty mentioned chap. i. 15.; or the seven deacons, chap. vi. 5. Some have divided the primitive disciples into three classes: 1. The αυτοπται, those who were eye-witnesses. 2. The απαρχαι, those who were the first fruits, or converts of the apostles' preaching. 3. The διαδοχοι, those who were the successors of the preceding, from whom they had received the doctrines of the gospel. It is likely the deacons are meant, whose office it was to take care of the poor. See chap. vi. 1, &c.

1. Among many highly interesting subjects which have come under review in the preceding chapter, we must have particularly noticed, 1. the care the church of Christ took to have young converts confirmed in the truths they had received, and built up on their most holy faith, ver. 22. It was indispensably necessary that a foundation should be laid; and it was not less so, that a proper superstructure should be raised. For this work, it was requisite that different gifts and talents should be employed, and Barnabas and Saul must be sent to confirm in the faith, those whom the disciples, who had been scattered by the persecution raised about Stephen, had converted to Christ, ver. 19—22. It is a great thing to have souls converted to the Lord; it is greater to have them built up on their most holy faith: and few persons, even among the ministers of Christ, have talents for both. Even when PAUL planted, it required APOLLOS to water. A frequent interchange of godly ministers in the church of Christ, is of the utmost consequence to its stability and increase.

2. It appears that CHRISTIANS, was the first general appellative of the followers of our blessed Lord; and there is presumptive evidence, as we have seen, that this appellative came by divine appointment: how very few of those who profess this religion, are satified with this title! That very church that arrogates all to itself, has totally abandoned this title, and its members call themselves Roman Catholics, which is absurd; because the adjective and substantive include opposite ideas; catholic, signifies universal; and Roman, signifies of, or belonging to Rome. If it be merely Roman, it cannot be catholic; if it be catholic, it cannot be confined to Rome: but it is not catholic nor universal, in any sense of the word; for it contains but a small part of the people who profess Christianity. The term Protestant has more common sense in it; but not much more piety. Almost all sects and parties proceed in the same line; but Christian is a title seldom heard of; and the spirit and practice of Christianity but rarely occur. When all return to the spirit of the gospel, they will probably resume the appellative of Christians.

3. An early fruit of Christianity, was mercy to the poor; and especially to the poor followers of Christ. He has left the poor ever with us, as his representatives, to exercise our bowels of commiseration; and thus teach us to feel and practise mercy. To every man professing Christianity, the religion of Jesus Christ says most authoritatively, With every man who is pinched by poverty, share what the providence of God has not made absolutely necessary for thy own support. What God has given us more than we need, is entrusted to us for the benefit of those that are in poverty and affliction. He who can, and does not help the poor is a disgrace to Christianity: and he who does not lend his hand for the support of the cause of God, is a worthless member of the church of Christ. He who shews no mercy, shall have judgment without mercy. And he who spends in pampering the flesh what should be given to the poor, shall have a fearful account to give in the day of the Lord.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

Verse 1. Herod the King] This was Herod Agrippa, the son of Aristobulus, and grandson of Herod the Great; he was nephew to Herod Antipas who beheaded John the Baptist, and brother to Herodias. He was made king by the emperor Caligula, and was put in possession of all the territories formerly held by his uncle Philip, and by Lysanias; viz. Iturea, Trachonitis, Abilene, with Gaulonitis, Batanæa, and Penias. To these the emperor Claudius afterwards added Judea and Samaria; which were nearly all the dominions Jews, he proceeded further to take Peter also. Then were [a] the days of unleavened bread.

4 And [b] when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

possessed by his grandfather Herod the Great. See Luke iii. 1. see also an account of the Herod family, in the note on Matt. ii. 1.

To vex certain of the church.] That is to destroy its chief ornaments and supports.

Verse 2. He killed James the brother of John with the sword.] This was James the greater, son of Zebedee, and must be distinguished from James the less, son of Alpheus. This latter was put to death by Ananias the high-priest, during the reign of Nero. This James with his brother John were those who requested to sit on the right and left hand of our Lord. See Matt. xx. 23. and our Lord's prediction was now fulfilled in one of them, who by his martyrdom drank of our Lord's cup, and was baptized with his baptism. By the death of James, the number of the apostles was reduced to eleven; and we do not find that ever it was filled up. The apostles never had any successors; God has continued their doctrine, but not their order.

By killing with the sword, we are to understand beheading. Among the Jews there were four kinds of deaths: 1. Stoning, 2. burning, 3. killing with the sword, or beheading, and 4. Strangling. The 3d was a Roman as well as a Jewish mode of punishment. Killing with the sword was the punishment which, according to the Talmud, was inflicted on those who drew away the people to any strange worship, Sanhedr. fol. iii. James was probably accused of this, and hence the punishment mentioned in the text.

Verse 3. He proceeded—to take Peter also] He supposed that these two were pillars on which the infant cause rested; and that if these were removed, the building must necessarily come down.

The days of unleavened bread.] About the latter end of March or beginning of April; but whether in the third or fourth year of the emperor Claudius, or earlier or later, cannot be determined.

Verse 4. Four quaternions of soldiers] That is sixteen, or four companies of four men each, who had the care of the prison; each company taking in turn, one of the four watches of the night.

Intending after Easter to bring him forth] Μετα το πασχα, after the pass-over. Perhaps there never was a more unhappy, not to say absurd translation, than that in our text. But before I come to explain the word, it is necessary to observe, that our term called Easter, is not exactly the same with the Jewish passover. This festival is always held on the fourteenth day of the first vernal full moon; but the Easter of the Christians, never till the next sabbath after said full moon: and to avoid all conformity with the Jews in this matter, if the 14th day of the first vernal full moon happen on a sabbath, then the festival of Easter is deferred till the sabbath following. The first vernal moon is that whose 14th day, is either on the day of the vernal equinox, or the next 14th day after it. The vernal equinox, according to a decree of the council of Nice, is fixed to the 21st day of March: and therefore the first vernal moon is that, whose 14th day falls upon the 21st of March; or the first 14th day after. Hence it appears that the next sabbath after the 14th day of the vernal moon, which is called the Paschal term, is always Easter day. And therefore, the earliest Paschal term, being the 21st of March; the 22d of March is the earliest Easter possible: and the 18th of April being the latest Paschal term, the seventh day after, that is the 25th of April, is the latest Easter possible.

The term Easter, inserted here by our translators they borrowed from the ancient Anglo-Saxon service books; or from the Version of the Gospels, which always translates the το πασχα of the Greek by this term, e. g. Matt. xxvi. 2. Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover. ꝑıce ȝe ðat æfter ꝑpam dagum beoð Eaſtro. Ufite ge that aefter twam dagum beoth Eastro. Ibid. v. 19. And they made ready the passover. and hıȝ ȝeȝearꝑodon hỳm Eaſter-þenunga. And hig gegearwodon hym Easter-thenunga, (i. e. the paschal supper). Prefixed to Matt. xxviii. 1. are these words, Ðyꝑ ꝑceal on Eaſter æfen. This part to be read on Easter even. And before ver. 8 these words, Ðyꝑ ꝑceal on ꝑnıȝe-dæȝ on þære oðre Eaſtre-ꝑucan. Mark xiv. 12. And the first day of unleavened bread when they killed the passover. Andðam ꝑorman dæȝe azimorum, ða hıEaſtron oꝑꝑrodon. and tham forman dage azimorum, tha hi Eastron offrodon. Other examples occur in this Version. Wiclif used the word paske, i. e. passover; but Tindal, Coverdale, Becke, and Cardmarden following the old Saxon mode of translation, insert Easter: the Geneva Bible, very properly renders it the passover. The Saxon, Eaſter, Eaſtre, Eaſtro, Eaſtra and Eaſtron, are different modes of spelling the name of the goddess Easter, whose festival was celebrated by our pagan forefathers on the month of April; hence that month, in the Saxon calendar, is called Eaſter-monaþ, Easter month. Every view we can take of this subject, shews the gross impropriety of retaining a name every way exceptionable, and palpably absurd.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but [a] prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, [b] the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And his chains fell off from his hands.

Verse 5. Prayer was made without ceasing.] The Greek word ἐκτενῶς signifies both fervour and earnestness, as well as perseverance. These prayers of the church produced that miraculous interference mentioned below; and without which, Peter could not have thus escaped from the hands of this ruthless king.

Verse 6. Sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains] Two soldiers guarded his person; his right hand being bound to the left hand of one; and his left hand bound to the right hand of the other. This was the Roman method of guarding their prisoners; and appears to be what is intimated in the text.

Verse 7. Smote Peter on the side] He struck him in such a way, as was just sufficient to awake him from his sleep.

His chains fell off from his hands.] The chains mentioned above, by which he was bound to the two soldiers.

Verse 8. Gird thyself] It seems Peter had put off the principal part of his clothes that he might sleep with more comfort. His resuming all that he had thrown off, was a proof that every thing had been done leisurely. There was no evidence of any hurry; nor of any design to elude justice, or even to avoid meeting his accusers in any legal way. It appears that the two soldiers were overwhelmed by a deep sleep, which fell upon them from God.

Verse 9. He—wist not] He knew not; from the Anglo-Saxon, ꝑɪꝑcan, to know. He supposed himself to be in a dream.

Verse 10. The first and—second ward] It is supposed that ancient Jerusalem was surrounded by three walls: if so, then passing through the gates of these three walls successively, is possibly, what is meant by the expression in the text. The prison in which he was confined might have been that which was at the outer wall.

Iron gate] This was in the innermost wall of the three; and was strongly plated over with iron, for the greater security. In the East, the gates are often thus secured to the present day. Pitts says so of the gates of Algiers; and Pocock, of some near Antioch. Perhaps this is all that is meant by the iron gate. One of the quaternions of soldiers was placed at each gate.

Which opened—of his own accord] Influenced by the unseen power of the angel.

The angel departed from him.] Having brought him into a place in which he no longer needed his assistance. What is proper to God, he always does: what is proper to man, he requires him to perform.

Verse 11. When Peter was come to himself] Every thing he saw astonished him; he could scarcely credit his eyes; he was in a sort of ecstacy; and it was only when the angel left him, that he was fully convinced that all was real.

Now I know—that the Lord hath sent his angel] The poor German divine is worthy of pity, who endeavoured to persuade himself and his countrymen, that all this talk about the angel was mere illusion; that Peter was delivered in a way which he could not comprehend, and therefore was led to attribute to a particular providence of God, what probably was done by the præfect of the prison, who favoured him! But it is the study of this writer to banish from the word of God all supernatural influence; and to reduce even the miracles of Christ to simple operations of nature, or to the workings of imagination and the prejudices of a weak and credulous of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the people of the Jews.

12 And when he had considered the thing, [a] he came to the house of Mary the mother of [b] John, whose surname was Mark; where many were gathered together [c] praying.

13 And as Peter knocked at the door of the gate, a damsel came [d] to hearken, named Rhoda.

14 And when she knew Peter's voice, she opened not the gate for gladness; but ran in, and told how Peter stood before the gate.

15 And they said unto her, Thou art mad. But she constantly affirmed that it was even so. Then said they, [e] It is his angel.

A.M.cir.4048. A. D. cir. 44. An. Olymp. cir. CCV. 4.

16 But Peter continued knocking: and when they had opened the door, and saw him, they were astonished.

17 But he, [f] beckoning unto them with the hand to hold their peace, declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go shew these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

people. Such men should at once cast off the mask which so thinly covers their infidelity; and honestly avow themselves to be what they are, the enemies of revelation in general; and of the Christian religion in particular. Peter could say, Now I know of a certainty that the Lord hath sent his angel, and delivered me, &c. No such thing, says Mr. E. Peter was deceived; it was not the Lord, it was the præfect or some other person.—Now we know that Peter spake by the Holy Ghost: but we have no such testimony of Mr. E. nor of any of his associates.

And all the expectation of the—Jews.] It seems they had built much on the prospect of having him sacrificed, as they already had James.

Verse 12. And when he had considered] When he had weighed every thing, and was fully satisfied of the divine interposition; he went to the house of Mary the mother of John Mark, the author of the Gospel, where it appears many were gathered together making prayer and supplication, and probably for Peter's release.

Verse 13. As Peter knocked] The door was probably shut for fear of the Jews: and as most of the houses in the East have an area before the door, it might have been at this outer gate, that Peter stood knocking.

A damsel came to hearken, named Rhoda.] She came to inquire who was there. Rhoda signifies a rose; and it appears to have been customary with the Jews, as Grotius and others remark, to give the name of flowers and trees to their daughters: thus Susannah signifies a lily, Hadassah, a myrtle, Tamar, a palm tree, &c. &c.

Verse 15. It is his angel] It was a common opinion among the Jews that every man has a guardian angel: and in the popish church, it is an article of faith. The Jews also believed that angels often assumed the likeness of particular persons. They have many stories of the appearance of Elijah in the likeness of different Rabbins. As ἀγγελος signifies in general, a messenger, whether divine or human; some have thought that the angel or messenger here, means a servant or person which the disciples supposed was sent from Peter to announce something of importance to the brethren: it was also an opinion among the Jews, even in the time of the apostles, as appears from Philo, that the departed souls of good men officiated as ministering angels: and it is possible that the disciples at Mary's house, might suppose that Peter had been murdered in the prison; and that his spirit was now come to announce this event, or give some particular warning to the church.

Verse 17. Declared—how the Lord had brought him out of the prison] He still persisted in the belief, that his deliverance was purely supernatural. It seems that some modern critics could have informed him of his mistake. See ver. 11.

Shew these things unto James, and to the brethren] That is, in one word, shew them to the church, at the head of which, James undoubtedly was; as we may clearly understand by the part he took in the famous council held at Jerusalem, relative to certain differences between the believing Jews and Gentiles. See chap. xv. 13—21. There is still no supremacy for Peter. He who was bishop or overseer of the church at Jerusalem, was certainly at the head of the whole church of God at this time; but James was then bishop or inspector of the church at Jerusalem, and consequently, was the only visible head then upon earth.

He departed—into another place.] Some popish writers say that he went to Rome, and founded a Christian church there. Those who can believe any thing, may believe this. Where he went we know not; but it is probable that he withdrew for the present into a place of privacy, till the heat of the inquiry was over, relative to his escape from the prison: for he saw that Herod was intent on his death.

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Cæsarea, and there abode.

20 ¶ And Herod was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him; and, having made Blastus [b] the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because [c] their country was nourished by the king's country.

c 1 Kings 5. 9, 11. Ezek. 27. 17.

Verse 19. Commanded that they should be put to death.] He believed, or pretended to believe, that the escape of Peter was owing to the negligence of the keepers: jailers, watchmen, &c. ordinarily suffered the same kind of punishment which should have been inflicted on the prisoner, whose escape they were supposed to have favoured.

He went down from Judea to Cæsarea] How soon he went down, and how long he staid there, we know not.

Verse 20. Highly displeased with them of Tyre] On what account Herod was thus displeased, is not related by any historian, as far as I have been able to ascertain. Josephus who speaks of this journey of Herod to Cæsarea, says nothing of it; and it is useless for us to conjecture.

Having made Blastus—their friend] Blastus was probably an eunuch, and had considerable influence over his master Herod; and to reach the master, it is likely they bribed the chamberlain.

Desired peace] The Tyrians and Sidonians being equally subjects of the Roman government, with the inhabitants of Galilee, Herod could not go to war with them; but being irritated against them, he might prevent their supplies: they therefore endeavoured to be on peaceable, i. e. friendly terms with him.

Their country was nourished by the king's country.] That is, they had all their supplies from Galilee; for Tyre and Sidon being places of trade and commerce, with little territory; were obliged to have all their provisions from the countries under Herod's jurisdiction. This had been the case even from the days of Solomon, as we learn from 1 Kings v. 11. where it is said, that, Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat, for food to his household; and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year. See also Ezek. xxvii. 17.

Verse 21. Upon a set day, &c.] A day on which games, &c. were exhibited in honour of the Roman emperor. What this refers to, we learn from Josephus. "Herod having reigned three years over ALL Judea, (he had reigned over the tetrarchy of his brother Philip, four years before this) went down to Cæsarea and there exhibited shows and games in honour of Claudius, and made vows for his health. On the second day of these shows, he put on a garment made wholly of silver, and of a contexture most truly wonderful; and came into the theatre early in the morning; at which time the silver of his garment being illuminated by the first reflexion of the sun's rays, shone out after a surprising manner; and was so resplendent as to spread a horror over those who looked intently upon him: and presently his flatterers cried out, one from one place, and another from another, "He is a God:" and they added, "Be thou merciful to us, for although we have hitherto reverenced thee only as a man, yet shall we henceforth own thee as superior to mortal nature." Nor did the king rebuke them, nor reject their impious flattery. But looking up he saw an owl on a certain rope over his head, and immediately conceived that this bird was to him a messenger of ill-tidings; and he fell into the deepest sorrow; a severe pain also arose in his bowels, and he died after five days' severe illness." This is the sum of the account given by Josephus, Ant. lib. xix. cap. viii. sect. 2. [See Whiston's Edition.] Notwithstanding the embellishments of the Jewish historian, it agrees in the main surprisingly, with the account given here by St. Luke. Josephus, it is true, suppresses some circumstances which would have been dishonourable to this impious king; and according to his manner, puts a speech in Herod's mouth, when he found himself struck with death, expressive of much humility and contrition. But this speech is of no authority. When Josephus takes up and pursues the thread of mere historical narration, he may be safely trusted: but whenever he begins to embellish, or put speeches in the mouths of his actors, he is no longer to be credited. He even here, transforms an angel of the Lord, into an owl; and introduces it most improbably into his narration: as if an owl, a bird of all others that can least bear the light, should come and perch on the pavillion of the king, when the sun was shining with the most resplendent rays:

23 And immediately the angel of the Lord [a] smote him, because [b] he gave not God the glory: and he was eaten of worms, and gave up the ghost.

d Or, charge. ch. 11. 29, 30.——e ch. 13. 5, 13. & 15. 37. f ver. 12.

Verse 23. The angel of the Lord smote him] His death was most evidently a judgment from God.

Because he gave not God the glory] He did not rebuke his flatterers, but permitted them to give him that honour that was due to God alone. See on ver. 21.

And was eaten of worms] Whether this was the morbus pedicularis, or whether a violent inflammation of his bowels, terminating in putrefaction, did not actually produce worms, which for several days, swarmed in his infected entrails, we cannot tell. It is most likely that this latter was the case; and this is at once more agreeable to the letter of the text, and to the circumstances of the case, as related by Josephus.

And gave up the ghost] That is, he died of the disorder by which he was then seized, after having lingered in excruciating torments, for five days, as Josephus has stated. Antiochus Epiphanes, and Herod the Great, died of the same kind of disease. See the observations at the end of chap. i. relative to the death of Judas.

Verse 24. But the word of God] The Christian doctrine preached by the apostles, grew and multiplied; became more evident, and had daily accessions; for the spirit of revelation rested on those men, and God was daily adding to that word as circumstances required, in order to complete that testimony of his, which we now find contained in the New Testament. As there is in the original, an allusion to the vegetation of grain, (ηυξανε, it grew, as corn grows, the stalk and the ear; και επληθυνετο, it was multiplied, as the corn is in the full ear,) there is probably a reference to the parable of the SOWER and his SEED; for the seed is the word of God, and the doctrine of the kingdom. It was liberally sown; it grew vigorously; and became greatly multiplied. And why? because it was the word, the doctrine of God, there was no corruption in it: and because God watered it with the dew of heaven from on high.

Verse 25. Returned from Jerusalem] That is, to Antioch, after the death of Herod.

When they had fulfilled their ministry] When they had carried the alms of the Christians at Antioch, to the poor saints at Jerusalem, according to what is mentioned, chap. xi. 29, 30. to support them in the time of the coming famine.

And took with them John, whose surname was Mark.] This was the son of Mary, mentioned ver. 12. He accompanied the apostles to Cyprus, and afterwards in several of their voyages till they came to Perga in Pamphylia. Finding them about to take a more extensive voyage, he departed from them. See the case chap. xiii. 13. and xv. 37—40.

1. When the nature, spirit, and tendency of Christianity are considered, we may well be astonished that it should ever find a persecutor among the souls it was designed to instruct and save! Devils can have no part in it, and therefore we may naturally expect them, through envy and malice, to oppose it; but that men, for whose use and salvation the wisdom and mercy of God made it, should reject its offers of mercy, and persecute to death those who proclaimed it, is the most unaccountable thing that can be conceived. What a proof is this of mere maliciousness, where the persecutor not only serves no self-interest by it, but destroys, as far as he can, all that could promote his own present and eternal happiness! This argues such blindness of understanding, hardness of heart, and derangement of mind, as can be accounted for only on the supposition of a nature totally fallen from God, righteousness, and truth. The Jews crucify Christ, and martyr Stephen; and Herod murders James; and both join together to persecute the followers of Christ and destroy his cause. Reader, consider the consequences: this bad people were permitted to remain till they had filled up the measure of their iniquity; and were then cut off by a most terrible judgment: and Herod was visited for his transgressions in such a most awful way, as strongly marked the displeasure of God against persecutors. If a man contend with a man, the contest is in a certain way equal: the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth: but when a man enters the lists against his Maker, as every persecutor does, woe unto that man! he must be torn in pieces, when there is none to deliver.

2. How true is the saying, there is neither counsel nor might against the Lord. In the midst of all troubles and afflictions, that kingdom of heaven which is like a grain of mustard seed, grew and increased, and became a mighty tree which is now filling the whole earth; and fowl of every wing, are flying to lodge in its branches. Ride on and be thou prosperous, O Christ! we wish thee good luck with thine honour.

CHAPTER XIII.

Of the prophets and teachers in the church of Antioch, 1. By command of the Holy Spirit, the church appoints Saul and Barnabas to a particular work, 2, 3. They depart and travel to Seleucia, Cyprus, and Salamis, preaching in the Jewish synagogues, 4, 5. At Paphos they meet with Barjesus or Elymas a Jewish sorcerer, who endeavoured to prevent the Deputy of the island, from receiving the Christian faith, 6—8. Saul, for the first time called Paul, denounces the judgments of God upon him, and he is struck blind, 9—11. The Deputy seeing this, is confirmed in the faith, 12. Paul and his company leave Paphos, and come to Pamphylia, where John Mark leaves them, and returns to Jerusalem, 13. Paul and Barnabas proceed to Antioch; and coming into a synagogue of the Jews, are requested by the rulers of it to preach to the people, 14, 15. Paul preaches, and proves that Jesus is the Christ, 16—41. The Gentiles desire the sermon to be preached to them the next sabbath, and many of the Jews and proselytes receive the Christian faith, 42, 43. The next sabbath the whole city attend; and the Jews, filled with envy, contradict and blaspheme, 44, 45. Paul and Barnabas with great boldness shew, that by the order of God the gospel was to be preached first to them; but seeing they had rejected it, it should now be taken from them, and sent to the Gentiles, 46, 47. The Gentiles rejoice and receive the truth, 48, 49. The Jews raise a persecution against the apostles, and expel them, 50. They come to Iconium, full of joy and the Holy Ghost, 51, 52.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. Certain prophets and teachers] Προφηται και διδασκαλοι. It is probable that these were not distinct offices: both might be vested in the same person. By prophets we are to understand, when the word is taken simply, persons who were frequently inspired to predict future events; and by teachers, persons whose ordinary office was to instruct the people in the Christian doctrine. These also, to be properly qualified for the office, must have been endued with the influence of the Holy Spirit; for as but a very small portion of the scriptures of the New Testament could have as yet been given, it was necessary that the teachers should derive much of their own teaching by immediate revelation from God. On prophets and teachers, see the note on chap. xi. 27.

Barnabas] Of whom see before, chap. xi. 22—24.

Simeon—Niger] Or Simeon the Black, either because of his complexion, or his hair. It was on reasons of this kind that surnames, surnoms, name upon name, were first imposed. Of this Simeon nothing farther is known Lucius of Cyrene] See chap. xi. 20.

Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod] Our margin has given the proper meaning of the original word συντροφος a foster-brother; i. e. Manaen was the son of the woman who nursed Herod Antipas; and the son also, whose milk the young Herod shared. Of a person whose name was Manaen or Menahem, and who was in the court of Herod, we read several things in the Jewish writers. They say that this man had the gift of prophecy, and that he told Herod when he was but a child that he would be king. When Herod became king he sent for him to his court; and held him in great estimation. It might have been the son of this Menahem, of whom St. Luke here speaks. Dr. Lightfoot has shewn this to be at least possible.

Verse 2. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted] On Mondays and Thursdays it was usual with the more pious Jews to attend the public service in their synagogues, and to fast: the former is what we are to understand by ministering to the Lord. On the sabbaths they attended the service in the synagogue, but did not fast. The Greek word, λειτουργουντων, signifies performing the office of praying, supplicating, rendering thanks, &c. hence the word λειτουργια liturgy, the work af prayer, &c. from λιτη supplication, according to some; or rather from λειτος common, and εργον work, the common or public work in which all the people were engaged.

The Holy Ghost said] A revelation of the divine will was made to some person then present; probably to either Simeon, or Lucius, or Manaen mentioned before.

the Holy Ghost said, [a] Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work [b] whereunto I have called them.

Verse 2. Separate me Barnabas and Saul] Consecrate, or set them apart, for the particular work whereunto I have called them. How this was done, we find in the next verse.

Verse 3. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them] 1. They fasted: this was probably done by the whole church. 2. They prayed, that God might bless and prosper them in their work. 3. They laid hands upon them; thus solemnly appointing them to that particular work. But was it by this fasting, praying, and imposition of hands that these men were qualified for this work? No. God had already called them to it, ver. 2. and he who called them, had qualified them. Both their call and their qualification came from God; but he chose that they should have also the sanction of that church of which they had been members; and therefore he said, Separate me, &c. The ordination of elders among the Jews was by three persons; and here we find three, Simeon, Lucius, and Menaen, ordaining two others, Barnabas and Saul. But how did the Jews ordain? Not by imposition of hands: this is strictly forbidden, see Maimon. Sanh. chap. 4. "After what manner is the ordaining of elders for ever? Not that they should lay their hands on the head of an elder; but only that they should call him Rabbi, and say to him, Behold thou art ordained, and hast power of judging, &c." It is remarkable that the imposition of hands in the ordaining of elders was not used among the ancient Jews, probably never under the first temple; and rarely, if ever, under the second. See Lightfoot on this place. The church at Antioch, however, did depart from this custom; they put their hands on the heads of Barnabas and Saul; thus designating them to be the persons whom they, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, sent to preach the gospel of Christ to the heathen.

When the Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them; and the elders of the church, in consequence, prayed, fasted and laid their hands upon them; they certainly understood that by acting thus, they fulfilled the mind of the Spirit. Hence, is it not evident, that when the elders of the church of God have good reason to believe that He has called certain persons to the work of the ministry, and qualified them for that work, that they should proceed as the elders of the church of Antioch did; and by fasting, prayer, and imposition of hands, separate those persons for the work whereunto God has called them. Such persons will consider themselves accountable to GOD and his church; and should take care how they use the gift and authority received from both. Is it not being wise above what is written, to say, "When God has called and given authority, there is no need of ordination or appointment from man." I would just ask the objector, Why then, when God had called Barnabas and Saul to the work, did he command the church to separate them to him for that very work? And why did they in obedience, fast, pray, and lay hands upon them? I shall dispute with no man about the superior excellence of the episcopal or presbyterian form in ordination: if all the preliminaries be right, they may be both equally good, for all that I have ever been able to learn to the contrary; but that there should be some proper scriptural form attended to, I am fully satisfied. Besides, if the plan of the church at Antioch were regularly and faithfully followed, in sending forth the ministers of the gospel, no man can prove that God would not own them in an especial manner, and more particularly prosper their work. But O! ye rulers of the church, be careful, as ye shall answer it to God, never to lay hands on the head of a man, whom ye have not just reason to believe God has called to the work; and whose eye is single, and whose heart is pure. Let none be sent to teach Christianity, who have not experienced it to be the power of God to the salvation of their own souls. If ye do, though they have your authority, they never can have the blessing nor the approbation of God. "I sent them not: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord." Jer. xxiii. 32.

Verse 4. Being sent forth by the Holy Ghost] By his influence, authority, and under his continual direction. Without the first, they were not qualified to go: without the second, they had no authority to go: and without the third, they could not know where to go.

Departed unto Seleucia] This is generally understood to be Seleucia of Pieria, the first city on the coast of Syria, coming from Cilicia; near the place where the river Orontes pours itself into the sea.

They sailed to Cyprus.] A well known island in the Mediterranean sea. See on chap. iv. 36.

Verse 5. Salamis] The capital of the island of Cyprus, afterwards called Constantia; and now Salina, situated on the eastern part of the island.

They preached the word of God] Τον λογον, the doctrine of God, the christian religion emphatically so called.

preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews: and they had also [a] John to their minister.

6 ¶ And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a [b] certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Bar-Jesus:

They had also John to their minister.] This was John Mark, of whom we heard, chap. xii. 25.—for their minister, ὑπηρετην, to assist them in minor offices, as deacon or servant; that they might give themselves wholly to the doctrine of the Lord.

Verse 6. Gone through the isle] Ὁλην, the WHOLE isle, is added here by ABCDE. several others, both the Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala: and also by several of the Greek fathers: and this must be the true reading; for it is evident they ran through the whole island from East to West.

Unto Paphos] This town, next in importance to Salamis, was situated on the western part of the isle; and having gone from Salamis to this place, is a proof that they had gone through the whole island from East to West, according to the reading noticed above. There was probably no town in the universe more dissolute than Paphos. Here Venus had a superb temple; here she was worshipped with all her rites: and from this place she was named the Paphian Venus, the queen of Paphos, &c. This temple and whole city were destroyed by an earthquake; so that a vestige of either does not now remain. There are two islands which go by this name, both adjoining, and on the west side of the island of Cyprus. One is called Old Paphos, the other New Paphos; the latter is probably the island here mentioned, though they are often confounded. On this island there is a Christian church, dedicated to St. George, in which service is performed by the Greek ministers. It is a bishop's see, suffragan to the Abp. of Nicosia.

A certain sorcerer] Τινα μαγον, a magician, one who used magical arts, and pretended to have commerce with supernatural agents. A person who dealt in sleight of hand, or leger-de-main. Such as I have supposed Simon Magus to be. See the note on chap. viii. 9.

A false prophet] A deceiver, one who pretended to have a divine commission; a fortune-teller.

Bar-Jesus] i. e. the son of Jesus or Joshua; as Bar-Jona is the son of Jonah; Bar-tholomew, the son of Thalmi, &c.

Verse 7. The deputy of the country] Ανθυπατῳ, the proconsul. Rosenmuller and others remark, that in those days, the Romans sent two different kinds of governors into the provinces. Some of the provinces were Cæsarean or imperial, and into those they sent proprætors: others belonged to the senate and people of Rome, and into those they sent proconsuls. Cyprus had formerly been an imperial province; but Augustus, who made the distinction, had given it to the people, whence it was governed by a proconsul. See Dio Cass. Hist. Rom. lib. iv. p. 523. [Edit Leunclav.]

Sergius Paulus] This proconsul is not mentioned any where else: he became a Christian; had his name written in the book of life; and probably on that very account, blotted out of the Fasti Consulares.

A prudent man] Ανδρι συνετῳ, a man of good sense, of a sound understanding, and therefore wished to hear the doctrine taught by these apostles, he did not persecute the men for their preaching; but sent for them that he might hear for himself.

Verse 8. But Elymas, the sorcerer, (for so is his name by interpretation)] That is, Elymas is the interpretation of the word μαγος, or sorcerer; not of the word Bar-Jesus, as some have imagined; and to support which they have been led into strange etymologies on the word Βαρ-Ιησους, Bar-Jesus. But how is Elymas, Ελυμας, the interpretation of the word μαγος, magician or sorcerer? Ans. Both names are Asiatic; but neither Hebrew nor Greek. I have already observed in the note on Matt. ii. 1. that مغ mogh in Persian means an idolater, a worshipper of fire, and sometimes what we term a magician. Elymas is from the Arabic علم ilm, knowledge, science, doctrine, art; from âlama, he was wise, skilled, &c. hence عليم aleem or alymon, a doctor or learned man, and with the Greek termination ελυμας, Elymas, the interpretation of مغ mogh, Greek μαγος, magos, a magician, a wise man, doctor, &c.

Verse 9. Saul, who also is—Paul] This is the first time the name Paul occurs, and the last time in which this apostle is called Saul, as his common, or general name.

Saul, שאול Shaûl, was the name of the first Israelitish king, and signifies asked, sought; from שאל shaal, he asked, enquired, &c.

Paul, Paulus, if derived from the Latin, signifies little, dwarfish: but if from the Hebrew, פלא pala, it signifies extraordinary, wonderful; and this appears to have been the derivation assigned to it by St. Jerome, com. in Ep. Pauli ad Philem. who translates it mirabilis, wonderful: and Hesychius must have had the same in view, for he defines it thus, Παυλος, θαυμαστος, η εκλεκτος, συμβουλος, Paul, wonderful, or elect, counsellor. The lexicographer had probably here in view, Isai. ix. 6. his name shall be called (פלא יועץ pelé yoêts) wonderful, counsellor; which he might corrupt into paulus, and thus make his θαυμαστος συμβουλος out of it by way of explanation. Triller however, supposes the συμβουλος of Hesychius to be corrupted from συνδουλος fellow-servant, which is a term not unfrequently applied to apostles, &c. in the New Testament: who are called the servants of God: and it is used by Paul himself, Colos. i. 7. and iv. 7. The Latin original is the most probable. It is well known that the Jews in the apostolic age, had frequently two names; one Hebrew, the other Greek or Roman. Saul was born of Jewish parents, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; he had therefore his first name from that language, שאול Shaul, asked or begged; as it is possible, he might have been a child for whom his parents had addressed their fervent petitions to God. The case of Samuel is one in point. See 1 Sam. i. 9—18. As he was born in Tarsus in Cilicia, he was consequently born a free Roman citizen; and hence his parents would naturally give him for cognomen, some name borrowed from the Latin tongue; and Paulus, which signifies little, might indicate that he was at his birth a small or diminutive child. And it is very likely that he was low in stature all his days; and that it is to this he refers himself, 2 Cor. x. 10. for his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible. If he were small in stature, his voice would be naturally low and feeble; and the Greeks, who were fond of a thundering eloquence, would despise him on this very account.

Filled with the Holy Ghost] Therefore the sentence he pronounced was not from himself, but from God. And indeed had he not been under a divine influence, it is not likely that he would have ventured thus to accost this sorcerer in the presence of the governor, who, no doubt, had greatly admired him.

Verse 10. O full of all subtilty] Δολου deceit, pretending to supernatural powers, without possessing any; and having only cunning and deceit as their substitutes.

And—mischief] Ραδιουργιας, from ραδιος easy, and εργον a work; one who is ready at his work; a word which excellently well defines a juggler, one who is expert at sleight of hand; though it is often employed to signify an abandoned and accomplished villain.

Child of the devil] Υιε διαβολου, son of the devil, possessing his nature; filled with his cunning; and, in consequence, practising deceit.

Enemy of all righteousness] Εχθρε παση δικαιοσυνης; opposed in thy heart to all that is just, true, and good.

Wilt thou not cease to pervert, &c.] Ου παυση διαστρεφων, wilt thou not cease perverting. He had probably laboured in this bad work, from the beginning of Paul's ministry in the place; and God in his mercy had borne with him; and no doubt the apostle had warned him, for thus much seems implied in the reproof. What a terrible character is given of this bad man! He no doubt passed among the people for what we call a clever fellow; and he was so clever as to hide himself under a pretty dense mask; but God who searches the heart, plucked it off, and tells him, and those who were perverted by him, what an accomplished deceiver and knave he was.

The right ways of the Lord] Τας οδους Κυριου τας ευθειας. the ways of the Lord, the straight ways. This saying is very emphatical. The ways of Elymas were crooked and perverse; the ways of the Lord, the doctrine taught by him, plain and straight. What is here said of the conduct and teaching of Elymas, for he was a false prophet, is true of all false doctrine: it is complex, devious, and tortuous: while the doctrine of God is simple, plain, and straight; directing in the way, the sure way that leads to present peace, and everlasting happiness. From the phraseology which the apostle employs in this terrible address to Elymas, we may learn, as well as from his name Bar-Jesus, that he was by birth and education a Jew. On this account he was the greater enemy to Christianity; and on this same account, he was the less excusable.

Verse 11. The hand of the Lord is upon thee] The power of God is now about to deal with thee in the way of justice.

Thou shalt be blind] Every word here proves the immediate inspiration of Paul. He was full of the Holy Ghost when he began this address: by the light of that Spirit he discerned the state of Elymas, and exposed his real character: and by the prophetic influence of that same Spirit, he predicted the calamity that was about to fall upon him, while as yet there was no sign of his blindness! Mark this!

11 And now, behold, [a] the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

tual; it was intended to be the means of awakening and softening the hard heart of this poor sinner. There is an ancient tradition, and it is mentioned both by Origen and Chrysostom, that Elymas, in consequence of this, became a sincere convert to the religion of Christ. Origen says, "And Paul by a word, striking him blind, who was with the proconsul Sergius Paul, δια των πονων, επιστρεφει αυτον εις θεοσεβειαν, by anguish converted him to godliness." And commenting on Thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun αχρι καιρου, for a season, asks, "And why for a season? That being smitten on account of his transgressions, and brought to repentance, he might at last be deemed worthy to see the sun, not only with his body, but with his mind; that the divine virtue might be proclaimed in restoring him to sight, and his soul believing, might receive godliness." Com. in Exod. Vol. I. p. 117. edit. de la Rue, Par. 1733.

There fell on him a mist and darkness] Αχλυς achlus, is a disordered state of the eye, in which the patient sees only as through a thick mist. This thick mist, or perturbed state of the eye, took place first: it increased, and σκοτος, thick, positive darkness was the issue.

He went about] Περιαγων. Not knowing how to take a right step, he groped about in great uncertainty; and not being able to find his way, he sought for some persons to lead him by the hand. This state of Elymas is inimitably expressed in one of the cartons of Raphael, now at Hampton-court, (and lately engraved in the true spirit of the original, by Mr. Thomas Holloway,) in which his whole figure expresses the depth of distress, concern, uncertainty, and confusion; and, to use a word common in exhibiting this matchless piece of painting, he is blind from head to foot. In this manner, the text authorized the painter to express the state of this miserable culprit.

Verse 12. The deputy—believed] This was a proof that the doctrine was true; and that the power of God, from which nothing could be concealed, and which nothing could resist, was with these preachers.

Being astonished] Εκπλησσομενος; being struck with astonishment, as Elymas was struck with blindness. Thus the word of God is a two-edged sword; it smites the sinner with judgment or compunction; and the sincere enquirer after truth, with conviction of its own worth and excellence.

Verse 13. Paul and his company loosed from Paphos] They sailed away from this island, leaving, it may be presumed, Elymas a sincere and deeply humbled penitent; and Sergius Paul, a thorough and happy believer in the doctrine of Christ.

Previously to this time, St. Luke always mentions Barnabas before Paul; but after this he mentions Paul always first; probably after seeing how God had distinguished him in the late proceedings at Cyprus; as much of the Holy Spirit now rested upon him.

They came to Perga in Pamphylia] As Perga was not a maritime town, it is conjectured that the apostles sailed up the river Cestrus, in order to come to this place, which, according to Strabo, was situated about sixty leagues up this river, and near to which was a famous temple, dedicated to Diana. For Pamphylia, see chap. ii. 10.

And John departing from them] Why John Mark left his brethren at this place, we are not informed; probably he went to visit his pious mother Mary at Jerusalem, and to see Peter, to whom he is supposed to have been much attached. It certainly was not with the approbation of Paul that he left them at this place, as we learn from chap. xv. 38. yet his departure does not seem to have merited the displeasure of Barnabas; for John Mark having met these apostles at Antioch, when Paul purposed to revisit the various places where they had planted the word of God, Barnabas was willing to take him with them; but Paul would not consent, because he had departed from them, from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work, ch. xv. 35—39. and this occasioned a separation between Barnabas and Paul. It does not appear that John Mark was under any obligation to accompany them any longer or any farther than he pleased. He seems to have been little else than their servant, and certainly was not divinely appointed to this work, as they were; and consequently might leave them innocently, though not kindly, if they could not readily supply his place. In this respect John Mark might be to blame; but Barnabas, whose nephew he was, could look over this fault more easily than Paul, who could not find those motives to pass by what was reprehensible in his conduct, which natural affection might furnish to his brother apostle.

came to Antioch in Pisidia, and [a] went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down.

is mentioned thus to distinguish it from Antioch in Syria, with which it had nothing in common but the name. There were several cities and towns in various districts of these countries called Antioch: some have reckoned up not less than twelve. Pisidia, in which this was situated, was a province of Asia Minor, near to Pamphylia, having Phrygia on the North, and Pamphylia on the South. The position of all these places may be seen on the Map.

Into the synagogue on the sabbath-day] Though Paul was now on a special mission to the Gentiles, yet he availed himself of every opportunity, in every place, of making the first offer of salvation to the Jews.

Verse 15. After the reading of the law and the prophets] A certain portion of the law, and another of the prophets, was read every sabbath; and the law was so divided as to be read over once every year. In the notes at the conclusion of Deuteronomy, I have considered this subject at large, and given a complete table of the Parashoth, sections of the law, and Haphtaroth, sections of the prophets, which are read every sabbath in the year in the Jewish synagogues. To have an exact view of every part of the Jewish ecclesiastical œconomy, the Reader will do well to consult the above mentioned Table, and those which follow it: they have been drawn up with great care, attention, and indescribable labour.

It has been a question, in what language were the law and prophets read in a synagogue of Pisidia, for in that district Strabo informs us, that four languages were spoken, viz. the Pisidian, the Solyman, the Greek, and the Lydian? Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, with great probability, that the Scriptures were read in the original Hebrew; and that an interpreter rendered the reading to the people in their mother tongue. There is no doubt that the Jews and proselytes understood the Greek tongue well; and they certainly had the Septuagint Version among them.

The rulers of the synagogue] These were the persons, whose business it was to read the appointed sections; and to take care of the synagogue and its concerns; and to see that all was done decently and in order.

Sent unto them] Seeing them to be Jews, they wished them to give some suitable address to the people, i. e. to the Jews who were there engaged in the divine worship; for the whole of the following discourse, which greatly resembles that of St. Stephen, chap. vii. is directed to the Jews alone; and this was probably spoken, either in Hebrew or Greek.

Ye men and brethren] Ανδρες αδελφοι, men brethren, a Hebraism for "Ye men who are our brethren," i. e. Jews, as we ourselves are; but ανδρες is often an expletive, as we have already seen. See the note on chap. vii. 2.

If ye have any word of exhortation] Ει εστι λογος εν υμιν παρακλησεως· If ye have any subject of consolation; and word of comfort to us, who are sojourners in this strange land, speak it. The Consolation of Israel was an epithet of the Messiah among the Jews; and it is probable that it was in reference to him that the rulers of the synagogue spoke. That παρακλησις is to be understood here, as meaning consolation, and this in reference to the Messiah, the whole of the following discourse will prove to the attentive reader; in which Paul shews the care and protection of God towards his people Israel, and the abundant provision he had made for their salvation by Jesus Christ. They wished for consolation, and he declared unto them glad tidings and many felt the power and comfort of the doctrine of the cross.

Verse 16. Men of Israel] Ye that are Jews by birth, and ye that fear God; ye that are proselytes to the Jewish religion. In this discourse Paul proves that Jesus Christ is the Messiah, sent from God, not only for the salvation of the Jews, but of the whole human race. And this he does, not with the rhetorician's arts, but in a plain, simple detail of the history of Christ, and the most remarkable transactions of the people of God, which referred to his manifestation in the flesh. Rosenmuller.

Verse 17. The God of—our fathers] The apostle begins his discourse with the Egyptian bondage, and their deliverance from it, as points the most remarkable and striking in their history; in which the providence and mighty power of God, exerted so frequently in their behalf, were peculiarly conspicuous.

Exalted the people] Even when they were strangers in the land, and greatly oppressed, God exalted them; made them a terror to their enemies, and multiplied them greatly.

With a high arm] A literal translation of the Hebrew phrase בזרוע רמה bezeroâ ramah, with a lifted up arm, to protect them and destroy their enemies. The meaning of the phrase is, a manifest display of the divine power.

Verse 18. About the time of forty years] The space of time between their coming out of Egypt, and going into the promised land.

Suffered he their manners] Ετροποφορησεν αυτους; he dealt indulgently with them: howsoever they behaved towards him, he mercifully bore with, and kindly treated them. But instead of ετροποφορησεν, ACE. some others, with the Syriac, Arabic, Coptic, Æthiopic, and some of the Fathers, read ετροφοφορησεν, which signifies, he nourished and fed them, or bore them about in his arms, as a tender nurse does her child. This reading confirms the marginal conjecture, and agrees excellently with the scope of the place; and is a reading at least of equal value with that in the commonly received text. Griesbach has admitted it, and excluded the other. Both, when rightly understood, speak nearly the same sense; but the latter is the most expressive, and agrees best with Paul's discourse, and the history to which he alludes. See the same form of expression, Num. xi. 12. Exod. xix. 4. Isai. xlvi. 3, 4. and lxiii. 9.

Verse 19. Destroyed seven nations] The Canaanites, Hittites, Girgasites, Amorites, Hivites, Perezites and Jebusites. The Rabbins frequently call them שבעה אומות Shebaah Omoth, the Seven Nations.

Verse 20. And after that he gave unto them judges, about the space of four hundred and fifty years] This is a most difficult passage, and has been termed by Scaliger, Crux Chronologorum. The apostle seems here to contradict the account in 1 Kings vi. 1. And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign, he began to build the house of the Lord.

Sir Norton Knatchbull, in his Annotations upon difficult texts, has considered the various solutions proposed by learned men of the difficulty before us; and concludes, that the words of the apostles should not be understood as meaning how long God gave them judges, but when he gave them; and therefore proposes that the first words of this verse, Και μετα ταυτα ὡς ετεσι τετρακοσιοις και πεντηκοντα, should be referred to the words going before, ver. 17. that is, to the time WHEN the God of the children of Israel chose their fathers.

"Now this time wherein God may properly be said to have chosen their fathers, about 450 years before he gave them judges, is to be computed from the birth of Isaac, in whom God may properly be said to have chosen their fathers; for God, who had chosen Abraham out of all the people of the earth, chose Isaac at this time out of the children of Abraham, in whose family the covenant was to rest. To make this computation evident, let us observe, that from the birth of Isaac to the birth of Jacob are 60 years; from thence to their going into Egypt, 130; from thence to the Exodus, 210; from thence to their entrance into Canaan, 40; from that to the division of the land, (about which time it is probable they began to settle their government by judges,) 7 years: which sums make 447, viz. 60+130+210+40+7= 447. And should this be reckoned from the year before the birth of Isaac, when God established his covenant between himself and Abraham, and all his seed after him, Gen. xvii. ver. 19. at which time God properly chose their fathers, then there will be 448 years, which brings it to within two years of the 450, which is sufficiently exact to bring it within the apostle's ὡς about, or nearly.

Some have made the period 452 years; which, though two years more than the apostle's round number, is still sufficiently reconcileable with his qualifying particle ὡς, about. And it may be added, that the most correct writers often express a sum totally, but not exactly: so, with Demosthenes and Plautus, we find that called a talent, where some drachms were either wanting or abounding."

The sacred writers often express themselves in the same way, e. g. He made a molten sea, ten cubits from the one brim to the other; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it about. Now we know that the circumference of any circle is only in round numbers to its diameter as three to one; but correctly, is considerably more, nearly as 22 to 7. But even the Spirit of God does not see it necessary to enter into such niceties, which would only puzzle, and not instruct the common reader.

Calmet has paraphrased these passages nearly to the same sense: the text may be thus connected, ver. 19. And having destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot, about 150 years after. And afterwards he gave them judges, to the time of Samuel the prophet. The paraphrase of Calmet is the following: "The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers in the person of Abraham; he promised him the land of Canaan, and 450 years after this promise, and the birth of Isaac, who was the son and heir of the promise, he put them in possession of that land, which he had promised so long before." As this view of the subject removes all the principal difficulties, I shall not trouble my reader with other modes of interpretation.

Verse 21. Saul the son of Cis] In all proper names quoted from the Old Testament, we should undoubtedly follow, as nearly as possible, the same orthography: קיש Kish, was the name of this king's father, and so we spell it in the Old Testament; and yet have transformed it into Cis in the New, where the orthography is almost entirely lost.

The space of forty years.] Reckoning from the time of his anointing by Samuel to the time of his death from A. M. 2909 to 2949.

Verse 22. David—a man after mine own heart] That is, a man who would rule the kingdom according to God's will. Dr. Benson's observation on this point is very judicious: "When it is said that David was a man after God's own heart, it should be understood not of his private, but of his public character. He was a man after God's own heart, because he ruled the people according to the divine will. He did not allow of idolatry; he did not set up for absolute power. He was guided in the government of the nation by the law of Moses, as the standing rule of government, and by the prophet, or the divine oracle, whereby God gave directions upon particular emergencies. Whatever Saul's private character was, he was not a good king in Israel. He did not follow the law, the oracle, and the prophet; but attempted to be absolute, and thereby to subvert the constitution of the kingdom. That this was the meaning of David's being a man after God's own heart will easily appear by comparing 1 Sam. xv. 28. xxviii. 17, 18. 1 Chron. x. 13, 14. Psal. lxxviii. 70, &c. lxxxix. 20, &c."

Verse 23. Of this man's seed hath God—raised—a Saviour] That Jesus Christ came in a direct and indisputable line from David, according to both promise and prophecy, may be seen in the notes on Matt. i. 1, &c. and particularly in the notes at the end of Luke iii. And that the Messiah was promised to come from the family of David, see Isai. xi. 1, 2. and Jerem. xxiii. 5, 6.

Verse 24. John—preached—the baptism of repentance] On the nature and effects of John's preaching, see the notes on Matt. iii. 1, &c. and Luke iii. 10—15.

Verse 25. As John fulfilled his course] As John was fulfilling his race, he said, &c. It has been supposed that the word δρομον course, or race, is used here to point out the short duration of the Baptist's ministry, and the fervent zeal with which he performed it. It signifies properly his ministry, or life. A man's work, employment, function, &c. is his race, course, or way of life. John had a ministry from God; and he discharged the duties of it with zeal and diligence; bore the fatigues of it with patience and resignation; and was gloriously successful in it, because the hand of the Lord was with him.

Verse 26. Men and brethren] This should have been translated brethren simply. See the note on chap. vii. 2.

Verse 27. Because they knew him not] A gentle excuse for the persecuting high-priests, &c. They did not know that Jesus was the Christ, because they did not know the prophets: and why did they not know the prophets, which were read every sabbath-day? Because they did not desire to know his will: and therefore they knew not the doctrine of God: nor did they know that in condemning Christ, they fulfilled those very Scriptures which were read every sabbath-day in their synagogues.

Verse 28. They found no cause of death in him] No reason why he should be condemned. Though they accused him of several things, yet they could not substantiate the most trifling charge against him; and yet, in opposition to all justice and equity, desired Pilate to put him to death! This paints their perfidy in the strongest light.

Verse 29. They took him down from the tree] The apostle passes rapidly over several circumstances of his death, that he might establish the fact of his resurrection.

Verse 30. But God raised him from the dead] And thus gave the fullest proof of his innocence. God alone can raise the dead; and he would not work a miracle so very extraordinary, but on some extraordinary occasion.

Verse 31. He was seen many days, &c.] The thing was done but a very short time since; and many of the witnesses are still alive, and ready to attest the fact of this resurrection in the most unequivocal manner.

Verse 32. We declare unto you glad tidings] We proclaim that gospel to you, which is the fulfilment of the promise made unto the Fathers.

Verse 33. Written in the second Psalm] Instead of τῳ ψαλμῳ τῳ δευτερῳ, the second Psalm; πρωτῳ ψαλμῳ, the first Psalm is the reading of D. and its Itala Version, and several of the primitive Fathers. Griesbach has received it into the text; but not, in my opinion, on sufficient evidence. The reason of these various readings is sufficiently evident to those who are acquainted with Hebrew MSS. In many of these, two Psalms are often written as one; and the first and second Psalms are written as one in seven of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. Those who possessed such MSS. would say, as it is written in the FIRST Psalm: those who referred to MSS. where the two Psalms were separate, would say, in the SECOND Psalm; as they would find the quotation in question in the first verse of the second Psalm. There is, therefore, neither contradiction nor difficulty here; and it is no matter which reading we prefer, as it depends on the simple circumstance, whether we consider these two Psalms as parts of one and the same; or whether we consider them as two distinct Psalms.

Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.] It has been disputed, whether this text should be understood of the incarnation, or of the resurrection of our Lord. If understood of his incarnation, it can mean no more than this, that the human nature of our blessed Lord was begotten by the energy of the Holy Spirit in the womb of the blessed Virgin; for as to his divine nature, which is allowed to be God, it could neither be created nor begotten. See some reasons offered for this on Luke i. 35. and if those be deemed insufficient, a thousand more may be added. But in the above reasons it is demonstrated, that the doctrine of the eternal Sonship of Christ is absolutely irreconcileable to reason, and contradictory to itself. ETERNITY is that which has had no beginning, nor stands in any reference to time: SON supposes time, generation, and father; and time also antecedent to such generation: therefore the conjunction of these two terms, Son and eternity, is absolutely impossible, as they imply essentially different and opposite ideas.

If the passage in question be understood of the resurrection of Christ, it points out that the human nature, which was produced by the power of God in the womb of the Virgin, and which was the Son of God, could see no corruption; and therefore, though it died for sin, must be raised from the dead before it saw corruption. Thus God owned that human nature to be peculiarly his own: and therefore Jesus Christ was declared to be the Son of God with power, by the resurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4.

Verse 34. No more to return to corruption] To the grave, to death, the place and state of corruption; for so we should understand the word διαφθοραν in the text.

The sure mercies of David.] Τα ὁσια Δαβιδ τα πιστα. These words are quoted literatim from the Septuagint Version of Isai. lv. 3. where the Hebrew is חסדי דוד הנאמנים chasdey David ha-neemanim, of which the Greek is a faithful translation; and which sure mercies of David, St. Paul considers as being fulfilled in the resurrection of Christ. From this application of the words, it is evident that the apostle considered the word David as signifying the Messiah; and then the sure or faithful mercies, being such as relate to the new covenant, and the various blessings promised in it, are evidently those which are sealed and confirmed to mankind by the resurrection of Christ: and it is in this way that the apostle applies them. Had there not been the fullest proof of the resurrection of Christ, not one of the promises of the new covenant could have been considered as sure or faithful. If he did not rise from the dead, then, as said the apostle, your faith and our preaching are vain, 1 Cor. xv. 14.

The following observations of Bp. Pearce are judicious: "For the sense of these words, we must have recourse to what God said to David in 2 Sam. vii. 11, 12, &c. explained by what is said in Psal. lxxxix. 3, 4, 28, 29, 36. where frequent mention is made of a covenant established by God, with David, and sworn to by God, that David's seed should endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven, and as the sun to all generations. This covenant and this oath are the sure and sacred things, of which Isai. lv. 3. speaks; and Luke in this place. And Paul understood them as relating to the kingdom of Jesus, (the Son of David,) which was to be an everlasting kingdom; and if an everlasting one, then it was necessary that Jesus should have been (as he was) raised from the dead: and to support this argument, Paul, in the next verse, strengthens it with another, drawn from Psalm xvi. ver. 10." See also the note among the marginal readings.

Verse 36. David—fell on sleep—and saw corruption.] David died, was buried, and never rose again; therefore, David cannot be the person spoken of here: the words are true of some other person; and they can be applied to Jesus Christ only; and in him they are most exactly fulfilled. See the notes on chap. ii. 29, 30, &c.

Verse 38. Be it known unto you, therefore] This is the legitimate conclusion: Seeing the word of God is true, and he has promised an endless succession to the seed of David; seeing David and all his family have failed in reference to the political kingdom; a spiritual kingdom and a spiritual succession must be intended, that the sure covenant and all its blessings may be continued. Again: seeing the person by whom this is to be done, is to see no corruption; seeing David has died, and has seen (fallen under the power of) corruption; seeing Jesus the Christ has wrought all the miracles which the prophets said he should work; seeing he has suffered all the indignities which your prophets said he must suffer; seeing after his death he has most incontestably risen again from the dead, and has not fallen under the power of corruption—Then he must be the very person in whom all the predictions are fulfilled; and the person through whom all the blessings of the covenant must come.

Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins] See the notes on chap. v. 30, 31. Remission of sins, the removal of the power, guilt, and pollution of sin, comes alone through this man whom ye crucified, and who is risen from the dead.

all that believe in his divine mission, and the end for which he has been manifested, namely, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, are justified from all things, from the guilt of all transgressions committed against God; from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses; because it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, or any other rite or service of this kind, could take away sin from the soul, cancel its guilt in the conscience, or make an atonement to the divine justice: but this is the sacrifice which God has required; this is every way suited to the end for which it has been instituted; and this is the sacrifice alone, which God can accept. Your law says, 'Do this, and ye shall live;' and, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them.' Ye have not done these things required; ye have not continued in any good thing; ye have not only, not done all things commanded, but ye have done none, none as they ought to be done; and therefore, ye are under the curse. The Gospel says, Believe on the Lord Jesus; credit his divine mission; consider his death an atonement for sin; believe in his resurrection, as a proof that the atonement is made; believe that he suffered, died, and rose again for your justification, and that for his sake God, though he be infinitely just, can be the justifier of all who believe in him. By the law of Moses, there is neither justification nor salvation; in Jesus Christ there are both, and all the sure mercies of David. Therefore, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and ye shall be justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

Verse 40. Beware—lest that come upon you, &c.] If you reject these benefits, now freely offered to you in this preaching of Christ crucified; you may expect such judgments from the hand of God as your forefathers experienced, when, for their rebellion and their contempt of his benefits, their city was taken, their temple destroyed, and themselves either slain by the sword, or carried into captivity. It is evident that St. Paul refers to Habak. i. 5—10. and in those verses the desolation by the Chaldeans is foretold. Never was there a prophecy more correctly and pointedly applied. These Jews did continue to slight the benefits offered to them by the Lord; and they persevered in their rebellions: what was the consequence? The Romans came, took their city, burnt their temple, slew upwards of a million of them, and either carried or sold the rest into captivity. How exactly was the prophecy in both cases fulfilled!

Verse 41. Behold, ye despisers] There is a remarkable difference here between the Hebrew text in Habakkuk, and that in the Septuagint, which is a little abridged here by St. Paul. I shall exhibit the three texts: Heb.:

ראו בגוים והביטו והתמהו תמהו כי פעל פעל בימיכם לא תאמינו כי יספר

Reü bagoyim vehabitu vehitammehu; temahu ki pôal pôel bimeycem, lo teaminu ki yesupar. Behold ye among the heathen, (nations) and regard, and be astonished; be astonished, for I am working a work in your days which, when it shall be told, ye will not credit. See Houbigant.

Sept. Ιδετε οι καταφρονηται, και επιβλεψατε, και θαυμασατε θαυμασια, και αφανισθητε· διοτι εργον εγω εργαζομαι εν ταις ημεραις υμων, ὃ ου μη πιστευσητε, εαν τις εκδιηγηται υμιν. See, ye despisers, and look attentively, and be astonished, (or hide yourselves), for I work a work in your days which, if any one will tell to you, ye will not believe.

St. Luke. Ιδετε οι καταφρονηται [και επιβλεψατε·] και θαυμασατε [θαυμασια] και αφανισθητε· οτι εργον εγω εργαζομαι εν ταις ημεραις υμων, εργον ω ου μη πιστευητε, εαν τις εκδιηγηται υμιν. Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and be astonished, (or hide yourselves), for I work a work in your days which, if any one will tell unto you, ye will not believe.

I have taken Luke's quotation from the best MSS. and I have quoted the Septuagint according to the Codex Alexandrinus: and the quotations are exactly the same, not only in words, but almost in letters, with the exception of επιβλεψατε and θαυμασια, which the evangelist omits; and which I have included in crotchets in the text of St. Luke, merely that the place of the omission may be the better seen. It may now be necessary to enquire, how St. Luke and the Septuagint should substitute ye despisers, for ye among the heathen, in the Hebrew text?

Without troubling myself or my readers with laborious criticisms on these words, with which many learned men have loaded the text; I will simply state my opinion, that the prophet, instead of בגוים bagoyim, among the heathen, wrote בגדים bogadim, despisers, or transgressors: a word which differs only in a single letter, ד daleth, for ו vau; the latter of which might easily be mistaken by a transcriber for the other, especially if the horizontal stroke of the ד daleth happened to be a little faint towards the left; as, in that case, it would wear the appearance of a ו vau: and this is not unfrequently the case not only in MSS. but even in printed books. It seems as evident as it can well be, that this was the word which the Septuagint found in the copy from which they translated: their evidence, and that of the apostle, joined to the consideration that the interchange of the two letters mentioned above might have been easily made, is quite sufficient to legitimate the reading for which I contend. Houbigant and several others are of the same mind.

The word αφανισθητε, which we translate perish, signifies more properly disappear, or hide yourselves; as people, astonished and alarmed at some coming evil, betake themselves to flight, and hide themselves in order to avoid it.

Verse 42. When the Jews were gone out] That part of them in whom the words of the prophet were fulfilled, viz. those who, though they had the clearest relation of so interesting a history, would not believe it: they shut their eyes against the light, and hardened their hearts against the truth. There were other Jews in the assembly that did believe, and were saved.

The Gentiles besought] There is some doubt whether the original παρεκαλουν τα εθνη should be translated the Gentiles besought; or they besought the Gentiles: for the words will bear either; but the latter sense more naturally. When the Jews retired, determining not to credit what was spoken; the apostle, seeing the Gentiles of a better mind, requested them to come and hear those words, or doctrines, the next sabbath. But, the next, το μεταξυ, as Hesychius defines it, μετ' ολιγον, ανα μεσον, shortly, or betwixt, may mean the after part of the same sabbath; or the course of the ensuing week, between the two sabbaths; for Mondays and Thursdays, or the second and fifth days of the week, were times in which those who feared God, usually met together in the synagogue; for it is a maxim with the Rabbins, that no three days should elapse without reading of the law.

On this verse there is a great number of various readings; instead of when the Jews were going out of the synagogue, ABCDE. several others of great repute, with all the Syriac, the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala read, As they were going out, they entreated that these words should be preached unto them in the course of the week, or the next sabbath. So that, according to this well accredited reading, the words εκ της συναγωγης των Ιουδαιων, are left out in the first clause, αυτων being put in their place; and τα εθνη the Gentiles, is wholly omitted in the second clause. The most eminent critics approve of this reading; indeed it stands on such authority as to render it almost indubitable. Of the αυτων them, which is substituted for the first clause, Professor White says, Lectio indubiè genuina; this reading is undoubtedly genuine: and of the τα εθνη εις, he says, certissime delenda: they should certainly be expunged. We are therefore to understand the words thus: that "as they were going out on the breaking up of the assembly, some of them desired that they might have these doctrines preached to them on the ensuing week or sabbath." And thus all the ambiguity of the verse vanishes.

Verse 43. Many of the Jews] Direct descendants from some of the twelve tribes: and religious proselytes, heathens who had been coverted to Judaism, and having submitted to circumcision, had become proselytes of the covenant: though some think that the expression means proselytes of the gate; persons who believed in one God, like the Jews, but who had not received circumcision.

Persuaded them to continue in the grace of God.] That is that they should continue to credit the gospel; to receive the spirit and influence of it; to bring forth the fruits of that Spirit; and thus continue under the favour and approbation of God.

Verse 44. The next sabbath] The good news had spread far and wide, by means of the converted Jews and proselytes.

Almost the whole city] Jews, Proselytes, and Gentiles, came together to hear τον λογον του Θεου, this doctrine of God, this divine teaching, by which so many of their kindred and acquaintance had become so wise and happy. It is not by public discourses merely, that people are converted to God; but by the private teaching and godly conduct of those who have received the truth; for as these are scattered throughout society, they are a leaven in every place.

Verse 45. The Jews—were filled with envy] See on chap. v. 17. These could not bear the Gentiles, who believed in Christ, to be equal with them; and yet, according to the gospel, it was really the case.

Contradicting] The arguments and statements brought forward by the disciples: and blaspheming; speaking impiously and injuriously of Jesus Christ. This is probably what is meant.

Verse 46. Waxed bold] Παρρησιασαμενοι; having great liberty of speech; a strong, persuasive, and overpowering eloquence. They had eternal Truth for the basis of this discourse; a multitude of incontestable facts to support it: and an all-persuading eloquence to illustrate and maintain what they had asserted.

Should first have been spoken to you] When our Lord gave his apostles their commission to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; he told them they must begin first at Jerusalem, Mark xvi. 16. Luke xxiv. 47. In obedience therefore to this command, the apostles (in every place where they preached) made their first offers of the gospel to the Jews.

Ye put it from you] Απωθεισθε αυτον, ye disdain this doctrine, and consider it contemptible: so the word is frequently used.

And judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life] Was this meant as a strong irony? "Ye have such humbling thoughts of yourselves, that ye think the blessings of the gospel too good to be bestowed on such worthless wretches as ye are?" Or did the apostle mean, that, by their words and conduct on this occasion, they had passed sentence on themselves, and, in effect, had decided that they were unworthy of the grace of the gospel; and God now ratifies that judgment by removing those blessings from them, and sending them to the Gentiles?

Verse 47. For so the Lord commanded us] The apostles could quote a pertinent scripture for ever thing they did; because the outlines of the whole gospel dispensation are founded in the law and the prophets; and they were now building the church of God according to the pattern shewn them in the Mount. In the things of God, no man nor minister should go farther than he can say, Thus it is written, and thus it behoves me to do; and let him see that his quotations are fairly made, and not a detached passage, or member of a sentence produced, because it seems to look like the system he wishes to establish.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles] This quotation is from Isai. xlix. 6. and was most fully in point. The Jews could not resist the testimony of their own prophet; and the Gentiles rejoiced to find that the offers of salvation were to be made so specifically to them.

For salvation unto the ends of the earth.] The very name of the Messiah, viz. Jesus, announced the design and end of his mission. He is the Saviour, and is to be proclaimed as such to the ends of the earth; to all mankind; to every nation, and people, and tongue: and wherever the gospel is preached, there is a free, full, and sincere offer of salvation to every soul that hears it. And the offer is proof sufficient in itself, that there is a power to receive its blessings, given to those to whom the offer is made; as it would be of no use to offer them a salvation, which it was designed they either should not, or could not receive. A son of Satan might be capable of such dissimulation and bad faith; but the Holy God cannot.

Verse 48. As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed] This text has been most pitifully misunderstood. Many suppose that it simply means, that those in that assembly who were fore ordained, or predestinated by God's decree to eternal life, believed, under the influence of that decree. Now, we should be careful to examine what a word means, before we attempt to fix its meaning. Whatever τεταγμενοι may mean, which is the word we translate ordained, it is neither προτεταγμενοι nor προορισμενοι, which the apostle uses, but simply τεταγμενοι, which includes no idea of pre-ordination, or pre-destination of any kind. And if it even did, it would be rather hazardous to say, that all those who believed at this time were such as actually persevered unto the end, and were saved unto eternal life. But, leaving all these precarious matters, what does the word τεταγμενος mean? The verb ταττω or τασσω signifies to place, set, order, appoint, dispose; hence it has been considered here as implying the disposition or readiness of mind of several persons in the congregation, such as the religious proselytes mentioned ver 43. who possessed the reverse of the disposition of those Jews, who spake against those things, contradicting and blaspheming, ver. 45. Though the word in this place has been variously translatated; yet of all the meanings ever put on it, none agrees worse with its nature and known signification, than that which represents it as intending those who were predestinated to eternal life: this is no meaning of the term, and should never be applied to it. Let us without prejudice, consider the scope of the place: the Jews contradicted and blasphemed; the religious proselytes heard attentively, and received the word of life; the one party were utterly indisposed, through their own stubbornness, to receive the gospel; the others, destitute of prejudice and prepossession, were glad to hear, that in the order of God, the Gentiles were included in the covenant of salvation through Christ Jesus; they, therefore, in this good state and order of mind, believed.—Those who seek for the plain meaning of the word, will find it here: those who wish to make out a sense, not from the Greek word, its use among the best Greek writers, and the obvious sense of the evangelist, but from their own creed, may continue to puzzle themselves and others; kindle their own fire, compass themselves with sparks, and walk in the light of their own fire, and of the sparks which they have kindled; and, in consequence, lie down in sorrow, having bidden adieu to the true meaning of a passage so very simple, taken in its connexion, that one must wonder how it ever came to be misunderstood and misapplied. Those who wish to see more on this verse, may consult Hammond, Whitby, Schoettgen, Rosenmuller, Pearce, Sir Norton Knatchbull, and Dodd.

Verse 49. The word of the Lord was published, &c. Those who had come from different parts, and were converted, carried the glad tidings to their respective neighbourhoods; and thus the doctrine of the gospel was published throughout all the region of Pisidia, where they then were. See on ver. 44.

Verse 50. Devout and honourable women] It is likely that these were heathen matrons, who had become proselytes to the Jewish religion; and as they were persons of affluence and respectability they had considerable influence with the civil magistracy of the place; and probably their husbands were of this order; and it is likely that they used that influence at the instigation of the Jews, to get the apostles expelled from the place.

Verse 51. They shook off the dust of their feet against them] This was a very significant rite: by it, they in effect said, Ye are worse than the heathen: even your very land is accursed for your opposition to God; and we dare not permit even its dust to cleave to the soles of our feet; and we shake it off, in departing from your country, according to our Lord's command, (Matt. x. 14.) for a testimony against you; that we offered you salvation, but ye rejected it, and persecuted us. The Jews, when travelling in heathen countries, took care, when they came to the borders of their own, to shake off the dust of their feet, lest any of the unhallowed ground should defile the sacred land of Israel.

Came unto Iconium.] According to Strabo, Iconium was a small fortified town, the capital of Lycaonia, at present called Cœni. "Lycaonia was a province at the back of Pamphylia, higher up in Asia Minor, and to the north-east of Pamphylia." Pearce.

Verse 42. The disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost.] Though in the world they had tribulation, yet in Christ they had peace; and while engaged in their Master's works, they always had their Master's wages. The happiness of a genuine Christian lies far beyond the reach of earthly disturbances: and is not affected by the changes and chances to which mortal things are exposed. The martyrs were more happy in the flames than their persecutors could be on their beds of down.

CHAPTER XIV.

Paul and Barnabas having preached at Iconium with great success, are persecuted, and obliged to flee to Lystra and Derbe, 1—6. Here they preach, and heal a cripple; on which the people, supposing them to be gods, are about to offer them sacrifices, and are with difficulty prevented by these apostles, 7—18. Certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium coming thither, induce the people to stone Paul; who being dragged out of the city as dead, while the disciples stand around him, he rises up suddenly, and returns to the city, and the next day departs to Derbe, 19, 20. Having preached here, he and Barnabas return to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the disciples, and ordaining elders in every church, 21—23. They pass through Pisidia and Pamphylia 24, through Perga and Attalia, 25, and sail to Antioch in Syria, 26. When having called the disciples together, they inform them of the door of faith opened to the Gentiles, and there abode a long time with the church, 27, 28.

Verse 1. In Iconium] See the conclusion of the preceding chapter.

So spake] Και λαλησαι ουτως, with such power and demonstration of the Spirit, that a great multitude both of the Jews, genuine descendants of one or other of the twelve tribes, and also of the Greeks Ελληνων, probably such as were proselytes of the gate, believed, received the Christian religion as a revelation from God, and confided in its Author for salvation, according to the apostle's preaching.

Verse 2. Stirred up the Gentiles] Των εθνων, such as were mere heathens, and thus distinguished from the Jews, and the Greeks, who were proselytes.

Evil affected] Εκακωσαν, irritated or exasperated their minds against the brethren, the disciples of Christ: one of their appellations before they were called Christians at Antioch. See on chap. xi. 26.

Verse 3. Long time therefore abode they] Because they had great success, therefore they continued a long time, gaining many converts, and building up those who had believed, in their most holy faith; notwithstanding the opposition they met with, both from the unbelieving Jews and heathens.

Speaking boldly] Παρρησιαζομενοι, having great liberty of speech, a copious and commanding eloquence, springing from a consciousness of the truth which they preached.

The word of his grace] The gospel of Jesus Christ, which is the doctrine of God's grace, mercy or favour to mankind.

And granted signs and wonders to be done] For no apostle could work a miracle by himself; nor was any sign or wonder wrought even by the greatest apostle, but by an especial grant or dispensation of God. This power was not resident in them at all times; it was only now and then communicated, when a miracle was necessary for the confirmation of the truth preached.

Verse 4. The multitude of the city was divided] The Jews treated the apostles as false teachers, and their miracles as impositions, and many of the people held with them; while the others who had not hardened their hearts against the truth, felt the force of it; and being without prejudice, could easily discern the miracles to be the work of God, and therefore held with the apostles.

Verse 5. An assault made] Ορμη, a desperate attempt was made by their rulers, i. e. by the heathen rulers of the people; and the rulers of the synagogue.

A.M.cir.4050. A. D. cir. 46. An. Olymp. cir. CCVI. 2.

rulers, [a] to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

6 They were ware of it, and [b] fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the gospel.

8 ¶ [c] And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9 The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and [d] perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, [e] Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying, in the speech of Lycaonia, [f] The gods are come

To use them despitefully] To expose them, bring them into contempt, and make them appear as monsters, or movers of sedition; and then to stone them for this falsely alleged crime.

Verse 6. They were ware of it] They were informed of the scheme, and of the attempt that was about to be made, and fled unto Lystra and Derbe; they did not leave the province of Lycaonia; but went to other towns and cities. Lystra lay to the south and Derbe to the north of Iconium, according to the general opinion. Strabo, Geogr. lib. xii. tells us expressly, that Iconium was within Lycaonia, Thence are the Lycaonian hills, plain, cold, naked, and pastures for wild asses.—About these places stands Iconium, a town built in a better soil. Ptolemy also, Tab. Asiæ, i. cap. 6. places Iconium in Lycaonia: how comes it then, that St. Luke does not call Iconium a city of Lycaonia, as well as Derbe and Lystra? Pliny, Hist. Nat. lib. v. cap. 27. solves this difficulty, by stating that, There was granted a tetrarchy out of Lycaonia, on that side which borders upon Galatia, consisting of fourteen cities; the most famous of which is Iconium. See Lightfoot.

Verse 7. And there they preached the gospel.] Wherever they went they were always employed in their Master's work. Some MSS. of considerable note, add here, and all the people were moved at their preaching, but Paul and Barnabas tarried at Lystra.

Verse 8. Impotent in his feet] Αδυνατος τοις ποσιν, he had no muscular power, and probably his ancle-bones were dislocated; or he had what is commonly termed club feet; this is the more likely; as he is said to have been lame from his mother's womb, and to have never walked.

Verse 9. That he had faith to be healed] How did this faith come to this poor heathen? Why, by hearing the word of God preached; for it is said, the same heard Paul speak. And it appears that he credited the doctrine he heard, and believed that Jesus could, if he would,, make him whole. Besides, he must have heard of the miracles which the apostles had wrought, see ver. 3. and this would raise his expectation of receiving a cure.

Verse 10. Said with a loud voice] After this clause the following is found in CD. and several others, either in the text or margin; σοι λεγω εν τω ονοματι του Κυριου Ιησου Χριστου, I say unto thee, In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, "stand upright on thy feet." This reading is also in several Versions; and though it may not stand on such evidence as to entitle it to a place in the text, yet it is not likely that St. Paul would not have used the sacred name on such an occasion; especially as this appears to have been the usual form. See chap. iii. 6.

He leaped and walked.] Giving the fullest proof of his restoration: his leaping, however, might have been through joy of having received his cure.

Verse 11. Saying, in the speech of Lycaonia] What this language was, has puzzled the learned not a little. Calmet thinks it was a corrupt Greek dialect; as Greek was the general language of Asia Minor. Mr. Paul Ernest Jablonski, who has written a dissertation expressly on the subject, thinks it was the same language with that of the Cappadocians, which was mingled with Syriac. That it was no dialect of the Greek, must be evident from the circumstance of its being here distinguished from it. We have sufficient proof from ancient authors that most of these provinces used different languages; and it is correctly remarked by Dr. Lightfoot, that the Carians who dwelt much nearer Greece than the Lycaonians, are called by Homer βαρβαροφωνοι, people of a barbarous or strange language: and Pausanias also called them Barbari. That the language of Pisidia was distinct from the Greek, we have already seen; note on chap. xiii. ver. 15. We have no light to determine this point; and every search after the language of Lycaonia must be, at this distance of time, fruitless.

The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.] From this, and from all heathen antiquity it is evident, 1. that the heathen did not consider the divine nature, how low soever they rated it, to be like the human nature. 2. That they imagined that these cœlestial beings often assumed human forms to visit men, in order to punish the evil, and reward the good. The Metamorphoses of Ovid are full of down to us [a] in the likeness of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

such visitations; and so are Homer, Virgil, and other poets. The angels visiting Abraham, Jacob, Lot, &c. might have been the foundation on which most of those heathen fictions were built.

The following passage in HOMER, will cast some light upon the point:

Και τε Θεοι ξεινοισιν εοικοτες αλλοδαποισι.
Παντοιοι τελεθοντες, επιστρωφωσι πολιας,
Ανθρωπων υβριν τε και ευνομιην εφορωντες.
Hom. Odyss. xvii. ver. 485.

For, in similitude of strangers oft,
The gods who can with ease all shapes assume,
Repair to populous cities, where they mark
Th' outrageous and the righteous deeds of men.
COWPER.

OVID had a similar notion, where he represents Jupiter coming down to visit the earth, which seems to be copied from Genesis, xviii. 20, 21. And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is grievous, I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me: and if not, I will know.

Contigerat nostras infamia temporis aures:
Quam cupiens falsam, summo delabor Olympo.
Et deus humanâ lustro sub imagine terras.
Longa mora est, quantum noxæ sit ubique repertum,
Enumerare: minor fuit ipsa infamia vero.
Metam. lib. i. ver. 211.

The clamours of this vile degen'rate age,
The cries of orphans, and the oppressor's rage,
Had reach'd the stars: 'I will descend,' said I,
In hope to prove this loud complaint a lie.
Disguised in human shape, I travelled round
The world, and more than what I heard, I found.
DRYDEN.

It was a settled belief among the Egyptians, that their gods sometimes in the likeness of men, and sometimes in that of animals which they held sacred, descended to the earth, and travelled through different provinces, to punish, reward, and protect. The Hindoo Avatars, or incarnations of their gods, prove how generally this opinion had prevailed. We need not wonder to find it in Lycaonia.

Verse 12. They called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul Mercurius] The heathens supposed that Jupiter and Mercury were the gods who most frequently assumed the human form; and Jupiter was accustomed to take Mercury with him on such expeditions. Jupiter was the supreme god of the heathens: and Mercury was by them considered the god of eloquence. And the ancient fable from which I have quoted so largely above, represents Jupiter and Mercury coming to this very region, where they were entertained by Lycaon, from whom the Lycaonians derived their name. See the whole fable in the first book of Ovid's Metamorphoses.

As the ancients usually represented Jupiter as rather an aged man, large, noble, and majestic; and Mercury young, light, and active: the conjecture of Chrysostom is very probable, that Barnabas was a large, noble, well made man; and probably in years; and St. Paul, young, active, and eloquent; on which account, they termed the former Jupiter; and the latter Mercury. That Mercury was eloquent and powerful in his words, is allowed by the heathens; and the very epithet that is applied here to Paul, ην ὁ ἡγουμενος του λογου, he was the chief or leader of the discourse, was applied to Mercury. So Jamblichus de Myster. Init. Θεος ὁ των λογων, ἡγεμων ὁ Ἑρμης. And Macrobius, Sat. i. 8. Scimus Mercurium vocis et sermonis potentem. We know that Mercury is powerful both in his voice and eloquence. With the Lycaonians, the actions of these apostles proved them to be gods: and the different parts they took, appeared to them to fix their characters so, that one was judged to be Jupiter, and the other Mercury.

Verse 13. Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city] There is a meaning here, which ordinary readers will not readily apprehend. Many cities were put under the protection of a particular deity; and the image of that deity placed at the entrance, to signify that he was the guardian and protector. To this St. Luke, every where as accurate as he is circumstantial, refers. Lystra, it appears, was under the guardianship of Jupiter Propuleius, Διος προπυλαιου, which St. Luke translates, του Διος του οντος προ της πολεως, the Jupiter, that was before the city, which is another term for Jupiter Custos, or Jupiter the guardian. All these deities, according to the attributes they sustained, had their peculiar priests, rites, and sacrifices: and each a peculiar service and priest for the office he bore; so that Jupiter Brontes, Jupiter the Thunderer, had a different service from Jupiter Custos, Jove the guardian. Hence we can see with what accuracy St. Luke wrote: the person who was going to offer them sacrifices was the priest of Jupiter Custos, under whose guardianship the city of Lystra was; and whom the priest supposed had visited the city in a human form; and Barnabas, probably for the reasons already assigned, he imagined, was the person; and as Mercury, the god of eloquence, was the general attendant of Jupiter, the people and the priest supposed that Paul who had a powerful commanding eloquence, was that God, also disguised. A beautiful figure of such an image of Jupiter, as, I suppose, stood before the gate of Lystra, still remains: and a fine engraving of it may be seen in Gruter's Inscriptions, Vol. I. p. xx. Jupiter is represented naked, sitting on a curule or consular chair; in his right hand he holds his thunder, and a long staff in his left: at his right stands the eagle prepared for flight; and above, the winged cap and caduceus of Mercury. On the base is the inscription IUPPITER CUSTOS DOMUS AUG. Jupiter, the guardian of the house of Augustus. As the preserver or guardian of towns he was generally stiled Jupiter Custos, Serenus, and Servator. His name JUPITER, i. e. juvans pater, the helping father; entitled him, in those days of darkness, to general regard. On this false god, who long engrossed the worship of even the most enlightened nations on the earth, much may be seen in Lactantius, Divinar. Institution. lib. i. In the Antiquité expliquée of Montfaucon: and various inscriptions relative to his character as guardian, &c. may be seen in Gruter, as above.

Oxen and garlands] That is, oxen adorned with flowers, their horns gilded, and neck bound about with fillets, as was the custom in sacrificial rites. They also crowned the gods themselves, the priests, and gates of the temples with flowers. Of this method of adorning the victims there are numerous examples in the Greek and Latin writers. A few may suffice. Thus OVID.

Victima labe carens, et præstantissimâ formâ
Sistitur ante aras; et vittis præsignis et auro.
OVID. Met. lib. xv. ver. 130.

The fairest victim must the powers appease,

DRYDEN.

Huic Anius niveis circumdata tempora vittis

CALCOTT.

Ibid. lib. vii. ver. 427.

Rich curling fumes of incense feast the skies,
A hecatomb of voted victims dies,
With gilded horns, and garlands on their head,

TATE.

VIRGIL also refers to the same rites and circumstances:

Sæpe in honore deûm medio stans hostia ad aram,
Lanea dum niveâ circumdatur infula vittâ,
Inter cunctantes cecidit moribunda ministros.
VIRG. Geor. lib. iii. ver. 486.

The victim ox that was for altars prest,

Sunk of himself without the god's command,
Preventing the slow sacrificer's hand.
DRYDEN.

Many similar examples may be seen in Wetstein and others.

Verse 15. We also are men of like passions with you] This saying of the apostles, has been most strangely perverted. A pious commentator taking the word passion in its vulgar and most improper sense, (a bad temper, an evil propensity;) and supposing that these holy men wished to confess that they also had many sinful infirmities, and wrong tempers; endeavours to illustrate this sense of the word, by appealing to the contention of Paul and Barnabas, &c. &c. but the expression means no more than, "we are truly human beings, with the same powers and appetites as your own; need food and raiment as you do; and are all mortal like yourselves."

That ye should turn from these vanities] That is, from these idols, and false gods. How often false gods and idolatry are termed vanity in the Scriptures, no careful reader of the Bible needs to be told. What a bold saying was this in the presence of a heathen mob, intent on performing an act of their superstitious worship, in which they no doubt thought, the safety of the state was concerned. The ancient fable related by Ovid, Metam. lib. i. ver. 211—239. to which reference has already been made, will cast some light on the conduct of the Lystrians in this case. The following is its substance: "Jupiter having been informed of the great degeneracy of mankind, was determined himself to survey the earth. Coming to this province (Lycaonia) disguised in human shape, he took up his residence at the palace of Lycaon, then king of that country: giving a sign of his godhead, the people worship him: Lycaon sneers, doubts his divinity, and is determined to put it to the trial. Some ambassadors from the Molossian state, having just arrived, he slew one of them, boiled part of his flesh, and roasted the rest, and set it before Jupiter: the god indignant at the insult, burnt the palace, and turned the impious king into a wolf." From his time, or rather from this fable, the whole province was called Lycaonia. The simple people now seeing such proofs of supernatural power in the miracles wrought by Barnabas and Paul, thought that Jupiter had again visited them; and fearing lest they should meet with his indignation, should they neglect duly to honour him; they brought oxen and garlands, and would have offered them sacrifice, had they not been prevented by the apostles themselves. This circumstance will account for their whole conduct; and shews the reason why Jupiter was the tutelar god of the place. As therefore the people took them for gods, it was necessary for the apostles to shew that they were but men; and this is the whole that is meant by the ὁμοιοπαθεις ανθρωποι, men of like passions, fellow mortals, in the text, which has been so pitifully mistaken by some, and abused by others.

The living God] Widely different from those stocks and stones, which were objects of their worship.

Which made heaven and earth] And as all things were made by his power, so all subsist by his providence; and to him alone, all worship, honour, and glory are due.

Verse 16. Who in times past suffered all nations, &c.] The words, παντα τα εθνη, which we here translate, all nations, should be rendered, all the Gentiles, merely to distinguish them from the Jewish people, who having a revelation, were not left to walk in their own ways; but the heathens who had not a revelation, were suffered to form their creed, and mode of worship, according to their own caprice.

Verse 17. He left not himself without witness] Though he gave the Gentiles no revelation of his will, yet he continued to govern them by his gracious Providence; doing them good in general; giving them rain to fertilize their grounds; and fruitful seasons as the result; so that grass grew for the cattle, and corn for the service of man.

Filling our hearts with food] Giving as much food as could reasonably be wished, so that gladness, or general happiness was the result. Such was the gracious provision made for man at all times, that the œconomy and bounty of the Divine Being were equally evidenced by it. He never gives less than is necessary; nor more than is sufficient. His œconomy forbids men to waste; by giving them in general no profusion. His bounty forbids them to want by giving as much as is sufficient for all the natural wants of his creatures. By not giving too much, he prevents luxury, and riot: by giving enough, he prevents discontent and misery. Thus he does mankind good, by causing his rain to descend upon the just and the unjust: and his sun to shine upon the evil and the good. Thus he is said not to have left himself without witness: for his providential dealings are the witnesses of his being, his wisdom and his bounty: and thus, the invisible things of God, even his eternal power and Godhead, were clearly seen, being understood by the things which are made, Rom. i. 20. Therefore those who continued to worship stocks and stones, were without excuse. These were great and striking truths; and into what detail the apostles now went, we cannot say; but it is likely that they spoke much more than is here related; as the next verse states that, with all these sayings, they found it difficult to prevent the people from offering them sacrifice.

Verse 19. There came thither certain Jews from Antioch] Those were, do doubt, the same who had raised up persecution against Paul and Barnabas at Iconium and Antioch before: they followed the apostles with implacable malice; and what they could not do themselves, they endeavoured to do by others, whose minds they first perverted, and then irritated to deeds of fell purpose.

And having stoned Paul] Alas! of what real worth is popular fame! How uncertain, and how unworthy to be counted! These poor heathens acted just like the people of Malta, chap. xxviii. 4—6. When the viper fastened on the hand of Paul, they concluded he was a murderer: when they found it did him no damage, they changed their minds, and said he from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people; [a] and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 ¶ And when they had preached the gospel to that city, [b] and [c] had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch, was a GOD! When the Lacaonians saw the miracles that Paul did, they said he was the god Mercury: when the persecuting Jews came, they persuaded them that he was an impostor: and then they endeavoured to stone him to death!

Supposing he had been dead.] They did not leave stoning him, till they had the fullest evidence that he was dead: and so, most probably, he was.

Verse 20. The disciples stood round about him] No doubt in earnest prayer, entreating the author of life that his soul might again return to its battered tenement.

He rose up] Miraculously restored not only to life, but to perfect soundness: so that he was able to walk into the city, that his persecutors might see the mighty power of God in his restoration; and the faith of the young converts be confirmed in the truth and goodness of God. It is strange that neither the young converts at Lystra, nor Barnabas, were involved in this persecution! It seems to have had Paul alone, for its object; and when they thought they had dispatched him, they did not think of injuring the rest.

Verse 21. Preached the gospel to that city] Derbe, a city in the same province. See on ver. 6.

They returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium] Behold the courage of these Christian men! They counted not their lives dear to them, and returned to do their Master's work in the very places in which they had been so grievously persecuted; and, where one of them had been apparently stoned to death! The man who knows he is God's ambassador, and that his life depends on his fidelity to his Master, knows he has nothing but his God to fear.

Verse 22. Confirming the souls of the disciples] The word disciple signifies literally a scholar. The church of Christ was a school, in which Christ himself was chief master; and his apostles, subordinate teachers. All the converts were disciples or scholars, who came to this school to be instructed in the knowledge of themselves and of their GOD. Of their duty to Him; to the church; to society, and to themselves. After having been initiated in the principles of the heavenly doctrine; they needed line upon line, and precept upon precept, in order that they might be confirmed and established in the truth. Though it was a great and important thing to have their heads, their understanding properly informed; yet if the heart was not disciplined, information in the understanding would be of little avail; therefore they confirmed the SOULS of the disciples. As there must be some particular standard of truth, to which they might continually resort, that their faith might stand in the power of God, it was necessary that they should have such a system of doctrine as they knew came from God. These doctrines were those which contained all the essential principles of Christianity, and this was called THE FAITH: and as they must have sound principles, in order that they might have righteous practices; so it was necessary that they should continue in that faith, that it might produce that obedience, without which, even faith itself, however excellent, must be useless and dead.

Again, as the spirit of the world, would be ever opposed to the spirit of Christ, so they must make up their minds to expect persecution and tribulation in various forms; and therefore had need of confirmed souls, and strong faith, that when trials came, they might meet them with becoming fortitude; and stand unmoved in the cloudy and dark day. And as the mind must faint under trouble, that sees no prospect of its termination, and no conviction of its use; it was necessary that they should keep in view the kingdom of God, of which they were subjects; and to which, through their adoption into the heavenly family, they had a divine right. Hence from the apostles' teaching, they not only learned that they should meet with tribulation, much tribulation; yet for their encouragement, they were also informed, that these were the very means which God would use to bring them into his own kingdom: so that if they had tribulation in the way, they had a heaven of eternal glory as the end, to which they were continually to direct their wiews.

Verse 23. When they had ordained them elders] Elder seems to be here, the name of an office. These were all young or new converts, and yet among them, the apostles constitute elders. They appointed persons the most experienced, and the most advanced in the divine life, to watch over and instruct the rest. But what is the meaning of the word χειροτονησαντες, which we translate ordained? The word ordain we use in an ecclesiastical sense, and signify by it, the appointment of a person to an office in the church, by the imposition of the hands of those who are rulers in that church. But χειροτονια signifies the holding up, or stretching out the hand, as approving of the choice of any person to a particular work: whereas χειροθεσια signifies the imposition of hands. "Zonaras gives the proper meaning of the word in the text, in his Scholia upon the first canon of the apostles, Νυν μεν χειροτονια καλειται, κ. τ. λ. 'Nowadays, a course of prayers and invocation on the Holy Spirit, when one is initiated into the priesthood, and receives consecration, is called χειροτονια cheirotonia, so termed because the bishop extends his hand over him whom he blesses, when he is chosen into holy orders. Anciently, the choice or suffrage was called cheirotonia; for, when it was lawful for the multitude in their cities to choose their priests or bishops, they met together, and some chose one man, some another: but that it might appear whose suffrage won; they say the electors did use εκτεινειν τας χειρας, to stretch forth their hands, and by their hands so stretched forth, or up, they were numbered who chose the one, and who the other: and him who was elected by the most suffrages, they placed in the high priesthood. And from hence was the name Cheirotonia taken, which the fathers of the councils are found to have used, calling their suffrage cheirotonia.' St. Paul, 2 Cor. viii. 19. intimates that St. Luke was thus appointed to travel with him, χειροτονηθεις υπο των εκκλεσιων, who was chosen of the churches. Ignatius, in his epistle to the Philadelphians, uses the same term πρεπον εστιν υμιν ως εκκλησια Θεου χειροτονησαι επισκοπον, ye ought as a church of God, to chuse your bishop." Much more on this subject may be seen in Sir Norton Knatchbull, who contends that cheirotonia implies simply appointment, or election, but not what he calls, ordination by the imposition of hands. I believe the simple truth to be this, that in ancient times the people chose by the cheirotonia (lifting up of hands) their spiritual pastor; and the rulers of the church, whether apostles or others, appointed that person to his office, by the cheirothesia or imposition of hands: and perhaps each of these was thought to be equally necessary: the church agreeing in the election of the person; and the rulers of the church appointing by imposition of hands, the person thus elected. See the note on chap. vi. 6.

And had prayed with fasting] This was to implore God's special assistance; as they well knew, that without his influence, even their appointment, could avail nothing.

Commended them to the Lord] To his especial care and protection.

Verse 24. Passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.] See the note on chap. xiii. 13.

Verse 25. They went down into Attalia] This was a sea-port town in Pamphylia. Thus we find the apostles travelled from Derbe to Lystra; from Lystra to Iconium; from Iconium to Antioch of Pisidia; from Antioch to Perga in Pamphylia; and from Perga to Attalia; and it appears that they travelled over three provinces of Asia Minor, Pamphylia, Lycaonia, and Pisidia. See Calmet and see the Map.

Verse 26. And thence sailed to Antioch] This was Antioch in Syria; and to reach which by sea, they were obliged to coast a part of the Mediterranean sea, steering between Cyprus and Cilicia; though they might have gone the whole journey by land.

Whence they had been recommended—for the work which they fulfilled.] The Reader will recollect, that it was from this Antioch they had been sent to preach the gospel to the heathen in Asia Minor, see chap. xiii. 1, 2. And that they fulfilled that work; see in the same chapter, ver. 48. and the circumstantial account of their travels and preaching given in this chapter.

Verse 27. Had gathered the church together] The church by which they had been sent on this very important and successful mission.

They rehearsed all that God had done with them] Not what they had done themselves; but what God made them the instruments of working.

And how he had opened the door of faith] How God by his providence and grace had made a way for preaching Christ crucified among the heathen: and how the heathen had received that gospel, which through faith in Christ Jesus, was able to save their souls.

Verse 28. And there they abode long time] How long the apostles tarried here, we cannot tell; but we hear no more of them till the council of Jerusalem, mentioned in the following chapter; which is generally supposed to have been held in the year 51 of our Lord; and if the transactions of this chapter took place in A. D. 46. as chronologers think, then there are five whole years of St Paul's ministry, and that of other apostles, which St. Luke passes by in perfect silence. It is very likely that all this time Paul and Barnabas were employed in extending the work of God through the different provinces contiguous to Antioch: for St. Paul himself tells us, that he preached the gospel so far as Illyria, Rom. xv. 19. on the side of the Adriatic gulph: see its situation on the Map. Many of the tribulations and perils through which the apostle Paul passed are not mentioned by St. Luke, particularly those of which he himself speaks, 2 Cor. xi. 23—27. He had been five times scourged by the Jews; thrice beaten by the Romans; thrice shipwrecked; a whole night and day in the deep, probably saving his life upon a plank; besides frequent journeyings, and perils from his countrymen, from the heathen, from robbers, in the city, in the wilderness, in the sea, among false brethren, &c. &c. Of none of these have we any circumstantial account. Probably most of these happened in the five years which elapsed between the apostles' return to Antioch, and the council of Jerusalem.

1. In reading the Acts of the Apostles we may have often occasion to remark that in preaching the gospel, they carefully considered the different circumstances of the Jews and the Gentiles; and suited their address accordingly. When speaking to the former, of the necessity of crediting the gospel, because, without it they could not be saved, they took care to support all their assertions by passages drawn from the LAW and the PROPHETS; as every Jew considered those books to be of divine authority; and from their decision, there was no appeal. But, in addressing the Gentiles who had no revelation, they drew the proofs of their doctrine from the visible creation; and demonstrated by plain reasoning, the absurdity of their idolatrous worship, and called them off from those vanities to the worship of the living and true God, who made and governs all things, and who gave them such proofs of his being, wisdom, and goodness in the provision made for their comfort and support, that they had only to reflect on the subject, in order to be convinced of its truth. And while, in consequence, they saw the absurdity of their own system, they would at once discover the reasonableness of that religion which was now offered to them in the name and on the authority of that God who had fed and preserved them all their life long; and girded them when they knew him not. The Gentiles felt the force of these reasonings, yielded to the truth, and became steady followers of Christ crucified; while the Jews, with all their light and advantages, hardened their hearts against it, though they had no other arguments than what contradiction and blasphemy could provide! Publicans and harlots entered into the kingdom of heaven before them. Do not many even in the present day, copy their example, revile the truth, take up with the shadow instead of the substance; and rest just as much in the letter of Christianity, as ever the Jews did in the letter of the law? This is a deplorable fact which cannot be successfully controverted.

2. We have already had occasion to note, five years of a chasm in the apostolic history. God himself does not chuse to have all the labours and sufferings of his servants recorded. Their recompence is in heaven; and it is enough that God knows their work, who alone can reward it. And yet, every faithful servant of God will feel that the reward is all of grace and not of debt; for the amount of their good, is just the sum of what God has condescended to do by them. How studious are men to record the smallest transactions of their lives, while much of the life and labours of Jesus Christ and his apostles are written in the sand, and no longer legible to man: or written before the throne where they are seen only by God and his angels. In many cases, the silence of Scripture is not less instructive than its most pointed communications.

3. We cannot consider the effect produced on the minds of the people of Lystra, without being surprised that a single miracle, wrought instrumentally by men, should excite so much attention and reverence; and that we should be unmoved by the myriads wrought by the immediate hand of God.

4. How difficult it is to get men brought to worship God, though they have the highest reasons and the most powerful motives for it; and yet, how ready are they to offer an incense to man, that is due only to God himself! We applaud the apostles for rejecting with horror the sacrifices offered to them: common sense must have taught them this lesson, even independently of their piety. Let us beware, that we take not that praise to ourselves which belongs to our Maker. Gross flattery is generally rejected, because a man cannot receive it without being rendered ridiculous: but who rejects even inordinate praise, if it be delicately and artfully prepared!

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. Except ye be circumcised, &c.] The persons who taught this doctrine, appear to have been converts to Christianity; but, supposing that the Christian religion was intended to perfect the Mosaic, and not to supersede it; they insisted on the necessity of circumcision, because by that, a man was made debtor to the whole law, to observe all its rites and ceremonies. This question produced great disturbance in the apostolic church: and notwithstanding the decree mentioned in this chapter, the apostles were frequently obliged to interpose their authority in order to settle it: and we find a whole church, that at Galatia, drawn aside from the simplicity of the Christian faith, by the subtilty of Judaizing teachers among themselves: who insisted on the necessity of the converted Gentiles being circumcised.

Ye cannot be saved.] Ye can neither enjoy God's blessing in time, nor his glory in eternity. Such an assertion as this, from any reputable authority, must necessarily shake the confidence of young converts.

Verse 2. No small dissension and disputation] Paul and Barnabas were fully satisfied that God did not design to bring the converted Gentiles under the yoke of circumcision: they knew that Jesus Christ was the end of the law for righteousness (justification) to every one that believed; and therefore they opposed the Judaizing teachers. This was one of the first controversies in the Christian church; but though the difference of sentiment was considerable, it led to no breach of Christian charity nor fellowship among themselves.

They determined that Paul, &c.] This verse is read very differently in the Codex Bezæ; Γενομενος δε εκτασεως και ζητησεως ουκ ολιγης τω Παυλω και Βαρναβα συν αυτοις. ελεγεν γαρ ὁ Παυλος μενειν ουτως καθως επιστευσαν, διϊσχυριζομενος: ὁι δε εληλυθοτες απο Ιερουσαλημ, παρηγγειλαν αυτοις, τω Παυλω και Βαρναβα, και τισιν αλλοις, αναβαινειν προς τους Αποστολους και Πρεσβυτερους εις Ιερουσαλημ, οπως κριθωσιν επ' αυτοις (αυτων) περι του ζητηματος τουτου. But when Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them, Paul said, with strong assurance, that they should remain so as they had believed. But those who came from Jerusalem, charged Paul and Barnabas and certain others to go up to the apostles and elders to Jerusalem, that a determination might be made by them concerning this question.

And certain other of them] If this be the journey to which St. Paul alludes, Gal. ii. 1—5. then, he had Titus with him; and how many others went from the church of Antioch, we cannot tell. This journey was 14 years after Paul's conversion, and was undertaken by express revelation as he informs us, Gal. ii. 2. which revelation appears to have apostles and elders about this question.

3 And [a] being brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phœnice and Samaria, [b] declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders; and [c] they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 ¶ But there [d] rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed saying, [e] That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

been given to certain persons in the church of Antioch, as we learn from this verse; and not to Paul and Barnabas themselves.

Verse 3. Being brought on their way by the church] That is, the members of the church provided them with all necessaries for their journey; for it does not appear that they had any property of their own.

Declaring the conversion of the Gentiles] Much stress is laid on this: it was a miracle of God's mercy that the Gentiles should be received into the church of God: and they had now the fullest proof that the thing was likely to become general, by the conversion of Cornelius; the conversion of the people of Antioch, of Cyprus, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Lycaonia, &c. &c.

Verse 4. They were received of the church] The whole body of Christian believers.

The apostles] Either the whole or part of the twelve; though we read of none but John, Peter, and James. See Gal. ii. 9.

And Elders] Those who were officers in the church, under the apostles.

They declared] To this council they gave a succinct account of the great work, which God had wrought by them among the Gentiles. This was St. Paul's third journey to Jerusalem after his conversion. See an account of his first journey, chap. ix. 26. and of his second in chap. xi. 30.

Verse 5. But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees] This verse appears to be part of the declaration made by Paul and Barnabas to this council: for, having stated how God blessed their ministry among the Gentiles; they proceed to declare how all the good work was likely to be destroyed by certain Pharisees, who having received the Christian faith, came down to Antioch, and began to teach the necessity of circumcision, &c. and thus filled the minds of the young converted Gentiles with doubtful disputations. See the Margin.

Verse 6. The apostles and elders came together] This was the first council ever held in the Christian church; and we find that it was composed of the apostles and elders simply.

Verse 7. When there had been much disputing] By those of the sect of the believing Pharisees; for they strongly contended for circumcision; and at the head of these, tradition tells us, was Cerinthus, a name famous in the primitive church, as one who laboured to unite the law and the gospel; and to make the salvation promised by the latter, dependent on the performance of the rites and ceremonies prescribed by the former. Though the apostles and elders were under the inspiration of the Almighty, and could by this inspiration have immediately determined the question; yet it was highly necessary that the objecting party should be permitted to come forward, and allege their reasons for the doctrines they preached; and that these reasons should be fairly met by argument; and the thing proved to be useless in itself, inexpedient in the present case, and unsupported by any express authority from God; and serving no purpose to the Gentiles, who in their uncircumcised state, by believing in Christ Jesus, had been made partakers of the Holy Ghost.

Peter rose up, and said] This was after the matters in dispute had been fully debated; and now the apostles, like judges, after hearing council on both sides, proceed to give judgment on the case.

A good while ago] Αφ' ημερων αρχαιων, from the days of old: a phrase which simply signifies some years ago; and if he here refers to the conversion of Cornelius, (see chap. x.) he must mean about ten years before this time; but it is more likely that he refers to that time when Christ gave him the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that he might open the door of faith to the Gentiles.

God made choice among us] That is, he chose me to be the first apostle of the Gentiles.

8 And God, [a] which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, [b] giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

Verse 8. And God which knoweth the hearts.] Ὁ καρδιογνώστης Θεός. We had this epithet of the Divine Being once before, see chap. i. 24. and the note there: it occurs no where else in the New Testament.

Bare them witness] Considered them as proper or fit to receive the gospel of Christ. It is properly remarked by learned men, that μαρτυρειν τινι, to bear witness to any person, signifies to approve, to testify in behalf of. Here it signifies, that as God evidently sent the gospel to the Gentiles, and, by the preaching of it, conveyed the Holy Spirit to them who believed; and as he can make no improper judgment of any, who knows all hearts and their secrets; therefore what he had done was right: he saw that it was time for them to receive the gospel; and he saw that they might be safely trusted with this heavenly deposit; and the experience of eighteen hundred years has justified the conduct of God.

Verse 9. Put no difference between us and them] Giving them the Holy Spirit, though uncircumcised; just as he had given it to us who were circumcised: an evident proof, that, in the judgment of God, circumcision was no preparation to receive the gospel of Christ. And as the purification of the heart by the Holy Spirit was the grand object of the religion of God; and that alone by which the soul could be prepared for a blessed immortality; and the Gentiles had received that without circumcision, consequently, the shadow could not be considered of any worth, now the substance was communicated.

Verse 10. Now therefore why tempt ye God] As God, by giving the Holy Spirit to the Gentiles, evidently shews he does not design them to be circumcised, in order to become debtors to the law, to fulfil all its precepts, &c. why will ye provoke him to displeasure, by doing what he evidently designs shall not be done.

A yoke—which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?] This does not refer to the moral law; that was of eternal obligation: but to the ritual law, which, through the multitude of its sacrifices, ordinances, &c. was exceedingly burthensome to the Jewish people. And had not God, by an especial providence, rendered both their fields and their flocks very fruitful, they could not possibly have borne so painful a ritual.

There is a curious story in Midrash Shochar, tof in Yalkut Simeoni, part i. fol. 229. where Korah is represented as shewing the oppressive nature of the law, and avarice of its priests, in justification of his rebellion. "There was," said he, "a widow in our neighbourhood who had two orphan children: she had one field; and, when she began to plough it, one came and said, Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together. When she went to sow it, he said, Thou shalt not sow thy field with divers seeds. When she began to reap, and to gather the sheaves together, he said, Leave a handful and the corners of the field for the poor. When she prepared to thresh it, he said, Give me the wave-offering, and the first and second tythes. She did as she was commanded, and then went and sold her field, and bought two ewes; that she might clothe herself and family with the wool, and get profit by the lambs. When they brought forth their lambs, Aaron came and said, Give me the firstlings, for the holy blessed God hath said, All the first born, whatsoever openeth the womb, shall be thine. She yielded to his demands, and gave him two lambs. When shearing time came, he said, Give me the first fruits of the wool. When the widow had done this, she said, I cannot stand before this man; I will kill my sheep and eat them. When she had killed the sheep, Aaron came and said, Give me the shoulder, and the jaws and the ventricle. The widow said, Though I have killed my sheep, I am not delivered from this man; I therefore consecrate the whole to God. Then Aaron said, ALL belongs to me, for the holy blessed God hath said, Every thing that is consecrated in Israel shall be his, i. e. the priest's. He therefore took the whole carcases, and marched off, leaving the widow and her orphan daughters overwhelmed with affliction." This is a terrible picture of the requisitions of the Mosaic ritual; and though exaggerated, it contains so many true features, that it may well be said, This is a yoke which neither we nor our fathers were able to bear. See Schoettgen.

Verse 11. Through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved] This seems to be an answer to an objection, "Has not God designed to save us, the Jews, by an observance of the law; and them, the Gentiles, by the faith of the gospel?" No: for we Jews can be saved no other way than through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ: and this is the way in which the Gentiles in question have been saved. There is but one way of salvation for Jews and Gentiles, the grace, mercy, or favour coming by and through the Lord Jesus, the Christ: this is now fully opened to the Gentiles; and we believe we shall be saved in the same way.

Verse 12. All the multitude kept silence] The strong facts stated by St. Peter could not be controverted. His speech may be thus analyzed: 1. Circumcision is a sign of the purification of the heart. 2. That purification can only be effected by the Holy Ghost. 3. This Holy Spirit was hitherto supposed to be the portion of those only who had received circumcision. 4. But the Gentiles, who were never circumcised, nor kept any part of the law of Moses, have had their hearts purified by faith in Christ Jesus. 5. As God, therefore, has given them the thing signified, he evidently does not intend that the sign would be administered. 6. Should we impose this burthensome rite, we should most evidently be provoking God, who plainly shews us that he intends no more to save in this way. 7. Therefore it is evident, that both Jews and Gentiles are to be saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Gave audience to Barnabas and Paul] These apostles came forward next, to corroborate what Peter had said, by shewing the miracles and wonders which God had by them wrought among the Gentiles. Peter stated facts: Paul and Barnabas confirmed the statement.

Verse 13. James answered] He was evidently president of the council, and is generally called bishop of Jerusalem. The rest either argued on the subject, or gave their opinion; James alone pronounced the definitive sentence. Had Peter been prince and head of the apostles, and of the church; he would have appeared here in the character of judge, not of mere counsellor or disputant. The Popish writers say, that "James presided because the council was held in his own church." These men forget that there was not then what they term a church on the face of the earth. The church, or assembly of believers, then met in private houses; for there was no building for the exclusive purpose of Christian worship then, nor till long after. These writers also forget, that the Pope pretends to be the head of the catholic or universal church; and consequently, no man can preside where he is present, but himself. Peter did not preside here; and this was the first ecclesiastical council: and now, if ever, he should have assumed his character of prince and chief; but he did not; nor did any of the other apostles invite him to it, which they would have done, had they thought that Jesus Christ constituted him head of the church. From this very circumstance there is the most demonstrative evidence, that Peter was no Pope; and that the right of his pretended successor is a non-entity.

Verse 14. Simeon hath declared] It is remarkable that James does not give him even the title which he received from our Lord, at the time in which he is supposed to have been made head of the church, and vicar of Christ, upon earth: so that it is evident, James did not understand our Lord as giving Peter any such pre-eminence; and therefore, he does not even call him Peter, but simply Simeon. It is truly surprising that such a vast number of important pretensions, should rest on such slight foundations! If tradition, no matter how interrupted or precarious, did not lend its support, feeble as that necessarily must be; the cause tried by plain scripture would fall to the ground.

To take out of them a people for his name] To form among the Gentiles, as he had among the Jews, a people called by his name, and devoted to his honour.

Verse 15. And to this agree the words of the prophets] Peter had asserted the fact of the conversion of the Gentiles; and James shews that that fact was the fulfilment of declarations made by the prophets.

Verse 16. After this I will return, and will build again, &c.] These two verses, 16th and 17th, are quoted from Amos ix. 11, 12. nearly as they now stand in the best editions of the Septuagint; and evidently taken from that Version, which differs considerably from the Hebrew text. As St. James quoted them as a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles into the church of God, it is evident the Jews must have understood them in that sense; otherwise they would have immediately disputed his application of them to the subject in question; and have rejected his conclusion, by denying the premises. But that the words were thus understood by the ancient Jews, we have their own testimony. In Sanhedr. fol. 69. we have these remarkable words: "Rabbi Nachman said to Rabbi Isaac, 'Whence art thou taught when Bar Naphli will come?' He saith unto him, 'Who is this Bar Naphli?' The other replied, 'He is the Messiah.' 'Dost thou then call the Messiah, Bar Naphli?' 'Yes,' said he, 'for it is written, In that day I will build again the tabernacle of David, הנפלת HA-NOPHELETH, which is falling down." This is evidently a quotation from Amos ix. 11. and a proof that the Jews understood it to be a prophecy concerning the Messiah. See Lightfoot.

Verse 17. That the residue of men might seek] Instead of this, the Hebrew has that they may possess the remnant of Edom. Now it is evident, that in the copy from which the Seventy translated, they found ידרשו yidreshu, they might seek, instead of ירשו yireshu, they may possess, where the whole difference between the two words is the change of the י yod for a ד daleth, which might be easily done: and they found אדם adam, man, or men, instead of אדום Edom, the Idumeans, which differs from the other only by the insertion of ו vau between the two last letters. None of the MSS. collated by Kennicott and De Rossi confirm these readings, in which the Septuagint, Arabic, and St. James, agree. It shews, however, that even in Jerusalem, and in the early part of the apostolic age, the Septuagint Version was quoted in preference to the Hebrew text; or, what is tantamount, was quoted in cases where we would have thought the Hebrew text should have been preferred, because better understood. But God was evidently preparing the way of the gospel, by bringing this venerable Version into general credit and use; which was to be the means of conveying the truths of Christianity to the whole Gentile world. How precious should this august and most important Version be to every Christian, and especially to every Christian minister! A Version, without which, no man ever did or ever can critically understand the New Testament. And I may add, that without the assistance afforded by this Version, there never could have been a correct translation of the Hebrew text, since that language ceased to be vernacular, into any language. Without it, even St. Jerome could have done little in translating the Old testament into Latin: and how much all the modern versions owe to St. Jerome's Vulgate, which owes so much to the Septuagint, most biblical scholars know.

Verse 18. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning] As if he had said, this is not a new counsel of God: he had purposed, from the time he called the Israelites, to make the Gentiles partakers of the same grace and mercy; and ultimately to destroy those rites and ceremonies which separated them from each other. He therefore has sent the gospel of his Son, proclaiming equally peace to him that is afar off, the Gentiles, and to him that is nigh, the Jews.

The whole of this verse is very dubious: the principal part of it is omitted by the most ancient MSS. and Griesbach has left γνωστα απ' αιωνος doubtful, and has thrown εστι τω Θεω παντα τα εργα αυτου out of the text. Of the former clause, Professor White, in his Crisews, says, "forsitan delenda," "probably these words should be blotted out." And of the latter clause he says, "Certissime delenda," "most assuredly these should be blotted out." Supposing the whole to be genuine, critics have laboured to find out the sense. Some very learned men, and particularly Schleusner, contend that the word γνωστα, from γινωσκειν to know, should be understood here in the same sense in which ידע yadá is, in many parts of the old Testament, which not only signifies to know, but to approve, love, &c. They therefore would translate the passage thus: All the works of God are ever dear unto him. And if so, consequently we might naturally expect him to be merciful to the Gentiles, as well as to the Jews; and the evidence now afforded, of the conversion of the Gentiles, is an additional proof, that all God's works are equally dear to him.

Verse 19. Wherefore my sentence is] Διο εγω κρινω· Wherefore I judge. There is an authority here, that does not appear in the speech of St. Peter; and this authority was felt and bowed to by all the council; and the decree proposed by St. James adopted.

Verse 20. But that we write unto them] Four things are prohibited in this decree: 1. pollutions of idols; 2. fornication; 3. things strangled; 4. blood. By the first, POLLUTIONS of IDOLS, or, as it is in ver. 29. meats offered to idols, not only all idolatry was forbidden, but eating things offered in sacrifice to idols, knowing that they were thus offered; and joining with idolaters in their sacred feasts, which were always an incentive either to idolatry itself, or to the impure acts generally attendant on such festivals.

By the second, FORNICATION, all uncleanness of every kind was prohibited; for πορνεια not only means fornication, but adultery, incestuous mixtures; and especially the prostitution which was so common at the idol temples, viz. in Cyprus, at the worship of Venus; and the shocking disorders, exhibited in the Bacchanalia, Lupercalia, and several others.

By the third, THINGS STRANGLED, we are to understand the flesh of those animals which were strangled, for the purpose of keeping the blood in the body, as such animals were esteemed a greater delicacy.

By the fourth, BLOOD, we are to understand not only the thing itself, for the reasons which I have assigned in the note on Gen. ix. 4. and for others detailed at the end of this chapter; but also all cruelty, man-slaughter, murder, &c. as some of the ancient fathers have understood it.

Instead of του αιματος blood, some have conjectured that we should read χοιρειας swine's flesh; for they cannot see, first, that there can be any harm in eating of blood; and, secondly, that as the other three things neither have nor can have any moral evil in them; it would seem strange that they should be coupled with a thing, which, on all hands, is confessed to have much moral turpitude. Answers to such trifling objections will be found at the end of the chapter. It is only necessary to add, that this χοιρειας, which is the critical emendation of Dr. Bentley, is not supported by one MS. or Version in existence.

At the close of this verse, the Codex Bezæ, and several others, add a fifth thing, And not to do to others what they would not have done to themselves. Though this is a very ancient reading, it does not appear to be genuine.

Verse 21. Moses of old time hath in every city] The sense of this verse seems to be this: As it was necessary to write to the Gentiles what was strictly necessary to be observed by them, relative to these points, it was not so to the converted Jews; for they had Moses, that is, the Law, preached to them, κατα πολιν in the city, that is, Antioch; and by the reading of the law in the synagogues, every sabbath-day, they were kept in remembrance of those institutions, which the Gentiles, who had not the law, could not know. Therefore, James thought that a letter to the converted Gentiles would be sufficient, as the converted Jews had already ample instruction on these points.

Verse 22. Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church] James determined what ought to be done; and the whole assembly resolved how that should be done.

Chosen men of their own company] Paul and Barnabas were to return; they could have witnessed to the church at Antioch, what was done at the council at Jerusalem: but as it was possible that their testimony might be suspected, from the part they had already taken in this question at Antioch, it was necessary that a deputation from the council should accompany them. Accordingly, Judas and Silas are sent to corroborate by their oral testimony what was contained in the letters sent from the council.

Verse 23. Send greeting unto the brethren—of the Gentiles] There was no occasion to send such a letter to the brethren which were of the Jews, because that law which had been so long read in their synagogues, taught them all those things; and therefore the epistle is sent exclusively to the Gentiles. The word greeting is in the original χαιρειν to be well, to be safe; a very usual form in Greek epistles, the word ευχομαι being understood, I wish thee to be well.

Verse 24. Certain which went out from us] So, the persons who produced these doubtful disputations at Antioch, &c. had gone out from the apostles at Jerusalem, and were of that church: persons zealous for the law, and yet, strange to tell, so conscientiously attached to the gospel, that they risked their personal safety by professing it.

29 [c] That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and [d] from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

To whom we gave no such commandment] As, therefore, they went out from that church, they should have taught nothing which was not owned and taught by it; much less should they have taught in opposition to it.

Verse 26. Men that have hazarded their lives] This was a high character of Paul and Barnabas; they had already suffered much in the cause of Christ, and exposed their lives to the most imminent danger, and were intent on the same work, notwithstanding the increasing dangers in the way.

Verse 27. Judas and Silas—shall—tell you the same things] These were proofs that the testimony of Paul and Barnabas was true; and that the letter was not forged, as they could witness the same things which the letter contained.

Verse 28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us] The whole council had met under his direction; had consulted under his influence; and gave forth their decree from his especial inspiration.

Necessary things] They were necessary, howsoever burthensome they might appear; and necessary, not only for the time, place, or occasion; but for all times, all places, and all occasions. See this proved in the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 29. Ye shall do well.] But if they did not keep themselves from these things, they would do ill; that is, they would sin against God, whose Spirit had commanded them to keep from these things. And who can do any of these forbidden things, and keep either a guiltless or a tender conscience?

Fare—well] An old English form of expressing good wishes and good will. It is compounded of ꝑaꝑan, to go, and pæl, much, well, very much. Go well, go prosperously, tantamount with good speed; may you succeed well! may God direct you! like to that other form of sound words, God be with you! corrupted now into good bye to ye! And of the same meaning with adieu! à Dieu, to God; that is, I commend you to God. All these terms savour not only of good will, or benevolence, but also of piety. Our pious ancestors believed that nothing was safe, nothing protected, nothing prosperous, over which the shield of God was not extended; and therefore in their familiar good wishes, they gave each other to God. The Greek word ερρῶσθε errhosthè, here used, from ῥωννυμι to strengthen, make strong, has nearly the same signification: be strong, courageous, active, be in health, and be prosperous. What a pity that such benevolent and pious wishes should degenerate into cool formalities, or unmeaning compliments.

Verse 31. They rejoiced for the consolation.] It was not a matter of small moment, to have a question on which such stress was laid, decided by an apostolic council, over which the Spirit of God presided.

Verse 32. Judas and Silas, being prophets] That is, being teachers in the church. This signification of the word prophet, we have often already seen. See the notes on chap. xi. 27. and xiii. 1.

Exhorted the brethren] To abide steadily attached to God, and to each other, in peace, love, and unity.

And confirmed them.] In the blessed truths they had already received.

Verse 33. They were let go] That is, both had liberty to depart; but Silas chose to stay a little longer with the brethren.

some of the Fathers. It does not appear to have been originally in the text.

Verse 36. Let us go—and visit our brethren in every city] This heavenly man projected a journey to Cyprus, Pamphylia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Salamis, Paphos, Perga, Iconium, Lystra, Derbe, Antioch in Pisidia, and elsewhere; for in all these places he had preached and founded churches in the preceding year. He saw it was necessary to water the seed he had planted; for these were young converts, surrounded with impiety, opposition, and superstition, and had few advantages among themselves.

Verse 37. Barnabas determined to take with them John] John Mark was his sister's son; and natural affection might have led him to the partiality here mentioned.

Verse 38. But Paul thought not good to take him with them] On this subject, see the note on chap. xiii. 13.

Verse 39. The contention was so sharp between them] For all this sentence, there is only in the Greek text εγενετο ουν παροξυσμος; there was therefore a paroxysm, an incitement, a stirring up, from παροξυνω, compounded of παρα intensive, and οξυνω to whet, or sharpen: there was a sharp contention. But does this imply anger or ill-will on either side? Certainly not. Here, these two apostles differed, and were strenuous, each in support of the part he had adopted. "Paul," as an ancient Greek commentator has it, "being influenced only with the love of righteousness; Barnabas being actuated by love to his relative." John Mark had been tried in trying circumstances, and he failed: Paul therefore would not trust him again. The affection of Barnabas led him to hope the best, and was therefore desirous to give him another trial. Barnabas would not give up: Paul would not agree. They therefore agreed to depart from each other, and take different parts of the work: each had an attendant and companion at hand; so Barnabas took John Mark, and sailed to Cyprus: Paul took Silas, and went into Syria. John Mark proved faithful to his uncle Barnabas; and Silas proved faithful to his master Paul. To all human appearance it was best that they separated; as the churches were more speedily visited, and the work of God more widely and more rapidly spread. And why is it that most men attach blame to this difference between Paul and Barnabas? And why is it that this is brought in, as a proof of the sinful imperfection of these holy apostles? Because those who thus treat the subject, can never differ with another without feeling wrong tempers; and then, as destitute of good breeding as they are of humility, they attribute to others, the angry, proud, and wrathful dispositions which they feel in themselves: and because they cannot be angry and sin not, they suppose that even apostles themselves cannot. Thus, in fact, we are always bringing our own moral or immoral qualifications to be a standard, by which we are to judge of the characters and moral feelings of men who were actuated by zeal for God's glory, brotherly kindness, and charity. Should any man say, there was sin in this contention between Paul and Barnabas: I answer, there is no evidence of this in the text. Should he say, the word παροξυσμος paroxysm denotes this: I answer, it does not. And the verb παροξυνομαι is often used in a good sense. So Isocrates ad Demosth. cap. xx. μαλιστα δ' αν παροξυνθειης ορεχθηναι των καλων εργων "But thou wilt be the more stirred up to the love of good works." And such persons forget that this is the very form used by the apostle himself, Heb. x. 24. και κατανοωμεν αλληλους εις παροξυσμον αγαπης και καλων εργων· which these objectors would be highly displeased with me, were I to translate, Let us consider one another to an angry contention of love and good works. From these examples it appears, that the word is used to signify incitement of any kind; and if taken in a medical sense, to express the burning fit of an ague: it is also taken to express a strong excitement to the love of God and man, and to the fruits by which such love can be best proved; and in the case before us, there was certainly nothing contrary to this pure principle in either of those heavenly men. See also Kypke on Heb. x. 24.

Verse 40. Being recommended—unto the grace of God.] Much stress has been laid upon this, to shew that Barnabas was in the wrong, and Paul in the right, because "the brethren recommend Paul and Silas to the grace of God; but they did not recommend Barnabas and John Mark: this proves that the church condemned the conduct of Barnabas, but approved that of Paul." Now, there is no proof that the church did not recommend Barnabas to the grace of God, as well as Paul; but as St. Luke had for the present dropped the story of Barnabas, and was now going on with that of Paul and Silas, he begins it at this point, viz. his being recommended by the brethren to the grace of God; and then goes on to tell of his progress in Syria, Derbe, Lystra, &c. &c. See the next chapter. And with this verse should the following chapter begin; and this is the division followed by the most correct copies of the Greek text.

Verse 41. Confirming the churches.] This was the object of his journey: they were young converts, and had need of establishment; and there is no doubt that by shewing them the decision made at the late council of Jerusalem, their faith was greatly strengthened, their hope confirmed, and their love increased. It was this consideration, no doubt, that led some ancient MSS. and some Versions, to add here, They delivered them the decrees of the apostles and elders to keep; which clause certainly was not an original part of the text, but seems to have been borrowed from the fourth verse of the following chapter. Some have thought that the fourth and fifth verses of the next chapter really belong to this place; or that the first, second, and third verses of it should he read in a parenthesis: but of this, there does not appear to be any particular necessity.

On the precept concerning blood, I have referred not only to my note on Gen. ix. 4. but also to additional observations at the end of this chapter: for these observations, I am indebted to an excellent work of Dr. Delaney, entitled Revelation examined with Candour; a work of uncommon merit, and too little known. It is in three small volumes 8vo. and comprises a number of dissertations on the most important facts and histories in the sacred writings; and especially those which have been cavilled at by Deists and freethinkers of every description. In every case he is master of his subject; and in every instance, his pretended Anakim opponents are grasshoppers in his hands.

"As to the precept before us, of not eating the blood with the flesh of the creatures, it is evident that, besides the reason expressly assigned by God himself for this prohibition, there are also several others (very wise and very important) why it should be made.

"In the first place then, let me ask any man, that is capable of rational reflection, Whether he imagines it would be hard or unreasonable in Almighty God, when he granted man a right to take away the lives of other creatures for food; to make such a reserve in that grant, as might be a perpetual monition to mankind, that God was the author and giver of life? It is certain such a monition could have no ill effect; and might, at the same time, be of infinite advantage, in keeping up a constant sense of dependance upon God, and gratitude to him, in the minds of his creatures. And what could answer these ends better, than reserving the blood for sacred use? and assigning that very reason, because it was the life; as a natural and necessary monition to mankind, that God was the author and giver of life.

"When God gave man the fruits of the earth for food, yet he gave them with an exception to the fruit of the tree of knowledge; and in the same analogy, when he gives him the flesh of the creatures for food, he gives it with an exception to the blood. Unlimited grants would but inflame our vanity, and blot out that sense of dependance upon the Divine Being, which is equally necessary to our humility and our happiness.

"Again: if God foresaw that an unlimited grant would be the cause of much unnecessary cruelty to the creatures; that surely was a sufficient reason with infinite goodness, why a limitation should be made. Now, if we find such cruelties wantonly exercised, where such limitations are not known, or not regarded, then surely we must conclude, that the limitation was merciful, and wise, and well appointed. Plutarch tells us, that it was customary in his time, to run red hot spits through the bodies of live swine; and to stamp upon the udders of sows ready to farrow; to make their flesh more delicious. And, I believe, Christians have heard of whipping pigs, and torturing other creatures to death, for the same reasons. Could these cruelties be committed, if such men thought themselves bound in conscience to abstain from all unnecessary cruelty to the creatures? and to blood them to death, with all the dispatch they could, before they touched them for food.

"But this is not all; cruelties are congenial; and rise by an easy gradation, from being practised upon brutes, to be exerted even against men. Thus it is notorious, that the Scythians, from drinking the blood of their cattle, proceeded to drink the blood of their enemies, (as Herodotus assures us they did;) and certainly the most natural means of guarding mankind against such cruelties, was to guard them against the least approaches to it; by obliging them to abstain religiously from blood, and all unnecessary cruelty to the brute creation. And if evil foreseen to the brute creation from eating their blood, was a wise reason why such food should be prohibited to men; evil foreseen to man himself, from such an allowance, will, I believe, be owned a very good additional reason for such a prohibition; and will any man say, that the Scythian cruelty now mentioned, is no evil?

"Again: All animals that feed upon blood are observed to be much more furious than others. Will any man say, that much of their fury is not owing to their food? Have not creatures of the same kind been found to differ greatly in their tempers, from the difference of their diet? I believe it will be allowed, that blood is a very hot inflaming food. Even flesh is an inflaming fastidious diet, inspiring pride and insolence: and therefore with infinite wisdom was murder so solemnly and immediately prohibited by God, upon the permission of animal food to mankind.

"Bull's blood was a common poison with the ancients: can we imagine there was any peculiar malignity in the blood of that creature, above any other? Or may we not rather imagine, that the malignity is now only abated by the mixtures commonly conveyed into the stomach with it? It is doubtless matter of much consolation to be assured, that the poison of our luxury is well qualified.

"We of these nations, who are wont to feed largely upon flesh, are observed to be remarkably subject to evil, scorbutic habits: and if physicians are right in ascribing these evils to our food, I believe it can scarcely be denied that the grosser, less digested juices of that food, contribute much more towards them, than those juices which are purer, and more digested; and therefore blood, as the grossest of all animal juices, must of necessity do most mischief. And as grosser, less digested juices are less salutary, they must for that very reason be less elegant, and less pleasing to an untainted palate: and whereas it is found by experience, that bathing and cleanliness are a great relief from scorbutic infections, there is no doubt that this was the very reason why God prescribed washing the cloaths, and bathing in water, as the constant penalties of eating flesh with the blood in it.

"And as all flesh which hath the blood drained from it, is more salutary, and will keep better, and will consequently be more useful; it is evident, that the ends of life and health will be better answered by draining away the blood, with all the care we can, from all the flesh we eat; but then it must be owned, that the purposes of luxury, as well as cruelty, will be far better served by the contrary practice.

"And forasmuch as the τὸ πνικτὸν χρέας (suffocated or strangled flesh) was in high esteem in point of deliciousness with all the ancients, and is so still with the present patrons of luxury; it is evident that the apostles, in enjoining abstinence from blood and things strangled, did so far prohibit luxury and intemperance, as well as cruelty.

"Besides this, where the ends of luxury cannot be served by blooding, the temptations to cruelty are cut off: and in this is manifested the wisdom of God, in prescribing such a death to the creatures, as would most effectually prevent all temptations to cruelty. And God's intention in this matter once known, is an effectual prohibition of all unnecessary cruelty in killing the creatures, to all that fear him; though neither this, nor any thing else, can absolutely correct the evil dispositions of men, or put cruelty out of their power.

"Farther yet: Maimonides assures us, that the eating of blood gave occasion to one kind of early idolatry among the Zabii in the East; the worship of dæmons, whose food, as they imagined, was blood; and therefore they who adored them, had communion with them, by eating the same food. And it is remarkable, that though they did eat blood in honour of their dæmons, yet even they thought it foul and detestable food. And it is certain that Arnobius upbraids the heathen with tearing and devouring goats alive, in honour of Bacchus, in that affected fury, to which they wrought themselves up, in the celebration of his mad and monstrous rites.

"Now, if God had not foreseen these cruelties, corruptions, and inconveniences, consequent to the eating of blood, should we justly deem him infinitely wise? And if foreseeing them, he had not yet prohibited them in their cause, (which was at once the wisest and the most effectual prohibition), could we justly deem him infinitely good and gracious to his creatures? When, therefore, we find him, infinitely wise in foreseeing, and infinitely good in forbidding, such abominable practices; do we yet hesitate to conclude such prohibitions, the effects of infinite wisdom and goodness?

"But here it may be asked, if one main intention of Almighty God, in prohibiting blood and things strangled, was to restrain men from luxury, as well as cruelty, why did he not rather choose to prohibit luxury and cruelty in express terms?

"To this I answer, that prohibiting the means, was the sure way to prohibit the end. If God had only prohibited luxury and cruelty in general, every man's own temper, the custom of his country, his humanity or inhumanity, his temperance or gluttony, would have been the measures of that luxury and cruelty; and then, some would have been cruel as Cannibals, savage as Scythians, and luxurious as Sybarites, without imagining they were so: and others, as falsely and foolishly merciful and abstemious, as the Pythagoreans: and so either the command would have been disobeyed, or the blessing defeated: though, at the same time, this conduct hath no way precluded God, from giving particular express prohibitions, both of luxury and cruelty, in several parts of the scriptures.

"But still it may be imagined, that Christians are now some way or other exempted from this abstinence; and therefore, to remove all mistakes of this kind, I now proceed to shew, that this prohibition of eating blood lies upon all mankind to this day; and upon Christians in a peculiar manner.

"And the proof of this lies within the compass of one plain argument, obvious to every capacity; which is as follows:

"If the eating of blood never was permitted, either before the flood or after the flood, or under the law, or under the gospel; then, surely, no man in his senses will say it is now lawful to eat it. Now that it never was permitted in any of these periods, is undeniable. Nay, the argument is yet stronger; for it was not only not permitted in any of these periods, but, in truth, it is plainly enough prohibited in the first of them; and, I think, as clearly prohibited in all the rest.

"First, I say, the eating of any living creature, and consequently of blood, is not only not granted before the flood, but plainly enough prohibited, in that part of the curse denounced upon man after the fall, 'Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it, all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee: and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread: till thou return to the ground.' Can any thing be plainer than, that man is here condemned to eat bread, and the herb of the field, to the day of his death!

"And thus we see that man had no right to the blood of the creatures before the flood. That he had no right after this, from the grant made to Noah; that no man had any right to it from any concession in the law of Moses, but quite the contrary, is undoubted. The only question then is, whether any such permission hath been made under the gospel? And that there hath not, but the direct contrary, I now come to prove, from the fifteenth chapter of the Acts; where we read, that after a long and solemn debate upon the question, Whether the Gentile converts to Christianity were obliged to observe the law of Moses? It was at last determined, that they were not; and that no more should be required of them, than to abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. And accordingly, a most solemn decree was drawn up to that purpose, by the apostles, and elders, and the whole church at Jerusalem; and transmitted in letters to the brethren at Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, by four deputies of principal note: Paul and Barnabas, Judas and Silas. And those letters were conceived in these terms: For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, &c. See verses 28, 29.

"Now, if this decree be obligatory upon all Christians, then can it no longer be a doubt with any Christian, whether he is obliged to abstain from blood and things strangled. And if the direction of any one apostle, inspired of God, be obligatory, certainly it can be no doubt, whether a solemn decision of all the apostles, expressly declaring the joint determination of the Holy Ghost in the point, be also obligatory.

"The only question then is, whether this apostolic decree hath been since repealed; and this will best appear, by considering the arguments for this repeal, produced by the advocates for eating blood: which I now come to examine.

"First then, it is said, that this decree of the apostles was only temporary, to prevent giving offence to the Jews, in the infancy of the Christian religion; and consequently the reason of it is long since ceased; and that cessation is a virtual repeal.

"In answer to this, I desire it may be considered, whether the reasons now mentioned, for abstaining from blood, do not equally extend to all ages and nations of the world; and if they do, it is evident this injunction of the apostles had no peculiar relation, either to the infancy of the Christian religion, or to the people of the Jews: unless it be thought that the Jews are the only people in the world who are obliged to abstain from cruelty to the creatures, or to recognise God as the author and giver of life; or that this nation only were entitled to the atonement made by blood; and if so, how came sacrifices to be instituted immediately after the fall? And how came blood to be prohibited to all the sons of Noah, before there was any such thing as a Jew in the world? This pretence, then, seems very ill-founded.

"It may indeed be urged with much more plausibility by Christians, that blood being consecrated to the making of atonement for sin, as a type of the sacrifice of Christ; and that atonement being now received by his blood, as St. Paul expresses it, in the fifth chapter of his epistle to the Romans, the reason of abstinence in this point is now ceased; and, consequently, that this abstinence is no longer a duty.

"But then it must be remembered, in answer to this reasoning, that the apostolic decree against blood was past many years after this atonement was made: and, surely, it is no more unreasonable to abstain from blood now, in commemoration of the atonement made by the blood of Christ, for the sins of the whole world; than it was before to abstain from it in the view of that atonement.

"Again it is objected, that creatures which died of themselves, and consequently had the blood in them, might be given to the stranger, or sold to an alien; and it is evident, that the stranger and alien were in this case permitted to eat blood.

"And what then? the question is, concerning the eating of blood separate from the creature, or eating the blood designedly left in the creature, to serve any end of luxury or cruelty: and eating blood in either of these ways is what I esteem to be unlawful: the eating of blood, as such, was never imagined an action, simply, and in itself, sinful; though it was, and is, criminal, in certain circumstances, from the reason and nature of things, as well as the divine prohibition; and it was prohibited, for very wise and very important reasons; and when those reasons ceased, as in the instance objected, the prohibition ceased too: and therefore this objection is so far from overthrowing the doctrine laid down, that, in truth, it confirms it; for what can be a clearer proof, that the reasons of any divine prohibition are rightly assigned, than this, that as soon as those reasons cease, the prohibition ceases also? When the creature died of itself, its blood could neither be poured out upon the altar, for atonement, nor abused to idolatry; nor reverenced, in recognition of God's being the author and giver of life: nor spilt, to prevent cruelty in the use of the creatures; and therefore, there, such a small portion of it as could not be separated from the flesh, was permitted to be eaten with it:

in effect permitted even to the Jew, under a very light penalty; but where there was a possibility, either of cruelty or abuse, there it was more strictly prohibited; and for this reason, when a creature was torn by a beast, there the flesh was not to be touched by any human creature, but thrown to the dogs; as you may read in the 22d chapter of Exodus, at the 31st verse: and the reason of this distinction is obvious; if men were permitted to make any advantage of creatures torn to death by beasts, what an inlet to all manner of cruelty (as well as villany) might such a permission be! And who can say where it would end? Nay, who knows how far such dilacerations might even be counterfeited to the purposes of idolatry, or indulgence in blood?

"Again: I must beseech all Christians seriously to attend to the tenor of the words, by which abstinence from blood and things strangled is enjoined: "It seemed good unto the Holy Ghost, and to us, (say the apostles) to lay upon you no greater burthen than these necessary things; that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication." If these abstinences were only intended to be enjoined for a season, could they properly be enjoined under the denomination of "necessary things?" Is that the proper appellation for duties of a transient, temporary observance? Did neither the apostles, nor the Holy Ghost, know the distinction between necessary and expedient? Or, suppose it not convenient to make that distinction at that time; How came things of a temporary, and things of an eternal obligation, to be placed upon the same foot of necessity, in the same decree? Or, were fornication and idle pollutions only to be abstained from for a time? And in compliment to the infirmity of the Jews? What monstrous absurdities are these? And what a train of them are they obliged to maintain, who assert this decree to be only of temporary obligation?

"But to proceed: If this was only a temporary necessity, how long did this necessity last?

"To this Dr. Hammond answers, that it lasted till the Jews and Gentiles were formed into one communion. And St. Augustin says, that it lasted till the time that no carnal Israelite appeared in the church of the Gentiles; and again, that it lasted till the temple and the Jewish polity were destroyed.

"To all this I answer, that, if the two first opinions are admitted, then, the necessity of observing the apostolic decree continues to this day: first, because the Jews and Gentiles are indisputably not yet fully formed into one communion: and, secondly, because there was never any time, wherein there was not some carnal Israelite in the church; and I think it must be notorious to many of my readers, that there are some such even in this part of the Christian church, at this day: and so doubtless in every Christian church over the face of the whole earth; and therefore both these opinions are wild and unsupported.

"As to the third opinion, viz. that the necessity of observing this decree lasted only till the destruction of the Jewish temple and polity; to this I answer, that whatever may be thought of the necessity of this decree, it is evident that the wisdom of it, and the advantage of that abstinence which was due to it, extended much farther. Since, without this, that calumny imputed to Christians, of killing infants in their assemblies, and drinking their blood, could never be so easily and so effectually confuted; for nothing could do this so thoroughly, as demonstrating that it was a fundamental principle with Christians, to touch no blood of any kind: and what could demonstrate this so effectually, as dying in attestation to the truth of it! as it is notorious, both from the apologists and ecclesiastical historians, that many Christian martyrs did.

"But it is further urged, that this apostolic decree was only given to the Jewish proselytes; and, consequently, that the necessity of abstaining from blood and things strangled, related to them only; this they tell us appears, "in that the apostle, when he preached in any city, did it as yet in the synagogues of the Jews; whither the Gentiles could not come, unless they were proselytes of the gate.

"Now this opinion, I think, will be sufficiently confuted, by demonstrating these two things: first, that before the passing of this decree, St. Paul preached Christianity to the whole body of the Gentiles, at Antioch; and, secondly, that this decree is directed to the Gentiles at large, and not to the Jewish proselytes.

"Now this transaction at Antioch happened seven years before the decree against blood, and things strangled, was passed by the apostles at Jerusalem. Can any man in his senses doubt, after this, whether the apostles preached to the Gentiles before the passing of that decree? When it appears from the words now recited, that the apostles not only preached to the Gentiles, but preached to them in contradistinction to the Jews: and does any man know the Jews so little, as to imagine, that when the apostles turned to the Gentiles, from them, the Jews would after this suffer those apostles to preach to the Gentiles in their synagogues? Besides, the text says, that the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region; consequently, the apostles were so far from confining themselves to the Jewish synagogue, that they were not confined even to the extent of that ample city, but preached throughout the whole country. This opinion, then, that the apostles preached only to the Jews and proselytes before the passing of this decree against blood at Jerusalem, is demonstrably false; and if they preached to the Gentiles at large, to whom else can that decree be directed? It is directed to the Gentile converts at large; and who can we imagine those converts were, but those to whom Christianity was preached, i. e. the Gentiles at large?

"But this is yet further demonstrated, from St. James's sentence, in this fifteenth chapter of this Acts, upon which the apostolic decree is founded. His words are these:

"19. Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God.

"But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood.

"21. For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every sabbath-day.

"What then? what if Moses had those that preached him in the synagogues every sabbath? Why then, there was no necessity of writing upon these points, to any of those who were admitted into the synagogues; because they knew from the writings of Moses, that all these things were, from the foundation of the world, unlawful to the whole race of Adam.

"My sentence (says the apostle) is, that we write to the Gentile converts upon these points; for Moses hath those of old in every city, that preach him, i. e. there is no necessity of writing to any Jewish convert, or to any proselyte convert to Christianity, to abstain from these things: because all that are admitted into the synagogues, (as the proselytes were,) know all these things sufficiently already; and accordingly, upon this sentence of St. James, the decree was founded and directed: doubtless, from the nature of the thing directed to those whom it was fitting and necessary to inform upon these points, i. e. those who were unacquainted with the writings of Moses; for the decree, as far as it contained a direction to certain duties, could give no information to any others.

"Again: An objection is raised against this doctrine from the conclusion of the decree, ye do well: insinuating, that though they should do well to observe it, yet they did no ill in not observing it.

"I answer, that doing well, in the style of scripture, as well as common speech, is acting agreeably to our duty; and doing well in necessary things, must certainly be acting agreeably to necessary duty; and certainly the same duty cannot be at the same time necessary and indifferent.

"But it is objected, that if the points contained in this decree are not parts of the Mosaic law, the decree has no relation to the question in debate; for the debate was whether the Gentile converts to Christianity should be obliged to observe the law of Moses?

"I answer that the decree hath the clearest relation to the question; inasmuch as it is a decision, that the Gentile converts were not obliged to observe the law of Moses. It hath at the same time a plain relation to the point in question; for what could be more proper, than to take that occasion to let the Gentiles know, that they were obliged to the observance of such duties as were obligatory antecedently to the law of Moses, though they were exempted from that law?

"Again it is urged, that this decree could only oblige those to whom it was directed, i. e. the Gentiles of Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia.

"As if the decree, and the reason of it, did not equally extend to all Gentile converts throughout the whole world. And as if this doctrine were only taught and received in those particular regions; when it is evident, beyond a possibility of being denied or doubted, that all Christians in every region of the earth, were taught and actually embraced the same doctrine, at least, for the first three hundred years after Christ.

"But it is still objected, that this dispute could not have happened otherwise than between Gentile and Judaizing converts; and consequently, the decision of it must have respect to the conduct which it was then necessary the Gentiles should hold, with regard to the Jews, who could not converse with them upon the foot of a friendly communication, could not sit at meat, &c. unless the Gentiles abstained from blood, &c.

"Consequently, that this necessity is now ceased.

"In answer to this, admitting the premises, I must own I cannot see how this conclusion follows from them, as long as there are Jews and Mahometans in the world to be converted to the Christian religion.

"Fornication, idolatry, luxury, and cruelty to the creatures, are prohibited by this decree; and an original precept from God to Noah, of manifold advantage to mankind, restored: is it to be believed, the apostles could stand in need of a particular occasion to prohibit those enormities; or to restore this blessing?

"Fornication did not appear to the heathen world, to be contrary to the law of nature; (nor do the libertines of the age see it to be so to this day), and as they had no restraints upon intemperance, their luxury of food greatly contributed to make them abandoned. How then could the apostles, whose business it was to reform the world, pretend to amend mankind, without recovering them from these corruptions? And what more effectual method could they take to recover them, than a most solemn and sacred injunction of abstinence in those points contained in the decree of Jerusalem? And that the apostles had nothing less than this in view from that decree, is, I think, fairly and fully to be collected, from these words of St. Luke, Acts xvi. 4, 5. And as they (i. e. Paul and his companions) went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem, and so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

"Now the decree here referred to, is evidently the decree concerning blood, &c. from the observance of which, the churches were not only increased, by opening the way to a more friendly communication with the Jews, and so facilitating their admission into the Christian church, but they were likewise established in the faith. Does this expression mean nothing! Might we not conclude from it, with some appearance of reason, that the Christian religion had been defective without this establishment?

"But there are yet two other main fundamental objections against this doctrine, taken from the declarations of our Saviour, St. Peter, and St. Paul.

"And the first of them is built upon those words of our blessed Saviour, in the 15th chapter of St. Matthew, at the eleventh verse, Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man, but that which cometh out of the mouth. From hence it is inferred, that a man may eat or drink any thing without sin, notwithstanding the apostolic decree.

"But surely no Christian would say this, that saw the absurdities of this assertion; for if this declaration of our Saviour's destroys the validity of the apostolic decree, then it will follow:

"First, That this decree was repealed just twenty years before it was made, which is surely a very extraordinary supposition; for whoever looks into the chronology of his Bible will find, that these words of our Saviour were spoken twenty years before the apostolic council was held at Jerusalem.

"Secondly, It will follow, that the whole body of the apostles did, after full debate and mature deliberation, make a most solemn decree, in direct contradiction to the plain, express declaration of their blessed Lord and Saviour.

"And this supposition is surely as modest, and as Christian, as the first was extraordinary: nay, more; they made this decree under the immediate direction and influence of the Spirit of God, and yet made it in direct contradiction to the declaration of the Son of God. I am really at a loss to think whether the absurdity or the blasphemy of these suppositions is most shocking. Let us quit them then, and examine our Saviour's words by the common rules of reason.

"And, to clear this point, I lay this down as a plain rule of interpretation, That general expressions ought not to be extended beyond the reason of them, and the occasion of their being delivered. For example, St. Paul, in the tenth chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, answering the arguments of those converts who pretended they might innocently eat of those things offered to idols, even in the idol temples, uses these words All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient. Will any man infer from hence, that murder, and adultery, and incest were lawful to St. Paul? Or that he thought they were? No, surely! What then can he mean by them? I answer, that the reason and occasion of them must determine that question; and do determine the plain sense of those words to be this: All things that are lawful to any other man, are also lawful to me; but every thing that is lawful to be done, is not always expedient; though the liberty you took of eating in the idol temple were lawful; yet, if it give offence, you ought not to take it.

"In the same manner should that general expression of our Saviour's be interpreted, Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man, but that which cometh out of the mouth, that defileth the man. Does any man imagine, that our Saviour meant to give full licence to gluttony and intemperance by this declaration? Or that a man might deliberately swallow poison by virtue of these words: or, in general, might innocently eat any thing which the law of God at that time forbad to be eaten? These were strange absurdities to be suppossed: the sense of the declaration then must be drawn from the reason and occasion of it, which was this: The Pharisees were offended with our Saviour's disciples, for sitting down to meat before they washed their hands, contrary to the tradition of the elders; as if such a violation of a traditional precept, were sin and a pollution. In answer to this, after our Saviour hath shewn the iniquity and absurdity of their traditions, he adds, Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth the man. Now, the question is, what he meant by those words? And if he himself had not told us, I really think that the occasion and common sense would teach us to understand no more by them, than this, that it is not any little soil or filth taken into the mouth, from eating with unwashed hands, that can be said to defile a man; nothing of that kind can be called a pollution. This, I say, is the plain, natural, obvious sense of those words. Indeed, the latter part of the declaration is not so plain; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth the man. This part of it, I say, is not so intelligible; neither was it so to the disciples, and therefore Peter desired his Lord to declare this parable unto them. And accordingly he did so, by shewing that whatsoever pollution was taken in at the mouth was cast out into the draught, but what came out of the mouth, came forth from the heart, as did evil thoughts of all kinds; and then he adds, these are the things that defile the man—but to eat with unwashen hands defileth not the man.

"I come now to the last objection of weight, which is this: that the distinction of clean and unclean meats is plainly taken away in the New Testament; and particularly by that voice from heaven in St. Peter's vision: and that St. Paul clearly determines the lawfulness of eating any thing sold in the shambles, or set before us on the table, asking no questions for conscience sake.

"To the first part of this objection, I answer, that the distinction of meats, clean and unclean, commonly supposed to be introduced and established by the law of Moses, is plainly taken away, by the voice from heaven, accompanying St. Peter's vision: but how does this concession affect the prohibition of blood, established before the law of Moses? And which hath nothing to do with the distinction of creatures, clean and unclean, taken away at that time?

"But to cut this dispute short, I shall only observe, that the very command to St. Peter in that vision, is so far from taking away the prohibition of blood given to Noah, that it clearly establishes it. The words are these: Rise, Peter; kill and eat. Now the Greek word θῦσον, which is here translated kill, does in the original signify to sacrifice; and the plain sense of the command is this, that Peter should slay those creatures, as creatures were wont to be slain for sacrifice, that is, that he should first draw away the blood, and then eat them. And no man that pretends to any knowledge in the Greek tongue will say, that this word has or can have any other meaning in this place; and therefore the very command, which takes away the distinction of creatures, clean and unclean, is so far from taking away the prohibition of blood, that it establishes it.

"Besides, I desire it may be observed, that this command to St. Peter was given in the forty-first year from our Saviour's birth; or, in other words, in the year of our Lord 41; and the decree of the apostles at Jerusalem was in the year of our Lord 52, i. e. the prohibition of blood was established eleven years after the distinction of meats, clean and unclean, was taken away. Ill-fated decree! to be again repealed, so many years before it was made!

"Thus have I defended a divine revelation and command; a command of easy, unexpensive observance; preventive of cruelty, luxury, and many other evils; and conducive to much good! manifestly contributing to the healthfulness and simplicity, and, in consequence of both these, to the elegance and delicacy of food.

"A command, in its nature negative and absolute, as that of the forbidden fruit.

"A command, given by God himself to Noah, repeated to Moses, and ratified by the apostles of Jesus Christ; given immediately after the flood, when the world, as it were, began anew; and the only one given on that great occasion; repeated with awful solemnity to that people, whom God separated from the rest of mankind, to be holy to himself: repeated, with dreadful denunciations of divine vengeance, both against the Jew and the stranger that should dare to transgress it; and ratified by the most solemn and sacred council that ever was assembled upon earth, acting under the immediate influence of the Spirit of God! transmitted from that sacred assembly to the several churches of the neighbouring nations, by the hands of no meaner messengers than two bishops and two apostles; asserted by the best writers and most philosophic spirits of their age, the Christian apologists; and sealed with the blood of the best men, the Christian martyrs! confirmed by the unanimous sentences of fathers, emperors, and councils: and one of these as low as the sixth century. Reverenced (in conformity to the practice and principles even of Jews and Mahometans) by the whole church of God for the first 300 years after Christ; and by all the churches of the East to this day: churches allowed to be more extensive, and not more corrupt, than that which vaunts itself catholic and infallible. And will any man after this dare to vilify this command! Will any man in his senses pronounce a precept so given, so repeated, and so ratified by God himself, unmeaning and unimportant? Can we imagine, that it was asserted by the most learned men of the early ages of Christianity, without knowledge? Or obeyed by the most holy, even unto death, without conscience? Or reverenced by the whole church of God, without reason? And shall we, after all this, contemn this command, because light libertines revile, and insolents despise it? or, at best, because some learned men have given very weak and ungrounded, very unlearned reasons, for believing it repealed? reasons which I have now sufficiently refuted and exposed. And shall such reasons and such authorities weigh against God, and the inspirations of his Holy Spirit? Against the apostles and apologists, and martyrs, and the whole church of God, for the three first and purest ages of the Christian æra? Let others glory in their Christian liberty as they like best: but, perhaps, to some of these we may say with St. Paul, Your glorying is not good; know ye not, that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

"If mine be an error, it must be owned at the same time that it is an error on the sure side: it is innocent: it is an error infinitely better authorized, and nearer allied to religion, virtue, and humanity, than its contrary! for, (not to mention the precepts of apostles, the opinions of fathers and the decrees of councils) if I err, I err with the most men, (not heathen,) and with the best! with the whole Christian world of the best ages! and the whole eastern world to this day. I err on the side of humanity and health: and a religious gratitude to the Author and Giver of life, for every creature slain for my support! I err, in opposition to a practice manifestly brutal and savage; a practice which human nature abhors; a savage practice! which over-ran the West, together with the Goths and Vandals: a practice, introduced by Scythian barbarity, and established by popery! established, with other works of darkness, in the ages of error and ignorance, and their necessary consequences, immorality and irreligion.

"But though all this be demonstrably true, yet am I sufficiently sensible, that I have all this time been speaking in a great measure to appetite, which hath no ears; and to prejudice, which hath no eyes: to perverseness, incapable of attention; and to pride, incapable of conviction: and am so far from being able to bring some men to reason, that I am myself, perhaps, become the object of their pity for attempting it; that I have been feeding the raillery of libertines, and the scoffs of infidels; that even dullness will droll on this occasion, and stupidity break stale jests. Alas! who is so ignorant as not to know, that the scorner, foe to every virtue and excellence in life! must, in that very character, be the sworn enemy of every part of religion! of that religion by which every virtue lives, and is esteemed in the world. Who is so ignorant as not to know that this meanest denomination of men subsists upon earth, like the meanest species of insects: by teazing and tainting to the utmost of their malignant might, and then feeding where they have infected: but, God be praised, their impotence affects nothing but infirmity; and the slightest fence is security against them. Some difference, I hope, will be allowed between us on this occasion. I write from the dictates of a good conscience; it is theirs to see if they reproach not from the influence of an evil: I write from the clearest conviction; let them beware that they rail not from corruption. This I will say without scruple, I reason from the light of an humble, an honest, and a diligent enquiry; and, if they ridicule, they ridicule from the depth of a lazy and a conceited ignorance. How far that ignorance will acquit them at the great day of account God only knows." DELANEY'S Revelation Examined with Candor. Vol. II. p. 18, &c.

CHAPTER XVI.

Paul coming to Derbe and Lystra, meets with Timothy, the son of a Jewess by a Greek father, whom he circumcises, and takes with him, into his work, 1—3. As they pass through the different cities, they deliver the apostles' decrees to the churches; and they are established in the faith, and daily increase in numbers, 4—5. They travel through Phrygia, Galatia, Mysia and to Troas, 6—8. Where Paul has a vision, relative to his preaching in Macedonia, 9, 10. Leaving Troas, he sails to Samothracia and Neapolis, and comes to Philippi in Macedonia, 11, 12. Lydia, a seller of purple, receives the apostles' teaching; and she and her family are baptized, 13—15. A young woman, with a spirit of divination, dispossessed by St. Paul, 16—18. Her masters finding their gain by her soothsaying gone, make an attack upon Paul and Silas, drag them before the magistrates, who command them to be beaten, thrust into the closest prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks, 19—24. Paul and Silas singing praises at midnight, the prison doors are miraculously opened, and all the bonds of the prisoners loosed, 25, 26. The keeper being alarmed, supposing that the prisoners were fled, is about to kill himself, but is prevented by Paul, 27, 28. He enquires the way of salvation, believes, and he and his whole family are baptized, 29—34. The next morning the magistrates order the apostles to be dismissed, 35, 36. Paul pleads his privilege as a Roman, and accuses the magistrates of injustice, who, being alarmed, come themselves to the prison, deliver them, and beg them to depart from the city, 37—39. They leave the prison, enter into the house of Lydia, comfort the brethren, and depart, 40.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. A certain disciple] Bishop Pearce would read the latter part of this verse, and the beginning of the next thus—a certain disciple named Timotheus, (the son of a certain Jewish woman that believed, but of a father who was a Greek) who was well reported of by the brethren, &c.

This Timothy was the same person to whom St. Paul wrote those two noble epistles which are still extant. His mother's name was Eunice, as we learn from 2 Tim. i. 5. What his father's name was we know not; he was either a mere heathen, or, at most, only a proselyte of the gate, who never submitted to circumcision: had he submitted to this rite, he would, no doubt, have circumcised his son; but the son being without it, is a proof that the father was so too. Some MSS. state that Timothy's mother was now a widow, but this does not appear to be well founded.

Verse 2. Which was well reported of] These words are spoken of Timothy, and not of his father. At this time Timothy must have been very young; for, several years after, when appointed to superintend the church at Crete, he appears to have been then so young that there was a danger of its operating to the prejudice of his ministry; 1 Tim. iv. 12. Let no man despise thy youth. He had a very early religious education from his godly mother Eunice, and his not less

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and [a] took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, [b] that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And [c] so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

pious grandmother Lois; and, from his religious instructions, was well prepared for the work to which God now called him.

Verse 3. Took and circumcised him] For this simple reason, that the Jews would neither have heard him preach, nor would have any connection with him, had he been otherwise. Besides, St. Paul himself could have had no access to the Jews, in any place, had they known that he associated with a person who was uncircumcised: they would have considered both to be unclean. The circumcision of Timothy was a merely prudential regulation; one rendered imperiously necessary by the circumstances in which they were then placed; and as it was done merely in reference to this, Timothy was laid under no necessity to observe the Mosaic ritual; nor could it prejudice his spiritual state, because he did not do it in order to seek justification by the law; for this he had before through the faith of Christ. In Gal. ii. 3—5. we read that Paul refused to circumcise Titus, who was a Greek, and his parents Gentiles, notwithstanding the intreaties of some zealous Judaizing Christians; as their object was to bring him under the yoke of the law: here, the case was widely different, and the necessity of the measure indisputable.

Verse 4. They delivered them the decrees for to keep] Τα δογματα, τα κεκριμενα υπο των Αποστολων. Bishop Pearce contends that τα δογματα, the decrees, is a gloss which was not in the text originally; and that the τα κεκριμενα, the judgments or determinations of the apostles, was all that was originally written here. He supports his opinion by a reference to the word κρινω, I judge; used by James, chap. xv. 19. whence the whole decision, as it referred—1. to the inexpediency of circumcising the Gentiles; and, 2. to the necessity of observing the four precepts laid down, was called τα κεκριμενα, the things that were judged, or decided on; the judgments of the apostolic council. Instead of κεκριμενα, the Syriac has a word that answers to γεγραμμενα, the decrees that were written. The word Δογμα, from δοκεω, to think proper, determine, decree; signifies an ordinance, or decree properly and deliberately made, relative to any important point; and which, in reference to that point, has the force of law. Our term dogma, which we often abuse, is the Greek word in English letters.

Verse 5. And so were the churches established] The disputations at Antioch, relative to circumcision, had no doubt spread far and wide among other churches; and unhinged many. The decrees of the apostles came in good time, and prevented farther mischief: the people, saved from uncertainty, became established in the faith; and the church had a daily accession of converted souls.

Verse 6. Were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia.] The Asia mentioned here could not be Asia Minor, in general; for Galatia, Phrygia, Pisidia, Lycaonia and Pamphylia, were provinces of it; and in these the apostles preached; but it was what is called Proconsular Asia, which included only Ionia, Æolia and Lydia. The apostles were not suffered to visit these places at this time; but they afterwards went thither, and preached the gospel with success; for it was in this Proconsular Asia that the seven churches were situated. God chose to send his servants to another place, where he saw that the word would be affectionately received; and probably those in Proconsular Asia were not, as yet, sufficiently prepared to receive and profit by it.

Verse 7. After they were come to Mysia] They passed through Phrygia into Mysia, which lay between Bithynia on the north, Phrygia on the east, Æolia on the south, and the Mediterranean on the west.

But the Spirit suffered them not.] God saw that that was not the most proper time to preach the word at Bithynia; as he willed them to go immediately to Macedonia, the people there being ripe for the word of life. Instead of το πνευμα, the Spirit merely; το πνευμα Ιησου, the Spirit of Jesus, is the reading of ABCDE. several others, with both the Syriac, the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the Fathers. The reading is undoubtedly genuine, and should be immediately restored to the text.

Verse 8. Came down to Troas] The Troad, or part of Phrygia Minor, in which the celebrated city of Troy was formerly situated. This city was first built by Dardanus, who was its king, and from whom it was called Dardania; from Tros, his grandson, it was called Troja, or Troy: and from his son Ilus, it was called Ilium. It has been long so completely destroyed, that no ascertainable vestige of it remains; insomuch that some have even doubted of its existence. Those who contend for the reality of the history of Troy, suppose it to have stood on the site of the modern village Bounarbachi, about twelve miles from the sea, on an eminence, at the termination of a spacious plain.

Verse 9. A vision appeared to Paul in the night] Whether this was in a dream, or whether a representation made to the senses of the apostle, we cannot tell. A man of Macedonia appeared to him, and made this simple communication, Come over to Macedonia, and help us.

Some suppose that the guardian angel of Macedonia appeared to St. Paul in a human shape; others, that it was a divine communication, made to his imagination in a dream.

Verse 10. We endeavoured to go into Macedonia] This is the first place that the historian St. Luke refers to himself: WE endeavoured, &c. And, from this, it has been supposed, that he joined the company of Paul, for the first time, at Troas.

Assuredly gathering] Συμβιβαζοντες, drawing an inference from the vision that had appeared.

That the Lord had called us for to preach] That is, they inferred that they were called to preach the gospel in Macedonia, from what the vision had said, come over, and help us; the help meaning, preach to us the gospel. Instead of ὁ Κυριος the Lord, meaning JESUS, several MSS. such as ABCE. several others with the Coptic, Vulgate, Theophylact and Jerome, have ὁ Θεος GOD. Though this stands on very reputable authority, yet the former seems to be the better reading; for it was the SPIRIT of JESUS, ver. 7. that would not suffer them to go into Bithynia, because he had designed that they should immediately preach the gospel in Macedonia.

Verse 11. Loosing from Troas] Setting sail from this place—

With a straight course to Samothracia] This was an island of the Ægean sea, contiguous to Thrace, and hence called Samothracia, or the Thracian Samos. It is about twenty miles in circumference, and is now called Samandrachi by the Turks, who are its present masters.

And the next day to Neapolis.] There were many cities of this name; but this was a sea-port town of Macedonia a few miles eastward of Philippi. Neapolis signifies the new city.

Verse 12. And from thence to Philippi] This was a town of Macedonia, in the territory of the Edones, on the confines of Thrace, situated on the side of a steep eminence. It took its name from Philip II. king of Macedon. It is famous for two battles fought between the imperial army commanded by Octavianus, afterwards Augustus, and Mark Antony; and the republican army commanded by Brutus and Cassius, in which these were successful: and a second between Octavianus and Antony, on the one part, and Brutus on the other. In this battle the republican troops were cut to pieces, after which, Brutus killed himself. It was to the church in this city that St. Paul wrote the epistle that still goes under their name. This place is still in being, though much decayed; and is the see of an archbishop.

The chief city of that part of Macedonia] This passage has greatly puzzled both critics and commentators. It is well known that when Paulus Emilius had conquered Macedonia, he divided it into four parts, μερη, and that he called the country that lay between the rivers Strymon and Nessus, the first part, and made Amphipolis its chief city, or metropolis: Philippi, therefore, was not its chief city. But Bishop Pearce has, with great show of reason, argued that, though Amphipolis was made the chief city of it by Paulus Emilius, yet Philippi might have been the chief city in the days of St. Paul, which was two hundred and twenty years after the division by P. Emilius. Besides, as it was at this place that Augustus gained that victory which put him in possession of the whole Roman empire, might not he have given to it that dignity which was before enjoyed by Amphipolis? This is the most rational way of solving this difficulty; and thereupon I shall not trouble the reader with the different modes that have been proposed to alter and amend the Greek text.

And a colony] That is a colony of Rome; for it appears that a colony was planted here by Julius Cæsar, and afterwards enlarged by Augustus: the people, therefore, were considered as freemen of Rome, and from this, call themselves Romans, ver. 21. The Jewish definition of קלניא kolonia (for they have the Latin word in Hebrew letters, as St. Luke has it here Κολωνια in Greek letters) is a free city, which does not pay tribute.

Verse 13 By a river side, where prayer was wont to be made] Ου ενομιζετο προσευχη ειναι, where it was said there was a proseucha. The proseucha was a place of prayer, or a place used for worship, where there was no synagogue. It was a large building uncovered, with seats, as in an amphitheatre. Buildings of this sort the Jews had by the sea side, and by the sides of rivers. See this subject considered at large in the note on Luke vi. 12. It appears that the apostles had heard from some of the Gentiles, or from some of the Jews themselves, that there was a place of prayer by the river side; and they went out in quest of it, knowing, that as it was the Sabbath, they should find some Jews there.

Spake unto the women] Probably this was before the time of their public worship; and while they were waiting for the assembling of the people in general: and Paul improved the opportunity to speak concerning Christ and salvation, to the women that resorted thither.

Verse 14. Lydia, a seller of purple] She probably had her name from the province of Lydia, in which the city of Thyatira was situated. The Lydian women have been celebrated for their beautiful purple manufactures.

Which worshipped God] That is, she was a proselyte to the Jewish religion; as were probably all the women that resorted hither.

Whose heart the Lord opened] As she was a sincere worshipper of God, she was prepared to receive the heavenly truths spoken by Paul and his companions; and, as she was faithful to the grace she had received, so God gave her more grace, and gave her now a divine conviction that what was spoken by Paul was true: and therefore she attended unto the things; she believed them and received them as the doctrines of God; and in this faith she was joined by her whole family; and in it they were all baptized.

Verse 15. If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord] The meaning seems to be this: If my present reception of the gospel of Christ, be a proof to you that I have been faithful to the Lord, in the light previously imparted; and that I am as likely to be faithful to this new grace, as I have been to that already received; and, consequently, not likely by light or fickle conduct, to bring any discredit on this divine work; come into my house and abide there. It is wrong to suppose that this woman had not received a measure of the light of God before this time.

And she constrained us.] She used such entreaties and persuasions, that at last they consented to lodge there.

Verse 16. As we went to prayer] Εις προσευχην into the proseucha: see on ver. 13. and on Luke vi. 12. The article την, is added here by ABCE.; several others, Origen and Theophylact; this makes the place more emphatic, and seems to determine the above meaning of προσευχη to be right, not the act of prayer or praying to God, but the place, the oratory, in which these proselytes assembled for the purpose of praying, reading the law and the prophets, and such like exercises of devotion. It appears that the apostles spent some time here; as it is evident from this, and the following verses, that they often resorted to this place to preach the gospel.

Possessed with a spirit of divination] Εχουσαν πνευμα πυθωνος, having a spirit of Python, or of Apollo. Pytho was, according to fable, a huge serpent, that had an oracle at Mount Parnassus, famous for predicting future events; that Apollo slew this serpent, and hence he was called Pythius, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

and became celebrated as the foreteller of future events; and that all those who either could, or pretended to predict future events, were influenced by the spirit of Apollo Pythius. As, oftentimes the priestesses of this god became greatly agitated, and gave answers apparently from their bellies, when their mouths remained close: πυθων was applied to the εγγαστριμυθοι, or ventriloquists. Hesychius defines πυθων, δαιμονιον μαντικον, a divining dæmon; and it was evidently such a one that possessed this young woman; and which St. Paul expelled, ver. 18. See on this subject the notes on Levit. xix. 31. and Deut. xviii. 11.

Brought her masters much gain by soothsaying] Μαντευομενη, by divination, or what we call telling fortunes. Our term soothsaying comes from the Anglo-Saxon ꝥoð, truth; and ꝥæȝan, to say: i. e. truth-saying, or saying the truth. For as it was supposed among the heathen, that such persons spoke by the inspiration of their God, consequently what they said must be true. However, our translators might have used a term here that would not have been so creditable to this Pythoness; for, what she said concerning the apostles excepted, she certainly could not be supposed to tell the truth, while her inspiration came from him who is the father of lies. But Satan will sometimes conceal himself under the guise of truth, that he may the more effectually deceive. See below.

Verse 17. These men are the servants, &c.] It is astonishing how such a testimony could be given in such a case; every syllable of it true, and at the same time full, clear and distinct. But mark the deep design and artifice of this evil spirit: 1. He well knew that the Jewish law abhorred all magic incantations, magical rites, and dealings with familiar spirits; he therefore bears what was in itself a true testimony to the apostles, that by it he may destroy their credit, and ruin their usefulness. The Jews, by this testimony, would be led at once to believe that the apostles were in compact with these dæmons, and that the miracles they wrought were done by the agency of these wicked spirits; and that the whole was the effect of magic; and this, of course, would harden their hearts against the preaching of the gospel. 2. The GENTILES, finding that their own dæmon bore testimony to the apostles, would naturally consider that the whole was one system; that they had nothing to learn, nothing to correct; and thus the preaching of the apostles must be useless to them. In such a predicament as this, nothing could have saved the credit of the apostles but their dispossessing this woman of here familiar spirit; and that in the most incontestible manner: for, what could have saved the credit of Moses and Aaron, when the magicians of Egypt turned their rods into serpents, had not Aaron's rod devoured theirs? And what could have saved the credit of these apostles but the casting out of this spirit of divination; with which, otherwise, both Jews and Gentiles would have believed them in compact.

Verse 18. Paul, being grieved] Probably for the reasons assigned above.

Turned—to the spirit] Not to the woman; she was only the organ by which the spirit acted.

I command thee in the name of Jesus] Jesus is the Saviour; Satan is Abaddon and Apollyon, the destroyer. The sovereign Saviour says to the destroyer, Come out of her; and he came out in the same hour. Every circumstance of this case proves it to have been a real possession. We have already had several opportunities of remarking the great accuracy of St. Luke in his accounts of dæmoniacs; his education as a physician, gave him advantages to detect imposture of this kind where it subsisted; but he sees none in this case. He speaks of the spirit and the damsel, as distinct persons. The damsel had a spirit of divination. Paul turned to the spirit, and said, I command THEE to come out of HER; and he came out in the same hour. Had not St. Luke considered this as a real case of diabolic possession, he has made use of the most improper language he could choose; language and forms of speech calculated to deceive all his readers, and cause them to believe a lie. But it is impossible that the holy apostle could do so, because he was a good man; it is not likely he could be deceived by a parcel of Charlatans, because he was a wise man; and it would be absurd to suppose that, while he was under the influence of the Holy Spirit, he could be imposed on by the cunning of even the devil himself.

Verse 19. When her masters saw] It appears she was maintained by some men, who received a certain pay from every person whose fortune she told, or to whom she made any discovery of stolen goods, &c. &c.

The hope of their gains was gone] Η ελπις, this hope; viz. the spirit. So completely was this spirit cast out that the girl could divine no more; and yet she continued a heathen still, for we do not hear a word of her conversion. Had she been converted, got baptized, and associated with the apostles, the family of Lydia, &c. there would have been some show of reason to believe, that there had been no possession in the case; and that the spirit of divination coming out of her, meant no more than, that, through scruple of conscience, she had left off her imposing arts, and would no longer continue to pretend to do what she knew she could not perform. But she still continued with her masters, though now utterly unable to disclose any thing relative to futurity!

Drew them into the market-place] This was the place of public resort, and by bringing them here, they might hope to excite a general clamour against them: and probably those who are here called τους αρχοντας, the rulers, were civil magistrates, who kept offices in such public places, for the preservation of the peace of the city. But these words, the rulers, are suspected to be an interpolation by some critics: I think on no good ground.

Verse 20. Brought them to the magistrates] Στρατηγοις, the commanders of the army, who, very likely, as this city was a Roman colony, possessed the sovereign authority. The civil magistrates, therefore, having heard the case, as we shall soon find, in which it was pretended that the safety of the state was involved, would naturally refer the business to the decision of those who had the supreme command.

Exceedingly trouble our city] They are destroying the public peace, and endangering the public safety.

Verse 21. And teach customs] Εθη, religious opinions, and religious rites.

Which are not lawful for us to receive] The Romans were very jealous of their national worship. Servius, on the following lines of Virgil, has given us correct information on this point; and has confirmed what several other writers have advanced:

Rex Evandrus ait: Non hæc sollemnia nobis
Vana superstitio, veterumque ignara deorum Imposuit.

Æn. viii. v. 185, &c.

King Evander said:—It is not vain superstition, ignorant of the ancient worship of the gods, which has imposed these rites on us. Duo dicit, says Servius, non ideo Herculem colimus; aut quia omnem religionem veram putamus; aut quia deos ignoramus antiquos. Cautum enim fuerat, et apud Athenienses, et apud Romanos; ne quis NOVAS introduceret RELIGIONES; unde et Socrates damnatus est: et Chaldæi et Judæi, sunt urbe depulsi.

"He says two things: we do not worship Hercules because we believe every religion to be true; nor are we ignorant of the ancient gods. Great care was taken both among the Athenians and Romans, that no one should introduce any new religion. It was on this account that Socrates was condemned: and on this account the Chaldeans and the Jews were banished from Rome."

CICERO, De Legibus, lib. ii. c. 8. says, Separatim nemo habessit deos; neve NOVOS: sed nec ADVENAS, nisi publicè ADSCITOS, PRIVATIM colunto. "No person shall have any separate gods, nor new ones; nor shall he privately worship any strange gods, unless they be publicly allowed." The whole chapter is curious. It was on such laws as these that the people of Philippi pleaded against the apostles. These men bring new gods, new worship, new rites; we are Romans, and the laws forbid us to worship any new or strange god, unless publicly allowed.

Verse 22. The multitude rose up together] There was a general outcry against them; and the magistrates tore off their clothes, and delivered them to the mob, commanding the lictors, or beadles, to beat them with rods, ραβδιζειν. This was the Roman custom of treating criminals, as Grotius has well remarked.

Verse 23. Laid many stripes upon them] The Jews never gave more than thirty-nine stripes to any criminal: but the Romans had no law relative to this; they gave as many as they chose; and the apostles had, undoubtedly, the fullest measure. And perhaps St. Paul refers to this, where he says, 2 Cor. xi. 23. εν πληγαις υπερβαλλοντως, in stripes beyond measure, or moderation.

Verse 24. The inner prison] Probably what we would call the dungeon; the darkest and most secure cell.

thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

Made their feet fast in the stocks.] The το ξυλον, which we here translate stocks, is supposed to mean two large pieces of wood, pierced with holes like our stocks, and fitted to each other, that when the legs were in, they could not be drawn out. The holes being pierced at different distances, the legs might be separated or divaricated to a great extent, which must produce extreme pain. It is this circumstance to which it is supposed Prudentius refers, in speaking of the torments of St. Vincent:

Lignoque plantas inserit, Divaricatis cruribus.

"They placed his feet in the stocks, his legs greatly distended." If the apostles were treated in this way, lying on the bare ground, with their flayed backs; what agony must they have suffered! However, they could sing praises notwithstanding.

Verse 25. At midnight Paul and Silas—sang praises] Though these holy men felt much, and had reason to fear more, yet they are undismayed, and even happy in their sufferings: they were so fully satisfied that they were right, and had done their duty; that there was no room for regret or self-reproach. At the same time, they had such consolations from God, as could render any circumstances not only tolerable, but delightful. They prayed first for grace to support them, and for pardon and salvation for their persecutors; and then, secondly, sang praises to God who had called them to such a state of salvation, and had accounted them worthy to suffer shame for the testimony of Jesus. And although they were in the inner prison, they sang so loud, and so heartily, that the prisoners heard them.

Verse 26. There was a great earthquake] Thus God bore a miraculous testimony of approbation to his servants. And by the earthquake, and loosing the bonds of the prisoners shewed, in a symbolical way, the nature of that religion which they preached; while it shakes and terrifies the guilty, it proclaims deliverance to the captives, and the opening of the prison-doors to them that are bound; and sets at liberty them that are bruised.

Every one's bands were loosed] And yet so eminently did God's providence conduct every thing, that not one of the prisoners made his escape; though the doors were open, and his bolts off!

Verse 27. The keeper of the prison—would have killed himself] Every jailor was made responsible for his prisoner, under the same penalty to which the prisoner himself was exposed. The jailor awaking, and finding the prison-doors open, taking it for granted that all the prisoners had made their escape, and that he must lose his life on the account; chose rather to die by his own hand than by that of others. For it was customary among the heathens, when they found death inevitable, to take away their own lives. This custom was applauded by their philosophers, and sanctioned by some of their greatest men.

Verse 28. Do thyself no harm.] As it was now dark, being midnight, St. Paul must have had a divine intimation of what the jailor was going to do; and, to prevent it, cried out aloud, Do thyself no harm, for we are all here.

Verse 29. He called for a light] That he might see how things stood, and whether the words of Paul were true; for on this his personal safety depended.

Came trembling] Terrified by the earthquake, and feeling the danger to which his own life was exposed.

Fell down before Paul and Silas.] The persons whom a few hours before he, according to his office, treated with so much asperity, if not cruelty, as some have supposed; though by the way it does not appear that he exceeded his orders in his treatment of the apostles.

sonal, or eternal safety, it is a question the most interesting to man. But it is not likely that the jailor referred here to his personal safety. He had seen, notwithstanding the prison-doors had been miraculously opened, and the bonds of the prisoners all loosed, that not one of them had escaped: hence he could not feel himself in danger of losing his life on this account; and consequently it cannot be his personal safety about which he enquires. He could not but have known that these apostles had been preaching among the people what they called the doctrine of salvation; and he knew that for expelling a dæmon they were delivered into his custody: the Spirit of God had now convinced his heart that he was lost, and needed salvation; and therefore his earnest enquiry is how he should obtain it. The answer of the apostles to the jailor shews that his enquiry was not about his personal safety; as his believing on Jesus Christ could have had no effect upon that, in his present circumstances. Men, who dispute against this sense of the word, are not aware that the Spirit of God can teach any thing to a heart which the head of a person has not previously learned. Therefore, they say that it was impossible that a heathen could make such an inquiry in reference to his eternal state; because he would know nothing about it. On this ground, how impertinent would the answer of the apostles have been: Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be put in a state of PERSONAL SAFETY, and thy family! I contend that neither he nor his family were in any danger, as long as not one prisoner had escaped; he had, therefore, nothing from this quarter to fear: and, on the ground against which I contend, his own question would have been as impertinent as the apostles' answer.

Verse 31. Believe on the Lord Jesus] Receive the religion of Christ, which we preach, and let thy household also receive it, and ye shall be all placed in the sure way to final salvation.

Verse 32. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord] Thus by teaching him, and all that were in his house, the doctrine of the Lord, they plainly pointed out to them the way of salvation. And it appears that he and his whole family, who were capable of receiving instructions, embraced this doctrine, and shewed the sincerity of their faith by immediately receiving baptism. And by the way, if he and all his were baptized straightway, παραχρημα immediately, instantly, at that very time, dum ipsa res agitur, it is by no means likely that there was any immersion in the case; indeed, all the circumstances of the case, the dead of the night, the general agitation, the necessity of dispatch, and the words of the text, all disprove it. The apostles, therefore, had another method of administering baptism besides immersion, which, if practised according to the Jewis formalites, must have required considerable time, and not a little publicity. As the Jews were accustomed to receive whole families of heathens, young and old, as proselytes, by baptism; so here the apostles receive whole families, those of Lydia and the jailor, by the same rite. It is therefore pretty evident, that we have in this chapter very presumptive proofs, 1. That baptism was administered without immersion, as in the case of the jailor and his family; and 2. That children were also received into the church in this way; for we can scarcely suppose that the whole families of Lydia and the jailor had no children in them; and, if they had, it is not likely that they should be omitted; for the Jewish practice was invariably to receive the heathen children with their proselyted parents.

Verse 33. Washed their stripes] Ελουσεν απο των πληγων he washed from the stripes: i. e. he washed the blood from the wounds, and this would nor require putting them into a pool or bath, as some have ridiculously imagined.

Verse 34. He set meat before them] They were sufficiently exhausted, and needed refreshment: nor had the apostles any such inherent miraculous power as could prevent them from suffering through hunger; or enable them to heal their own wounds. As they were the instruments of bringing health to his soul, he became the instrument of health to their bodies. Genuine faith in Christ will always be accompanied with benevolence and humanity, and every fruit that such dispositions can produce. The jailor believed—brought them into his house—washed their stripes—and set meat before them.

Verse 35. And the magistrates sent the serjeants] The original word ραβδουχους means the lictors, persons who carried before the consul the fasces, which was a hatchet, round the handle of which was a bundle of rods tied. Why the magistrates should have sent an order to dismiss the apostles trates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace, 37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, [a] being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay, verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

whom they had so barbarously used the preceding evening, we cannot tell, unless we receive the reading of the Codex Bezæ as genuine, viz. Ημερας δε γενομενης, συνηλθον οἱ στρατηγοι επι το αυτο, εις την αγοραν, και αναμνησθεντες τον σεισμον τον γεγονοτα, εφοβηθησαν, και απεστειλαν τους ραβδουχους κ. τ. λ. And when it was day the magistrates came together into the court, AND REMEMBERING THE EARTHQUAKE THAT HAD HAPPENED, they were afraid, and they sent the serjeants, &c. The Itala version of this same MS. has the same reading: so has also the margin of the latter Syriac. If this MS. be correct, the cause of the dismissal of the apostles is at once evident: the earthquake had alarmed the magistrates, and taking it for granted that this was a token of the divine displeasure against them for their unprincipled conduct towards those good men, they wished to get as quietly rid of the business as they could; and therefore sent to dismiss the apostles. Whether this reading be genuine or not, it is likely that it gives the true cause of the magistrates' conduct.

Verse 37. They have beaten us openly—being Romans] St. Paul well knew the Roman laws; and on their violation by the magistrates, he pleads. The Valerial law forbad any Roman citizen to be bound. The Porcian law forbad any to be beaten with rods. "Porcia lex virgas ab omnium civium Romanorum corpore amovit." And by the same law the liberty of a Roman citizen was never put in the power of the lictor. "Porcia lex libertatem civium lictori eripuit." See CICERO Orat. pro Rabirio. Hence as the same author observes, In Verrem, Orat. 5. "Facinus est vinciri civem Romanum, scelus verberari." It is a transgression of the law to bind a Roman citizen: it is wickedness to scourge him. And the illegality of the proceedings of these magistrates, was farther evident in their condemning and punishing them unheard. This was a gross violation of a common maxim in the Roman law. Caussa cognita, possunt multi absolvi, incognita, nemo condemnari potest. Cicero. "Many who are accused of evil may be absolved, when the cause is heard: but unheard, no man can be condemned." Every principle of the law of nature, and the law of nations, was violated in the treatment these holy men met with from the unprincipled magistrates of this city.

Let them come themselves and fetch us out.] The apostles were determined that the magistrates should be humbled for their illegal proceedings: and that the people at large, might see that they had been unjustly condemned; and that the majesty of the Roman people was insulted by the treatment they had received.

Verse 38. They feared when they heard—they were Romans.] They feared, because the Roman law was so constituted, that an insult offered to a citizen, was deemed an insult to the whole Roman people. There is a remarkable addition here, both in the Greek and Latin of the Codex Bezæ. It is as follows: "And when they were come with many of their friends to the prison, they besought them to go out, saying: We were ignorant of your circumstances, that ye were righteous men. And leading them out, they besought them saying, Depart from this city, lest they again make an insurrection against you, and clamour against you."

Verse 40. Entered into the house of Lydia] This was the place of their residence while at Philippi; see ver. 15.

They comforted them, and departed.] The magistrates were sufficiently humbled, and the public at large hearing of this circumstance, must be satisfied of the innocency of the apostles. They therefore, after staying a reasonable time at the house of Lydia, and exhorting the brethren, departed; having as yet to go farther into Macedonia, and to preach the gospel in the most polished city in the world, the city of Athens. See the succeeding chapter.

Great and lasting good was done by this visit to Philippi: a church was there founded, and the members of it did credit to this profession. To them, the apostle who had suffered so much for their sakes, was exceedingly dear; and they evidenced this by their contributions to his support in the times of his necessity. They sent him money twice to Thessalonica, Phil. iv. 16. and once to Corinth, 2 Cor. xi. 9. and long afterwards, when he was prisoner in Rome, Phil. iv. 9, 14, 18. About five or six years after this St. Paul visited Philippi on his way to Jerusalem; and he wrote his epistle to them about ten years after his first journey thither. The first members of the church of Christ in this place were Lydia and her family: and the next in all probability were the jailor and his family. These doubtless became the instruments of bringing many more to the faith: for the false imprisonment and public acquittal of the apostles by the magistrates, must have made their cause popular; and thus the means which were used to prevent the sowing of the seed of life in this city, became the means by which it was sown and established. Thus the wrath of man praised God; and the remainder of it he did restrain. Never were these words more exactly fulfilled than on this occasion.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVII.

Verse 1. Passed through Amphipolis] This city was the metropolis of the first division of Macedonia, as made by Paulus Æmilius; see the note on chap. xvi. 10. It was builded by Cimon the Athenian general, who sent 10,000 Athenians thither as a colony. It stood in an island in the river Strymon, and had its name of Amphipolis, because included between the two grand branches of that river where they empty themselves into the sea, the river being on both sides of the city.

Apollonia] This was another city of Macedonia, between Amphipolis and Thessalonica. It does not appear that St. Paul stopped at any of these cities: and they are only mentioned by the historian as places through which the apostles passed on their way to Thessalonica. It is very likely, that in these cities there were no Jews: and that might have been the reason why the apostles did not preach the gospel there, for we find them almost constantly beginning with the Jews: and the Hellenist Jews, living among the Gentiles, became the medium through which the Gospel of Christ was conveyed to the heathen world.

Thessalonica] This was a celebrated city of Macedonia, situated on what was called the Thermaic gulf. According to Stephanus Byzantinus, it was embellished and enlarged by Philip king of Macedon, who called it Thessalonica, the victory of Thessalia, on account of the victory he obtained there over the Thessalians: but prior to this, it was called Thermæ. But Strabo, Tzetzes and Zonaras, say that it was called Thessalonica, from Thessalonica, wife of Cassander, and daughter of Philip. It is now in possession of the Turks, and is called Salonichi, which is a mere corruption of the original name.

A synagogue of the Jews.] Η συναγωγη THE synagogue; for the article here, must be considered as emphatic, there probably being no other synagogue in any other city in Macedonia. The Jews in different parts, had other places of worship called proseuchas, as we have seen, chap. xvi. 13. at Thessalonica alone, they appear to have had a synagogue.

Verse 2. As his manner was] He constantly offered in unto them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alledging, [a] that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, [b] whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

4 [c] And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and [d] Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

salvation first to the Jews; and for this purpose attended their sabbath-days' meetings at their synagogues.

Verse 3. Opening and alleging] Παρατιθεμενος, proving by citations. His method seems to have been this: 1st. He collected the scriptures that spoke of the Messiah. 2d. He applied these to Jesus Christ; shewing that in him all these scriptures were fulfilled, and that he was the Saviour of whom they were in expectation. He shewed also that the Christ, or Messiah, must needs suffer—that this was predicted, and was an essential mark of the true Messiah. By proving this point he corrected their false notion of a triumphant Messiah; and thus removed the scandal of the cross.

Verse 4. The devout Greeks] That is, Gentiles, who were proselytes to the Jewish religion, so far as to renounce idolatry, and live a moral life, but probably had not received circumcision.

Verse 5. The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them] Instead of this sentence, the most correct MSS. and Versions read simply, προσλαβομενοι δε οι Ιουδαιοι —But the Jews taking, &c. leaving out the words Ζηλωσαντες, απειθουντες, which believed not, moved with envy; these words do not appear to be genuine; there is the strongest evidence against them; and they should be omitted.

Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort] This is not a very intelligible translation. The original is, των αγοραιων τινας ανδρας πονηρους. The word αγοραιοι, which we translate the baser sort, is by Hesychius explained οι εν αγορᾳ αναστρεφομενοι, those who transact business in courts of justice. The same word is used by the Jews in Hebrew letters to signify judges; and אגוריות של גוים agorioth shel goyim, signifies judges of the Gentiles. These were probably a low kind of lawyers, what we would call pettyfoggers, or attorneys without principle, who gave advice for a trifle, and fomented disputes and litigations among the people. The Itala version of the Codex Bezæ, calls them quosdam forenses, certain lawyers. As the Jews, from their small number, could not easily raise up a mob, they cunningly employed those unprincipled men, who probably had a certain degree of juridical credit and authority, to denounce the apostles as seditious men; and this was, very likely, the reason why they employed those in preference to any others. They were such as always attended forensic litigations, waiting for a job; and willing to defend any side of a question for money. They were wicked men of the forensic tribe.

Gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar] And after having made this sedition and disturbance, charged the whole on the peaceable innocent apostles! This is precisely the same way that persecution against the truth and followers of Christ is still carried on. Some wicked man in the parish gets a wicked attorney and a constable to head a mob, which they themselves have raised; and having committed a number of outrages, abusing men and women, haul the minister of Christ to some magistrate who knows as little of his office as he cares for the gospel; they there charge the outrages which themselves have committed, on the preacher and his peaceable hearers; and the peace-maker appointed by a good king, according to the wise and excellent regulations of a sound constitution, forgetting whose minister he is, neither administers justice nor maintains truth; but espousing the part of the mob, assumes, ex officio, the character of a persecutor. The preacher is imprisoned, his hearers fined for listening to that gospel which has not only made them wise unto salvation, but also peaceable and orderly citizens; and which would have had the same effect on the unprincipled magistrate, the parish squire, and the mob, had they heard it with the same reverence and respect. Had I not witnessed such scenes, and such prostitution of justice, I could not have described them.

Assaulted the house of Jason] This was the place where the apostles lodged; and therefore his goods were clear spoil, and his person fair game. This is a case which frequently occurs where the gospel is preached in its spirit and power. And even in this most favoured kingdom, the most scandalous excesses of this kind have been committed, and a justice of the peace has been found to sanction the proceedings; and when an appeal has been made to the laws, a grand jury has been found capable of throwing out the true bill!

A.M.cir.4057. A. D. cir. 55. An. Olymp. cir.CCVIII. 1.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, [a] These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

8 And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

Verse 6. These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also] The very character our forefathers had for preaching that gospel in every part of the land, by which the nation has been illuminated, the mob disciplined into regularity and order; and the kingdom established in the hands of the best of monarchs.

Verse 7. These all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar] Persecutors always strive to affect the lives of the objects of their hatred by accusing them of sedition, or plots against the state.

That there is another king, one Jesus.] How malevolent was this saying! The apostles proclaimed Jesus as king, that is true: but never once insinuated that his kingdom was of this world. The reverse they always maintained.

Verse 8. And they troubled the people and the rulers] It is evident that there was no disposition in either the people or the rulers, to persecute the apostles. But these wicked Jews, by means of the unprincipled wicked lawyers; those lewd fellows of the baser sort, threw the subject into the form of law, making it a state question, in which form the rulers were obliged to notice it: but they shewed their unwillingness to proceed in a matter which they saw proceeded from malice, by letting Jason and his companions go off on bail.

Verse 9. Taken security] Λαβοντες το ικανον, having taken what was sufficient, or satisfactory. Sufficient for the present, to prove that the apostles were upright, peaceable, and loyal men; and that Jason and his friends were the like; and would be, at any time, forth coming to answer for their conduct. Perhaps this is the sense of the phrase in the text.

Verse 10. Sent away Paul and Silas by night] Fearing some further machinations of the Jews and their associates.

Berea.] This was another city of Macedonia, on the same gulf with Thessalonica; and not far from Pella, the birthplace of Alexander the Great.

Verse 11. These were more noble than those in Thessalonica] Ησαν ευγενεστεροι, were of a better race, extraction, or birth, than those at Thessalonica; but the word refers more to their conduct, as a proof of their better disposition, than to their birth, or any peculiar lineal nobility. It was a maxim among the Jews, that "none was of a noble spirit, who did not employ himself in the study of the law." It appears that the Bereans were a better educated, and more polished people than those at Thessalonica; in consequence, far from persecuting: 1. They heard the doctrine of the gospel attentively: 2. they received this doctrine with readiness of mind: when the evidence of its truth appeared to them sufficiently convincing, they had too much dignity of mind to refuse their assent; and too much ingenuousness to conceal their approbation: 3. They searched the scriptures, i. e. of the Old Testament, to see whether these things were so: to see whether the promises and types corresponded with the alleged fulfilment in the person, works, and sufferings of Jesus Christ: 4. They continued in this work; they searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

Verse 12. Therefore many of them believed] From the manner in which they heard, received, and examined the word preached to them, it was not likely they could be deceived. And as it was the truth that was proclaimed to them, it is no wonder that they apprehended, believed and embraced it.

Of honourable women which were Greeks] Probably mere heathens are meant; and these were some of the chief families in the place. Thus we find that the preaching of Paul at Berea, was made the instrument of converting both Jews and Gentiles.

A.M.cir.4057. A. D. cir. 53. An. Olymp. cir. CCVIII. 1.

13 ¶ But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

Verse 13. The Jews of Thessalonica—stirred up the people.] With what implacable malice did these men persecute the gospel! And in the same spirit they continue to the present day, though it is evidently the sole cause of their wretchedness.

Verse 14. To go as it were to the sea] This passage is generally understood to mean that the disciples took Paul towards the sea, as if he had intended to embark, and return to Troas, but with the real design to go to Athens. But it is more likely that his conductors, in order to his greater safety, left the public, or more frequented road, and took him coastwise to Athens. Or by taking a vessel at that part of the sea nearest to Berea, they might have coasted it to Athens, which was quite a possible case; and as we do not hear of his stopping at any place on his journey to preach, it is very probable that he went by sea to this city. Though sleights and feints may be allowable in cases of life and death, yet there does not appear an absolute necessity for any in this case. And as the text does not necessarily point any out, so we need not have recourse to any. I take it for granted, therefore, that Paul went by sea to Athens.

Silas and Timotheus abode there still.] The persecution, it seems, was directed principally against Paul; Lo! he stayeth his rough wind in the day of his east wind. Silas and Timotheus, holy men, were left behind to water the seed which Paul had planted.

Verse 15. Brought him unto Athens] This is one of the most celebrated cities in the world, whether we consider its antiquity, its learning, its political consequence, or the valour of its inhabitants. This city, which was the capital of Attica, and the seat of the Grecian empire, was founded by Cecrops, about A. M. 2447, before Christ 1557, and was called by him Cecropia. About thirteen or fourteen hundred years before Christ, in the reign either of Erichtheus, or Erichtonius, it was called Athens, from Αθηνη, a name of Minerva, to whom it was dedicated; and who was always considered the protectress of the city. The whole city at first was built upon a hill or rock, in the midst of a spacious plain; but, in process of time, the whole plain was covered with buildings, which were called the lower city; while the ancient was called Acropolis, or the upper city. In its most flourishing state this city was not less than one hundred and seventy-eight stadia, or twenty-two Roman miles, in circumference. The buildings of Athens were the most superb, and best executed in the world; but every thing is now in a state of ruin. Mr. Stuart, in his three folio vols. of the Antiquities of Athens, has given correct representations of those that remain; with many geographical notices of much importance. The greatest men that ever lived, scholars, lawyers, statesmen and warriors, were Athenians. Its institutions, laws, and literature, were its own unrivalled boast, and the envy of the world. The city still exists; the Acropolis in a state of comparative repair; but it is now in the hands of the Turks, who have turned the celebrated Parthenion, or temple of Minerva, into a mosque. The inhabitants are reckoned at about 1000. Christianity, planted here by St. Paul, still subsists: and about two-thirds of the inhabitants of Athens are Christians, who have several churches and oratories here: and it is the residence of a Greek bishop, who is a Metropolitan. He who considers the ancient glory of this city, whether in its heathen or Christian antiquity, cannot but sigh over its present state.

Verse 16. He saw the city wholly given to idolatry.] Κατειδωλον, full of idols, as the margin has it, and very properly. Whoever examines the remains of this city, as represented by Mr. Stuart in his Antiquities, already referred to, will be satisfied of the truth of St. Luke's remark: it was full of idols. Bp. Pearce produces a most apposite quotation from Pausanias, which confirms the observation: Ουκ ην αλλαχου τοσαυτα ιδειν ειδωλα. There was no place where so many Idols were to be seen. Paus. in Attic. cap. xvii. 24.

Petronius, who was contemporary with St. Paul, in his Satyr, cap. xvii. makes Quartilla say of Athens: utique nostra regio tam præsentibus plena est numinibus, ut facilius possis Deum quàm Hominem invenire. Our region is so full of deities, that you may more frequently meet with a god than a man.

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this [b] babbler say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods; because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

a Or, full of idols.——b Or, base fellow.

c Or, Mars' hill. It was the highest court in Athens.

Verse 17. Disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews] Proving that Jesus was the Messiah; and with the devout persons, probably heathens, proselyted to the Jewish religion. And in the market: I suppose the αγορα, here means some such place as our exchange, where people of business usually met, and where the philosophers conversed and reasoned. The agora was probably like the Roman forum, and like places of public resort in all countries where people of leisure assembled to converse, hear the news, &c. &c.

Verse 18. Certain philosophers of the Epicureans] These were the followers of Epicurus, who acknowledged no gods except in name, and absolutely denied that they exercised any government over the world or its inhabitants; and that the chief good consisted in the gratification of the appetites of sense. These points the Epicureans certainly held; but it is not clear that Epicurus himself maintained such doctrines.

And of the Stoicks] These did not deny the existence of the gods; but they held that all human affairs were governed by fate. They did not believe that any good was received from the hands of their gods; and considered, as Seneca asserts, that any good and wise man was equal to Jupiter himself. Both these sects agreed in denying the resurrection of the body; and the former, did not believe in the immortality of the soul.

Epicurus, the founder of the Epicurean sect, was born at Athens, about A. M. 3663, before Christ 341.

Zeno, the founder of the Stoic sect, was born in the isle of Cyprus, about thirty years before Christ. His disciples were called Stoics, from the Στοα, a famous portico at Athens, where they studied. Besides these two sects, there were two others which were famous at this time; viz. the Academics and the Peripatetics. The founder of the first was the celebrated Plato; and the founder of the second, the no less famous Aristotle. These sects professed a much purer doctrine than the Epicureans and Stoics; and it does not appear that they opposed the apostles; nor did they enter into public disputations with them. Against the doctrines taught by the Epicureans and Stoics, several parts of St. Paul's discourse, in the following verses, are directly pointed.

What will this babbler say?] The word σπερμολογος, which we translate babbler, signifies literally, a collector of seeds, and is the "name of a small bird that lives by picking up seeds on the road." The epithet came to be applied to persons who collected the sayings of others, without order or method; and detailed them among their companions in the same way. The application of the term to prating, empty, impertinent persons, was natural and easy; and hence it was considered a term of reproach and contempt; and was sometimes used to signify the vilest sort of men.

A setter forth of strange gods] Ξενων δαιμονων, of strange or foreign dæmons. That this was strictly forbidden, both at Rome and Athens; see on chap. xvi. 21.

There was a difference in the heathen theology, between θεος god, and δαιμων dæmon: the θεοι, were such as were gods by nature: the δαιμονια were men who were deified. This distinction seems to be in the mind of these philosophers when they said, that the apostle seemed to be a setter forth of strange dæmons, because he preached unto them Jesus, whom he shewed to be a man suffering and dying; but was afterwards raised to the throne of God. This would appear to them tantamount with their deification of heroes, &c. who had been thus honoured for their especial services to mankind. Horace expresses this in two lines, 2 Epist. i. 5.

Romulus et Liber pater, et cum Castore Pollux, Post ingentia facta, deorum in templa recepti.

"Romulus, father Bacchus, with Castor and Pollux, for their eminent services, have been received into the temples of the gods."

Verse 19. They took him, and brought him unto Areopagus] The Areopagus was a hill not far from the Acropolis, already described, where the supreme court of justice was held; one of the most sacred and reputable courts that had ever existed in the gentile world. It had its name Αρειος παγος Areopagus, or the Hill of Mars, or Ares, from the circumstance, according to poetic fiction, of Mars being tried there by a court of twelve gods, for the murder of Hallirothius, son of Neptune: the meaning of which is, that Ares, a Thessalian prince, having slain Hallirothius, the son of a neighbouring prince, for having violated his daughter Alcippa, was here tried by twelve judges, by whom he was honourably acquitted: in the Athenian laws the death of the ravisher was the regular forfeiture for his crime. The justice administered in this court was so strict and impartial, that it was generally allowed, both the plaintiff and defendant departed satisfied with the decision. "Innocence, when summoned before it, appeared without apprehension; and the guilty, convicted and condemned, retired without daring to murmur." The place in which the judges sat, was uncovered; and they held their sitting by night, to the end that nothing might distract their minds from the great business on which they were to decide; and that the sight of the accused might not affect them either with pity or aversion. In reference to this, all pleaders were strictly forbidden to use any means whatever to excite either pity or aversion; or to affect the passions; every thing being confined to simple relation, or statement of facts. When the two parties were produced before the court, they were placed between the bleeding members of victims slain on the occasion, and were obliged to take an oath, accompanied with horrible imprecations on themselves and families, that they would testify nothing but truth. These parties called to witness the Eumenides, or Furies, the punishers of the perjured in the infernal world; and, to make the greater impression on the mind of the party swearing, the temple dedicated to these infernal deities, was contiguous to the court, so that they appeared as if witnessing the oaths, and recording the appeal made to themselves. When the case was fully heard, the judges gave their decision by throwing down their flint pebbles, on two boards or tables, one of which was for the condemnation, the other, for the acquittal of the person in question.

Verse 20. Thou bringest—strange things to our ears] The doctrine of the apostle was different from any they had ever heard: it was wholly spiritual and divine; thus it was strange; it was contrary to their customs and manners; and thus it was strange also. As it spoke much of the exaltation and glory of Jesus Christ, they supposed him to be a setter forth of strange gods; and therefore, on the authority of the laws, which forbad the introduction of any new deities, or modes of worship, he was called before the Areopagus.

Verse 21. All the Athenians, and strangers which were there] As Athens was renowned for its wisdom and learning, it became a place of public resort for philosophers, and students from different parts of the then civilized world. The flux of students was in consequence great; and these having much leisure time, would necessarily be curious to know what was passing in the world, and would frequently assemble together in places of public resort, to meet with strangers just come to the city; and either, as St. Luke says, to tell, or hear some new thing.

"The Athenian writers give the same account of their fellow-citizens. DEMOSTHENES, in his reply to Epist. Philippi, represents the Athenians as πυθανομενοι κατα την αγοραν, ει τι λεγεται νεωτερον; enquiring in the place of public resort, if there are any NEWS? We find, likewise, that when Thucydides, iii. 38. had said, μετα καινοτητος μεν λογου απατασθαι αριστον, ye are excellent in suffering yourselves to be deceived by NOVELTY of speech; the old scholiast makes this remark upon it, (almost in the words of St. Luke,) ταυτα προς τους Αθηναιους αινιτεται, ουδεν τι μελετωντας πλην λεγειν τι και ακουειν καινον; he here blames the Athenians, who made it their only business to tell and hear something that was NEW."—Bp. Pearce. This is a striking feature of the city of London in the present day The itch for news, which generally argues a worldly, shallow, or unsettled mind, is wonderfully prevalent: even ministers of the gospel, negligent of their sacred function, are become in this sense Athenians; so that the Book of God is neither read nor studied with half the avidity and spirit as a newspaper. These persons, forgetful not only of their calling, but of the very spirit of the gospel, read the account of a battle with the most violent emotions; and, provided the victory falls to their favourite side, they exult and triumph in proportion to the number of thousands that have been slain! It is no wonder if such become political preachers, and their sermons be no better than husks for swine. To such the hungry sheep look up, and are not fed. God pity such miserable Athenians, and direct them to a more suitable employment!

Verse 22. Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill] That is, in the midst of the judges, who sat in the Areopagus.

Ye are too superstitious.] Κατα παντα ως δεισιδαιμονεστερους υμας θεωρω; I perceive that in all respects ye are greatly addicted to religious practices; and, as a religious people, you will candidly hear what I have got to say in behalf of that worship which I practise and recommend. To the unknown God.] ΑΓΝΩΣΤΩ ΘΕΩ. That there was an altar at Athens thus inscribed, we cannot doubt after such a testimony; though St. Jerome questions it in part; for, he says, St. Paul found the inscription in the plural number, but because he would not appear to acknowledge a plurality of gods, he quoted it in the singular; verum, quia Paulus non pluribus Diis indigebat ignotis, sed uno tantúm ignoto Deo, singulari verbo usus est. Epist ad Magn. This is a most foolish saying: had Paul done so, how much would such a begging of the question have prejudiced his defence in the minds of his intelligent judges! Œcumenius intimates that St. Paul does not give the whole of the inscription, which this famous altar bore; and which he says was the following, Θεοις Ασιας, και Ευρωπης, και Λιβυης, Θεῳ αγνωστῳ, και ξενῳ. To the Gods of Asia, and Europe and Africa: to the unknown and strange God. Several eminent men suppose that this unknown god was the God of the Jews: and as his name יהוה was considered by the Jews as ineffable, the Θεος αγνωστος, may be considered as the anonymous god, the god whose name was not known, and must not be pronounced, That there was such a god acknowledged at Athens, we have full proof. Lucian in his Philopatris, cap. xiii. p. 769. uses this form of an oath: νη τον αγνωστον τον εν Αθηναις, I swear by the unknown god at Athens. And again cap. xxix. 180. ημεις δε τον εν Αθηναις αγνωστον εφευροντες, και προσκυνησαντες χειρας εις ουρανον εκτειναντες τουτω ευχαριστησομεν ως καταξιωθεντες, &c. we have found out the unknown god at Athens—and worshipped him with our hands stretched up to heaven; and we will give thanks unto him, as being thought worthy to be subject to this power. Bp. Pearce properly asks, Is it likely that Lucian speaking thus (whether in jest or in earnest) should not have had some notion of there being at Athens, an altar inscribed to the unknown god? Philostratus, in vit. Apollon. vi. 3. notices the same thing, though he appears to refer to several altars thus inscribed: και ταυτα Αθηνησι ου και αγνωστων Θεων Βωμοι ιδρυν τινι, And this at Athens, where there are even altars to the unknown gods. Pausanias in Attic. cap. i. p. 4. edit. Kuhn. says, that at Athens there are Βωμοι Θεων των ονομαζομενων αγνωστων, altars of gods which are called The unknown ones. Minutius Felix says of the Romans, aras extruunt etiam ignotis numinibus. "They even build altars to unknown divinities." And Tertullian, contra Marcion, says, Invenio planè Diis ignotis aras prostituas; sed Attica idolatria est. "I find altars allotted to the worship of unknown gods: but this is an Attic idolatry. Now though in these last passages, both gods and altars are spoken of in the plural number, yet it is reasonable to suppose, that on each, or upon some one of them, the inscription αγνωστῳ Θεῳ, To the unknown god, was actually found. The thing had subsisted long, and had got from Athens to Rome in the days of Tertullian and Minutius Felix. See Bp. Pearce and Dr. Cudworth, to whose researches this note is much indebted.

Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship] There is here a fine paranomasia, or play on the words. The apostle tells them, that (on their system) they were a very religious people—that they had an altar inscribed αγνωστῳ Θεῳ to the unknown God: him therefore, says he, whom αγνοουντες ye unknowingly worship, I proclaim to you. Assuming it as a truth, that as the true God was not known by them, and that there was an altar dedicated to the unknown god, that his God was that god, whose nature and operations he now proceeded to declare. By this fine turn he eluded the force of that law which made it a capital offence to introduce any new god into the state; and of the breach of which, he was charged ver. 18. and thus he shewed that he was bringing neither new god, nor new worship among them; but only explaining the worship of one already acknowledged by the state, though not as yet known.

Verse 24. God that made the world, &c.] Though the Epicureans held that the world was not made by God, but was the effect of a fortuitous concourse of atoms, yet this opinion was not popular; and the Stoics held the contrary: St. Paul assumes as an acknowledged truth, that there was a God who made the world, and all things. 2. That this God could not be confined within temples made with hands, as he was the Lord, or governor of heaven and earth. 3. That by fair consequence, the gods whom they worshipped, which were shut up in their temples, could not be this God, and must be less than the places in which they were contained. This was a strong decisive stroke against the whole system of the Grecian idolatry.

d Deut. 32. 8.——e Rom. 1. 20.

Verse 25. Neither is worshipped with men's hands] This is an indirect stroke against making of images, and offering of sacrifices; he is not worshipped with human hands, as if he needed any thing, or required to be represented under a particular form or attitude; nor has he required victims for his support; for it is impossible that he should need any thing, who gives himself, being, form and life to all creatures.

Giveth—life, and breath, and all things] These words are elegantly introduced by St. Paul: God gives life, because he is the fountain of it: he gives breath, the faculty of breathing or respiration, by which this life is preserved: and though breathing, or respiration, be the act of the animal, yet the πνοην, the faculty of breathing, and extracting from the atmosphere, what serves as a pabulum of life, is given by the influence of God: and the continued power thus to respire, and extract that pure oxygen gas, which is so evident a support of animal life, is as much the continued gift of God, as life itself is. But as much more is necessary to keep the animal machine in a state of repair, God gives the τα παντα, all the other things which are requisite for this great and important purpose; that the end for which life was given may be fully answered. St. Paul also teaches, that Divine worship is not enacted and established for God, but for the use of his creatures; he needs nothing that man can give him: for man has nothing but what he has received from the hand of his Maker.

Verse 26. Hath made of one blood] In AB. some others, with the Coptic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, Itala, Clement, and Bede, the word αιματος, blood, is omitted. He hath made of one (meaning Adam) all nations of men: but αιμα blood, is often used by the best writers, for race, stock, kindred, so Homer, Iliad. vi. ver. 211.

Ταυτης τοι γενεης τε και αιματος ευχομαι ειναι.
I glory in being of that same race and blood.

So Virgil, Æn. viii. ver. 142. says,

Sic genus amborum scindit se SANGUINE ab uno.
Thus, from one stock, do both our stems divide.

See many examples of this form in Kypke. The Athenians had a foolish notion, that they were self-produced, and were the aboriginals of mankind. Lucian ridicules this opinion, Αθηναιοι φασι τους πρωτους ανθρωπους εκ της Αττικης αναφυναι, καθαπερ τα λαχανα. The Athenians say that the first men sprung up in Attica, like radishes. Luc. Philopseud. 3.

To dwell on all the face of the earth] God in his wisdom produced the whole human race from one man; and having in his providence scattered them over the face of the earth, by shewing them that they sprang from one common source, has precluded all those contentious wars and bloodshed, which would necessarily have taken place among the nations of the world, as each in its folly might have arrogated to itself a higher and more excellent origin than another.

And hath determined the times afore appointed] Instead of προτεταγμενους καιρους, the times afore appointed, ABDE. and more than forty others, with both the Syriac, all the Arabic, the Coptic, Æthiopic, MS. Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, read προστεταγμενους καιρους, the appointed times. The difference between the two words is this, προτασσειν signifies to place before others, but προστασσειν is to command, decree, appoint. The προστεταγμενοι καιροι, are the constituted or decreed times; that is, the times appointed by his providence on which the several families should go to those countries where his wisdom designed they should dwell. See Gen. x. and see Pearce and Rosenmuller.

And the bounds of their habitation.] Every family being appointed to a particular place, that their posterity might possess it for the purposes for which infinite wisdom and goodness gave them their being, and the place of their abode. Every nation had its lot thus appointed by God, as truly as the Israelites had the land of Canaan. But the removal of the Jews from their own land, shews that a people may forfeit their original inheritance: and thus the Canaanites have been supplanted by the Jews: the Jews by the Saracens; the Saracens by the Turks; the Greeks by the Romans: the Romans by the Goths and Vandals; and so of others. See the notes on Gen. xi.

Verse 27. That they should seek the Lord.] This is a conclusion drawn from the preceding statement. God, who is infinitely great, and self-sufficient, has manifested himself as the maker of the world, the creator, preserver, and governor of men. He has assigned them their portion, and dispensed to them their habitations, and the various blessings of his providence, to the end that they should seek him in all his works.

Feel after him] Ψηλαφησειαν αυτον, That they might grope after him, as a person does his way, who is blind or blindfolded. The Gentiles, who had not a revelation, must grope after God, as the principle of spiritual life, that they might find him to be a Spirit, and the source of all intellectual happiness: and the apostle seems to state that none need despair of finding this fountain of goodness, because he is not far from every one of us.

Verse 28. For in him we live, and move, and have our being] He is the very source of our existence: the principle of life comes from him: the principle of motion also, comes from him; one of the most difficult things in nature to be properly apprehended: and a strong proof of the continual presence and energy of the Deity.

And have our being] Και εσμεν, and we are: we live in him, move in him, and are in him. Without him we not only can do nothing: but without him we are nothing. We are, i. e. we continue to be; because of his continued present all-pervading and supporting energy. There is a remarkable saying in Synopsis Sohar, p. 104. "The holy blessed God never does evil to any man. He only withdraws his gracious presence from him, and then he necessarily perisheth." This is philosophical, and correct.

As certain also of your own poets] Probably he means not only Aratus, in whose poem intituled Phænomena, the words quoted by St. Paul are to be found litteratim, του γαρ και γενος εσμεν; but also Cleanthes, in whose Hymn to Jupiter, the same words (Εκ σου γαρ γενος εσμεν) occur. But the sentiment is found in several others, being very common among the more enlightened Philosophers. By saying your own poets, he does not mean poets born at Athens; but merely Grecian poets, Aratus and Cleanthes being chief.

We are also his offspring.] Του γαρ και γενος, εσμεν. The Phænomena of Aratus, in which these words are found, begins thus:

Εκ Διος αρχωμεσθα, τον ουδεποτε ανδρες εωμεν
Αρρητον· μεσται δε Διος πασαι μεν αγυιαι,
Πασαι δ' ανθρωπων αγοραι· μεστη δε θαλασσα
Και λιμενες· παντα δε Διος κεχρημεθα παντες·
ΤΟΥ ΓΑΡ ΚΑΙ ΓΕΝΟΣ ΕΣΜΕΝ· ὁ δ' ηπιος ανθρωποισι
Δεξια σημαινει, κ. τ. λ.

With Jove we must begin; nor from Him rove;
Him always praise, for all is full of Jove!
He fills all places where mankind resort,
The wide spread sea, with ev'ry shelt'ring port.
Jove's presence fills all space, upholds this ball;
All need his aid; his pow'r sustains us all,
For we his offspring are; and He in love

By well tim'd culture, shall repay our toil, &c. Green.

Aratus was a Cilician, one of St. Paul's own countrymen, and with his writings St. Paul was undoubtedly well acquainted, though he had flourished about 300 years before that time.

Verse 29. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, &c.] This inference of the apostle was very strong and conclusive; and his argument runs thus: "If we are the offspring of God, he cannot be like those images of gold, silver, and stone, which are formed by the art, and device of man; for the parent must resemble his offspring. Seeing, therefore, that we are living and intelligent beings, HE, from whom we have derived that being, must be living and intelligent. It is necessary also that the object of religious worship should be much more excellent, than the worshipper; but a man is, by innumerable degrees, more excellent than an image made out of gold, silver, or stone; and yet, it would be impious to worship a man: how much more so, to worship these images as Gods! Every man in the Areopagus must have felt the power of this conclusion; and taking it for granted that they had felt it, he proceeds:

Verse 30. The times of this ignorance God winked at] He who has an indisputable right to demand the worship of all his creatures, has mercifully overlooked those acts of idolatry, which have disgraced the world and debased man; but now, as he has condescended to give a fuller revelation of himself, he commands, as the sovereign, all men, every where, over every part of his dominions, to repent, μετανοειν, to change their views, designs, and practices; because he hath ap- pointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness; and as justice will then be done, no sinner, no persevering idolater, shall escape punishment.

The word υπεριδειν, which we translate to wink at, signifies simply to look over; and seems to be here used in the sense of passing by, not particularly noticing it. So God overlooked or passed by the times of heathenish ignorance: as he had not given them the talent of Divine Revelation, so he did not require the improvement of that talent; but now, as he had given them that revelation, he would no longer overlook, or pass by, their ignorance or its fruits.

Verse 31. He hath appointed a day] He has fixed the time in which he will judge the world, though he has not revealed this time to man.

By that man whom he hath ordained] He has also appointed the judge, by whom the inhabitants of the earth are to be tried.

Whereof he hath given assurance] Πιστιν παρασχων πασιν, having given to all this indubitable proof, that Jesus Christ shall judge the world, by raising him from the dead. The sense of the argument is this: "Jesus Christ, whom we preach as the Saviour of men, has repeatedly told his followers that he would judge the world; and has described to us, at large, the whole of the proceedings of that awful time, Matt. 25. 31, &c. John v. 25. Though he was put to death by the Jews, and thus he became a victim for sin, yet God raised him from the dead. By raising him from the dead, God has set his seal to the doctrines he has taught: one of these doctrines is, that he shall judge the world; his resurrection established by the most incontrovertible evidence, is therefore a proof, an incontestible proof, that he shall judge the world, according to his own declaration."

Verse 32. When they heard of the resurrection, &c.] Paul undoubtedly had not finished his discourse: it is likely that he was about to have proclaimed salvation through Christ crucified; but on hearing of the resurrection of the body, the assembly instantly broke up; the Epicureans mocking, εχλευαζον began to laugh; and the Stoics saying they would take another opportunity to hear him on that subject. And thus the assembly became dissolved, before the apostle had time to finish his discourse; or to draw all the conclusions he had designed from the premises he had laid down. St. Stephen's discourse was interrupted in a similar manner. See chap. vii. 54. and the note there.

Verse 33. So Paul departed from among them] He could not be convicted of having done any thing contrary to the law; and when the assembly broke up, he was permitted to go about his own business.

Verse 34. Certain men clave unto him] Became affectionately united to him; and believed the doctrines he had preached.

Dionyisus the Areopagite] There can be no doubt that this man was one of the judges of this great court; but whether the president or otherwise we cannot tell. Humanly speaking his conversion must have been an acquisition of considerable importance to the Christian religion; for no person was a judge in the Areopagus, who had not borne the office of archon, or chief governor of the city; and none bore the office of judge in this court, who was not of the highest reputation among the people, for his intelligence and exemplary conduct. In some of the popish writers, we find a vast deal of groundless conjectures concerning Dionysius, who, they say, was first bishop of Athens, and raised to that dignity by Paul himself; that he was a martyr for the truth; that Damaris was his wife, &c. &c. concerning which the judicious Calmet says, Tout cela est de peu d' autorité. "All this has little foundation."

1. In addition to what has been said in the notes on this subject, I may add, the original word δεισιδαιμονεστερος, from δεισω, I fear, and δαιμων, a dæmon, signifies, "greatly addicted to the worship of the invisible powers:" for, as the word δαιμων signifies either a good or evil spirit; and δεισω, I fear, signifies not only to fear in general, but also to pay religious reverence; the word must be here taken in its best sense, and so undoubtedly St. Paul intended it should; and so, doubtless, his audience understood him: for it would have been very imprudent to have charged them with superstition, which must have been extremely irritating, in the very commencement of a discourse in which he was to defend himself, and prove the truth of the Christian Religion. He stated a fact, acknowledged by the best Greek writers; and he reasoned from that fact. The fact was that the Athenians were the most religious people in Greece, or, in other words, the most idolatrous: that there were in that city more altars, temples, sacrifices, and religious services, than in any other place. And, independently of the authorities which may be quoted in support of this assertion, we may at once perceive the probability of it from the consideration that Athens was the grand University of Greece. That here, philosophy, and every thing relating to the worship of the gods, was taught; and that religious services to the deities must be abundant. Look at our own universities of Oxford and Cambridge; here are more prayers, more religious acts and services, than in any other places in the nation: and very properly so. These were founded to be seminaries of learning and religion; and their very statutes suppose religion to be essential to learning: and their founders were in general religious characters; and endowed them for religious purposes. These, therefore, are not superstitious services, for as superstition signifies "unnecessary fears, or scruples in religion; observance of unnecessary and uncommanded rites or practices,"—JOHNSON—it cannot be said of those services which are founded on the positive command of God, for the more effectual help to religious feelings, or as a preventative of immoral practices. I consider the Athenians, therefore, acting in conformity to their own laws and religious institutions; and Paul grants that they were much addicted to religious performances: this he pays as a compliment, and then takes occasion to shew that their religion was defective; they had not a right object of devotion; they did not know the true God; the true God was, to them, the unknown God; and this, an altar in their own city acknowledged. He therefore began to declare that glorious Being to them whom they ignorantly worshipped. As they were greatly addicted to religious services, and acknowledged that there was a Being to them unknown, and to whom they thought it necessary to erect an altar; they must, consistently with their character as a religious people, and with their own concession in the erection of this altar, hear quietly, patiently, and candidly, a discourse on that God whose being they acknowledged, but whose nature they did not know. Thus St. Paul, by acknowledging their religious disposition, and seizing the fact of the altar being inscribed to the unknown God, assumed a right which not a philosopher, orator, or judge, in the Areopagus could dispute, of bringing the whole subject of Christianity before them, as he was now brought to his trial, and put on his defence. The whole of this fine advantage, this grand stroke of rhetorical prudence, is lost from the whole account, by our translation, ye are in all things too superstitious, thus causing the defendant to commence his discourse with a charge, which would have roused the indignation of the Greeks, and precluded the possibility of their hearing any thing he had to say in defence of his conduct.

2. That the original word, on the right interpretation of which I have laid so much stress, is taken in a good sense, and signifies religious worship and reverence, I shall shew by several proofs; some of which may be seen in Mr. Parkhurst, under the word Δεισιδαιμονια, which Suidas explains by ευλαβεια περι τον Θεον, reverence towards the Deity. And Hesychius, by φοβοθεια, the fear of God. "In this good sense, it is often used by Diodorus Siculus. Herodotus says of Orpheus, he led men εις δεισιδαιμονιαν to be religious; and exhorted them επι το ευσεβειν to piety; where it is manifest that δεισιδαιμονια must mean religion, and not superstition. But what is more to the present purpose, the word is used by Josephus, not only where a heathen calls the pagan religion δεισιδαιμονιας, (Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 5. s. 3.) or where the Jewish religion is spoken of by this name, in several edicts that were made in its favour by the Romans, as in Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 10. s. 13, 14, 16, 18, 19.) but also where the historian is expressing his own thoughts in his own words: thus of king Manasseh, after his repentance and restoration, he says, εσπουδαζεν πασῃ περι αυτον (Θεον) τῃ δεισιδαιμονιᾳ χρησθαι, he endeavoured to behave in the MOST RELIGIOUS manner towards God.—Antiq. lib. x. cap. 3. s. 2. And speaking of a riot that happened among the Jews on occasion of a Roman soldier's burning the book of the law; he observes that the Jews were drawn together on this occasion, τῃ δεισιδαιμονιᾳ, by their religion, as if it had been by an engine; οργανῳ τινι.—De Bell. lib. ii. cap. 12. s. 2." It would be easy to multiply examples of this use of the word; but the Reader may refer, if necessary, to Wetstein, Pearce and others.

3. That the Athenians were reputed in this respect, a devout people, the following quotations may prove. Pausanias, in Attic. cap. xvii. p. 39. Edit. Kuhn. says, that the Athenians were not only more humane, αλλα και εις θεους ευσεβειν, but more devout towards the gods; and again, he says, δηλα τῃ εναργως οσοις πλεον τι ετερων ευσεβειας μετεστιν, it appears plainly how much they exceed others in the worship of the gods; and in cap. xxiv. p. 56, he says Αθηναιοις περισσοτερον τι η τοις αλλοις, ες τα θεια εστι σπουδης, that the Athenians are abundantly more solicitous about divine matters than others. And Josephus seals this testimony by the assertion, Contr. Apion, ii. 10. Αθηναιους ευσεβεστατους των Ελληνων παντες λεγουσι; every body says that the Athenians are the most religious people of all the Greeks.—See Bp. Pearce. From all these authorities, it is palpable, that St. Paul must have used the term in the sense for which I have contended.

4. In the preceding notes, I have taken for granted that Paul was brought to the Areopagus to be tried on the charge of setting forth strange gods. Bp. Warburton denies that he was brought before the Areopagus on any charge whatever; and that he was taken there that the judges might hear him explain his doctrine, and not to defend himself against a charge, which he does not once notice in the whole of his discourse. But there is one circumstance that the bishop has not noticed, viz. that St. Paul was not permitted to finish his discourse, and therefore could not come to those particular parts of the charge brought against him, which the bishop thinks he must have taken up most pointedly, had he been accused, and brought there to make his defence. The truth is, we have little more than the apostle's exordium; as he was evidently interrupted in the prosecution of his defence. As to the supposition that he was brought by philosophers to the Areopagus, that they might the better hear him explain his doctrine, it appears to have little ground; for they might have heard him to as great advantage in any other place: nor does it appear that this court was ever used, except for the solemn purposes of justice. But the question, whether Paul was brought to the Areopagus that he might be tried by the judges of that court, Bishop Pearce answers with his usual judgment and discrimination. He observes: 1. "We are told that one effect of his preaching was, that he converted Dionysius the Areopagite, ver. 34.; and this seems to shew that he, who was a judge of that court, was present; and if so, probably other judges were present also. 2. If they who brought Paul to Areopagus wanted only to satisfy their curiosity, they had an opportunity of doing that in the market, mentioned ver. 17. Why then did they remove him to another place? 3. When it is said that they brought Paul to Areopagus, it is said that they took him, επιλαβομενοι αυτον, or, rather, they laid hold on him, as the Greek word is translated, Luke xxiii. 26. and chap. xx. 20, 26. and as it ought to have been here, in chap. xxi. 30, 33. and especially in this latter verse. 4. It is observable that Paul, in his whole discourse at the Areopagus, did not make the least attempt to move the passions of his audience, as he did when speaking to Felix, chap. xxiv. 25. and to Agrippa, chap. xxvi. 29. but he used plain and grave reasoning, to convince his hearers of the soundness of his doctrine.

"Now we are told by Quinctilian, in Inst. Orat. ii. 16. that Athenis actor movere affectus vetabatur: the actor was forbidden to endeavour to excite the passions. And again, in vi. 1. that Athenis movere etiam per præconem prohibebatur orator: among the Athenians, the orator was prohibited by the public crier to move the passions of his auditory. And this is confirmed by Philostratus in præm. lib. i. de Vit. Sophist.; and by Athenæus, in his Deipnosoph. xiii. 6. If, therefore, it was strictly forbidden at Athens to move the affections of the courts of justice, especially in that of the Areopagus, we see a good reason why Paul made no attempt in that way; and at the same time, we learn how improperly the painters have done all they could, when they represent Paul speaking at Athens, endeavouring both by his looks and gestures to raise those several passions in his hearers, which their faces are meant to express."

I have only to add here, that though St. Paul did not endeavour to excite any passions in his address at the Areopagus, yet each sect of the philosophers would feel themselves powerfully affected by every thing in his discourse which tended to shew the emptiness or falsity of their doctrines; and though he attempted to move no passion; yet, from these considerations, their passions would be strongly moved. And this is the idea which the inimitable Raphael took up in his celebrated Carton on this subject; and which his best copier, Mr. Thomas Halloway, has not only engraved to the life, but has also described in language only inferior to the Carton itself: and as it affords no mean comment on the preceding discourse, my readers will be pleased to find it here.

By the Cartons of Raphael, we are to understand certain Scripture pieces painted by Raphael d'Urbino, and now preserved in the palace at Hampton-court. They are allowed to be chefs d'œuvre in their kind. They have been often engraved, but never so as to give an adequate representation of the matchless originals, till Mr. Thomas Holloway, who has completely seized the spirit of the artist, undertook this most laborious work, in which he has been wholly engaged for several years; and in which he has, for some time past, associated with himself Messrs. Slann and Webb, two excellent artists, who had formerly been his own pupils. The Carton to which I have referred, has been sometime finished, and delivered to the subscribers; and with it that elegant description, from which the following is a copious extract:

"The eye no sooner glances on this celebrated Carton, than it is immediately struck with the commanding attitude of the speaker, and the various emotions excited in his hearers.

"The interest which the first appearance of St. Paul at Athens had occasioned, was not calculated to subside on a sudden; his doctrines were too new, and his zeal too ardent. From the multitude it ascended to the philosophers. The Epicureans and Stoics particularly assailed him. Antecedently to the scene described in the picture, among the various characters already encountered by the apostle, many undoubtedly, in their speculations upon divine subjects, had often imagined a sublimer religion than that commonly acknowledged: such, therefore, would make it their business to hear him again. Others, to whom truth was of less value than the idle amusement of vain disquisition, felt no other motive than curiosity. By far the greater part, however, obstinately bigoted to their particular tenets, and abhorring innovation, regarded him as impious, or a mere babbler: these also wished to hear him again, but with no other than the insidious view, that, by a more regular and explicit profession of his doctrines, he might expose his own absurdities, or render himself obnoxious to the state. The drapery accords with the majesty of the figure; and the light is so managed, especially on the arms and hands, as greatly to assist the energy of the action.

"The painter has proceeded, from the warmth of full conviction, through various gradations, to the extremes of malignant prejudice and invincible begotry.

" In the foreground, on the right, is Dionysius, who is recorded to have embraced the new religion. With the utmost fervour in his countenance, and with a kind of sympathetic action and unconscious eagerness, he advances a step nearer. His eye is fixed on the apostle; he longs to tell him his conversion, already perhaps preceded by conviction wrought in his mind by the reasonings of the sacred teacher, on previous occasions in the synagogue, and in the forum or market-place. He appears not only touched with the doctrines he receives, but expresses an evident attachment to his instructor: he would become his host and protector.

" This figure is altogether admirable. The gracefulness of the drapery and of the hair; the masculine beauty of the features; the perspective drawing of the arms; the life and sentiment of the hands, the right one especially, are inimitable.

" Behind is Damaris, mentioned with him as a fellow-believer. This is the only female in the composition; but the painter has fully availed himself of the character, in assisting his principle of contrast; an excellence, found in all the works of Raphael. Her discreet distance, her modest deportment, her pious and diffident eye, discovering a degree of awe, the decorum and arrangement of her train, all interest the mind in her favour.

" Next to these, but at some distance, is a Stoic. The first survey of this figure conveys the nature of his peculiar philosophy, dignity and austerity. Raphael has well understood what he meant in this instance to illustrate. His head is sunk in his breast; his arms are mechanically folded; his eyes, almost shut, glance towards the ground: he is absorbed in reflection. In spite of his stoicism, discomposure and perplexity invade his soul, mixed with a degree of haughty mortification.

" Sir Joshua Reynolds has observed, that ' the same idea is continued through the whole figure, even to the drapery, which is so closely muffled about him, that even his hands are not seen;' and that, ' by this happy correspondence between the expression of the countenance and the disposition of the parts, the figure appears to think from head to foot.'

" Behind the Stoic are two young men, well contrasted in expression: anger in the elder, and in the other youthful pride, half abashed, are finely discriminated.

" Beyond, in the same continued half-circle with the Stoic, is perhaps exhibited the most astonishing contrast ever imagined; that of inexorable sternness and complete placidity.

" Of the two figures, the first is denominated a Cynic, who, disappointed in his expectation of the ridiculous appearance which he conceived the apostle, when confronted, would make among them, abandons his mind to rage. His formidable forehead concentrates its whole expression: with a fixed frown and threatening eye, he surveys the object of his indignation. He alone would engage to confute him, or punish his temerity. His eager impatience and irritation are not discovered in his features only; he raises his heel from the ground, and leans with a firmer pressure on his crutch, which seems to bend beneath him.

" Pass from him to the more polished Epicurean. This figure exhibits perfect repose of body and mind: no passions agitate the one; no action discomposes the other. His hands, judiciously concealed beneath beautiful drapery, shew there can be no possible motion or employment for them. His feet seem to sleep upon the ground. His countenance, which is highly pleasing, and full of natural gentleness, expresses only a smile of pity at the fancied errors of the apostle, mingled with delight derived from his eloquence. He waits with an inclined head, in passive and serene expectation. If a shrewd intelligence is discovered in his eyes, it is too gentle to disturb the general expression of tranquillity.

" Behind are two other young men: the first discovers a degree of superciliousness with his vexation; his companion is more disgusted, and more morose.

" These, and the two young figures previously described, are not introduced merely to fill up the group; they may be intended as pupils to the philosophers before them, though by some considered as young Romans, who have introduced themselves from ennui or curiosity.

" Beyond is a character, in whose mind the force of truth and eloquence appears to have produced conviction; but pride, vanity, or self-interest, impel him to dissemble. His finger, placed upon the upper lip, shews that he has imposed silence upon himself.

" In the centre is seated a group from the academy. The skill of Raphael in this instance is eminent. These figures are not only thrown into shade, to prevent their interference with the principal figure; but, from their posture, they contribute to its elevation; and at the same time vary the line of the standing group.

" It seems as if the old philosopher in profile, on the left, had offered some observations on the apostle's address; and that he was eagerly listening to the reply of his sage friend, in whose features we behold more of the spirit of mild philosophy. The action of his fingers denotes his habit of reasoning, and regularity of argument. The middle figure behind appears to be watching the effect which his remarks would produce.

" The action of the young man, pointing to the apostle, characterizes the keen susceptibility and impetuosity of his age. His countenance expresses disgust, approaching to horror. The other young man turns his head round, as though complaining of unreasonable interruption. The drapery of both the front figures in this group is finely drawn: the opening action of the knees in the one, is beautifully followed and described by the folds: in the other, the compression, in consequence of the bent attitude, is equally executed; the turn of the head gives grace and variety to the figure.

"The head introduced beyond, and rather apart, is intended to break the two answering lines of the dark contour of the apostle's drapery, and the building in the back-ground.

"In the group placed behind the apostle, the mind is astonished at the new character of composition. The finest light imaginable is thrown upon the sitting figure; and as necessary a mass of shade is cast upon the two others.

"It is difficult to ascertain what or whom Raphael meant by that corpulent and haughty personage wearing the cap. His expression, however, is evident: malice and vexation are depicted in his countenance; his stride, and the action of his hand, are characteristic of his temperament.

"The figure standing behind is supposed to be a Magician. His dark hair and beard, which seemed to have been neglected, and the keen mysterious gaze of his eye, certainly exhibit a mind addicted to unusual studies. Under him, the only remaining figure, is one who listens with malignant attention, as though intending to report every thing. He has the aspect of a spy. His eye is full of danger to the apostle; and he crouches below, that he may not be disturbed by communication.

"If this figure be considered with reference to Dionysius, it may be remarked that Raphael has not only contrasted his characters, but even the two ends of his picture. By this means the greatest possible force is given to the subject. At the first survey, the subordinate contrasts may escape the eye, but these greater oppositions must have their effect.

"When from this detailed display of the carton, the eye again glances over the whole subject, including the dignity of the architecture; the propriety of the statue of Mars, which faces his temple; the happy management of the landscape, with the two conversation figures; the result must be, an acknowledgement, that, in this one effort of art is combined all that is great in drawing, in expression, and in composition." Holloway's description of Raphael's Carton of Paul preaching at Athens.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Paul departed from Athens] How long he staid here we cannot tell; it is probable it could not be less than three months; but, finding that the gospel made little progress among the Athenians, he resolved to go to Corinth.

CORINTH was situated on the isthmus, that connects Peloponnesus to Attica; and was the capital of all Achaia, or Peloponnesus. It was most advantageously situated for trade; for, by its two ports, the Lecheum and Cenchrea, it commanded the commerce both of the Ionian and Ægean sea. It was destroyed by the Romans under Mummius, about one hundred and forty-six years before Christ, in their wars with Attica; but was rebuilt by Julius Cæsar, and became one of the most considerable cities of Greece. Like other kingdoms and states, it has undergone a variety of revolutions; and now, under the government of the Turks, is greatly reduced, its whole population amounting only to between thirteen and fourteen thousand souls. It is about forty-six miles East of Athens, and three hundred and forty-two S. W. of Constantinople. Its public buildings were very superb; and there the order, called the Corinthian Order, in architecture, took its rise.

Verse 2. A certain Jew named Aquila] Some have supposed that this Aquila was the same with the Onkelos mentioned by the Jews. See the article in Wolfius, Bibl. Hebr. Vol. II. p. 1147. We have no evidence that this Jew and his wife were at this time converted to the Christian religion, Their conversion was most likely the fruit of St. Paul's lodging with them—Pontus. See the note on chap. ii. 9.

Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome] This edict of the Roman emperor is not mentioned by Josephus; but it is probably the same to which Suetonius, refers in his life of Claudius; where he says, Judæos, impulsore Chresto, assiduè tumultuantes, Româ expulit. "He expelled the Jews from Rome, as they were making continual insurrections, under their leader Chrestus." Who this Chrestus was, we cannot tell; probably Suetonius meant Christ; but this I confess does not appear to me likely. There might have been a Jew of the name of Chrestus, who had made some disturbances; and in consequence, Claudius thought proper to banish all Jews from the city. But how could he intend Christ, who was never at Rome? nor did any one ever personate him in that city; and it is evident he could not refer to any spiritual influence exerted by Christ on the minds of the people. Indeed he speaks of Chrestus as being the person who was the cause of the disturbances. It is no fictitious name, no name of an absent person, nor of a sect; but of one who was well known by the disturbances which he occasioned, and for which, it is likely, he suffered; and those of his nation were expelled. This decree, which was made not by the senate, but by the emperor himself, continued only in force during his life, if so long; for in a short time after this, Rome again abounded with Jews.

Verse 3. He abode with them and wrought] Bp. Pearce observes, that it was a custom among the Jews, even of such as had a better education than ordinary, which was Paul's case, chap. xxii. 3. to learn a trade; that, wherever they were, they might provide for themselves in case of necessity. And though Paul, in some cases, lived on the bounty of his converts, yet he chose not to do so at Ephesus, chap. xx. 34.; nor at Corinth or other places, 1 Cor. iv. 12. 2 Cor. ix. 8, 9. 1 Thess. iii. 8. and this, Paul did for a reason which he gives in 2 Cor. xi. 9—12. While he was at Corinth, he was supplied, when his own labour did not procure him enough, "by the brethren which came to him there from Macedonia." It appears that the apostle had his lodging with Aquila and Priscilla; and probably a portion of the profits of the business, after his board was deducted. It was evidently no reproach for a man, at that time, to unite public teaching with an honest, useful trade. And why should it be so now? may not a man who has acquired a thorough knowledge of the gospel way of salvation, explain that way to his less informed neighbours; though he be a tent-maker, (what, perhaps we would call a house-carpenter,) or a shoemaker, or any thing else? Even many of those who consider it a cardinal sin for a mechanic to preach the gospel, are providing for themselves and their families in the same way! How many of the clergy, and other ministers, are farmers, graziers, school-masters, and sleeping partners in different trades and commercial concerns. A tent-maker, in his place, is as useful as any of these.—Do not ridicule the mechanic because he preaches the gospel to the salvation of his neighbours, lest some one should say, in a language which you glory to have learned, and which the mechanic has not, Mutato nomine, de TE, fabula narratur.

There are different opinions concerning what is meant here by the σκηνοποιος, which we translate tent-maker; some think it means a maker of those small portable tents, formed of skins, which soldiers and travellers usually carried with them on their journies: others suppose, that these tents were made of linen cloth; some think that the trade of St. Paul was making hangings or curtains, such as were used at the theatres. Others think the σκηνοπτοιος was a sort of umbrella-maker; others, a weaver, &c. &c. In short, we know not what the trade was. I have generally preferred the notion of a carpenter, or faber lignarius. Whatever it was, it was an honest, useful calling; and Paul got his bread by it.

Verse 4. He reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath] Discoursed at large concerning Jesus as the Messiah; proving this point from their own scriptures, collated with the facts of our Lord's life, &c.

And persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.] Many, both Jews and proselytes, were convinced of the truth of his doctrine. Among his converts was Epenetus, the first fruit of his labour in Achaia, Rom. xvi. 5. and the family of Stephanus was the next; and then Crispus and Caius, or Gaius, all of whom the apostle himself baptized, 1 Cor. i. 14—16. have seen, c. xvii. 13. that when Paul was obliged to leave Berea, because of the persecution raised up against him in that place, that he left Silas and Timotheus behind; to whom he afterwards sent word to rejoin him at Athens with all speed. It appears from 1 Thess. iii. 10. that on Timothy's coming to Athens, Paul immediately sent him, and probably Silas with him, to comfort and establish the church at Thessalonica. How long they laboured here is uncertain, but they did not rejoin him till some time after he came to Corinth. It appears that he was greatly rejoiced at the account which Timothy brought of the church at Thessalonica; and it must have been immediately after this, that he wrote his first epistle to that church, which is probably the first, in order of time, of all his epistles.

Paul was pressed in spirit] συνειχετο τῳ πνευματι, or he was constrained by the Spirit of God, in an extraordinary manner, to testify to the Jews, that Jesus was the Christ. Instead of τῳ πνευματι in the Spirit, τῳ λογῳ, in the word or doctrine, is the reading of ABDE. three others; both the Syriac, Coptic, Vulgate, Basil, Chrysostom, and others. Griesbach has received this reading into the text, and Bp. Pearce thus paraphrases the verse, "And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul set himself together with them, wholly to the word; i. e. he was fully employed now that he had their assistance in preaching the gospel, called the word, in chap. iv. 4. xvi. 6, 32. and xvii. 11.—St. Luke seems to have intended to express here something relating to St Paul, which was the consequence of the coming of Silas and Timotheus; and that was rather his labouring with them more abundantly in preaching the word, than his being pressed in spirit." This appears to be the true sense of the word, and that τῳ λογῳ is the genuine reading, there can be no doubt; συνειχετο which we translate pressed, and which the Vulgate translates instabat; Bp. Pearce thinks should be translated unà cum illis instabat, he earnestly strove together with them, τῳ λογῳ in preaching the word. The true sense is given by Calmet, Paul s'employoit à prêcher encore avec plus d'ardeur, Paul was employed with more ardour in preaching, and testifying to the Jews, that Jesus was the Christ. From this time we hear no more of Silas: probably he died in Macedonia.

Verse 6. When they opposed] Αντιτασσομενων, systematically opposing; putting themselves in warlike order against him: so the word implies.

And blasphemed] This is precisely the way in which they still act. They have no argument against Jesus being the Messiah; but, having made a covenant with unbelief, as soon as they are pressed on this point, they rail and blaspheme.—See the Tela ignea Satanæ, by Wagenseil.

He shook his raiment] This was an action similar to that of shaking the dust off the feet; see on Matt. x. 14. See a parallel act, and its signification, in Nehem. v. 13; also I SHOOK MY LAP, and said, So shall God, SHAKE every man FROM HIS HOUSE and FROM his LABOUR; even thus shall he be SHAKEN OUT and EMPTIED. St. Paul's act on this occasion seems to have been the same with this of Nehemiah; and with the same signification: and it is likely that he was led by a divine impulse to do it: thus signifying the shaking and emptying out of this disobedient people; which took place about sixteen years afterwards.

Your blood be upon your own heads.] That is, ye alone are the cause of the destruction that is coming upon yourselves, and upon your country.

I am clean] Καθαρος ειμι, I am pure or innocent of your death and ruin. I have proposed to you the gospel of Jesus Christ, the only mean by which ye can be saved; and ye have utterly rejected it. I shall labour no more with you; and, from henceforth, will confine my labours to the Gentiles. St. Paul must refer to the Jews and Gentiles of Corinth particularly; for he preached to the Jews occasionally in other places; see chap. xix. 8, 9.: and several were brought to the knowledge of the truth. But it seems as if the Jews, from this time, systematically opposed the gospel of Christ; and yet, general tenders of this salvation were made to them wherever the apostles came; and when they rejected them, the word was sent to the Gentiles; see chap. xix. 8, 9.

Verse 7. And he departed thence] From his former lodging, or that quarter of the city where he had dwelt before with Aquila and Priscilla; and went to lodge with Justus, apparently a proselyte of the gate. This person is called Titus, and Titus Justus, in several MSS. and versions.

person held an office of considerable consequence; and therefore his conversion to Christianity must have been very galling to the Jews. It belonged to the chief or ruler of the synagogue, to preside in all the assemblies, interpret the law, decide concerning things lawful and unlawful, punish the refractory, excommunicate the rebellious, solemnize marriages, and issue divorces. It is likely, that on the conversion of Crispus, Sosthenes was chosen to succeed him.

Many of the Corinthians] Those to whom the sacred historion refers, were probably Gentiles; and were the fruits of the apostle's labours, after he had ceased to preach among the Jews.

Verse 9. Then spake the Lord to Paul by night in a vision] It is likely that Paul was at this time much discouraged by the violent opposition of the Jews, and probably was in danger of his life; see ver. 10: and might have been entertaining serious thoughts of ceasing to preach, or leaving Corinth. To prevent this, and comfort him, God was pleased to give him this vision.

Be not afraid.] That this comfort and assurance were necessary, himself shews us in his first epistle to these Corinthians, chap. ii. 3; I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

Verse 10. No man shall set on thee] Και ουδεις επιθησεται σοι, no man shall be permitted to lay violent hands upon thee. It is very likely that the Jews had conspired his death; and his preservation was an act of the especial interposition of divine Providence.

I have much people in this city.] Εν τη πολει ταυτη, in this very city, there are many here who have not resisted my Spirit, and consequently are now under its teachings, and are ready to embrace my gospel as soon as thou shalt declare it unto them.

Verse 11. He continued there a year and six months] He was now confident that he was under the especial protection of God; and therefore continued teaching the word, του λογου, the doctrine of God. It is very likely that it was during his stay here that he wrote his first epistle to the Thessalonians, and the second not long after; and some think that the epistle to the Galatians was written during his stay at Corinth.

Verse 12. When Gallio was the deputy of Achaia] The Romans, comprehended under the name of Achaia, all that part of Greece which lay between Thessaly and the southernmost coasts of Peloponnesus. Pausanias, in Attic. vii. 16. says, that the Romans were accustomed to send a governor into that country, and that they called him the governor of Achaia, not of Greece; because the Achæans, when they subdued Greece, were the leaders in all the Grecian affairs: see also Suetonius, in his life of Claudius, cap. xxv. and Dio Cassius, lx. 24. Edit. Reimari.

Deputy] Ανθυπατευοντος, serving the office of Ανθυπατος, or deputy: see the note on chap. xiii. ver. 7.

Gallio] This deputy, or proconsul, was eldest brother to the celebrated Lucius Annæus Seneca, the Stoic philosopher, preceptor of Nero, and who is so well known among the learned by his works. The name of Gallio was at first Marcus Annæus Novatus; but, having been adopted in the family of Gallio, he took the name of Lucius Junius Gallio. He, and Annæus Mela his brother, father of the poet Lucan, shared in the disgrace of their brother Seneca; and by this tyrant, Nero, whose early years were so promising, the three brothers were put to death; see Tacitus, Annal. lib. xv. 70. and xvi. 17. It was to this Gallio that Seneca dedicates his book De Irâ. Seneca describes him as a man of the most amiable mind and manners: "Quem nemo non parum amat, etiam qui amare plus non potest; nemo mortalium uni tam dulcis est, quam hic omnibus: cum interim tanta naturalis boni vis est, uti artem simulationemque non redoleat:" vide Senec. Præfat. ad Natural. Quæst. 4. He was of the sweetest disposition, affable to all, and beloved by every man.

Statius, Sylvar. lib. ii. 7. ver. 30, ode on the birth-day of Lucan, says not a little in his favour in a very few words:

Lucanum potes imputare terris;
Hoc plus quam Senecam dedisse mundo,
Aut dulcem generâsse Gallionem.

You may consider nature as having made greater efforts in producing Lucan; than it has done in producing Seneca, or even the amiable Gallio.

therefore were obliged to bring their complaint before the Roman governor. The powers that be are ordained of God:—Had the Jews possessed the power here, Paul had been put to death.

Verse 13. Persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law] This accusation was very insidious. The Jews had permission by the Romans to worship their own God in their own way; this the laws allowed. The Roman worship was also established by the law. The Jews probably intended to accuse Paul of acting contrary to both laws. "He is not a Jew for he does not admit of circumcision; he is not a gentile for he preaches against the worship of the gods. He is setting up a worship of his own, in opposition to all laws: and persuading many people to join with him: he is therefore a most dangerous man, and should be put to death."

Verse 14. Paul was now about to open his mouth] He was about to enter on his defence; but Gallio perceiving that the prosecution was through envy and malice, would not put Paul to any farther trouble, but determined the matter as follows.

If it were a matter of wrong] Αδικημα, of injustice; any thing contrary to the rights of the subject.

Or wicked lewdness] Ραδιουργημα πονηρον, destructive, mischief. (See the note on chap. xiii. 10. where the word is explained.) Something by which the subject is grievously wronged; were it any crime against society, or against the state;

Reason would that I should bear with you.] Κατα λογον αν ανεσχομην υμων, according to reason, or the merit of the case, I should patiently hear you.

Verse 15. But if it be a question of words] Περι λογου, concerning doctrine, and names, whether the person called Jesus be the person you call the Messiah.—And of your law, any particular nicety concerning that law which is peculiar to yourselves—Look ye to it; settle the business among yourselves; the Roman government does not meddle with such matters; and I will not take upon me to decide in a case that does not concern my office. As if he had said, "The Roman laws give religious liberty to Jews and Greeks; but if controversies arise among you on these subjects, decide them among yourselves, or dispute about them as much as you please." A better answer could not be given by man; and it was highly becoming the acknowledged meekness, gentleness, and benevolence of this amiable man. He concluded that the state had no right to controul any man's religious opinon; that was between the object of his worship and his own conscience; and therefore he was not authorised to intermeddle with subjects of this nature, which the law left to every man's private judgment. Had all the rulers of the people in every country, acted as this sensible and benevolent Roman; laws against liberty of conscience, concerning religious persecution, would not be found to be, as they now are, blots and disgraces on the statute-books of almost all the civilized nations of Europe.

Verse 16. And he drave them from the judgment seat.] He saw that their accusatiou was both frivolous and vexatious, and he ordered them to depart, and the assembly to disperse. The word απηλασεν, which we translate he drave, does not signify here any act of violence on the part of Gallio, or the Roman officers; but simply an authoritative dismission.

Verse 17. Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes] As this man is termed the chief ruler of the synagogue, it is probable that he had lately succeeded Crispus in that office, see ver. 8.; and that he was known either to have embraced Christianity, or to have favoured the cause of St. Paul. He is supposed to be the same person whom St. Paul associates with himself in the first epistle to the Corinthians, chap. i. 1. Crispus might have been removed from his presidency in the synagogue as soon as the Jews found he had embraced Christianity, and Sosthenes appointed in his place. And as he seems to have speedily embraced the same doctrine, the Jews would be the more enraged, and their malice be directed strongly against him, when they found that the proconsul would not support them in their opposition to Paul.

But why should the Greeks beat Sosthenes? I have in the above note proceeded on the supposition, that this outrage was committed by the Jews; and my reason for it is this: Οἱ Ἕλληνες, the Greeks, is omitted by AB. two of the oldest and most authentic MSS. in the world: they are omitted also by the Coptic and Vulgate, Chrysostom and Bede. Instead of Οἱ Ἕλληνες, three MSS. one of the eleventh and two of the thirteenth century, have Ἰουδαῖοι, the Jews; and it is much more likely that the Jews beat one of their own rulers, through envy at his conversion, than that the Greeks should do so; unless we allow, which is very probable, if (Ἕλληνες, Greeks, be the true reading,) that these Hellenes were Jews, born in a Greek country, and speaking the Greek language.

And Gallio cared for none of those things.] Και ουδεν τουτων τῳ Γαλλιωνι εμελεν. And Gallio did not concern himself, did not intermeddle with any of these things. As he found that it was a business that concerned their own religion; and that the contention was among themselves; and that they were abusing one of their own sect only, he did not choose to interfere. He, like the rest of the Romans, considered the Jews a most despicable people, and worthy of no regard: and their present conduct had no tendency to cause him to form a different opinion of them, from that which he and his countrymen had previously entertained. It is not very likely, however, that Gallio saw this outrage; for, though it was before the judgment seat, it probably did not take place till Gallio had left the court; and, though he might be told of it, he left the matter to the Lictors, and would not interfere.

The conduct of Gallio has been, in this case, greatly censured; and I think with manifest injustice. In the business brought before his tribunal, no man could have followed a more prudent or equitable course. His whole conduct shewed that it was his opinion, that the civil magistrate had nothing to do with religious opinions, or the concerns of conscience, in matters where the safety of the state was not implicated. He therefore refused to make the subject a matter of legal discussion. Nay he went much farther; he would not even interfere to prevent either the Jews or the apostles from making proselytes. Though the complaint against the apostles was, that they were teaching men to worship God contrary to the law; see the note on ver. 15. yet, even in this case, he did not think it right to exert the secular power to restrain the free discussion and teaching of matters which concerned the rights of conscience in things pertaining to the worship of the gods. As to his not preventing the tumult which took place, we may say, if he did see it, which is not quite evident, that he well knew that this could rise to no serious amount; and the Lictors, and other minor officers, were there in sufficient force to prevent any serious riot; and it was their business to see that the public peace was not broken: besides, as a heathen, he might have no objection to permit this people to pursue a line of conduct by which they were sure to bring themselves and their religion into contempt. These wicked Jews could not disprove the apostle's doctrine, either by argument or scripture; and they had recourse to manual logic, which was an indisputable proof of the badness of their own cause, and the strength of that of their opponents.

But in consequence of this conduct Gallio has been represented as a man perfectly careless and unconcerned about religion in general; and therefore has been considered as a proper type, or representative, of even professed Christians, who are not decided in their religious opinions or conduct. As a heathen, Gallio certainly was careless about both Judaism and Christianity. The latter he had probably never heard of but by the cause now before his judgment-seat; and, from any thing he could see of the other, through the medium of its professors, he certainly could entertain no favourable opinion of it; therefore, in neither case was he to blame. But the words, cared for none of these things, are both misunderstood and misapplied: we have already seen that they only mean that he would not intermeddle in a controversy which did not belong to his province; and sufficient reasons have been alleged why he should act as he did. It is granted that many preachers take this for a text, and preach useful sermons for the conviction of the undecided and lukewarm; and it is to be deplored that there are so many undecided and careless people in the world; and especially in reference to what concerns their eternal interests. But is it not to be lamented also, that there should be preachers of God's holy word, who attempt to explain passages of scripture, which they do not understand? for he who preaches on Gallio cared for none of those things, in the way in which the passage has, through mismanagement, been popularly understood, either does not understand it; or he wilfully perverts the meaning.

Verse 18. And Paul—tarried there yet a good while] The persecuting Jews plainly saw, from the manner in which the proconsul had conducted this business, that they could have no hope of raising a state persecution against the apostles; and the laws provided so amply for the personal safety of every Roman citizen, that they were afraid to proceed any farther in their violence. It could not be unknown, that Paul was possessed of the right of Roman citizenship; and therefore his person was sacred, as long as he did nothing contrary to the laws.

It is probable that at this time Paul staid, on the whole, at Corinth, about two years.

Having shorn his head in Cenchrea] But who was it that shore his head? Paul or Aquila? Some think the latter, who had bound himself by the Nazarite vow, probably before he became a Christian; and, being under that vow, his conscience would not permit him to disregard it. There is nothing in the text that absolutely obliges us to understand this action as belonging to St. Paul. It seems to have been the act of Aquila alone; and therefore both Paul and Priscilla are mentioned before Aquila; and it is natural to refer the vow to the latter. Yet there are certainly some weighty reasons why the vow should be referred to St. Paul, and not to Aquila; and interpreters are greatly divided on the subject. Chrysostom, Isidore of Seville, Grotius, Hammond, Zegerus, Erasmus, Baronius, Pearce, Wesley, and others, refer the vow to Aquila.—Jerom, Augustin, Bede, Calmet, Dodd, Rosenmuller, and others, refer it to St. Paul. Each party has its strong reasons—the matter is doubtful—the bare letter of the text determines nothing; yet I cannot help leaning to the latter opinion. Perhaps it was from feeling the difficulty of deciding which was under the vow, that the Æthiopic, and two Latin versions, instead of κειραμενος, having shaved, in the singular, appear to have read κειραμενοι, they shaved; and thus put both Paul and Aquila under the vow.

Cenchrea—this was a port on the east side of the Isthmus of Corinth, opposite to the Lecheum, which was the other port on the west. And it is likely that it was at Cenchrea that St. Paul took shipping for Syria, as it would be more convenient for him, and a shorter passage, to embark at Cenchrea, in order to go by the Ægean sea to Syria; than to embark at the Lecheum, and sail down into the Mediterranean.

Verse 19. He came to Ephesus] Where it appears he spent but one sabbath. It is supposed that Paul left Aquila and Priscilla at this place, and that he went on alone to Jerusalem; for it is certain that they were at Ephesus when Apollos arrived there. See verses 24, and 26.

Ephesus was, at the time in which St. Paul visited it, one of the most flourishing cities of Asia Minor. It was situated in that part anciently called Ionia, but now Natolia: it abounded with the most eminent orators, philosophers, &c. in the world; and was adorned with the most splendid buildings. Here was that famous temple of Diana, reputed one of the seven wonders of the world. This city is now under the dominion of the Turks, and is in a state of almost entire ruin. The temple of Minerva, which had long served as a Christian church, is now so completely ruined, that its site cannot be easily determined; though some ruins of the walls are still standing, with five or six marble columns forty feet in length and seven in diameter, all of one piece. It still has a good harbour, and is about forty miles from Smyrna. In Chandler's Travels in Asia Minor, some curious information is given concerning this once eminent city. His account concludes thus: "The Ephesians are now a few Greek peasants, living in extreme wretchedness, dependence, and insensibility: the representatives of an illustrious people, and inhabiting the wrecks of their greatness: some beneath the vaults of the Stadium, once the crouded scene of their diversions: and some live by the abrupt precipice, in the sepulchres which received the ashes of their ancestors. Such are the present citizens of Ephesus; and such is the condition to which that renowned city has been gradually reduced. Its streets are obscured and overgrown; a herd of goats was driven to it for shelter from the sun at noon; and a noisy flight of crows, from the quarries, seemed to insult its silence. We heard the partridge call in the area of the theatre, and of the Stadium. The glorious pomp of its heathen worship is no longer remembered; and Christianity, which was there nursed by apostles, and fostered by general councils until it increased to fulness of stature, barely lingers on, in an existence hardly visible." Travels in Asia Minor, p. 130. Reader! this city was once the capital of Asia Minor; and its ruins alone prove that it has existed: and in it was one of those seven churches, to which a letter was expressly dictated by Jesus Christ himself! Ephesus is properly no more! and the church of Ephesus is blotted out of the map of Christianity. Be silent, and adore.

opportunity to preach the gospel to thousands who would attend at Jerusalem on that occasion. The whole of this clause I must by all means keep this feast that cometh, in Jerusalem, is wanting in ABE. six others; with the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Vulgate. Griesbach leaves it in the text, with the mark of doubtfulness; and Professor White in his Crisews says, probabiliter delenda. Without this clause the verse will read thus; But he bade them farewell, saying, I will return again unto you, if God will. And this he did before the expiration of that same year, chap. xix. 1. and spent three years with them, chap. xx. 31. extending and establishing the church at that place.

Verse 22. Landed at Cæsarea.] This must have been Cæsarea in Palestine.

Gone up] To Jerusalem, though the name is not mentioned; but this is a common form of speech in the Evangelists, Jerusalem being always meant when this expression is used; for the word ἀναβαινω, to go up, is often used absolutely, to signify to go to Jerusalem; e. g. GO ye UP to this feast—I GO not UP yet, John vii. 8. but when his brethren were GONE UP, then WENT he also UP unto the feast, ver. 10. There were certain Greeks—that CAME UP to worship, John xii. 20. St. Paul himself uses a similar form of expression. There are yet but twelve days since I WENT UP to Jerusalem for to worship, Acts xxiv. 11.

Saluted the church] That is, the church at Jerusalem, called emphatically THE CHURCH, because it was the FIRST church: the MOTHER, or APOSTOLIC church: and from it all other Christian churches proceeded; those in Galatia, Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome, &c. Therefore, even this last, was only a daughter church, when in its purest state.

Went down to Antioch.] That is, Antioch in Syria, as the word is generally to be understood when without addition; so Cæsarea, is always to be understood Cæsarea in Palestine, when without the addition of Philippi.

Verse 23. Went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia] Both were provinces of Asia Minor: see on chap. ii. 10.

In order] Καθεξης, a word peculiar to St. Luke: see his Gospel, chap. i. 3. viii. 1. and his history of the Acts chap. iii. 24. xi. 4. and the place above; the only places where this word occurs in the New Testament. It properly signifies, in order, distinctly, particularly from κατα according to, and εξη order, as opposed to confusion, indistinctness, &c. If St. Paul went up to Jerusalem at this time, which we are left to infer, for Luke has not expressed it (ver. 22.) it was his fourth journey thither; and this is generally supposed to have been the twenty-first year after his conversion. His first journey is mentioned chap. ix. 26. his second, chap. xi. 30. his third, chap. xv. 4. and his fourth, chap. xviii. 22. the place above.

Verse 24. A certain Jew named Apollos] One MS. with the Coptic and Armenian, call him Apelles; and the Codex Bezæ, Apollonius. It is strange that we should find a Jew, not only with a Roman name, as Aquila, an eagle; but with the name of one of the false gods, as Apollos or Apollo in the text. Query: Whether the parents of this man were not originally Gentiles, but converted to Judaism after their son Apollo (for so we should write the word) had been born and named.

Born at Alexandria] This was a celebrated city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, from whom it took its name. It was seated on the Mediterranean Sea, between the Lake Mareotis and the beautiful harbour formed by the Isle of Pharos, about twelve miles West of the Canopic branch of the Nile, in lat. 31. 10. N. This city was built under the direction of Dinocrates, the celebrated architect of the temple of Diana at Ephesus. It was in this city that Ptolemy Soter founded the famous academy called the Musæum, in which a society of learned men devoted themselves to philosophical studies. Some of the most celebrated schools of antiquity flourished here; and here was the Tower of Pharos, esteemed one of the seven wonders of the world. Alexandria was taken by the French July 4, 1798, under the command of Buonaparte; and was surrendered to the English under General, now Lord Hutchinson, in 1801. And in consequence of the treaty of peace between France and England, it was restored to the Turks. Near this place was the celebrated obelisk, called Cleopatra's Needle; and the no less famous column, called Pompey's Pillar. This city exhibits but very slender remains of its ancient splendor.

An eloquent man] Having strong rhetorical powers; highly cultivated, no doubt, in the Alexandrian schools.

Mighty in the scriptures] Thoroughly acquainted with the Law and the Prophets; and well skilled in the Jewish method of interpreting them.

Verse 25. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord] Κατηχημενος; he was catechized, initiated, in the way, the doctrine of Jesus as the Christ.

Being fervent in the spirit] Being full of zeal to propagate the truth of God, he taught diligently, ακριβως accurately, (so the word should be translated,) the things of Christ as far as he could know them through the ministry of John the Baptist; for it appears he knew nothing more of Christ than what John preached. Some suppose we should read ουκ not, before ακριβως correctly, or accurately, because it is said that Aquila and Priscilla expounded the way of the Lord ακριβεστερον more perfectly, rather, more accurately; but of this emendation there is not the slightest necessity; for surely it is posssible for a man to teach accurately what he knows; and it is possible that another, who possesses more information on the subject than the former, may teach him more accurately, or give him a larger portion of knowledge. Apollo knew the baptism of John; but he knew nothing farther of Jesus Christ than that baptism taught: but as far as he knew, he taught accurately. Aquila and Priscilla were acquainted with the whole doctrine of the gospel: the doctrine of Christ dying for our sins, and rising again for our justification: and in this they instructed Apollo; and this was more accurate information than what he had before received, through the medium of John's ministry.

Verse 26. They took him unto them] This eloquent man, and mighty in the Scriptures, who was even a public teacher, was not ashamed to be indebted to the instructions of a Christian woman, in matters that not only concerned his own salvation, but also the work of the ministry, in which he was engaged. It is disgraceful to a man to be ignorant, when he may acquire wisdom; but it is no disgrace to acquire wisdom from the meanest person or thing. The adage is good, Despise not advice, even of the meanest: the gaggling of geese preserved the Roman state.

Verse 27. When he was disposed to pass into Achaia] There is a very long and important addition here in the Codex Bezæ, of which the following is a translation: But certain Corinthians, who sojourned at Ephesus, and heard him, entreated him to pass over with them to their own country. Then, when he had given his consent, the Ephesians wrote to the disciples at Corinth, that they should receive this man. Who when he was come, &c. The same addition is found in the latter Syriac, and in the Itala Version, in the Codex Bezæ.

Which had believed through grace.] These words may either refer to Apollo, or to the people at Corinth. It was through grace that they had believed; and it was through grace that Apollo was enabled to help them much.

The words δια της χαριτος through grace, are wanting in the Codex Bezæ, the latter Syriac, the Vulgate, one copy of the Itala, and in some of the Fathers. But this omission might have been the effect of carelessness, in the writers of those copies from which the foregoing were taken: the words convey the same idea that is expressed by St. Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 6. Paul planted, and Apollo watered; but God gave the increase. Though this eminent man became the instrument of mightily helping the believers in Corinth; yet he was also the innocent cause of a sort of schism among them. For some, taken by his commanding eloquence, began to range themselves on his side, and prefer him to all other teachers. This evil St. Paul reprehends and corrects in his first epistle to the Corinthians. St. Jerom says, that Apollo became bishop of Corinth.

Verse 28. He mightily convinced the Jews] Ευτονως διακατηλεγχετο he vehemently confuted the Jews; and that publicly, not in private conferences, but in his public preaching: shewing by the Scriptures of the Old Testament, which the Jews received as divinely inspired, that Jesus, who had lately appeared among them, and whom they had crucified, was the Christ, the promised Messiah, and that there was salvation in none other; and that they must receive him as the Messiah, in order to escape the wrath to come. This they refused to do; and we know the consequence. Their city was sacked, their temple burnt, their whole civil and religious polity subverted, more than a million of themselves killed, and the rest scattered over the face of the earth.

1. The Christian Religion did not hide itself in corners and obscure places at first, in order, privately, to get strength, before it dared to shew itself publicly. Error, conscious of its weakness, and that its pretensions cannot bear examination, is obliged to observe such a cautious procedure. With what caution, circumspection, and privacy, did Mohammed propose his new religion! He formed a party by little and little, in the most private manner, before he ventured to exhibit his pretensions openly. Not so Christianity; it shewed itself in the most public manner, not only in the teaching of Christ, but also in that of the Apostles. Even after the crucifixion of our Lord, the apostles and believers went to the temple, the most public place; and in the most public manner taught and worked miracles. JERUSALEM, the seat of the doctors, the judge of religion, was the first place in which, by the command of their Lord, the disciples preached Christ crucified. They were therefore not afraid to have their cause tried by the most rigid test of Scripture; and in the very place too, where that Scripture was best understood.

2. When the same apostles carried this gospel to heathen countries, did they go to the villages among the less informed, or comparatively ignorant Greeks, in order to form a party, and shield themselves by getting the multitude on their side? No! They went to Cæsarea, to Antioch, to Thessalonica, to ATHENS, to CORINTH, to EPHESUS; to the very places where learning flourished most, where sciences were best cultivated; where imposture was most likely to be detected, and where the secular power existed in the most despotic manner, and could at once have crushed them to nothing, could they have been proved to be impostors: or had they not been under the immediate protection of Heaven! Hence it is evident, that these holy men feared no rational investigation of their doctrines, for they taught them in the face of the most celebrated schools in the universe!

3. They preached Christ crucified in JERUSALEM, where it was the most solemn interest of the Jews to disprove their doctrine, that they might exculpate themselves from the murder of Jesus Christ. They preached the same Christ, and the vanity of idolatry, in Athens, in Corinth, and in Ephesus, where idolatry existed in the plenitude of its power; and where all its interests required it to make the most desperate and formidable stand against those innovators. What but the fullest confidence of the truth of what they preached: the fullest conviction of the divinity of their doctrine, and the supernatural influence of God upon their souls, could ever have induced these men to preach Christ crucified, either at Jerusalem or at Athens? I scruple not to assert, that the bold, public manner in which the apostles preached the gospel among the Jews and Greeks, is a most incontestible proof of the conviction they had of its truth; and the success with which they were favoured, is a demonstration that what they preached as truth, God proved to be truth, by, stretching forth his hand to heal; and causing signs and wonders to be wrought in the name of the holy child Jesus. This is an additional proof of the sincerity of the apostles, and of the truth of Christianity. If Paul and Peter, Barnabas and Silas, had not had the fullest persuasion that their doctrine was of God, they would never have ventured to propose it before the sanhedrin in JERUSALEM; the literati of CORINTH, and the Stoics and inexorable judges of the Areopagus at ATHENS,

4. We may be surprised to find that even among the Jews, as well as the Gentiles, there were persons who used curious arts. Those were inexcusable; these were to be pitied. Blind, as every man is by nature, yet he is conscious that without supernatural assistance he can neither secure the good he needs, nor avoid the evil he fears; therefore he endeavours to associate to himself the influence of supernatural agents, in order to preserve him in safety, and make him happy. Thus forsaking and forgetting the fountain of living water, he hews out to himself cisterns that can hold no water. The existence of magical arts and incantations, whether real or pretended, prove the general belief of the existence of a spiritual world, and man's consciousness of his own weakness, and his need of supernatural help. When shall the eye be directed solely to HIM from whom alone true help can come, by whom evil is banished, and happiness restored!

NOTES ON CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. And it came to pass—while Apollos was at Corinth] The Codex Bezæ begins this chapter differently. But when Paul was desirous, according to his own counsel, to go to Jerusalem, the Spirit commanded him to return into Asia: then, passing through the upper parts, he came to Ephesus. This addition is also found in the Latin or Itala part of the same MS. and in the margin of the latter Syriac.

Paul having passed through the upper coasts] That is, through those parts of Asia Minor that lay eastward of Ephesus, such as Galatia, Phrygia, and probably Lycaonia, and Lydia: and it is in reference to Ephesus that these are called the upper coasts. See their situation on the Map.

Verse 2. Have ye received the Holy Ghost] It is likely that these were Asiatic Jews, who having been at Jerusalem about twenty-six years before this, had heard the preaching of John, and received his baptism, believing in the coming Christ, whom John had proclaimed: but it appears that till this time they had got no farther instruction in the Christian religion. Paul perceiving this, asked them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed? For it was the common privilege of the disciples of Christ to receive not only the ordinary graces, but also the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit: and thus the disciples of Christ differed from those of John, and of all others. John baptized with water; Jesus baptized with the Holy Ghost. And to this day, the genuine disciples of Christ are distinguished from all false religionists, and from nominal Christians, by being made partakers of this Spirit, which enlightens their minds, and convinces of sin, righteousness, and judgment; quickens their souls, witnesses to their conscience that they are the children of God, and purifies their hearts. Those who have not received these blessings from the Holy Spirit, whatever their profession may be, know nothing better than John's baptism: good, excellent in its kind, but ineffectual to the salvation of those who live under the meridian of Christianity.

We have not so much as heard whether, &c.] That is, they had not heard that there were particular gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit to be received. They could not mean that they had not heard of the Holy Spirit; for John, in his baptism, announced Christ as about to baptize with the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11. Luke iii. 16. but they simply meant, that they had not heard that this Spirit, in his gifts, had been given to, or received by any one.

Verse 4. That they should believe on him which should come after] John baptized them with the baptism of repentance; this was common to all the baptisms administered by the Jews, to proselytes; but telling them that they should believe on him who was coming, was peculiar to John's baptism.

Verse 5. When they heard this, &c.] As there is no evidence in the New Testament of persons being rebaptized, unless this be one; many criticisms have been hazarded to prove that these persons were not rebaptized. I see no need of this. To be a Christian, a man must be baptized in the Christian faith: these persons had not been baptized into that faith, and therefore were not Christians: they felt this, and were immediately baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus. This is a plain case: but let one instance be produced of a person being rebaptized, who had before been baptized in the name of the Holy Trinity, or even in the name of Jesus alone. In my view, it is an awful thing to iterate baptism, when it had been before essentially performed: by "essentially performed," I mean administered by sprinkling, washing, or plunging, by or in water; in the name of the Father, Son and Spirit, being invoked at the time. Whoever has had this, has the essence of baptism, as far as that can be conferred by man: and it matters not at what period of his life he has had it; it is a substantial baptism, and by it the person has been fully consecrated to the Holy and Blessed Trinity; and there should not be an iteration of this consecration on any account whatever. It is totally contrary to the canon law; it is contrary to the decisions of the best divines: it is contrary to the practice of the purest ages of the church of God: it is contrary to the New Testament, and tends to bring this sacred ordinance into disrepute.

Verse 6. They spake with tongues, and prophesied.] They received the miraculous gift of different languages; and in those languages they taught to the people the great doctrines of the Christian religion; for, this appears to be the meaning of the word προεφητευον prophesied, as it is used above.

Verse 8. Spake boldly—three months] We have often remarked that St. Paul, in every place, made his first offers of salvation to the Jews; and it was only when they rejected it, that he turned to the Gentiles; see chap. xviii. 6. and the same line of conduct he pursues here: he goes to the school of Tyrannus, at least a public place, to which all might resort; when they obstinately rejected the gospel in the synagogue.

Disputing and persuading] Διαλεγομενος και πειθων, holding conversations with them, in order to persuade them of the truth of the doctrine of Christ.

Verse 9. When divers were hardened] Τινες, when some of them were hardened; several no doubt felt the power of divine truth, and yielded consent. Our term divers, one of the most bald in our language, has too general a meaning for this place.

Behold the effect of the word of God! it is a savour of life unto life, or death unto death, according as it is received or rejected. The twelve men mentioned above received it affectionately, and they were made partakers of the Holy Ghost; the others were hardened, for they refused to believe, and they calumniated the doctrine; and became Satan's preachers among the multitude, to prejudice them against Christ and his religion.

Separated the disciples] Paul, and those converted under his ministry, had doubtless been in the habit of attending public worship in the synagogue: but on the persecuting conduct of these Jews, he and his converts wholly withdrew from the synagogue, and took a place for themselves; and constantly afterwards held their own meetings at a school-room, which they hired no doubt for the purpose.

The school of one Tyrannus.] For σχολη the school one MS. has συναγωγη the synagogue; and for Tyrannus, some have Tyranios. Some have considered the original word as being an epithet, rather than the name of a person; and think that a prince or nobleman is intended, because τυραννος tyrant, is taken in this sense: but this is a most unlikely conjecture. It appears that the person in question was a schoolmaster, and that he lent or hired his room to the apostles; and that they preached daily in it to as many, both Jews and Gentiles, as chose to attend. It is very likely that Tyrannus was a Jew, and was at least well affected to the Christian cause; for we have many proofs that individuals among them kept schools for the instruction of their youth; besides the schools or academies kept by the more celebrated rabbins. See Schoettgen, and Vitringa.

Verse 10. By the space of two years] The school-house of Tyrannus was his regular chapel; and it is likely that in it he taugh Christianity, as Tyrannus taught languages or sciences.

All they—in Asia heard the word] Meaning probably, the Proconsular Asia, for the extent of which, see the note on chap. xvi. 6.

Jews and Greeks.] For although he ceased preaching in the synagogues of the Jews, yet they continued to hear him in the school of Tyrannus. But it is likely that Paul did not confine himself to this place, but went about through the different towns and villages; without which, how could all Asia have heard the word? By Greeks, we are to understand not only the proselytes of the gate, but the heathens in general.

probably the sudaria were a sort of handkerchiefs, which in travelling were always carried in the hand, for the convenience of wiping the face: and the simikinthia were either the sashes or girdles, that went about the loins. These, borrowed from the apostle, and applied to the bodies of the deceased, became the means, in the hand of God, of their restoration to health.

The diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.] Here there is a most evident distinction made between the diseases and the evil spirits: hence they were not one and the same thing.

Verse 13. Certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists] Τινες απο των περιερχομενων Ιουδαιων εξορκιστων; certain of the Jews, who went about practising exorcisms. Vagabond has a very bad acceptation among us; but literally, vagabundus signifies a wanderer, one that has no settled place of abode. These, like all their countrymen, in all places, went about to get their bread in what way they could: making trial of every thing, by which they could have the prospect of gain. Finding that Paul cast out dæmons through the name of Jesus, they thought, by using the same, they might produce the same effects; and if they could, they knew it would be to them an ample source of revenue; for dæmoniacs abounded in the land.

Verse 14. Seven sons of one Sceva a Jew, and chief of the priests] The original Ιουδαιου αρχιερεως signifies a Jewish high-priest; but it is not probable that any sons, much less seven sons, of a Jewish high-priest, should be strolling exorcists: it is therefore likely that υιοι Σκευα τινος ἱερεως, the sons of Skeva, a certain priest, as it stands in the Codex Bezæ, is the true reading. The whole verse in that MS. reads thus: Among them were also the sons of Skeva, a priest, who wished to do the same: for they were accustomed to exorcise such persons. And entering in to the dæmoniac, they began to invoke that Name, saying, We command thee by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth, to go out. And the evil spirit answered, and said unto them, Jesus I know, &c. It has been often remarked, that in our Lord's time there were many of the Jews that professed to cast out dæmons; and perhaps to this our Lord alludes, Matt. xii. 27. See the note there.

Josephus, in speaking of the wisdom of Solomon, says, that he had that skill by which dæmons are expelled; and that he left behind him the manner of using exorcisms, by which they are cast out; and that those arts were known among his countrymen down to his own time; and then gives us the following relation: "I have seen a certain man of my own country, whose name was Eleazar, releasing people that were dæmoniacs, in the presence of Vespasian, his sons, his captains, and the whole multitude of his soldiers. The manner of the cure was this: He put a ring that had a root of one of those sorts mentioned by Solomon, to the nostrils of the dæmoniac, after which he drew out the dæmon through his nostrils; and when the man fell down, immediately he adjured him to return into him no more, making still mention of Solomon, and reciting the incantations that he had composed. And when Eleazar would persuade the spectators that he had such a power, he set at a little distance a cup of water, and commanded the dæmon as he went out of the man, to overturn it; and when this was done, the skill and wisdom of Solomon were shewed very manifestly." Joseph. Antiq. book viii. cap. 2. sect. 5. Whiston's edition.

That there were such incantations among the Jews, we know well, and that there are still such found, and that they are attributed to Solomon; but that they are his, remains to be proved; and could this even be done, a point remains which can never be proved, viz. that those curious arts were a part of that wisdom which he received from God, as Josephus intimates. Indeed the whole of the above account gives the strongest suspicion of its being a trick by the Jewish juggler, which neither Josephus nor the emperor could detect; but the ring, the root, the cup of water, the spell, &c. all indicate imposture. Magicians among the Jews were termed בעלי שם baâley shem, Masters of the Name, that is, the name of Jehovah יהוה by a certain pronunciation of which, they believed the most wonderful miracles could be wrought. There were several among them who pretended to this knowledge; and when they could not deny the miracles of our Lord, they attributed them to his knowledge of the true pronunciation of this most sacred name.

Παυκον επισαμια· υμεις δε τινες (τινος) εστε. I acknowledge Jesus; and am acquainted with Paul: but of whom are ye? Ye belong to neither: ye have no authority. And he soon gave them full proof of this. This distinction is observed in my old MS. Bible: I have knowne Jesu, and I wote Poule; forsothe who ben gee.

Verse 16. And the man in whom the evil spirit was, &c. Thus we find that one man was more powerful than these seven brothers; so that he stripped them of their upper garments, and beat and wounded the whole! Was not this a proof that he derived his strength from the evil spirit that dwelt in him?

Verse 17. The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.] They saw that there was a sovereign power in the name of Jesus, which could not be imitated by these lying exorcists; they therefore reverenced this name, and despised those pretenders.

Exorcisms or adjurations of evil spirits were very frequent in the primitive church: the name of Jesus was that alone which was used. The primitive Fathers speak strong and decisive words concerning the power of this name; and how dæmons were tormented, and expelled by it, not only from individuals, but from the temples themselves. Exorcists formed a distinct class in the church; hence we read of Presbyters, Deacons, Exorcists, Lectors, and Door-keepers. The adjuration was commonly used over the Catechumens, before they were admitted to baptism. Gregory of Naziansen, and Cyril of Jerusalem, speak much of this rite—See my Succession of Sacred Literature, under Cyril, and Gregory Nazianzen; and see Suicer, under εξορκιζωος.

Verse 19. Which used curious arts] Τα περιεργα. From the use of this word in the Greek writers, we know that it signified magical arts, sorceries incantations, &c. Ephesus abounded with these. Dio Cassius, speaking of the emperor Adrian, says, Ο Αδριανος περιεργοτατος ην, και μαντειας, μαγγανικης παντοδαπας, εχρητο, "Adrian was exceedingly addicted to curious arts, and practised divination and magic." These practices prevailed in all nations of the earth.

Brought their books together] The Εφεσια γραμματα, or Ephesian characters, are celebrated in antiquity; they appear to have been amulets, inscribed with strange characters, which were carried about the body for the purpose of curing diseases, expelling dæmons, and preserving from evils of different kinds. The books brought together on this occasion, were such as taught the science, manner of formation, use, &c. of these charms.

Suidas, under Εφεσια γραμματα, Ephesian Letters, gives us the following account: "Certain obscure incantations.—When Milesius and Ephesius wrestled at the Olympic games, Milesius could not prevail, because his antagonist had the Ephesian Letters bound to his heels; when this was discovered, and the letters taken away, it is reported, that Milesius threw him thirty times."

The information given by Hesychius, is still more curious: Εφεσια γραμματα: την μεν παλαι ς'· υστερον δε προσθεσαν τινες απατεωνες και αλλα· Φασι δε των πρωτων τα ονοματα, ταδε· ΑΣΚΙΟΝ, ΚΑΤΑΣΚΙΟΝ, ΛΙΞ ΤΕΤΡΑΞ, ΔΑΜΝΑΜΕΝΕΥΣ, ΑΙΣΙΟΝ· Δηλοι δε, το μεν Ασκιον, σκοτος· το δε Κατασκιον, φως· το δε Λιξ, γη· τετραξ δε, ενιαυτος· Δαμναμενευς, δε ηλιος· Αισιον, δε αληθες. Ταυτα ουν ιερα εστι και αγια. "The Ephesian letters or characters were formerly six, but certain deceivers added others afterwards; and their names, according to report, were these: Askion, Kataskion, Lix, Tetrax, Damnameneus, and Aision. It is evident that Askion signifies Darkness; Kataskion, Light; Lix, the Earth; Tetrax, the Year; Damnameneus, the Sun; and Aision, Truth. These are holy and sacred things." The same account may be seen in Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. v. cap. 8. where he attempts to give the etymology of these different terms. These words served, no doubt, as the keys to different spells and incantations; and were used in order to the attainment of a great variety of ends. The Abraxas' of the Basilidians, in the second century, were formed on the basis of the Ephesian Letters; for those instruments of incantation, several of which are now before me, are inscribed with a number of words and characters equally as unintelligible as the above; and, in many cases, more so.

When it is said they brought their books together we are to understand the books which treated of these curious arts; such as the Εφεσια γραμματα, or Ephesian characters.

And burned them before all] These must have been thoroughly convinced of the truth of Christianity, and of the unlawfulness of their own arts.

Fifty thousand pieces of silver.] Some think that the αργυριων, which we translate piece of silver, means a shekel, as that word is used in Matt. xxvi. 15. where see the note; 50,000 shekels, at 3*s.* according to dean Prideaux's valuation, (which is that followed throughout this work,) would amount to 7500*l.*

But as this was a Roman and not a Jewish country, we may rationally suppose that the Jewish coin was not here current; and that the αργυριον, or silver coin, mentioned by St. Luke, must have been either Greek or Roman; and it is very likely that the Sestertius is meant, which was always a silver coin, about the value, according to Arbuthnot, of twopence, or 1*d.* 3$q\frac{3}{4}$. which answers to the fourth part of a denarius, rated by the same author at 7$\frac{3}{4}$d. Allowing this to be the coin intended, the 50,000 Sestertii would amount to 403*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.*

The Vulgate reads denariorum quinquaginta millium, fifty thousand Denarii; which, at 7$\frac{3}{4}$d. will amount to 1614*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* The reading of the Itala version of the Codex Bezæ, is very singular, Denariorum Sestertia ducenta. "Two hundred Sesterces of Denarii;" which may signify no more than "two hundred Sestertii of Roman money." for in this sense denarius is certainly used by Cicero, Orat. pro Quint.; where, ad denarium solvere, means to pay in Roman money; an expression similar to our word sterling. This sum would amount to no more than 1*l.* 12*s.* 3$\frac{1}{2}$d. But that which is computed from the Sestertius, is the most probable amount.

Verse 20. So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.] The Codex Bezæ reads this verse thus: "So mightily grew the word of the Lord, and prevailed; and the faith of God increased and multiplied." It is probable that it was about this time that St. Paul had that conflict which he mentions, 1 Cor. xv. If I, after the manner of men, have fought with wild beasts at Ephesus, &c. See the note there. It means some severe trials not here mentioned unless we may suppose him to refer to the ferocious insurrection headed by Demetrius, mentioned at the end of this chapter.

Verse 21. Paul purposed in the spirit, &c.] Previously to this, he appears to have concerted a journey to Macedonia, and a visit to Corinth, the capital of Achaia, where he seems to have spent a considerable time; probably the whole winter of A. D. 58.; see 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6. and afterwards to go to Jerusalem; but it is likely that he did not leave Ephesus till after Pentecost, A. D. 59. (1 Cor. xv. 8.) And he resolved, if possible, to see Rome, which had been the object of his wishes for a considerable time. See Rom. i. 10, 13. xvi. 23.

It is generally believed that during this period, while at Ephesus, he wrote his first epistle to the Corinthians. He had heard that some strange disorders had entered into that church:—1. That there were divisions among them; some extolling Paul beyond all others; some Peter; others Apollos. 2. He had learned from Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, whom he saw at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 17. vii. 1. that several abuses had crept into their religious assemblies. 3. That even the Christians went to law with each other; and that before the heathens. And, 4. That a person, professing Christianity in that city, had formed a matrimonial contract with his step-mother. It was to remedy these disorders that he wrote his first epistle to the Corinthians, in which he strongly reprehends all the above evils.

Verse 22. So he sent into Macedonia] He desired Timothy to go as far as Corinth, 1 Cor. iv. 18. and after that, to return to him at Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 11. but he himself continued in Asia some time longer; probably to make collections for the poor saints in Jerusalem. Erastus, mentioned here for the first time, appears to have been the chamberlain, Οικονομος, either of Ephesus or Corinth; see Rom. xvi. 23. He was one of St. Paul's companions, and is mentioned as being left by the apostle at Corinth, 2 Tim. iv. 20.

Verse 23. No small stir about that way.] Concerning the gospel, which the apostles preached; and which is termed this way, chap. ix. 2. where see the note.

A.M.cir.4063. A. D. cir. 59. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 3.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought [a] no small gain unto the craftsmen;

a Ch. 16. 16, 19.

b Ps. 115. 4. Isai. 44. 10—20. Jer. 10. 3.

Verse 24. Silver shrines for Diana] It is generally known, that the temple of Diana at Ephesus, was deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and was a most superb building. It appears that the silver shrines mentioned here, were small portable representations of this temple, which were bought by strangers as matters of curiosity, and probably of devotion. If we can suppose them to have been exact models of this famous temple, representing the whole exterior of its magnificent workmanship, which is possible; they would be held in high estimation, and probably become a sort of substitute for the temple itself, to worshippers of this goddess who lived in distant parts of Greece. The temple of Diana was raised at the expence of all Asia Minor, and yet was two hundred and twenty years in building, before it was brought to its sum of perfection. It was in length 425 feet, by 220 in breadth; and was beautified by 127 columns, which were made at the expence of so many kings: and was adorned with the most beautiful statues. To procure himself an everlasting fame, Erostrates burnt it to the ground, the same night on which Alexander the Great was born. It is reported, that Alexander offered to make it as magnificent as it was before, provided he might put his name on the front; but this was refused. It was afterwards rebuilt and adorned; but Nero plundered it of all its riches. This grand building remains almost entire to the present day; and is now turned into a Turkish mosque. See an account of it in Montfaucon, Antiq. Expliq. vol. ii. with a beautiful drawing on plate vi. No. 20. See also Stuart's Athens. There were also pieces of silver struck with a representation of the temple of Minerva on one side: many coins occur in the reigns of the first Roman emperors, where temples, with idols in the porch, appear on the reverse: and several may be seen in Muselius, in the reigns of Trajan, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, &c. A beautiful representation of the temple of Diana at Ephesus, may be seen on a medal engraved by Montfaucon, in his Antiq. Expliq. Suppl. vol. ii. plate 33. It has eight Doric columns in front, which Pliny says were sixty feet in length. In the entrance the figure of Diana is represented, with a sort of tower upon her head, her arms supported by two staves: at her feet are represented two stags, with their backs towards each other. The sun is represented on the right side of her head, and the moon as a crescent on the left. On each side, and at the bottom of this temple, are the words πρωτων Ασιας Εφεσιων. Some think that the medals here referred to, are the same that are meant by the silver shrines, made by Demetrius and his craftsmen. See the note on ver. 27.

Brought no small gain] There were many made, many sold, and probably at considerable prices.

Verse 25. By this craft we have our wealth.] The word ευπορια not only signifies wealth, but also abundance. It was a most lucrative trade; and he plainly saw that if the apostles were permitted to go on thus preaching, the worship of Diana itself would be destroyed; and consequently all the gain that he and his fellows derived from it, would be brought to nought.

Verse 26. This Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people] From the mouth of this heathen we have, in one sentence, a most pleasing account of the success with which God had blessed the labours of the apostles: not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, they had persuaded and converted much people; for they had insisted that they could be no gods which are made with hands: and this the common sense of the people must at once perceive.

Verse 27. The temple of the great goddess Diana] From a number of representations of the Ephesian goddess Diana, which still remain, we find that she was widely different from Diana the huntress. She is represented in some statues all covered over with breasts, from the shoulders down to the feet; in others she is thus represented, from the breasts to the bottom of the abdomen, the thighs and legs being covered with the heads of different animals. From this it is evident, that under this name and form, Nature, the nourisher and supporter of all things, was worshipped: the sun and moon being grand agents in all natural productions, were properly introduced as her attributes or symbols. Because she was the representative of universal Nature, she was called, in opposition to Diana the huntress, and goddess of Chastity, the GREAT goddess Diana; not only worshipped in Asia, but throughout the whole world; both the Greeks and the Romans unanimously conjoining in her worship.

Several statues of this Ephesian Diana still remain; and some beautiful ones are represented by Montfaucon, in his Antiq. Expliq. vol. 1. book iii. chap. 15. plates 46, 47, and 48. From this father of antiquaries, much information on this subject may be derived. He observes, that the original statue of Diana of Ephesus, which was in that noble temple, esteemed one of the wonders of the world, was made of ivory, as Pliny says; but Vitruvius says it was made of cedar; and others, of the wood of the vine. The images of this goddess are divided into several bands, or compartments; so that they appear swathed from the breasts to the feet. On the head is generally represented a large tower, two stories high. A kind of festoon of flowers and fruits descends from her shoulders; in the void place of the festoon a crab is often represented, and sometimes crowned by two genii or victories. The arms are generally extended, or stretch a little out from the sides; and on each, one or two lions. Below the festoon, between the two first bands, there are a great number of paps, hence she has been styled by some of the ancients Multimammia, and πολυμαστος, the goddess with the multitude of paps: on one figure I count nineteen. Between the second and third bands, birds are represented; between the third and fourth, a human head, with Tritons; between the fourth and fifth, heads of oxen. Most of the images of this goddess are represented as swathed nearly to the ancles, about which the folds of her robe appear. Though there is a general resemblance in all the images of the Ephesian Diana; yet some have more figures or symbols, some less. These symbols are generally paps, human figures, oxen, lions, stags, griffins, sphinxes, reptiles, bees, branches of trees, and roses.

That Nature is intended by this goddess is evident, from the inscription on two of those represented by Montfaucon, πανσιολος φυσις παντων μητηρ, Nature, full of varied creatures, and mother of all things. It is evident that this Diana was a composition of several deities: her crown of turrets belongs to Cybele, the mother of the gods; the lions were sacred to her also; the fruits and oxen are symbols of Ceres; the griffins were sacred to Apollo; and the deer or stags to Diana. The crab being placed within the festoon of flowers, evidently refers to the nothern tropic Cancer; and the crab being crowned in that quarter, may refer to the sun having accomplished his course, and begun to return with an increase of light, heat, &c. The paps, or breasts, as has already been observed, shew her to be the nurse of all things; and the different animals and vegetables, represented on these images, point out Nature as the supporter of the animal and vegetable world; the moon and tritons shew her influence on the sea; and the sun her influence on the earth. All these things considered, it is no wonder that this goddess was called at Ephesus the Great Diana, and that she was worshipped not only in that city, but in all the world. In the worship of this deity, and in the construction of her images, the heathens seem to have consulted common sense and reason in rather an unusual manner. But we must observe also, that among the Greeks and Romans they had two classes of Deities; the Dii Majores, and the Dii Minores: the great gods, and the minor gods. The latter were innumerable; but the former, among whom was Diana, were only twelve—Jupiter, Neptune, Apollo, Mars, Mercury, and Vulcan; Juno, Vesta, Ceres, Diana, Venus, and Minerva. These twelve were adored through the whole Gentile world, under a variety of names.

Verse 29. The whole city was filled with confusion] Thus we find the peace of the whole city was disturbed, not by an apostle preaching the gospel of Christ, but by one interested, unprincipled knave, who did not even plead conscience for what he was doing; but that it was by this craft he and his fellows got their wealth; and he was afraid to lose it.

Rushed—into the theatre.] The theatres being very spacious and convenient places, were often used for popular assemblies and public deliberation, especially in matters which regarded the safety of the state. There are several proofs of this in ancient authors. So Tacitus, Hist. ii. 80. speaking concerning Vespasian, says, Antiochensium theatrum ingressus, ubi illis consultare mos est, concurrentes et in adulationem effusos alloquitur. "Having entered into the theatre of the Antiochians, where it was the custom to hold consultations, the people running together, and being profuse in flattery; he addressed them." Frontinus in Stratagem. lib. iii. cap. 2. speaking of a public meeting in the theatre at Agrigentum, observes, ubi ex more Græcorum locus consulandi præbebatur; which, according to the custom of the Greeks, is the place for public deliberation. See several examples in Kypke.

Verse 31. Certain of the chief of Asia] Τινες των Ασιαρχων; some of the Asiarchs. The Asiarchs were those to whom the care and regulation of the public games were entrusted: they were a sort of high priests, and were always persons of considerable riches and influence. These could not have been Christians, but they were what the sacred text states them to have been, αυτω φιλοι his friends; and foreseeing that Paul would be exposed to great danger if he went into the theatre, amidst such a tumultuous assembly, they sent a message to him, entreating him not to go into danger so apparent. Query: Did he not go, and fight with these wild beasts at Ephesus? 1 Cor. xv. 32.

Verse 32. Some—cried one thing, and some another] This is an admirable description of a tumultuous mob, gathered together without law or reason; getting their passions inflamed, and looking for an opportunity to commit outrages, without why or wherefore; principle or object.

For the assembly was confused] Η εκκλησια; the same word which we translate church; and thus we find that it signifies any assembly good or bad, lawful or unlawful; and that only the circumstances of the case, can determine the precise nature of the assembly, to which this word is applied.

Verse 33. They drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward] From this and the following verse it is pretty evident, that this Alexander was brought forward on this occasion by the Jews, that he might make an oration to the multitude, in order to exculpate the Jews, who were often by the heathens confounded with the Christians; and cast the whole blame of the uproar upon Paul and his party. And he was probably chosen, because he was an able speaker: and when he beckoned with his hand to gain an audience, the Greeks, knowing that he was a Jew, and consequently as much opposed to the worship of Diana as Paul was, would not hear him: and therefore, to drown his apology, τω δημω for the people, viz. the Jews, they vociferated, for the space of two hours, Great is Diana of the Ephesians! There does no seem any just ground from the text to suppose, that this Alexander was a Christian; or that he was now about to make an apology for the Christians: it is generally believed, that he is the same with Alexander the copper-smith, of whom St. Paul speaks, 2 Tim. iv. 14. and whom, with Philetus, he was obliged to excommunicate, 1 Tim. i. 20. By the Jews putting him forward, we are to understand their earnestness to get him to undertake their defence, and criminate as much as possible, St. Paul and his companions, and the Christian cause in general; which he would no doubt have done, without vindicating the worship of Diana, which, as a Jew, he would not dare to attempt.

Verse 35. When the town-clerk] Ο γραμματευς, literally the scribe. The Syriac has ܪܝܫܐ ܕܡܕܝܢܬܐ reisha damedinato, the chief or prince of the city. The latter Syriac has, the scribe of the city. Some think that the word recorder would do better here than town-clerk; and indeed it is evident, that a magistrate of considerable authority and influence is intended.

Ye men of Ephesus] The speech of this man may be thus analysed: 1. He states that there was no need of a public declaration that the Ephesians were worshippers of Diana; this every person knew, and nobody attempted to contest it, ver. 35, 36. 2. That the persons accused were not guilty of any public offence, nor of any breach of the laws of the city, 37. 3. That if they were, this was not a legal method of prosecuting them, 38, 39. 4. That they themselves, by this tumultuous meeting, had exposed themselves to the censure of the law; and were in danger of being called into question for it, ver. 40. See Dodd.

the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, [a] the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another, 39 But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a [b] lawful assembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in

[a] Or, the court days are kept.

Is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana.] The word νεωκορος neocoros, which we translate worshipper, signified at first, among the ancient Greeks, no more than sweeper of the temple, and answered nearly to our sexton: in process of time, the care of the temple was entrusted to this person: at length the neocori became persons of great consequence, and were those who offered sacrifices for the life of the emperor. Whole cities took this appellation, as appears on many ancient coins and medals: and Ephesus is supposed to have been the first that assumed this title. At this time, it was commonly known as belonging to this city. "What man is there that knoweth not that the city of the Ephesians is the Neocoros of the great goddess Diana?" As if he had said, "The whole city is devoted to her worship: it is reputed an honour to our highest characters, even to sweep her temple, and open and shut her doors. Besides, we offer to her the highest sacrifices; and are entrusted with the religious service that pertains to the emperor's safety."

Of the image which fell down from Jupiter?] The original image of the Ephesian Diana (see on ver. 27.) was supposed to have descended from heaven: which intimates, that it was so old, that no person knew either its maker, or the time in which it was formed; and it was the interest of the priests to persuade the people that this image had been sent to them as a present from Jupiter himself. Several images and sacred things were supposed among the heathens, to be presents immediately from heaven. Euripides states the image of Diana of Tauris to be of this kind; and calls it διοπετες αγαλμα, the image fallen from Jupiter. Numa pretended that the ancilia, or sacred shields, had come from heaven. In imitation of these, many of the Italian papists believe, that the shrine of our Lady of Loretto was also a divine gift to their country. St. Isidore of Damietta says, that the heathen, in order to induce the people to believe that such images came from heaven, either banished or slew the artists that had formed them, that there might be no evidence of the time in which, or the persons by whom, they were made: this point secured, it was easy to persuade the credulous multitude, that they had been sent from heaven. The story of the Palladium, on which the safety of Troy was said to depend, is well known. It was an image of Minerva, and also supposed to have descended from Jupiter.

Verse 37. These men—are neither robbers of churches] Ιεροσυλους; spoilers of sacred places. As his design evidently was to appease and conciliate the people, he fixed first on a most incontrovertible fact: These men have not spoiled your temples; nor is there any evidence that they have even blasphemed your goddess. The apostles acted as prudent men should; they endeavoured to enlighten the minds of the multitude, that the absurdity of their gross errors might be the more apparent; for when they should know the truth, it was likely that they would at once abandon such gross falschood.

Verse 38. If Demetrius—have a matter against any man] If it be any breach of law, in reference to Demetrius and the artists, the law is open, αγοραιοι αγονται; these are the Terms of law, public courts, times of sessions or assize; or, rather, the judges are now sitting: so the words may be understood. And there are deputies, ανθυπατοι proconsuls, appointed to guard the peace of the state, and to support every honest man in his right: let them implead one another; let the one party bring forward his action of assault or trespass, and the other put in his defence: the laws are equal and impartial, and justice will be done to him who is wronged.

Verse 39. But if ye enquire any thing concerning other matters] In which the safety of the state, or the national worship is concerned, know that such a matter is not the business of the mob; it must be heard and determined in a lawful assembly, εν τη εννομω εκκλησια, one legally constituted, and properly authorized to hear and determine on the subject.

Verse 40. For we are in danger, &c.] Popular commotions were always dreaded by the Roman government; and so they should by all governments; for when might has nothing to direct its operations but passion, how destructive must these operations be. One of the Roman laws made all question [a] for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And when he had thus spoken, [b] he dismissed the assembly.

such commotions of the people capital offences against those who raised them. Qui cœtum et concursus fecerit, capite puniatur; "He who raises a mob shall forfeit his life." If such a law existed at Ephesus; and it probably did, from this reference to it in the words of the town-clerk or recorder; then Demetrius must feel himself in great personal danger: and that his own life lay now at the mercy of those whom he had accused; concerning whom he had raised such an outcry, and against whom nothing disorderly could be proved.

Verse 41. He dismissed the assembly.] Την εκκλησιαν. Another proof that the word εκκλησια, which we generally translate church, signifies an assembly of any kind, good or bad, legal or illegal.

1. How forcible are right words! From the conduct of this prudent, sensible man, we may learn how much influence persons of this character may have, even over the unbridled multitude. But where the civil power associates itself with the lawless might of the many, THERE must be confusion and every evil work. What a blessing to the community is the civil law! Were it not for this, the unthinking multitude would destroy others, and at last destroy themselves. Law and justice are from God; and the civil power, by which they are supported and administered, should be respected by all who regard the safety of their persons or property.

2. Though the ministry of St. Paul was greatly blessed at Ephesus, and his preaching appears to have been very popular; yet the sunshine was soon darkened; peace with the world cannot last long; the way of the Lord will always be opposed by those who love their own ways.

3. How few would make an outward profession of religion, were there no gain connected with it: and yet, as one justly observes, Religion is rendered gainful only by some external part of it. For this very reason, the external part of religion is always on the increase, and none can find fault with it, without raising storms and tempests; while the internal part wastes and decays, no man laying it to heart. Demetrius and his fellows would have made no stir for their worship, had not the apostles' preaching tended to discredit that by which they got their wealth. Most of the outcries that have been made against all revivals of religion; revivals by which the church has been called back to its primitive principles and purity, have arisen out of self-interest. The cry of the church is in danger, has been echoed only by those who found their secular interest at stake; and knew that reformation must unmask them; and shew, that the slothful and wicked servants could no longer be permitted to live on the revenues of that church, which they disgraced by their lives, and corrupted by their false doctrines. He that eats the church's bread, should do the church's work: and he that will not work, should not be permitted to eat.

NOTES ON CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. After the uproar was ceased] The tumult excited by Demetrius apparently induced Paul to leave Ephesus sooner than he had intended. He had written to the Corinthians, that he should leave that place after Pentecost, 1 Cor. xvi. 8. but it is very probable that he left it sooner.

Verse 2. He came into Greece] Εις την Ελλαδα, into Hellas, Greece properly so called, the regions between Thessaly and Propontis, and the country of Achaia. He did not, however, go there immediately: he passed through Macedonia, ver. 1. in which he informs us, 2 Cor. vii. 5, 6, 7. that he suffered much, both from believers and infidels: but was greatly comforted by the arrival of Titus, who gave him a very flattering account of the prosperous state of the church at Corinth. A short time after this, being still in Macedonia, he sent Titus back to Corinth, 2 Cor. viii. 16, 17. and sent by him the Second Epistle which he wrote to that church, as Theodoret and others suppose. Some time after he visited Corinth himself, according to his promise, 1 Cor. xvi. 5. This was his third voyage to that city, 2 Cor. xii. 14. xiii. 1. What he did there at this time cannot be distinctly known; but, according to St. Augustin, he ordered every thing relative to the Holy Eucharist, and the proper manner in which it was to be received. See Calmet.

Verse 3. Abode three months] Partly as we may suppose, at Corinth, at Athens, and in Achaia; from which place he is supposed to have sent his Epistle to the Romans, because he continued longer here than at any other place; and mentions several of the Corinthians in his salutations to the believers of Rome.

When the Jews laid wait for him] Paul had determined to go by sea to Syria, and from thence to Jerusalem. This was the first object of his journey; and this was the readiest road he could take: but hearing that the Jews had laid wait for him, probably to attack his ship on the voyage, seize his person, sell him for a slave, and take the money which he was carrying to the poor saints at Jerusalem; he resolved to go as much of the journey as he conveniently could, by land. Therefore, he returned through Macedonia, and from thence to Troas, where he embarked to sail for Syria, on his way to Jerusalem. The whole of his journey is detailed in this and the following chapter. See also the Map.

Verse 4. And there accompanied him] Rather, says Bp. Pearce, there followed him as far as to Asia: for they were not in his company till he set sail from Philippi, and came to them at Troas, in Asia, whither they had gone before, and where they tarried for him, ver. 5.

Into Asia] Αχρι της Ασιας; these words are wanting in two MSS. Erpen the Æthiopic, Coptic, and Vulgate. Some think that they embarrass this place; for how these could accompany him into Asia, and go before him, and tarry for him at Troas, ver. 6. is not so very clear; unless we suppose, what I have glanced at in the Table of Contents, that they came with him to Asia; but he tarrying a short time, they proceeded on their journey, and stopped for him at Troas, where he shortly after rejoined them. Mr. Wakefield gets rid of the difficulty, by reading the verse thus: Now Sopater of Berea accompanied him; but Aristarchus and Secundus of Thessalonica, Gaius of Derbe, Timothy of Lystra, and Tychicus and Trophimus of Asia, went before and tarried for us at Troas.

Sopater of Berea] Sopater seems to be the same as Sosipater, whom St. Paul mentions as his kinsman, Rom. xvi. 21. ADE. more than twenty others, with the Coptic, Armenian, latter Syriac in the margin, Vulgate, Itala, Theophylact, Origen and Bede, add Πυρρου Sopater the SON OF PYRRHUS. Griesbach has received this into his text.

Aristarchus of Thessalonica] This person occurs in chap. xix. 29. and is mentioned there as a Macedonian. He attended Paul in his journey to Rome, chap. xxxvii. 2. and was his fellow-labourer, Philemon, ver. 24. and his fellow-prisoner, Col. iv. 10, 11. Secundus is mentioned no where but in this place.

Gaius of Derbe] This is supposed to be the same who is mentioned chap. xix. 26. and who is there called a man of Macedonia, of which some suppose he was a native, but descended from a family that came from Derbe; but as Gaius, or Caius, was a very common name, these might have been two distinct persons. One of this name was baptized by St. Paul at Corinth, 1 Cor. i. 14. and entertained him as his

[a] Aristarchus, and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and [c] Timotheus; and of Asia, [d] Tychicus and [e] Trophimus.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after [f] the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them [g] to Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 ¶ And upon [h] the first day of the week, when the disciples came together [i] to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

host while he abode there, Rom. xvi. 23. and was probably the same to whom St. John directs his third Epistle.

And Timotheus] Of Lystra is added by the Syriac. This was the same person of whom mention is made, chap. xvi. 1. and to whom St. Paul wrote the two Epistles, which are still extant; and who was a native of Lystra, as we learn from the above place. It was on this evidence, probably, that the ancient Syriac translator added of Lystra to the text. This reading is not supported by any MSS.

Tychicus—of Asia] This person was high in the confidence of St. Paul. He stiles him a beloved brother, and faithful minister in the Lord, whom he sent to the Ephesians, that he might know their affairs, and comfort their hearts, Ephes. chap. vi. 21, 22. He sent him for the same purpose, and with the same commendations, to the Colossians, Col. iv. 7, 8. Paul seems also to have designed him to superintend the church at Crete, in the absence of Titus; see Tit. iii. 12. He seems to have been the most intimate and confidential friend that Paul had.

Trophimus] Was an Ephesian; and both he and Tychicus are called Εφεσιοι, Ephesians, instead of Ασιανοι, Asiatics, in the Codex Bezæ, both Greek and Latin, and in the Sahidic. He accompanied Paul from Ephesus into Greece, as we see here; and from thence to Jerusalem, chap. xxi. 29. He had, no doubt, travelled with him on other journeys, for we find by 2 Tim. iv. 20. that he was obliged to leave him sick at Miletus, being then, as it is likely, on his return to his own kindred at Ephesus.

Verse 5. Tarried for us at Troas] See the preceding verse. Troas was a small town in Phrygia Minor, in the province called the Troad; see chap. xvi. 8.

Verse 6. Days of unleavened bread] The seven days of the Pass-over, in which they ate unleavened bread. See the account of this festival in the notes on Exod. xii. It is evident from the manner in which St. Luke writes here, that he had not been with St. Paul since the time he accompanied him to Philippi, chap. xvi. 10—12. but he now embarks at Philippi with the apostle, and accompanies him to Troas, and continues with him through the rest of his journey.

To Troas in five days] So long they were making this voyage to Philippi, being obliged to keep always by the coast, and in sight of the land; for the magnetic needle was not yet known. See the situation of these places upon the Map.

Verse 7. Upon the first day of the week] What was called κυριακη, the Lord's day, the Christian sabbath, in which they commemorated the Resurrection of our Lord; and which among all Christians, afterwards took the place of the Jewish sabbath.

To break bread] To break ܦܪܘܣܐ eucaristia, the eucharist, as the Syriac has it; intimating by this, that they were accustomed to receive the holy sacrament on each Lord's day. It is likely that, besides this, they received a common meal together. Some think the αγαπη, or love feast, is intended.

Continued his speech until midnight] At what time he began to preach we cannot tell, but we hear when he concluded. He preached during the whole night, for he did not leave off till the break of the next day, ver. 11. though about midnight his discourse was interrupted by the fall of Eutychus. As this was about the time of Pentecost, and we may suppose about the beginning of May, as Troas was in about 40 degrees of north latitude, the sun set there at seven P. M. and rose at five A. M. so that the night was about eight hours long; and taking all the interruptions together, and they could not have amounted to more than two hours; and, taking no account of the preceding day's work, Paul must have preached a sermon not less than six hours long. But it is likely that a good part of this time was employed in hearing and answering questions; for διελεγετο, and διαλεγομενου, may be thus understood.

Verse 8. Upper chamber] It was in an upper chamber in the temple that the primitive disciples were accustomed to meet: on that account, they might have preferred an upper chamber whenever they could meet with it. The pious

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and [a] fell on him; and embracing him said, [b] Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia: for [c] he hasted, if it were possible for him, [d] to be at Jerusalem [e] the day of Pentecost.

Quesnel supposes, that the smoke issuing from the many lamps in this upper chamber, was the cause of Eutychus falling asleep; and this, he says, the apostle mentions, in charity, to excuse the young man's appearing negligent.

Verse 9. There sat in a window] This was probably an opening in the wall, to let in light and air, for there was no glazing at that time: and it is likely that Eutychus fell backward through it, down to the ground, on the outside; there being nothing to prevent his falling out, when he had once lost the power to take care of himself, by getting into a deep sleep.

Verse 10. And Paul—fell on him] Επεσεν αυτω, stretched himself upon him, in the same manner as Elisha did on the Shunamite's son, 2 Kings iv. 33—35. though the action of lying on him, in order to communicate warmth to the flesh, might not have been continued so long as in the above instance; nor indeed was it necessary, as the natural warmth had not yet left the body of Eutychus; but the son of the Shunamite had been some time dead.

Verse 11. Had broken bread] Had taken some refreshment, in order to their journey.

And talked a long while] Ομιλησας, having familiarly conversed, for this is the import of the word, which is very different from the διελεγετο, of the seventh verse, and the διαλεγομενου, of the ninth; which imply solemn, grave discourse.

Verse 13. Sailed unto Assos] Assos, according to Pausanias, Eliac. ii. 4. and Pliny, Hist. Nat. xxxvi. 27. was a maritime town of Asia, in the Troad. Strabo and Stephanus, place it in Mysia. It was also called Apollonia, according to Pliny, lb. lib. v. 30. The passage by sea to this place was much longer than by land; and therefore St. Paul chose to go by land, while the others went by sea.

Intending to take in Paul] Αναλαμβανειν, to take him in AGAIN; for it appears he had already been aboard that same vessel: probably the same that had carried them from Philippi to Troas, ver. 6.

Verse 14. Came to Mitylene.] This was a sea-port town in the isle of Lesbos: see its place in the Map.

Verse 15. Over against Chios] This was a very celebrated island between Lesbos and Samos, famous in antiquity for its extraordinary wines. At this island the apostle did not touch.

Arrived at Samos] This was another island of the Ægean sea, or Archipelago. It does not appear that they landed at Samos; they passed close by it, and anchored at Trogyllium. This was a promontory of Ionia, which gave name to some small islands in the vicinity of Samos; Τῃ δε Τρωγιλλου προκειται νησιον ομωνυμον: before Trogyllium, is situated an island of the same name. Strabo lib. xiv. p. 636. Pliny also mentions this place, Hist. Nat. lib. v. cap. 31. Near this place was the mouth of the famous river Meander.

Came to Miletus.] A celebrated city in the province of Caria, about twelve or fifteen leagues from Ephesus, according to Calmet. Miletus is famous for being the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven wise men of Greece, and founder of the Ionic sect of philosophers. Anaximander was also born here, and several other eminent men. The Turks, who now possess it, call it Melas.

Verse 16. To sail by Ephesus] Not to touch there at this time.

have the opportunity of preaching the kingdom of God to multitudes of Jews from different places, who would come up to Jerusalem at that feast; and then he no doubt expected to see there a renewal of that day of Pentecost, in which the Spirit was poured out on the disciples; and in consequence of which so many were converted to God.

Verse 17. He sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.] These are called επισκοποι, bishops, ver. 28. By the πρεσβυτεροι, Presbyters or Elders; here, we are to understand, all that were in authority in the church, whether they were επισκοποι, Bishops or Overseers; or seniors in years, knowledge, and experience. The πρεσβυτεροι, or Elders, were probably the first order in the church; an order which was not so properly constituted; but which rose out of the state of things. From these Presbuteroi, the Episcopoi, overseers or superintendents, were selected. Those who were eldest in years, Christian knowledge and experience, would naturally be preferred to all others, as overseers of the church of Christ. From the Greek word πρεσβυτερος, comes the Latin Presbyterus; the English Presbyter, the French Prestre, and our own term Priest: and all, when traced up to their original, signify merely an elderly or aged person; though it soon became the name of an office, rather than of a state of years. Now, as these Elders are called επισκοποι, Bishops, in ver. 28. we may take it for granted that they were the same order; or rather that these superintendents of the church were indifferently called either Presbyters or Bishops.

As he had not time to call at Ephesus, he thought it best to have a general convocation of the heads of that church to meet him at Miletus; that he might give them the instructions mentioned in the succeeding parts of this chapter.

Verse 18. After what manner I have been with you] The Codex Bezæ adds here, for three years, and even more, which reading might have been borrowed from ver. 31. though the time assigned by it is too long.

Verse 19. Serving the Lord with all humility, &c.] This relates not only to his zealous and faithful performance of his apostolic functions, but also to his private walk as a Christian; and shews with what carefulness this apostle himself was obliged to walk, in order to have his calling and election as a Christian, ratified and made firm.

Verse 20. I kept back nothing] Notwithstanding the dangers to which he was exposed, and the temptations he must have had to suppress those truths that were less acceptable to the unrenewed nature of man, or to the particular prejudices of the Jews and the Gentiles; he fully and faithfully, at all hazards, declared what he terms, ver. 27. the whole counsel of God. "Behold here," says the judicious and pious Calmet, "the model of a good shepherd—full of doctrine and zeal: he communicates with profusion, and yet with discretion, without jealousy and without fear, what God had put in his heart, and what charity inspires. A good shepherd, says St. Bernard, should always have abundance of bread in his scrip, and his dog under command. His dog is his zeal, which he must lead, order, and moderate; his scrip full of bread, is his mind full of useful knowledge: and he should ever be in readiness to give nourishment to his flock." He who will quarrel with this sentiment, because of the uncouthness of the simile, needs pity, and deserves censure.

Verse 21. Testifying both to—Jews and—Greeks] He always began with the Jews; and, in this case, he had preached to them alone, for three months, chap. xix. 8—10. and only left their synagogues, when he found, through their obstinacy, he could do them no good.

Repentance toward God, &c.] As all had sinned against God, so all should humble themselves before him, against whom they have sinned—but humiliation is no atonement for sin; therefore repentance is insufficient, unless faith in our Lord Jesus Christ accompany it. Repentance disposes and prepares the soul for pardoning mercy; but can never be considered as making compensation for past acts of transgression. This repentance and faith were necessary to the salvation both of Jews and Gentiles; for all had sinned, and come short of God's glory. The Jews must repent, who had sinned so much, and so long, against light and knowledge: The Gentiles must repent, whose scandalous lives were a reproach to man. Faith in Jesus Christ was also indispensably necessary—for a Jew might repent, be sorry for his sin, and suppose that, by a proper discharge of his religious duty, and bringing proper sacrifices, he could conciliate the favour of God: No, this will not do; nothing but faith in Jesus Christ, as the end of the law, and the great and only vicarious sacrifice, will do; hence he testified to them the necessity of faith in this Messiah. The Gentiles might repent of their profligate lives, turn to the true God, and renounce all idolatry: this is well; but it is not sufficient—they also have sinned, and their present amendment and faith can make no atonement for what is past: therefore they also must believe on the Lord Jesus, who died for their sins, and rose again for their justification.

Verse 22. I go bound in the Spirit] Δεδεμενος τῳ πνευματι—either meaning the strong influence of the Divine Spirit upon his mind, or the strong propensity in his own will, wish, and desire, to visit Jerusalem; and in this sense δεειν, to bind, is sometimes used. But it appears more consistent with the mind of the apostle, and with that influence under which we find that he constantly acted, to refer it to the influence of the Holy Ghost; υπο του πνευματος, being under the power of that Spirit; as if he had said, "I have now no choice—God has not left me either to the advices of friends, or to my own prudence: the Spirit of God obliges me to go to Jerusalem; and yet does not intimate to me what peculiar trials shall befal me there: I have only the general intimation that, in every city where I proclaim the gospel, bonds and afflictions await me." This sense of the word, Kypke has largely defended in his note here.

Verse 24. None of these things move me] Ουδενος λογον ποιουμαι; I consider them as nothing; I value them not a straw; they weigh not with me.

Neither count I my life dear] I am not my own; my life and being are the Lord's; he requires me to employ them in his service; I act under his direction, and am not anxious about the issue.

Finish my course with joy] Τον δρομον μου, my ministerial function. We have already met with this word in application to the same subject, chap. xiii. 25. where see the note. And the apostle here adds, by way of explanation, και την διακονιαν, even that ministry which I have received of the Lord. The words μετα χαρας, with joy, are omitted by ABD. some others: the Syriac, Erpen. Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, and some of the Fathers. If we consider them as genuine, they may imply thus much; that the apostle wished to fulfil his ministry in such a way as might meet with the divine approbation; for nothing could give him joy, that did not please and glorify God.

To testify] Διαμαρτυρασθαι, earnestly, solemnly and strenuously to assert, vindicate, and prove the gospel of the grace of God, not only to be in itself what it professes to be; but to be also, the power of God for salvation to every one that believes.

Verse 25. Ye all—shall see my face no more.] This probably refers simply to the persons who were now present; concerning whom he might have had a divine intimation, that they should not be found in life when he should come that way again. Or it may refer only to Ephesus and Miletus. From the dangers to which he was exposed, it was, humanly speaking, unlikely that he should ever return; and this may be all that is implied: but that he did revisit those parts, though probably not Miletus or Ephesus, appears likely from Philip. i. 25—27. ii. 24. Philemon 22. Heb. xiii. 19, 23. But in all these places he speaks with a measure of uncertainty: he had not an absolute evidence that he should not return; but, in his own mind, it was a matter of uncertainty. The Holy Spirit did not think proper to give him a direct revelation on this point.

Verse 26. I am pure from the blood of all] If any man, Jew or Gentile, perish in his sins, his blood shall be upon him; he, alone, shall be accessary to his own perdition. I am blameless, because I have fully shewn to both, the way to escape from every evil.

Verse 27. I have not shunned to declare] Ου υποστειλαμην,

I have not suppressed or concealed any thing, through fear or favour, that might be beneficial to your souls. This is properly the meaning of the original word. See the note on ver. 20.

All the counsel of God.] All that God has determined and revealed concerning the salvation of man—the whole doctrine of Christ crucified, with repentance toward God; and faith in Jesus, as the Messiah and great atoning Priest. In Isai. ix. 6. Jesus Christ is called the wonderful counsellor, פלא יועץ Pelé Yoéts, which the Septuagint translate μεγαλης βουλης Αγγελος· The messenger of the great counsel. To this the apostle may have referred, as we well know that this Version was constantly under his eye. Declaring therefore to them the whole counsel of God, πασην την βουλην του Θεου, the whole of that counsel or design of God; was, in effect, declaring the whole that concerned the Lord Jesus, who was the messenger of this counsel.

Verse 28. Made you overseers] Εθετο επισκοπους, appointed you bishops; for so we translate the original word in most places where it occurs: but overseers, or inspectors, is much more proper, from επι, over, and σκεπτομαι, I look. The persons who examine into the spiritual state of the flock of God, and take care to lead them in and out, and to find them pasture, are termed Episcopoi, or superintendents. The office of a bishop is from God; a true pastor only can fulfil this office: it is an office of most awful responsibility; few there are who can fill it: and, of those who occupy this high and awful place, perhaps we may say, there are fewer still who discharge the duties of it. There are, however, through the good providence of God, Christian bishops who, while they are honoured by the calling, do credit to the sacred function. And the annals of our church can boast of at least as many of this class of men, who have served their God and their generation, as of any other order, in the proportion which this order bears to others in the church of Christ. That Bishop and Presbyter, or Elder, were at this time of the same order, and that the word was indifferently used of both: see noticed on ver. 17.

Feed the church of God] This verse has been the subject of much controversy, particularly in reference to the term Θεου, of God, in this place: and concerning it there is great dissension among the MSS. and Versions. Three readings exist in them, in reference to which, critics and commentators have been much divided; viz. εκκλησιαν του Θεου, the church of God;—του Κυριου, of the Lord: Κυριου και Θεου, of the Lord and God. From the collections of Wetstein and Griesbach, it appears that but few MSS. and none of them very ancient, have the word Θεου, of God; with these only the Vulgate, and the latter Syriac in the text, agree. Κυριου, of the Lord, is the reading of ACDE. several others, the Sahidic, Coptic, latter Syriac in the margin, Armenian, Æthopic, and some of the Fathers. Κυριου και Θεου, of the Lord and of God, is the reading of the great majority; though the most ancient are for Κυριου, of the Lord; on this ground Griesbach has admitted this reading into the text, and put Κυριου και Θεου, in the margin, as being next in authority.

Mr. Wakefield, who was a professed and conscientious Unitarian, decides for του Θεου, of God, as the true reading; but instead of translating του αδιου αιματος, with his own blood, he translates by his own son; and brings some passages from the Greek and Roman writers, to shew that αιμα and Sanguis, are used to signify son, or near relative: and were this the only place where purchasing with his own blood occurred, we might receive this saying; but as the redemption of man is, throughout the New Testament, attributed to the sacrificial death of Christ, it is not likely that this very unusual meaning should apply here. At all events, we have here a proof that the church was purchased by the blood of Christ; and, as to his Godhead, it is sufficiently established in many other places. When we grant that the greater evidence appears to be in favour of του Κυριου, feed the church of the Lord, which he has purchased with his own blood; we must maintain that, had not this Lord been God, his blood could have been no purchase for the souls of a lost world.

Verse 29. After my departing] Referring, most likely to his death; for few of these evils took place during his life.

Grievous wolves] Persons professing to be teachers, Judaizing Christians, who, instead of feeding the flock, would feed themselves, even to the oppression and ruin of the church.

Verse 30. Also of your own selves, &c.] From out of your own assembly, shall men arise, speaking perverse things; teaching for truth, what is erroneous in itself; and perversive of the genuine doctrine of Christ crucified.

speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them.

To draw away disciples.] To make schisms or rents in the church, in order to get a party to themselves. See here, the cause of divisions in the church:—1. The superintendents lose the life of God, neglect the souls of the people, become greedy of gain; and, by secular extortions, oppress the people. 2. The members of the church thus neglected, oppressed, and irritated, get their minds alienated from their rapacious pastors. 3. Men of sinister views take advantage of this state of distraction, foment discord, preach up the necessity of division, and thus the people become separated from the great body, and associate with those who profess to care for their souls, and who disclaim all secular views. In this state of distraction, it is a high proof of God's love to his heritage, if one be found, who, possessing the true apostolic doctrine and spirit, rises up to call men back to the primitive truth: and restores the primitive discipline. How soon the grievous wolves and perverse teachers arose in the churches of Asia Minor, the first chapters of the Apocalypse inform us. The Nicolaitans had nearly ruined the church of Ephesus, Rev. ii. 2, 6. The same sect, with other false teachers, infested the church of Pergamos, and preached there the doctrine of Balaam, Ibid. ii. 14, 15. A false prophetess seduced the church of Thyatira, Ib. ii. 20. All these churches were in Asia Minor, and probably bishops or ministers from each, were present at this convocation.

Verse 31. Therefore watch, and remember] The only way to abide in the truth, is to watch against evil, and for good; and to keep in mind the heavenly doctrines originally received. Unwatchfulness and forgetfulness, are two grand inlets to apostasy.

By the space of three years] Τριετιαν. The Greek word here does not necessarily mean three whole years, it may be months, more or less. In chap. xix. 8 and 10. we have an account of his spending two years and three months among them; probably this is all that is intended. One MS. perceiving that the time of three years was not completed, inserts διετιαν, the space of two years.

Verse 32. I commend you to God] Instead of Θεῳ, to God; several MSS. have τῳ Κυριῳ, to the Lord; neither reading makes any difference in the sense.

And to the word of his grace] The doctrine of salvation by Christ Jesus.

Which is able to build you up] The foundation is Jesus Christ; God is the great master-builder; the doctrine of his grace, or mercy, points out the order and manner, as well as the extent, &c. of this building. Let us observe the order of these things:—1. The soul of man, which was formerly the habitation of God, is now in a state of ruin. 2. The ruins of this soul must be repaired, that it may again become a habitation of God through the Spirit. 3. Jesus Christ is the only foundation, on which this house can be rebuilded. 4. The doctrine of God's grace is the model or plan according to which the building can be raised. 5. When re-edified each is to be a lively temple of the Lord, made inwardly pure, and outwardly righteous, and thus prepared for a state of bliss. 6. Being made children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus, and sanctified by his Spirit, they have a right to the heavenly inheritance; for only the children of the family can possess the cœlestial estate. Thus we find they must be saved by grace, and be made thereby children of God; be sanctified by his Spirit, and then, being prepared for, they are removed, in due time, into the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 33. I have coveted no man's silver, &c.] And from this circumstance, they would be able to discover the grievous wolves and the perverters; for these had nothing but their own interests in view; whereas the genuine disciples of Christ neither coveted nor had worldly possessions. St. Paul's account of his own disinterestedness, is very similar to that given by Samuel, of his, 1 Sam. xiii. 3—5.

Verse 34. These hands have ministered, &c.] It was neither "sin nor discredit" for the apostle to work to maintain himself, when the circumstances of the church were such that it could not support him. Still, many eminent ministers of God are obliged to support themselves and their families, at least in part, in the same way, while indefatigably testifying the gospel of the grace of God. Whatever it may be to the people, it is no cause of reproach to the minister, to be obliged thus to employ himself.

Verse 35. I have shewed you all things] The preposition κατα is to be understood before παντα; and the clause should be read thus—I have shewed you IN all things, &c.

It is more blessed to give than to receive.] That is, the giver is more happy than the receiver. Where, or on what occasion our Lord spake these words we know not, as they do not exist in any of the four Evangelists. But, that our Lord did speak them, St. Paul's evidence is quite sufficient to prove. The sentiment is worthy of Christ. A truly generous mind, in affluence, rejoices in opportunities to do good; and feels happy in having such opportunities. A man of an independent spirit, when reduced to poverty, finds it a severe trial to be obliged to live on the bounty of another; and feels pain in receiving what the other feels a happiness in communicating. Let, therefore, the man who is able to give feel himself the obliged person; and think how much pain the feeling heart of his supplicant must endure, in being obliged to forego its native independence, in soliciting and receiving the bounty of another. I am not speaking of common beggars; these have got their minds already depraved, and their native independence reduced, by sin and idleness, to servility.

Verse 36. He kneeled down, and prayed] Kneeling was the proper posture of a supplicant; it argues at once both humility and submission; and he who prays to God, should endeavour to feel the utmost measures of both.

Verse 37. Fell on Paul's neck] Leaned their heads against his shoulder, and kissed his neck. This was not an unusual custom in the East.

Verse 38. That they should see his face no more.] This was a most solemn meeting, and a most affecting parting. The man who had first pointed out to them the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom they had been brought into so glorious a state of salvation, is now going away, in all likelihood, to be seen no more till the day in which the quick and dead shall stand before the throne of judgment. Such a scene, and its correspondent feelings, are more easily imagined than described.

1. As the disciples are stated to have come together on the first day of the week, we may learn from this, that ever since the apostolic times, the Lord's day, now the Christian sabbath, was set apart for religious exercises; such as the preaching of God's holy word, and celebrating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Besides its being the day on which our blessed Lord rose from the dead, the practice of the apostles, and the primitive church, is an additional reason why we should religiously celebrate this first day of the week. They who, professing the Christian religion, still prefer the Jewish sabbath, have little to support them in the New Testament. How prone is man to affect to be wise above what is written, while he is, in almost every respect, below the teaching so plainly laid down in the Divine word.

2. The charge of St. Paul to the pastors of the church of Christ at Ephesus and Miletus, contains much that is interesting to every Christian minister:—1. If he be sent of God at all, he is sent to feed the flock. 2. But, in order to feed them, he must have the bread of life. 3. This bread he must distribute in its due season, that each may have that portion that is suitable to time, place, and state. 4. While he is feeding others, he should take care to have his own soul fed: it is possible for a minister to be the instrument of feeding others, and yet starve himself. 5. If Jesus Christ entrust to his care the souls he has bought by his own blood; what an awful account will he have to give in the day of judgment, if any of them perish through his neglect? Though the sinner, dying in his sins, has his own blood upon his head; yet, if the watchman has not faithfully warned him, his blood will be required at the watchman's hand. Let him who is concerned read Ezek. chap xxxiii. 3, 4, 5. and think of the account which he is shortly to give unto God.

3. Tenderness and sympathy are not inconsistent with the highest state of grace. Paul warns his hearers day and night with tears. His hearers now weep sore at the departure of their beloved pastor. They who can give up a Christian minister with indifference, have either profited little under that ministry, or they have back-slidden from the grace of God. The pastors should love as fathers, the converts as children; and all feel themselves one family, under that great head Christ Jesus.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. Came with a straight course] Having had, as is necessarily implied wind and tide in their favour.

Coos] An island in the Archipelago, or Ægean sea, one of those called the Sporades. It was famous for the worship of Æsculapius and Juno: and for being the birth-place of Hippocrates, the most eminent of physicians; and Apelles, the most celebrated of painters.

Rhodes] Another island in the same sea, celebrated for its Colossus, which was one of the seven wonders of the world. This was a brazen statue of Apollo, so high that ships in full sail could pass between its legs. It was the work of Chares, a pupil of Lysippus, who spent twelve years in making it. It was 106 feet high, and so great, that few people could fathom its thumb. It was thrown down by an earthquake, about 224 years before Christ, after having stood sixty-six years. When the Saracens took possession of this island, they sold this prostrate image to a Jew, who loaded 900 camels with the brass of it; this was about A. D. 660, nearly 900 years after it had been thrown down.

Verse 2. Phœnicia] A part of Syria. See the note on chap. xi.

Verse 3. Cyprus] See the note on chap. iv. 36. and see the track of this journey on the Map.

Tyre] A city of Phœnicia, one of the most celebrated maritime towns in the world. See the notes on chap. xii. 20. Matt. xi. 21.

There, the ship was to unlade her burden] The freight that she had taken in at Ephesus, she was to unlade at Tyre, to which place she was bound.

Verse 4. Who said to Paul through the Spirit] We cannot understand this as a command from the Holy Spirit not to go up to Jerusalem; else Paul must have been highly criminal to have disobeyed it. Through the Spirit, must either refer to their own great earnestness to dissuade him from taking a journey, which they plainly saw would be injurious to him; and so Bp. Pearce understands this place. Or if it refer to the Holy Spirit, it must mean, that if he regarded his personal safety, he must not, at this time, go up to Jerusalem. The Spirit foretold Paul's persecutions, but does not appear to have forbidden his journey: and Paul was persuaded, that in acting as he was about to do, whatever personal risk he ran, he should bring more glory to God by going to Jerusalem, than by tarrying at Tyre or elsewhere. The purport of this divine communication was, "If thou go that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and [a] we kneeled down on the shore and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned [b] home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cæsarea: and we entered into the house of Philip [c] the evangelist, [d] which was one of the seven and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, [e] which did prophesy.

10 ¶ And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named [f] Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, [g] So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

up to Jerusalem, the Jews will persecute thee; and thou wilt be imprisoned, &c." As he was apprised of this, he might have desisted, for the whole was conditional: Paul might or might not go to Jerusalem: if he did go, he would be persecuted, and be in danger of losing his life. The Holy Spirit neither commanded him to go, nor forbad him: the whole was conditional; and he was left to the free exercise of his own judgment and conscience. This was a similar case to that of David in Keilah, 1 Sam. xxiii. 9—13. David prevented the threatened evil by leaving Keilah: Paul fell into it, by going to Jerusalem.

Verse 5. When we had accomplished those days] That is the seven days mentioned in the preceding verse.

And they all brought us on our way, with wives and children] It is not likely that Paul, Silas, Luke, &c. had either wives or children with them; and it is more natural to suppose that the brethren of Tyre, with their wives and children, are those that are meant: these, through affection to the apostles, accompanied them from their homes to the ship; and the coming out of the husbands, wives, and children, shews what a general and affectionate interest the preaching and private conversation of these holy men had excited.

Kneeled down on the shore, and prayed] As God fills heaven and earth, so he may be worshipped every where: as well, when circumstances require it, on the sea-shore, as in the temple. We have already seen, in the case of Lydia, that the Jews had proseuchas by the river-sides, &c. and an observation in Tertullian seems to intimate, that they preferred such places, and in the open air offered their petitions to God by the sea-shore: Omissis templis, per omne littus, quocumque in aperto aliquando jam præces ad cœlum mittunt. Tertul. de Jejunio.

Verse 6. Taken—leave] Ασπασαμενοι; having given each other the kiss of peace, as was the constant custom of the Jews and primitive Christians.

They returned home] That is, the men, their wives, and their children.

Verse 7. We came to Ptolemais] This was a sea-port town of Galilee, not far from Mount Carmel, between Tyre and Cæsarea, where the river Belus empties itself into the sea. It was at first called Accho, (and this is the reading of the Syriac and Arabic,) and belonged to the tribe of Asher, Judges i. 31. it was enlarged and beautified by the first of the Egyptian Ptolemies, from whom it was called Ptolemais. This place terminated St. Paul's voyage: and this is what is expressed in the text: And we came from Tyre to Ptolemais, where our voyage ended. See the Greek text.

Verse 8. We that were of Paul's company] Οι περι τον Παυλον. This clause is wanting in ABCE. and many others, the Syriac, Coptic, Vulgate, Armenian, &c.

Came unto Cæsarea] This was Cæsarea of Palestine, already sufficiently described. See on chap. viii. 40.

Philip the Evangelist] One of the seven deacons, who seems to have settled here, after he had baptized the eunuch. See on chap viii. 40.

Verse 9. Four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.] Probably these were no more than teachers in the church; for we have already seen that this was a frequent meaning of the word prophecy: and this is undoubtedly one thing intended by the prophecy of Joel, quoted chap. ii. 17, and 18. of this book. If Philip's daughters might be prophetesses, why not teachers?

Verse 10. Agabus.] See the note on chap. xi. 28.

Verse 11. Took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands, &c.]

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, [a] What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, [b] The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 ¶ [c] And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following, Paul went in with us unto [d] James; and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, [e] he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles [f] by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all [g] zealous of the law:

g ch. 22. 3. Rom. 10. 2. Gal. 1. 14.

This was no doubt a prophet, in the commonly received sense of the term; and his mode of acting was like that of the ancient prophets, who often accompanied their predictions with significant emblems. Jeremiah was commanded to bury his girdle by the river Euphrates, to mark out the captivity of the Jews. Jerem. xiii. 4. For more examples of this figurative or symbolical prophesying, see Jerem. xxvii. 2, 3. xxviii. 4. Isai. xx. Ezek. iv. xii. &c.

Into the hands of the Gentiles.] That is, the Romans, for the Jews had not, properly speaking, the power of life and death. And as Agabus said, he should be delivered into the hands of the Gentiles, he shewed thereby that they would attempt to destroy his life. This prediction of Agabus was literally fulfilled, see ver. 33.

Verse 12. Besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.] For they all understoood the prophecy to be conditional and contingent; and that it was in Paul's power to turn the scale.

Verse 13. I am ready not to be bound only] He was resolute and determined; but was under no constraining necessity. See the note on ver. 4.

Verse 14. The will of the Lord be done.] May that which is most for his glory take place! They plainly saw from the prophecy what would take place, if Paul went to Jerusalem; and every one saw that he had power to go, or not to go.

Verse 15. Took up our carriages] Αποσκευασαμενοι; we made ourselves ready; packed up our things; got our baggage in order. This is what the text means.

Verse 16. And brought with them one Mnason, &c.] It is not very likely that they would bring a man with them, with whom they were to lodge in Jerusalem; therefore, the text should perhaps be read as Bp. Patrick proposes: There went with us certain of the disciples of Cæsarea bringing us to one Mnason, with whom we were to lodge. This is most likely, as the text will bear this translation. But it is possible that Mnason, formerly of Cyprus, now an inhabitant of Jerusalem, might have been down at Cæsarea, met the disciples, and invited them to lodge with him while they were at Jerusalem; and having transacted his business at Cæsarea, might now accompany them to Jerusalem. His being an old disciple, may either refer to his having been a very early convert, probably one of those on the day of Pentecost; or to his being now an old man.

Verse 18. Went in with us unto James] This was James the less, son of Mary, and cousin to our Lord. He appears to have been bishop of the church in Jerusalem: and perhaps the only apostle who continued in that city. We have already seen what a very important character he sustained in the council. See chap. xv. 13.

All the elders were present] It appears that they had been convened about matters of serious and important moment: and some think it was relative to Paul himself; of whose arrival they had heard, and well knew how many of those that believed were disaffected towards him.

Verse 19. Declared particularly, &c.] He no doubt had heard that they were prejudiced against him; and by declaring what God had done by him among the Gentiles, shewed how groundles this prejudice was: for were he a bad man, or doing any thing that he should not do, God would not have made him such a singular instrument of so much good.

Verse 20. How many thousands] Ποσαι μυριαδες; how many myriads, how many times 10,000. This intimates that there had been a most extraordinary and rapid work even among the Jews: but what is here spoken is not to be confined to the Jews of Jerusalem; but to all that had come from different parts of the land, to be present at this Pentecost.

They are all zealous of the law.] The Jewish œconomy was not yet destroyed; nor had God as yet signified that the whole of its observances were done away. He continued to tolerate that dispensation, which was to be in a certain measure in force till the destruction of Jerusalem; and from that period it was impossible for them to observe their own ritual. Thus God abolished the Mosaic dispensation, by rendering, in the course of his providence, the observation of it impossible.

Verse 21. Thou teachest—to forsake Moses, &c.] From any thing that appears in the course of this book to the contrary, this information was incorrect: we do not find Paul preaching thus to the Jews. It is true, that, in his Epistles, some of which had been written before this time, he shewed that circumcision and uncircumcision were equally unavailable for the salvation of the soul; and that by the deeds of the law no man could be justified; but he had not yet said to any Jew, forsake Moses, and do not circumcise your children. He told them that Jesus Christ had delivered them from the yoke of the law; but they had, as yet, liberty to wear that yoke, if they pleased. He had shewed them that their ceremonies were useless, but not destructive; that they were only dangerous, when they depended on them for salvation. This is the sum of what Paul had taught on this subject.

Verse 22. The multitude must needs come together] Whether this refers to a regular convocation of the church; or to a tumult that would infallibly take place when it was heard that the apostle was come, we cannot pretend to say: but it is evident that James and the Elders wished some prudent steps to be taken, in order to prevent an evil that they had too much reason to fear.

Verse 23. We have four men which have a vow] From the shaving of the head, mentioned immediately after, it is evident that the four men in question, were under the vow of Nazariteship; and that the days of their vow were nearly at an end, as they were about to shave their heads; for, during the time of the Nazariteship, the hair was permitted to grow, and only shaven off at the termination of the vow. Among the Jews, it was common to make vows to God on extraordinary occasions; and that of the Nazarite appears to have been one of the most common; and it was permitted by their law, for any person to perform this vow by proxy. See the law produced in my note on Numb. vi. 21. "It was also customary for the richer sort to bestow their charity on the poorer sort for this purpose; for Josephus Ant. lib. xix. cap. 6. sect. 1. observes, that Agrippa, on his being advanced from a prison to a throne, by the emperor Claudius, came to Jerusalem; and there, among other instances of his religious thankfulness shewn in the temple, Ναζαραιων ξυρασθαι διεταξε μαλα συχνους, he ordered very many Nazarites to be shaven; he furnishing them with money for the expences of that, and of the sacrifices necessarily attending it." See Bp. Pearce.

Verse 24. Be at charges with them] Or, rather, be at charges for them; help them to bear the expence of that vow. Eight lambs, four rams, besides oil, flour, &c. were the expences on this occasion. See the notes on Numb. vi.

Thou—walkest orderly, and keepest the law.] Perhaps this advice meant no more than, Shew them by such means as are now in thy power, that thou art not an enemy to Moses; that thou dost still consider the law to be holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good. Paul did so, and bore the expences of those, who, from a scruple of conscience, had made a vow, and perhaps were not well able to bear the expence attending it. Had they done this in order to acquire justification through the law, Paul could not have assisted them in any measure with a clear conscience: but as he did assist them, it is a proof that they had not taken this vow on them for this purpose. Indeed, vows rather referred to a sense of obligation, and the gratitude due to God for mercies already received, than to the procuring of future favours of any kind. Besides, God had not yet fully shewn, 25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, [a] we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them [b] entered into the temple, [c] to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

that the law was abolished, as has already been remarked; he tolerated it till the time that the iniquity of the Jews was filled up; and then, by the destruction of Jerusalem, he swept every rite and ceremony of the Jewish law away, with the besom of destruction.

Verse 25. As touching the Gentiles] See the notes on chap. xv. and the additional observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 26. To signify the accomplishment, &c.] Διαγγελλων declaring the accomplishment, &c. As this declaration was made to the priest, the sense of the passage is the following, if we suppose Paul to have made an offering for himself, as well as the four men. "The next day, Paul taking the four men, began to purify, set himself apart, or consecrate himself with them; entering into the temple, he publicly declared to the priests, that he would observe the separation of a Nazarite, and continue it for seven days, at the end of which he would bring an offering for himself and the other four men, according to what the law prescribed in that case." But it is likely that Paul made no offering for himself, but was merely at the expence of theirs. However we may consider this subject, it is exceedingly difficult to account for the conduct of James and the Elders, and of Paul, on this occasion. There seems to have been something in this transaction, which we do not fully understand.

Verse 27. The Jews which were of Asia] These pursued him with the most deliberate and presevering malice in every place; and it appears that it was through them, that the false reports were sent to, and circulated through Jerusalem.

Verse 28. This is the man that teacheth, &c.] As much as if they had said, This is the man concerning whom we wrote to you; who in every place endeavours to prejudice the Gentiles against the Jews, against the Mosaic law, and against the temple and its services.

Brought Greeks also into the temple] This was a most deliberate and malicious untruth: Paul could accomplish no purpose by bringing any Greek or Gentile into the temple; and their having seen Trophimus, an Ephesian, with him, in the city only, was no ground on which to raise a slander, that must so materially affect both their lives. Josephus informs us, War, lib. v. cap. 5. sect. 2. that on the wall which separated the court of the Gentiles from that of the Israelites was an inscription in Greek and Latin letters, which stated that no stranger was permitted to come within the holy place, on pain of death. With such a prohibition as this before his eyes, was it likely that St. Paul would enter into the temple, in company with an uncircumcised Greek? The calumny refutes itself.

Verse 30. They took Paul] They tumultuously seized on him; and drew him out of the temple, out of the court of the Israelites, where he was worshipping: and—the doors were shut; the doors of the court of the Gentiles, probably to prevent Paul from getting any succour from his friends in the city; for their whole proceedings shew that they purposed to murder him: they brought him out of the court of the Israelites, that court being peculiarly holy, that it might not be defiled by his blood; and they shut the court of the Gentiles, that they might have the opportunity unmolested of killing him in that place; for the court of the Gentiles was reckoned to be less holy than that of the Israelites.

Verse 31. The chief captain of the band] The Roman tribune, who had a troop of soldiers under him, which lodged in general in the castle of Antonia, which was built at the angle where the northern and western porticos of the outer-court of the temple were joined toge-came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

32 [a] Who immediately took soldiers, and centurions, and ran down unto them: and when they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and [b] commanded him to be bound with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

34 And some cried one thing, some another among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people. A.M. cir.4064. A. D. cir. 60. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 4.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, [c] Away with him.

37 ¶ And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

ther. This castle was built by John Hyrcanus, high-priest of the Jews: it was at first called Baris, and was the royal residence of the Asmoneans, as long as they reigned in Jerusalem. It was beautified by Herod the Great; and called Antonia, in honour of his friend Mark Anthony. By this castle the temple was commanded, as it stood on higher ground. Josephus describes this castle, War, B. v. chap. 5. sect. 8. "As having four towers, from one of which the whole temple was overlooked; and that one of the towers was joined to the porticos of the temple, and had a double pair of stairs from it, by which soldiers in the garrison were used to come down with their arms to the porticos, on the festival days, to keep the people quiet: for, as the temple was a guard to the city, so this castle was a guard to the temple." "It seems, therefore," says Bp. Pearce, "to me very plain, that the place where the Jews were about to kill Paul, was the court of the Gentiles, the porticos being there; and that the chief captain came down there to his rescue." The name of this chief captain or tribune, was Claudius Lysias, as we learn from chap. xxiii. 26.

Verse 32. Ran down unto them] Ran down the stairs to the porticos, mentioned above.

Verse 33. And took him] With great violence, according to chap. xxiv. 7. probably meaning an armed force.

To be bound with two chains] To be bound between two soldiers; his right hand chained to the left hand of the one, and his left hand to the right of the other. See the note on chap. xii. 6.

Verse 35. And when he came upon the stairs] Those mentioned in the note on ver. 31.

Verse 36. Away with him.] That is, kill him; dispatch him! for so much this phrase always means in the mouths of a Jewish mob. See on Luke xxiii. 18. & John xix. 15.

Verse 37. Canst thou speak Greek?] Claudius Lysias was not a Roman; he had, as himself informs us, purchased his citizenship of Rome, with a great sum of money; (see chap. xxii. 28.) and it is very likely that he was but imperfectly acquainted with the Latin tongue; and the tumult that was now made, and the discordant noise, prevented him from clearly apprehending what was said; and as he wished to know the merit of the cause, he accosted Paul with Ἑλληνιστὶ γινώσκεις: dost thou understand Greek? And when he found that he did understand it, he proceeded to question him as below.

Verse 38. Art not thou that Egyptian, &c.] The history to which Claudius Lysias refers, is taken from Josephus, Ant. lib. xx. cap. 7. sect. 6. and War, lib. ii. cap. 13. sect. 5. and is in substance as follows: An Egyptian, whose name is not known, pretended to be a prophet, and told his followers that the walls of Jerusalem would fall down before them, if they would assist him in making an attack on the city. He had address enough to raise a rabble of 30,000 men, and with these advanced as far as the Mount of Olives; but Felix the Roman governor, came suddenly upon him, with a large body of Roman troops, both infantry and cavalry: the mob was speedily dispersed, four hundred killed, two hundred taken prisoners, and the Egyptian himself, with some of his most faithful friends escaped; of whom no account was ever afterwards heard. As Lysias found such an outcry made against Paul, he supposed that he must be some egregious malefactor; and probably that 39 But Paul said, [a] I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him license, Paul stood on the stairs, and [b] beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,

Egyptian who had escaped, as related above. Learned men agree that St. Luke refers to the same fact, of which Josephus speaks; but there is a considerable difference between the numbers in Josephus, and those in Luke: the former having 30,000, the latter only 4,000. The small number of killed and prisoners, only 600 in all, according to Josephus, leads us to suspect that his number is greatly exaggerated; as 600 in killed and prisoners of a mob of 30,000, routed by regular infantry and cavalry, is no kind of proportion; but it is a sufficient proportion to a mob of 4,000. Dean Aldridge has supposed that the number in Josephus was originally 4,000, but that ancient copyists, mistaking the Greek Δ delta, four, for, Λ lambda, thirty, wrote 30,000, instead of 4000. See Haverkamp's edition, vol. ii. p. 177. There is another way of reconciling the two historians, which is this: When this Egyptian impostor at first began to make great boasts and large promises, a multitude of people, to the amount at least of 30,000, weary of the Roman yoke, from which he promised them deliverance, readily arranged themselves under his banners. As he performed nothing that he promised, 26,000 of these had melted away before he reached Mount Olivet: this remnant the Romans attacked and dispersed. Josephus speaks of the number he had in the beginning; St. Luke, of those that he had when he arrived at Mount Olivet.

That were murderers?] Σικαριων: sicarii, assassins: they derived their name from sica, a sort of crooked knife, which they concealed under their garments, and privately stabbed the objects of their malice. Josephus.

Verse 39. I am a man which am a Jew] A periphrasis for I am a Jew. See the note on chap. vii. 2.

Of Tarsus—no mean city] In the notes on chap. ix. 11. I have shewn that Tarsus was a city of considerable importance, and in some measure a rival to Rome and Athens; and that because of the services rendered to the Romans by the inhabitants; Julius Cæsar endowed them with all the rights and privileges of Roman citizens. When St. Paul calls it no mean city, he speaks a language that was common to those who have had occasion to speak of Tarsus. XENEPHON, Cyri Anabas. i. calls it πολιν μεγαλην και ευδαιμονα, a great and flourishing city. JOSEPHUS, Ant. lib. i. cap. 6. sect. 6. says, that it was παρ' αυτοις των πολεων η αξιολογωτατη μετροπολις ουσα, the metropolis and most renowned city among them, (the Cilicians.) And AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, xiv. 8. says, Ciliciam Tarsus nobilitat, urbs perspicabilis: "Tarsus, a very respectable city, adorns Cilicia."

Verse 40. Paul stood on the stairs] Where he was out of the reach of the mob; and was surrounded by the Roman soldiers.

Beckoned with the hand] Waving the hand which was the sign that he was about to address the people. So VIRGIL says of Turnus, when he wished, by single combat between himself and Æneas, to put an end to the war:

> Significatque manu, et magno sic incipit ore:
> Parcite jam, Rutuli; et vos tela inhibete, Latini.
> He beckoned with his hand, and cried out with a loud voice,
> Desist, ye Rutulians; and, ye Latins, cease from throwing your javelins.

He spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue] What was called then the Hebrew, viz. the Chaldæo-Syriac; very well expressed by the Codex Bezæ, τη ιδια διαλεκτω, in their own dialect.

Never was there a more unnatural division than that in this chapter: it ends with a single comma! The best division would have been at the end of the 25th verse.

Paul's embarkation at Tyre is very remarkable. The simple manner in which he was escorted to the ship by the disciples of Tyre, men, women, and children, and their affectionate and pious parting, kneeling down on the shore and commending each other to God, are both impressive and edifying. Nothing but Christianity could have produced such a spirit in persons, who now, perhaps for the first time, saw each other in the flesh. Every true Christian is a child of God; and consequently, all children of God have a close spiritual affinity. They are all partakers of the same Spirit, are united to the same Head; are actuated with the same hope, and are going to the same heaven. These, love one another with pure hearts fervently: and these alone are capable of disinterested and lasting friendship. Though this kind of friendship cannot fail, yet it may err; and with officious affection endeavour to prevent us from bearing a necessary and most honourable cross. See verses 12, 13. It should therefore be kept within scriptural bounds.

Verse 1. Men brethren, and fathers] A Hebrew form of expression for brethren and fathers: for two classes only are addressed. See the note on chap. vii. 2.

Hear ye my defence]. Μου της απολογιας, this apology of mine; in this sense the word apology was anciently understood: hence the Apologies of the primitive Fathers, i. e. their defences of the Christian religion. And this is its proper literal meaning: but it is now used only as implying an excuse for improper conduct. That this is an abuse of the term, requires no proof.

Verse 2. When they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue] He had probably been traduced by the Jews of Asia, as a mere Gentile, distinguished only by his virulence against the Jewish religion; which virulence proceeded from his malice and ignorance.

Verse 3. I am verily a man which am a Jew] A periphrasis for, I am really a Jew: and his mentioning this, adds weight to the conjecture in the preceding note. He shews that he could not be ignorant of the Jewish religion; as he had the best instructor in it, which Jerusalem could produce.

Yet brought up, &c.] Bp. Pearce proposes that this verse should be thus read and translated: but brought up in this city; instructed at the feet of Gamaliel, according to the most exact manner, being exceedingly zealous for the law of our fathers, as ye all are this day.

Born in Tarsus] See the notes on chap. ix. 11. & xxi. 39.

Feet of Gamaliel] See a full account of this man in the note on chap. v. 34.

It has been generally supposed that the phrase brought up at the feet, is a reference to the Jewish custom, viz. that the disciples of the rabbins sat on low seats, or on the ground, whilst the rabbin himself occupied a lofty chair. But we rather learn from Jewish authority, that the disciples of the rabbins stood before their teachers, as Vitringa has proved in his treatise De Synag. Vit. lib. i. p. 1. cap. 7. Kypke, therefore contends that παρα τας ποδας at the feet, means the same as πλησιον near, or before, which is not an unfrequent mode of speech among both sacred and profane writers. Thus in chap. iv. 35, 37. chap. v. 2. ετιθουν παρα τους ποδας των αποστολων, they laid it at the apostles' feet, means only, they brought it to the apostles. So in 3 Maccab. iv. 7. παρα ποδας ηδη τον αδην ορωντες κειμενον, they saw death already lying at their feet; that is, as the Syriac translator has properly rendered it, they saw death immediately before them. So Themistius, Or. 27. p. 341: who adds the term by which the phrase is explained, εστι και πλησιον αει τω δυναμενω λαμβανειν, ante pedes id semper et prope est illi qui accipere potest. Also Lucian De Conscr. Hist. p. 669. ων παρα ποδας οι ελεγχοι. The refutation of which is at hand. The same kind of form occurs in the Hebrew, Exod. xi. 8. All the people that are at thy feet, ברלך beraglaica, i. e. who are with thee, under thy command, 2 Sam. xv. 16. And the king went out, and all his household ברגליו beraglaiv, at his feet; that is, with him, in his company. See Kypke.

able. That it is Pharisaism that the apostle has in view, when he says he was taught according ακριβειαν to the most exact manner, is evident; and hence, in chap. xxxvi. 5. he calls Pharisaism ακριβεστατην, the most exact system: and under it, he was zealous towards God; scrupulously exact in every part of his duty, accompanying this with reverence to the Supreme Being, and deep concern for his honour and glory.

Verse 4. I persecuted this way] Ταυτην την οδον; this doctrine, this way of worshipping God, and arriving at a state of blessedness. See on chap. ix. 2.

Verse 5. The high priest doth bear me witness, &c.] He probably referred to the letters of authority, which he had received from the high priest; and the whole estate of the elders, παν το πρεσβυτεριον, the whole of the presbytery, that is, the sanhedrin: and it is likely that he had those letters to produce. The zeal of his against Christianity, was an ample proof of his sincerity as a pharisaical Jew.

Verse 15. Thou shalt be his witness unto all] Thou shalt proclaim Christ crucified, both to Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 16. Arise and be baptized] Take now the profession of Christ's faith most solemnly upon thee, by being baptized in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Wash away thy sins, &c.] Let this washing of thy body represent to thee the washing away of thy sins; and know that this washing away of sin can be received only by invoking the name of the Lord.

likely that he refers to the first journey to Jerusalem, about three years after his conversion, chap. ix. 25, 26. and Gal. i. 18.

I was in a trance] This circumstance is not mentioned any where else, unless it be that to which himself refers in 2 Cor. xii. 2—4. when he conceived himself transported to the third heaven; and if the case be the same, the appearance of Jesus Christ to him, and the command given, are circumstances related only in this place.

Verse 19. I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue] This shews what an active instrument Saul of Tarsus was, in the hands of this persecuting priesthood: and how very generally the followers of Christ were persecuted, and how difficult it was at this time to profess Christianity.

Verse 20. When the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed] See on chap. vii. 58. viii. 1. All these things Paul alledged as reasons why he could not expect to be received by the Christians; for how could they suppose that such a persecutor could be converted?

Verse 21. I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.] This was the particular appointment of St. Paul: he was the Apostle of the Gentiles; for though he preached frequently to the Jews; yet, to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, and to write for the conversion and establishment of the Gentile world were his peculiar destination. Hence we find him and his companions travelling every where; through Judea, Phœnicia, Arabia, Syria, Cilicia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Pamphylia, Galatia, Phrygia, Macedonia, Greece, Asia, the Isles of the Mediterranean Sea, the Isles of the Ægean Sea, Italy; and some add Spain, and even Britain. This was the diocese of this primitive bishop: none of the apostles travelled, none preached, none laboured as this man; and, we may add, none was so greatly owned of God. The Epistles of Peter, John, James, and Jude, are great and excellent; but when compared with those of Paul, however glorious they may be, they have no glory comparatively, by reason of that glory which excelleth. Next to Jesus Christ, St. Paul is the glory of the Christian church. Jesus is the foundation; Paul, the master-builder.

Verse 21. They gave him audience unto this word] Namely, that God had sent him to the Gentiles: not that they refused to preach the law to the Gentiles, and make them proselytes; for this they were fond of doing, so that our Lord says, they compassed sea and land to make a proselyte: but they understood the apostle as stating, that God had rejected them, and called the Gentiles to be his peculiar people, in their place; and this they could not bear.

Away with such a fellow] According to the law of Moses, he who attempted to seduce the people to any strange worship, was to be stoned, Deut. xiii. 15. The Jews wished to insinuate that the apostle was guilty of this crime, and that therefore he should be stoned, or put to death.

Verse 23. Cast off their clothes] Bp. Pearce supposes that shaking their upper garments, is all that is meant here; and that it was an ancient custom for men to do so, when highly pleased, or greatly irritated: but it is likely, that some of them were now actually throwing off their clothes, in order to prepare to stone Paul.

Threw dust into the air] In sign of contempt, and by way of execration. Shimei acted so in order to express his contempt of David, 2 Sam. xvi. 13. where it is said, he cursed him as he went, and threw stones at him; or, as the margin he dusted him with dust. Their throwing dust in the air, was also expressive of extraordinary rage and vindictive malice. The apostle being guarded by the Roman soldiers, was out of the power of the mob; and their throwing dust in the air, not only shewed their rage, but also their vexation, that they could not get the apostle into their power.

Verse 24. Examined by scourging] As the chief captain did not understand the Hebrew language, he was ignorant of the charge brought against Paul, and ignorant also of the defence which the apostle had made; and as he saw that they grew more and more outrageous, he supposed that Paul must have given them the highest provocation; and therefore he determined to put him to the torture, in order to find out the nature of his crime. The practice of putting people to the rack, in order to make them confess, has, to the disgrace of human nature, existed in all countries.

Verse 25. And as they bound him, &c.] They were going to tie him to a post, that they might scourge him.

Is it lawful, &c.] The Roman law absolutely forbad the binding of a Roman citizen. See the note on chap. xvi. 37.

Verse 28. With a great sum obtained I this freedom.] So it appears that the freedom, even of Rome, might be purchased; and that it was sold at a very high price.

But I was free-born.] It has been generally believed that the inhabitants of Tarsus, born in that city, had the same rights and privileges as Roman citizens, in consequence of a charter or grant from Julius Cæsar. Calmet disputes this, because Tarsus was a free not a colonial city; and he supposes that Paul's father might have been rewarded with the freedom of Rome for some military services; and that it was in consequence of this that Paul was born free. But, that the city of Tarsus, had such privileges, appears extremely probable. In chap. xxi. 39. Paul says he was born at Tarsus in Cilicia, and in this chap. ver. 28. he says he was free-born; and at ver. 26. he calls himself a Roman; as he does also chap. xvi. 37. From whence it has been concluded, with every show of reason, that Tarsus, though no Roman colony, yet had this privilege granted to it, that its natives should be citizens of Rome. Pliny, in Hist. Nat. lib. v. 27. tells us that Tarsus was a free city. And Appian, De Bello Civil. lib. v. p. 1077. Ed. Tollii, says that Anthony, Ταρσεας ελευθερους ηφιει, και ατελεις φορων, made the people of Tarsus free, and discharged them from paying tribute. Dio Cassius, lib. xlvii. p. 508. Edit. Reimar. further tells us, Adeo Cæsari priori, et ejus gratia etiam posteriori, favebat Tarsenses, ut urbem suam pro Tarso, Juliopolin, vocaverint; "that, for the affection which the people of Tarsus bare to Julius Cæsar, and afterwards to Augustus, the latter caused their city to be called Juliopolis." The Greek text is as follows—αυτῳ προφιλως τῳ Καισαρι προτερῳ και δι' εκεινον τῳ δευτερῳ ἑι Ταρσεις ειχον, ωστε και Ιουλιοπολιν σφας απ' αυτου μετονομασι. To which I add, that Philo, de Virt. Vol. II. p. 587. Edit. Mang. makes Agrippa say to Caligula, φιλων ενιων πατριδας ὁλας της Ρωμαϊκης ηξιωσας πολιτειας· you have made whole countries, to which your friends belong to be citizens of Rome. See the note on chap. xxi. 39. These testimonies are of weight sufficient to shew that Paul, by being born at Tarsus, might have been free-born, and a Roman. See Bp. Pearce, on Acts xvi. 37.

Verse 29. After he knew that he was a Roman] He who was going to scourge him, durst not proceed to the torture, when Paul declared himself to be a Roman. A passage from Cicero, Orat. pro. Verr. Act. ii. lib. v. 64. throws the fullest light on this place—Ille, quisquis erat, quem tu in crucem rapiebas, qui tibi esset ignotus, cum civem se Romanum esse diceret, apud te Prætorem, si non effugium, ne moram quidem mortis mentione atque usurpatione civitatis assequi potuit. "Whosoever he might be whom thou wert hurrying to the rack, were he even unknown to thee, if he said that he was a Roman citizen, he would necessarily obtain from thee the Prætor, by the simple mention of Rome, if not an escape, yet at least a delay of his punishment." The whole of the sixty-fourth and sixty-fifth sections of this oration, which speaks so pointedly on this subject, are worthy of consideration. Of this privilege, he further says, Ib. in cap. lvii. Illa vox et exclamatio Civis Romanus sum, quæ sæpe multis in ultimis terris opem inter barbaros et salutem tulit, &c.—That exclamation, I am a Roman citizen, which oftentimes has brought assistance and safety, even among barbarians, in the remotest parts of the earth, &c.

Plutarch likewise, in his Life of Pompey, (Vol. III. p. 445. Edit. Bryan.) says, concerning the behaviour of the pirates, when they had taken any Roman prisoner, Εκεινο δε ην υβριστικοτατον κ. τ. λ. what was the most contumelious was this; when any of those whom they had made captives, cried out, Ρωμαιος ειναι, THAT HE WAS A ROMAN, and told them his name, they pretended to be surprised, and be in a fright, and smote upon their thighs, and fell down (on their knees) to him, beseeching him to pardon them! It is no wonder then that the torturer desisted, when Paul cried out that he was a Roman; and that the chief captain was alarmed, because he had bound him.

Verse 30. He commanded—all their council to appear] Instead of ελθειν, to come, which we translate to appear; συνελθειν, to assemble, or meet together, is the reading of ACE. nearly twenty others; the Æthiopic, Arabic, Vulgate, Chrysostom, and Theophylact; this reading Griesbach has received into the text: and it is most probably the true one: as the chief captain wished to know the certainty of the matter, he desired the Jewish council, or Sanhedrin, to assemble, and examine the business thoroughly, that he might know of what the apostle was accused; as the law would not permit him to proceed against a Roman in any judicial way, but on the clearest evidence: and as he understood that the cause of their enmity was something that concerned their religion; he considered the Sanhedrin to be the most proper judge, and therefore commanded them to assemble; and there is no doubt that himself, and a sufficient number of soldiers, took care to attend, as the person of Paul could not be safe in the hands of persons so prejudiced, unprincipled, and enraged.

This chapter should end with the twenty-ninth verse, and the following should begin with the thirtieth; this is the most natural division, and is followed by some of the most correct editions of the original text.

1. In his address to the council, Paul asserts that he is a Jew, born of and among Jews; and that he had a regular Jewish education: and he takes care to observe, that he had early imbibed all the prejudices peculiar to his countrymen; and had given the fullest proof of this in his persecution of the Christians. Thus, his assertions, concerning the unprofitableness of the legal ceremonies, could neither be attributed to ignorance nor indifference. Had a Gentile, no matter how learned or eminent, taught thus, his whole teaching would have been attributed to ignorance, prejudice, and envy. God therefore, in his endless mercy, made use of a most eminent, learned and bigoted Jew, to demonstrate the nullity of the whole Jewish system, and shew the necessity of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

2. At the close of this chapter, Dr. Dodd, has the following judicious remark:—"As unrighteous as it was in the Roman officer, on this popular clamour, to attempt putting this holy apostle to the torture; so reasonable was St. Paul's plea as a Roman citizen, to decline that suffering. It is a prudence worthy the imitation of the bravest of men, not to throw themselves into unnecessary difficulties. True courage widely differs from rash and heedless temerity; nor are we under any obligation as Christians, to give up our civil privileges, which ought to be esteemed as the gifts of God, to every insolent and turbulent invader. In a thousand circumstances, Gratitude to God, and duty to men, will oblige us to insist upon them: and a generous concern for those who may come after us, should engage us to labour to transmit them to posterity improved rather than impaired." This should be an article in the creed of every genuine Briton.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIII.

Verse 1. I have lived in all good conscience] Some people seem to have been unnecessarily stumbled with this expression. What does the apostle mean by it? Why, that while he was a Jew, he was one from principle of conscience;—that what he did, while he continued Jew, he did from the same principle:—that when God opened his eyes to see the nature of Christianity, he became a Christian, because God persuaded his conscience that it was right for him to become one.—That, in a word, he was sincere through the whole course of his religious life; and his conduct had borne the most unequivocal proofs of it. The apostle means, therefore, that there was no part of his life in which he acted as a dishonest or hypocritical man: and that he was now as fully determined to maintain his profession of Christianity, as he ever was to maintain that of Judaism, previously to his acquaintance with the Christian religion.

Verse 2. The high priest Ananias] There was a high priest of this name who was sent a prisoner to Rome by Quadratus, governor of Syria; to give an account of the part he took in the quarrel between the Jews and the Samaritans; see Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. s. 8. but whether he ever returned again to Jerusalem, says Dr. Lightfoot, is uncertain; still more uncertain whether he was ever restored to the office of high priest; and most uncertain of all whether he filled the chair at the time Paul pleaded his case; which was some years after Felix was settled in the government. But Krebs has proved, that this very Ananias, on being examined at Rome, was found innocent, returned to Jerusalem and was restored to the high priesthood; see Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 9. s. 2. but of his death I find nothing certain. See Krebs on this place, (Observat. in Nov. Testament. è Flavio Josepho) who successfully controverts the opinion of Dr. Lightfoot, mentioned at the beginning of this note. There was one Ananias, who is said to have perished in a tumult raised by his own son, about five years after this time; see Jos. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 9. War. lib. ii. cap. 17.

To smite him on the mouth.] Because he professed to have a good conscience, while believing on Jesus Christ, and propagating his doctrine.

Verse 3. God shall smite thee, thou whited wall.] Thou hypocrite! who sittest on the seat of judgment, pretending to hear, and seriously weigh the defence of an accused person; who must in justice and equity be presumed to be innocent, till he is proved to be guilty; and, instead of acting according to the law, commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law, which always has the person of the prisoner under its protection; nor ever suffers any penalty to be inflicted but what is prescribed as the just punishment for the offence. As if he had said, "Thinkest thou that God will suffer such an insult on his laws, on justice, and on humanity, to pass unpunished?"

Verse 5. I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest] After all the learned labour that has been spent on this subject, the simple meaning appears plainly to be this:—

St. Paul did not know that Ananias was high priest; he had been long absent from Jerusalem; political changes were frequent; the high priesthood was no longer in succession, and was frequently bought and sold; the Romans put down one high priest and raised up another, as political reasons dictated. As the person of Ananias might have been wholly unknown to him; as the hearing was very sudden, and there was scarcely any time to consult the formalities of justice; it seems very probable that St. Paul, if he ever had known the person of Ananias, had forgotten him; and as, in a council or meeting of this kind, the presence of the high priest was not indispensably necessary, he did not know that the person who presided was not the Sagan, or high priest's deputy, or some other person put into the seat for the time being. I therefore understand the words above in their most obvious and literal sense. He knew not who the person was, and God's Spirit suddenly led him to denounce the divine displeasure against him.

Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people] If I had known he was the high priest, I should not have pub-

6 ¶ But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, [a] I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: [b] of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 [c] For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, [d] We find no evil in this man: but [e] if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, [f] let us not fight against God.

licly pronounced this execration; for respect is due to his person for the sake of his office. I do not see that Paul intimates that he had done any thing through inadvertence; nor does he here confess any fault; he states two facts:—1. That he did not know him to be the high priest. 2. That such an one, or any ruler of the people, should be reverenced. But he neither recalled nor made an apology for his words: he had not committed a trespass, and he did not acknowledge one. We must beware how we attribute either to him in the case before us.

Verse 6. I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee] Instead of Φαρισαιου, of a Pharisee, ABC. some others, with the Syriac and Vulgate, have Φαρισαιων, of the Pharisees; which, if acknowledged to be the genuine reading, would alter the sense thus, I am a Pharisee, and a disciple of the Pharisees, for so the word Son, is frequently understood.

Of the hope and resurrection] Concerning the hope of the resurrection; the και and, being here redundant; indeed it is omitted by the Syriac, all the Arabic, and the Æthiopic. St. Paul had preached the resurrection of the dead, on the foundation and evidence of the resurrection of Christ. For this, he and the apostles were, some time before, imprisoned by the high priest and elders, chap. iv. 1—3. and v. 17. because they preached THROUGH JESUS, the resurrection of the dead. This they could not bear; for, if Jesus Christ rose from the dead, their malice and wickedness, in putting him to death, were incontrovertibly established.

Verse 7. And the multitude was divided] St. Paul, perceiving the assembly to consist of Pharisees and Saducees, and finding he was not to expect any justice, thought it best thus to divide the council, by introducing a question on which the Sadducees and Pharisees were at issue. He did so; and the Pharisees immediately espoused his side of the question, because in opposition to the Sadducees, whom they abhorred, as irreligious men.

Verse 8. The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection] It is strange, since these denied a future state, that they observed the ordinances of the law; for they also believed the five books of Moses to be a revelation from God: yet they had nothing in view but temporal good; and they understood the promises in the law as referring to these things alone. In order, therefore, to procure them, they watched, fasted, prayed, &c. and all this they did that they might obtain happiness in the present life. See the account of the Pharisees and Sadducees, Matt. iii. 7. and xvi. 1.

Verse 9. The scribes—arose, and strove] Διεμαχοντο, they contended forcibly—they came to an open rupture with the Sadducees; and, in order to support their own party against them, they even admitted as truth, St. Paul's account of his miraculous conversion; and therefore they said, if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, &c. He had previously mentioned that Jesus Christ had appeared to him, when on his way to Damascus; and, though they might not be ready to admit the doctrine of Christ's resurrection; yet they could, consistently with their own principles, allow that the Soul of Christ might appear to him, and they immediately caught at this, as furnishing a strong proof against the doctrine of the Sadducees, who neither believed in angel nor spirit, while the Pharisees confessed both.

Let us not fight against God.] These words are wanting in ABCE. several others, with the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac, Vulgate, and some of the Fathers.

Verse 10. The chief captain—commanded the soldiers to go down] It appears that the chief captain was present during these transactions, and that he had a body of soldiers in readiness in the castle of Antonia; and, it was from this,

11 And [a] the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

12 ¶ And when it was day, [b] certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves [c] under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now therefore, ye, with the council, signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would enquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, [d] The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would enquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

that he commanded them to come down, for the rescue and preservation of Paul.

Verse 11. Be of good cheer, Paul] It is no wonder, if, with all these trials and difficulties, St. Paul was much dejected in mind; and especially as he had not any direct intimation from God, what the end of the present trials would be: to comfort him and strengthen his faith, God gave him this vision.

So must thou bear witness also at Rome.] This was pleasing intelligence to Paul, who had long desired to see that city, and preach the gospel of Christ there. He appears to have had an intimation that he should see it; but how, he could not tell; and this vision satisfied him that he should be sent thither by God himself. This would settle every fear and scruple, concerning the issue of the present persecution.

Verse 12. That they would neither eat nor drink, &c.] These forty Jews were no doubt of the class of the Sicarii, mentioned before, (similar to those afterwards called assassins,) a class of fierce zealots, who took justice into their own hand; and who thought they had a right to dispatch all those who, according to their views, were not orthodox in their religious principles. If these were, in their bad way, conscientious men, must they not all perish through hunger, as God put it out of their power to accomplish their vow? No: for the doctrine of sacerdotal absolution was held among the Jews as among the papists: hence it is said in Hieros. Avodah Zarah, fol. 40. "He that hath made a vow not to eat any thing, woe to him, if he eat; and woe to him, if he do not eat. If he eat, he sinneth against his vow; and if he do not eat, he sinneth against his life." What must such a man do in this case? Let him go to the wise men, and they will loose him from his vow, as it is written, Prov. xii. 18. "The tongue of the wise is health." When vows were so easily dispensed with, they might be readily multiplied. See Lightfoot.

Verse 15. And we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.] We shall lie in wait, and dispatch him before he can reach the chief captain. The plan was well and deeply laid; and nothing but an especial providence could have saved Paul.

Verse 16. Paul's sister's son] This is all we know of Paul's family. And we know not how this young man got to Jerusalem; the family, no doubt, still resided at Tarsus.

Verse 17. Bring this young man unto the chief captain] Though St. Paul had the most positive assurance from divine authority, that he should be preserved; yet he knew that the Divine Providence acts by reasonable and prudent means:

A.M. cir. 4064. A. D. cir. 60. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 4.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him, of them, more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me.

23 ¶ And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cæsarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting.

27 [a] This man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

28 [b] And when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accused [c] of questions of their law, [d] but to have nothing laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And [e] when it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and [f] gave commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded and that, if he neglected to use the means in his power, he could not expect God's providence to work in his behalf. He who will not help himself, according to the means and power he possesses; has neither reason nor revelation to assure him that he shall receive any assistance from God.

Verse 23. Two hundred soldiers] Στρατιωτας, infantry or foot soldiers.

Spearmen] Δεξιολαβους, persons who held a spear or javelin in their hand; from ὁ τῃ δεξιᾳ λαβειν, taking or holding a thing in the right hand. But the Codex Alexandrinus reads δεξιοβολους, from δεξια, the right hand; and βαλλειν, to cast or dart, persons who threw javelins. But both words seem to mean nearly the same thing.

The third hour of the night.] About nine o'clock P. M. for the greater secresy; and to elude the cunning, active malice of the Jews.

Verse 24. Provide them beasts] One for Paul, and some others for his immediate keepers.

Felix the governor.] This Felix was a freed man of the emperor Claudius, and brother of Pallas, chief favourite of the emperor. Tacitus calls him Antonius Felix; and gives us to understand, that he governed with all the authority of a king, and the baseness and insolence of a quondam slave. E libertis Antonius Felix per omnem sævitiam ac libidinem jus regium servili ingenio exercuit. Hist. v. 9. He had, according to Suetonius, in his life of Claudius, chap. 28. three queens to his wives; that is, he was married thrice, and each to the daughter or niece of a king. Drusilla, the sister of Agrippa, was his wife at this time; see chap. xxiv. 22. He was an unrighteous governor, a base, mercenary, and bad man; see chap. xxiv. 2.

Verse 25 He wrote a letter after this manner] It appears that this was not only the substance of the letter, but the letter itself: the whole of it is so perfectly formal, as to prove this; and, in this simple manner are all the letters of the ancients formed. In this also we have an additional proof of St. Luke's accuracy.

Verse 30. I sent straightway to thee] As the proper person before whom this business should ultimately come; and by whom it should be decided.

Farewell.] Ερρωσω, be in good health.

Verse 31. Antipatris.] This place, according to Josephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23. was anciently called Capharsaba, and is supposed to be the same which, in 1 Maccab. vii. 31. is called Capharsalama, or Carphasaluma. It was rebuilt by Herod the Great, and denominated Antipatris, in honour of his father Antipater. It was situated between Joppa and Cæsarea, on the road from Jerusalem to this latter city. Josephus says it was fifty stadia from Joppa. The distance between Jerusalem and Cæsarea, was about seventy miles.

them, took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris.

b Ch. 24. 1, 10. & 25. 16.—c Matt. 27. 27.

Verse 32. On the morrow they left the horsemen] Being now so far from Jerusalem they considered Paul in a state of safety from the Jews, and that the seventy horse would be a sufficient guard; the four hundred foot, therefore, returned to Jerusalem, and the horse went on to Cæsarea with Paul. We need not suppose that all this troop did reach Antipatris on the same night in which they left Jerusalem; therefore, instead of, they brought him by night to Antipatris, we may understand the text thus—Then the soldiers took Paul by night, and brought him to Antipatris. And the thirty-second verse need not to be understood as if the foot reached the castle of Antonia the next day (though all this was possible,) but that, having reached Antipatris, and refreshed themselves, they set out, the same day, on their march to Jerusalem; on the morrow they returned, that is, they began their march back again to the castle. See on chap. xxiv. 1.

Verse 33. Who] That is, the seventy horsemen mentioned above.

Verse 35. I will hear thee] Διακουσομαι σου; I will give thee a fair, full, and attentive hearing when thy accusers are come; in whose presence thou shalt be permitted to defend thyself.

In Herod's judgment-hall] Εν τω πραιτωριω, in Herod's Prætorium, so called because it was built by Herod the Great. The Prætorium was the place where the Roman Prator had his residence: and, it is probable that, in or near this place, there was a sort of guard-room, where state prisoners were kept. Paul was lodged here till his accusers should arrive.

On the preceding chapter many useful observations may be made.

1. Paul, while acting contrary to the gospel of Christ, pleaded conscience as his guide. Conscience is generally allowed to be the rule of human actions; but it cannot be a right rule, unless it be well-informed. While it is unenlightened, it may be a guide to the perdition of its professor: and the cause of the ruin of others. That conscience, can alone be trusted, in which the light of God's Spirit, and God's truth dwells. An ill-informed conscience, may burn even the saints, for God's sake!

2. No circumstance, in which a man can be placed, can excuse him from shewing respect and reverence to the authorities which God, in the course of his providence, has instituted, for the benefit of civil or religious society. All such authorities come originally from God; and can never lose any of their rights on account of the persons who are invested with them. An evil can never be of use; and a good may be abused; but it loses not its character, essential qualities, or usefulness, because of this abuse.

3. Paul availed himself of the discordant sentiments of his judges, who had agreed to shew him no justice; that he might rid himself out of their hands. To take advantage of the sentiments and dispositions of an audience, without deceiving it; and to raise dissention between the enemies of the truth, is an innocent artifice, when truth itself is not violated; and when error is exposed thereby to public view.

4. The Pharisees and Sadducees strove together. God frequently raises up defenders of the principles of truth, even among those who, in practice, are its decided enemies. "Though" says one "I do not like the truth, yet will I defend it." A man clothed with sovereign authority, vicious in his heart and immoral in his life, fostered those principles of truth and righteousness, by which error was banished from these lands, and pure, and undefiled religion, established among us for many generations.

5. The Providence of God, and his management of the world are, in many respects, great mysteries: but, as far as we are individually concerned, all is plain. Paul had the fullest assurance, from the mouth of Christ himself, that he should see Rome; and, consequently, that he should be extricated from all his present difficulties. Why then did he not quietly sit still, when his nephew informed him that forty men had conspired to murder him? Because he knew that God made use of the prudence, with which he has endowed man, as an agent, in that very providence by which he is supported; and that, to neglect the natural means of safety, with which God provides us, is to tempt and dishonour him, and induce him in judgment, to use those means against us which, in his mercy, he had designed for our comfort and salvation. Prudence is well associated even with an apostolical spirit. Every being that God has formed, he designs should accomplish those functions for which he has endowed it with the requisite powers.

6. Claudius Lysias sent Paul to Felix. "In the generality of human events," says one, "we do not often distinguish the designs of God from those of men. The design of Lysias in preserving Paul from the rage of the Jews, was to render his own conduct free from exception: the design of God was, that he might bring Paul safely to Rome, that he might attack idolatry in its strongest fort, and there establish the Christian faith." God governs the world, and works by proper means; and counter-works evil or sinister devices, so as ultimately to accomplish the purposes of his will; and cause all things to work together for good to them that love Him.

7. Felix acted prudently when he would not even hear St. Paul till he had his accusers face to face. How many false judgments, evil surmises, and uncharitable censures would be avoided, did men always adopt this reasonable plan. Hear either side of a complaint separately, and the evil seems very great; hear both together, and the evil is generally lessened by one half. Audi et alteram partem—hear the other side, says a heathen: remember, if you have an ear for the first complainant, you have one also for the second.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXIV.

Verse 1. After five days] These days are to be reckoned from the time in which Paul was apprehended at Jerusalem, and twelve days after he had arrived in that city; see ver. 11. Calmet reckons the days thus:—St. Luke says, that Paul was apprehended at Jerusalem when the seven days of his vow were nearly ended, chap. xxi. 27. that is at the end of the fifth day after his arrival. The next day which was the sixth, he was presented before the Sanhedrin. The night following, he was taken to Antipatris. The next day, the seventh, he arrived at Cæsarea. Five days afterwards, that is the twelfth day after his arrival at Jerusalem, the high priest and the elders, with Tertullus, came down to accuse him before Felix.—But see the note on chap. xxiii. 32.

A certain orator named Tertullus] This was probably a Roman proselyte to Judaism; yet he speaks every where as a Jew. Roman orators, advocates, &c. were found in different provinces of the Roman empire: and they, in general, spoke both the Greek and Latin languages; and being well acquainted with the Roman laws and customs, were no doubt very useful. Luitprandus supposed that this Tertullus was the same with him who was colleague with Pliny the younger, in the consulate, in the year of Rome, 852; who is mentioned by Pliny, Epist. v. 15. Of this there is no satisfactory proof.

Verse 2. Tertullus began to accuse him] There are three parts in this oration of Tertullus:—1. The exordium. 2. The proposition. 3. The conclusion. The exordium contains the praise of Felix and his administration, merely for the purpose of conciliating his esteem, 2—4. The proposition is contained in ver. 5. The narration and conclusion, in ver. 6—8.

dea. The country had long been infested with robbers; and a very formidable banditti of this kind, under one Eliezar, he entirely suppressed.—Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. Bell. lib. ii. cap. 22. He also suppressed the sedition raised by an Egyptian impostor, who had seduced 30,000 men; see on chap xxi. 38. He had also quelled a very afflictive disturbance which took place between the Syrians and the Jews of Cæsarea. On this ground Tertullus said, By thee we enjoy great quietness; and illustrious deeds are done to this nation by thy prudent administration: this was all true; but, notwithstanding this, he is well known, from his own historians, and from Josephus, to have been not only a very bad man, but also a very bad governor. He was mercenary, oppressive, and cruel; and of all these the Jews brought proofs to Nero, before whom they accused him; and, had it not been for the interest and influence of his brother Pallas, he had been certainly ruined.

Verse 3. We accept it always, and in all places] We have at all times a grateful sense of thy beneficent administration; and we talk of it in all places, not only before thy face, but behind thy back.

Verse 4. That I be not further tedious unto thee] That I may neither trespass on thy time, by dwelling longer on this subject; nor on thy modesty, by thus enumerating thy beneficent deeds.

Hear us of thy clemency] Give us this farther proof of thy kindness, by hearkening to our present complaint. The whole of this exordium was artful enough, though it was lame. The orator had certainly a very bad cause, of which he endeavoured to make the best. Felix was a bad man and bad governor; and yet he must praise him to conciliate his esteem. Paul was a very good man, and nothing amiss could be proved against him; and yet he must endeavour to blacken him as much as possible, in order to please his unprincipled and wicked employers. His oration has been blamed as weak, lame, and imperfect; and yet, perhaps few, with so bad a cause, could have made better of it.

Verse 5. For we have found this man, &c.] Hear the proposition of the orator commences. He accuses Paul; and his accusation includes four particulars:—1. He is a pest, λοιμος; an exceedingly bad and wicked man. 2. He excites disturbances and seditions against the Jews. 3. He is the chief of the sect of the Nazarenes, who are a very bad people, and should not be tolerated. 4. He has endeavoured to pollute and profane the temple; and we took him in the fact.

A pestilent fellow] The word λοιμος, pestis; the plague or pestilence, is used both by Greek and Roman authors, to signify a very bad and profligate man; we have weakened the force of the word by translating the substantive adjectively. Tertullus did not say that Paul was a pestilent fellow; but he said that he was the very pestilence itself. As in that of Martial, xi. 92.

Non vitiosus homo es, Zoïle, sed vitium.

"Thou art not a vitious man, O Zoïlus, but thou art vice itself."

The words λοιμος, and pestis, are thus frequently used.—See Wetstein, Bp. Pearce, and Kypke.

A mover of sedition] Instead of στασιν, sedition; ABE. several others, with the Coptic, Vulgate, Chrysostsm, Theophylact, and Œcumenius, read στασεις, commotions; which is probably the true reading.

Among all the Jews] Bp. Pearce contends, that the words should be understood thus—one that stirreth up tumults AGAINST all the Jews: for, if they be understood otherwise, Tertullus may be considered as accusing his countrymen; as if they, at Paul's instigation, were forward to make insurrections every where. On the contrary, he wishes to represent them as a persecuted and distressed people, by means of Paul and his Nazarenes.

A ring-leader] Πρωτοστατην. This is a military phrase, and signifies the officer who stands on the right of the first rank; the captain of the front rank, of the sect of the Nazarenes; της των ναζωραιων αιρεσεως, of the heresy of the Nazarenes. This word is used six times by St. Luke, viz. in this verse, and in ver. 14. and in chap. v. 17. xv. 5. xxvi. 5. and xxviii. 22.; but in none of them does it appear necessarily to include that bad sense which we generally assign to the word heresy.—See the note on chap. v. 17. where the subject is largely considered; and see farther on ver. 14.

Verse 6. Hath gone about to profane the temple] This was a heavy charge, if it could have been substantiated: because the Jews were permitted by the Romans to put any person to death who profaned their temple. This charge was founded on the gross calumny mentioned, chap. xxi. 28, 29. for as they had seen Trophimus, an Ephesian, with Paul in the city, they pretended that he had brought him into the temple.

Would have judged according to our law.] He pretended that they would have tried the case fairly, had not the chief captain taken him violently out of their hands; whereas, had not Lysias interfered, they would have murdered him on the spot.

Verse 7. With great violence] Μετα πολλης Βιας, I rather think means with an armed force. Tertullus intimates that Lysias interfered contrary to law, and brought soldiers to support him in his infringement on their constitution. This is what he seems to say, and complain of; for the Jews were vexed with Lysias for rescuing the apostle from their hands.

Verse 8. Commanding his accusers to come, &c.] Here Tertullus closes his opening and statement of the case; and now he proceeds to call and examine his witnesses: and, they were no doubt examined one by one, though St. Luke sums the whole up in one word—The Jews also assented, saying; that these things were so. Whoever considers the plan of Tertullus's speech, will perceive that it was both judicious and artful. Let us take a view of the whole:—1. He praises Felix, to conciliate his favour. 2. He generally states the great blessings of his administration. 3. He states, that the Jews, throughout the whole land, felt themselves under the greatest obligations to him; and extolled his prudent and beneficent management of the public affairs every where. 4. That the prisoner before him was a very bad man; a disturber of the public peace; a demagogue of a dangerous party; and so lost to all sense of religion, as to attempt to profane the temple! 5. That, though he should have been punished on the spot; yet, as they were ordered by the chief captain to appear before him, and shew the reasons why they had seized on Paul at Jerusalem, they were accordingly come; and having now exhibited their charges, he would 6. proceed to examine witnesses, who would prove all these things to the satisfaction of the governor. 7. He then called his witnesses, and their testimony confirmed and substantiated the charges. No bad cause was ever more judiciously and cunningly managed.

Verse 10. Then Paul—answered] The apostle's defence consists of two parts:—1. The exordium, which has for object the praise of his judge, whose qualifications, to discern and decide on a question of this nature, he fully allows; and expects, from this circumstance, to have a favourable hearing. 2. The tractation, which consists of two parts, I. Refutation; 1. of the charge of polluting the temple; 2. of stirring up sedition; 3. of being a leader of any sect who had a different worship from the God of their fathers. II. Affirmation, 1. that he had lived so as to preserve a good conscience towards God, and towards men; 2. that so far from polluting the temple, he had been purified in it; and was found thus, worshipping according to the law of God; 3. that what Tertullus and his companions had witnessed, was perfectly false, and he defied them to produce a single proof; and appeals to those who had been witnesses of his conduct in Jerusalem, who should have been there could they have proved any thing against him.

Thou hast been of many years a judge] Cumanus and Felix were, for a time, joint governors of Judea; but, after the condemnation of Cumanus, the government fell entirely into the hands of Felix: and from Josephus we learn, that this was now the sixth or seventh year of his administration; which might be called many years, when the very frequent removals of the governors of the provinces are considered.—See Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. 7. and see the Margin.

reply to their charge of sedition; the improbability of which is shewn, from the short time he had spent in Jerusalem, quite insufficient to organize a sedition of any kind; nor could a single proof be furnished that he had attempted to seduce any man; nor unhinge any person from his allegiance by subtle disputations, either in the temple, the synagogues, or the city. So that this charge necessarily fell to the ground, self-confuted; unless they could bring substantial proof against him, which he challenges them to do.

Verse 14. That after the way which they call heresy] See the explanation of this word in the note on chap. v. 17. and see before, ver. 5. where what is here translated heresy, is there rendered sect. At this time, the word had no bad acceptation, in reference to religious opinions. The Pharisees themselves, the most respectable body among the Jews, are called a sect; for Paul, defending himself before Agrippa, says, that he lived a Pharisee according to the strictest αἱρεσιν sect, or heresy, of their religion. And Josephus, who was a Pharisee, speaks της των Φαρισαιων αἱρεσεως of the heresy, or sect, of the Pharisees. LIFE, chap. xxxviii. Therefore it is evident that the word heresy had no bad meaning among the Jews; it meant simply a religious sect. Why then did they use it by way of degradation to St. Paul? This seems to have been the cause. They had already two accredited sects in the land; the Pharisees and Sadducees: the interests of each of these were pretty well balanced, and each had a part in the government, for the council or sanhedrin was composed both of Sadducees and Pharisees: see chap. xxiii. 6. They were afraid that the Christians, whom they called Nazarenes, should form a new sect, and divide the interests of both the preceding: and what they feared, that they charged them with: and on this account, the Christians had both the Pharisees and the Sadduces for their enemies. They had charged Jesus Christ with plotting against she state, and endeavouring to raise seditions; and they charged his followers with the same. This they deemed a proper engine to bring a jealous government into action.

So worship I the God of my fathers] I bring in no new object of worship; no new religious creed. I believe all things as they profess to believe: and acknowledge the Law and the Prophets, as divinely inspired books; and have never in the smallest measure, detracted from the authority or authenticity of either.

Verse 15. And have hope toward God, &c.] I not only do not hold any thing by which the general creed of this people might be altered, in reference to the present state; but also, I hold nothing different from their belief, in reference to a future state: for if I maintain the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, it is what themselves allow.

Verse 16. And herein do I exercise myself] And this very tenet is a pledge for my good behaviour; for as I believe there will be a resurrection, both of the just and unjust, and that every man shall be judged for the deeds done in the body; so, I exercise myself day and night, that I may have a conscience void of offence towards God and towards man.

Toward God] In entertaining no opinion contrary to his truth; and in offering no worship contrary to his dignity, purity, and excellence.

Toward men] In doing nothing to them that I would not, on a change of circumstances, they should do to me; and in withholding nothing, by which I might comfort and serve them.

Verse 17. Now after many years, &c.] And as a full proof that I act according to the dictates of this divine and beneficent creed, though I have been many years absent from my own country, and my political relation to it is almost necessarily dissolved; yet, far from coming to disturb the peace of society or to injure any person, I have brought ALMS to my nation, the fruits of my own earning and influence among a foreign people, and OFFERINGS to my God and his temple, proving hereby my attachment to my country, and my reverence for the worship of my country's God.

Verse 18. Found me purified in the temple] And the Jews of Asia, who stirred up the persecution against me in Jerusalem, found me purified in the temple, regularly performing the religious vow into which I had entered; giving no cause for suspicion; for I made no tumult, nor had I any number of people with me, by whom I could have accomplished any seditious purpose.

Verse 20. An evil-doing in me, while I stood before the council] The Jews of Asia, the most competent witnesses, though my declared enemies, and they who stirred up the persecution against me, should have been here: why are they kept back? Because they could prove nothing against me. Let these therefore who are here, depose, if they have found any evil in me, or proved against me by my most virulent adversaries, when examined before them in their council at Jerusalem.

Verse 21. Except it be for this one voice] The Sadducees who belong to that council, and who deny the resurrection of the dead, may indeed blame me for professing my faith in this doctrine; but as this is a doctrine credited by the nation in general, and as there can be nothing criminal in such a belief; and they can bring no accusation against me relative to any thing else, this, of course, is the sum of all the charges, to which I am called to answer before you this day.

Verse 22. And when Felix heard these things] There is considerable difficulty in this verse. Translators greatly vary concerning the sense; and the MSS. themselves read variously. Mr. Wakefield's translation appears to be as proper as most: Now Felix, upon hearing these things, put them off by saying, when Lysias the captain is come down, after I have gained a more exact knowledge of this doctrine, I will enquire fully into your business.

Calmet's translation is nearly to the same sense.

Felix having heard these things, put them off to another time, saying, when I shall have acquired a more accurate knowledge of this sect; and when the tribune Lysias shall have come from Jerusalem, I will judge of your business.

And this mode of interpretation is rendered the more likely from the circumstance, that, previously to the coming down of Lysias, Felix had sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith of Christ; and this he appears to have done, that he might be the better qualified to judge of the business when it should come again before him. See on verse 20.

Verse 23. He commanded a centurion to keep Paul] He gave him into the custody of a captain, by whom he was most likely to be well used: and to let him have liberty; he freed him from the chains with which he was bound to the soldiers, his keepers. See on chap. xxi. 33. And that he should forbid none of his acquaintance των ιδιων of his own people, his fellow apostles, and the Christians in general, to minister or come unto him; to furnish him with any of the conveniences and comforts of life; and visit him as often as they pleased. This was an ample proof that Felix found no evil in him; and he would certainly have dismissed him, but for two reasons: 1. He wanted to please the Jews, whom he knew could depose grievous things against his administration. 2. He hoped to get money from the apostle or his friends, as the purchase of his liberty.

Verse 24. His wife Drusilla] We have already seen, that Felix was thrice married; two of his wives were named Drusilla; one was a Roman, the niece or grand-daughter of Anthony and Cleopatra, mentioned by Tacitus, lib. v. cap. 9. The other, the person in the text, was a Jewess, daughter to Herod Agrippa the Great. See chap. xii. 1, &c. When she was but six years of age, she was affianced to Epiphanes, son of Antiochus, king of Comagena, who had promised to embrace Judaism on her account; but as he did not keep his word, her brother Agrippa (mentioned chap. xxv. 13.) refused to ratify the marriage. About the year of our Lord 53, he married her to Azizus, king of the Emesenes, who received her on condition of being circumcised. Felix having seen her, fell desperately in love with her, and by means of a pretended Jewish magician, a native of Cypros, persuaded her to leave her husband; on which Felix took her to wife. She appears, on the whole, to have been a person of an indifferent character: though one of the finest women of that age. It is said that she, and a son she had by Felix, were consumed in an eruption of mount Vesuvius. See Josephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 7. and see Calmet and Rosenmuller.

Heard him concerning the faith in Christ.] For the purpose mentioned in the note on ver. 21. that he might be the more accurately instructed in the doctrines, views, &c. of the Christians.

Verse 25. As he reasoned of righteousness] Δικαιοσυνης; the principles and requisitions of justice and right; between God and man; and between man and his fellows, in all relations and connexions of life.

Temperance] Εγκρατειας; chastity; self-government, or moderation with regard to a man's appetites, passions, and propensities of all kinds.

And judgment to come] Κριματος του μελλοντος; the day of retribution, in which the unjust, intemperate, and incontinent, must give account of all the deeds done in the body. This discourse of St. Paul was most solemnly and pointedly adapted to the state of the person to whom it was addressed. Felix was tyrannous and oppressive in his government; lived under the power of avarice and unbridled appetites; and his incontinence, intemperance, and injustice, appear fully in depriving the king of Edessa of his wife; and in his conduct towards St. Paul, and the motives by which that conduct was regulated. And as to Drusilla, who had forsaken the husband of her youth, and forgotten the covenant of her God, and become the willing companion of this bad man, she was worthy of the strongest reprehension; and Paul's reasoning on righteousness, temperance, and judgment, was not less applicable to her, than to her unprincipled paramour.

Felix trembled] "The reason of Felix's fear," says Bp. Pearce, "seems to have been, lest Drusilla, who was a Jewess, and knew that what she had done was against the law of Moses, might be influenced by Paul's discourse, and Felix's happiness with her disturbed. What is said of Felix, ver. 26. seems to shew that he had no remorse of conscience for what he had done." On the head of Drusilla's scruples, he had little to fear; the king of Edessa, her husband, had been dead about three years before this: and as to Jewish scruples, she could be little affected by them; she had already acted in opposition to the Jewish law, and she is said to have turned heathen, for the sake of Felix. We may therefore hope, that Felix felt regret for the iniquities of his life; and that his conscience was neither so seared, nor so hardened, as not to receive and retain some gracious impressions from such a discourse, delivered by the authority and accompanied with the influence of the Spirit of God. His frequently sending for the apostle to speak with him in private, is a proof that he wished to receive farther instructions in a matter, in which he was so deeply interested, though he certainly was not without motives of a baser kind; for he hoped to get money for the liberation of the apostle.

Go thy way for this time] His conscience had received as much terror and alarm as it was capable of bearing; and probably he wished to hide, by privacy, the confusion and dismay, which, by this time, were fully evident in his countenance.

Verse 26. He hoped also that money should have been given him] Bp. Pearce asks, "How could St. Luke know this?" To which I answer, From the report of St. Paul, with whom Felix had frequent conferences, and to whom he undoubtedly expressed this wish. We may see here, the most unprincipled avarice in Felix, united to injustice. Paul had proved before him, his innocence of the charges brought against him by the Jews. They had retired in confusion, when he had finished his defence. Had Felix been influenced by the common principles of justice, Paul had been immediately discharged; but he detained him, on the hope of a ransom. He saw that Paul was a respectable character; that he had opulent friends; that he was at the head of a very numerous sect, to whom he was deservedly dear; and he took it therefore for granted, that a considerable sum of money would be given for his enlargement. Felix was a freed man of the emperor Claudius; consequently had once been a slave. The stream rises not above its source: the meanness of the slave is still apparent, and it is now insufferable, being added to the authority and influence of the governor. Low bred men should never be entrusted with the administration of public affairs.

Verse 27. After two years] That is, from the time that Paul came prisoner to Cæsarea.

Porcius Festus] This man was put into the government of Judea about A. D. 60. the sixth or seventh year of Nero. In the succeeding chapter we shall see the part that he took in the affairs of St. Paul.

Willing to shew the Jews a pleasure] As he had not got the money which he expected, he hoped to be able to prevent the complaints of the Jews against his government, by leaving Paul, in some measure, in their hands. For it was customary for governors, &c. when they left, or were removed from a particular district or province, to do some public, beneficent act, in order to make themselves popular. But Felix gained nothing by this: the Jews pursued him with their complaints against his administration, even to the throne of the emperor. Josephus states the matter thus: "Now when Porcius Festus was sent as successor to Felix, by Nero; the principal of the Jewish inhabitants of Cæsarea went up to Rome, to accuse Felix. And he certainly would have been brought to punishment, had not Nero yielded to the importunate solicitations of his brother Pallas, who was at that time in the highest reputation with the emperor." Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 9. Thus, like the dog in the fable, by snatching at the shadow, he lost the substance. He hoped for money from the apostle, and got none; he sought to conciliate the friendship of the Jews, and miscarried. Honesty is the best policy: he that fears God, need fear nothing else. Justice and truth never deceive their possessor.

1. Envy and malice are indefatigable, and torment themselves in order to torment and ruin others. That a high priest, says pious Quesnel, should ever be induced to leave the holy city, and the functions of religion, to become the accuser of an innocent person; this could be no other than the effect of a terrible dereliction, and the punishment of the abuse of sacred things.

2. Tertullus begins his speech with flattery, against which every judge should have a shut ear; and then he proceeds to calumny and detraction. These generally succeed each other. He who flatters you, will in course calumniate you for receiving his flattery. When a man is conscious of the uprightness of his cause, he must know, that to attempt to support it by any thing but truth, tends directly to debase it.

3. The resurrection of the body was the grand object of the genuine Christian's hope; but the ancient Christians only hoped for a blessed resurrection, on the ground of reconciliation to God, through the death of his Son. In vain is our hope of glory, if we have not got a meetness for it. And who is fit for this state of blessedness, but he whose iniquity is forgiven, whose sin is covered, and whose heart is purified from deceit and guile!

4. We could applaud the lenity shewn to St. Paul by Felix, did not his own conduct render his motives for this lenity very suspicious. "To think no evil, where no evil seems," is the duty of a Christian; but to refuse to see it, where it most evidently appears, is an imposition on the understanding itself.

5. Justice, temperance, and a future judgment, the subjects of St. Paul's discourse to Felix and Drusilla, do not concern an iniquitous judge alone; they are subjects which should affect and interest every Christian; subjects which the eye should carefully examine, and which the heart should ever feel. Justice respects our conduct in life, particularly in reference to others: Temperance, the state and government of our souls, in reference to God. He who does not exercise himself in these, has neither the form nor the power of godliness; and consequently must be overwhelmed with the shower of divine wrath in the day of God's appearing. Many of those called Christians, have not less reason to tremble at a display of these truths, than this heathen.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXV.

Verse 1. Now when Festus was come into the province] By the province is meant Judea; for after the death of Herod Agrippa, Claudius thought it imprudent to trust the government in the hands of his son Agrippa, who was then but seventeen years of age: therefore Cuspius Fadus was sent to be procurator. And when afterwards Claudius had given to Agrippa the tetrarchate of Philip, that of Batanea and Abila, he nevertheless kept the province of Judea more immediately in his own hands, and governed it by procurators sent from Rome. Josep. Ant. l. xx. cap. 7. sect. 1. Felix being removed, Porcius Festus is sent in his place; and having come to Cæsarea, where the Roman governor generally had his residence after he had tarried three days, he went up to Jerusalem, to acquaint himself with the nature and complexion of the ecclesiastical government of the Jews; no doubt, for the purpose of the better administration of justice among them.

Verse 2. The high priest—informed him against Paul] They supposed that, as Felix, to please them, on the resignation of his government, had left Paul bound; so Festus, on the assumption of it, would, to please them, deliver him into their hand: but as they wished this to be done under the colour of justice, they exhibited a number of charges against Paul, which they hoped would appear to Festus a sufficient reason why a new trial should be granted; and he be sent to Jerusalem to take his trial. Their motive is mentioned in the succeeding verse.

Verse 4. Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea] It is truly astonishing that Festus should refuse this favour to the heads of the Jewish nation, which, to those who were not in the secret, must appear so very reasonable; and especially, as, on his coming to the government, it might be considered an act that was likely to make him popular; and he could have no interest in denying their request. But God had told Paul, that he should testify of him at Rome and he disposed the heart of Festus to act as he did; and thus disappointed the malice of the Jews, and fulfilled his own gracious design.

He—would depart shortly] So had the providence of God disposed matters, that Festus was obliged to return speedily to Cæsarea; and thus had not time to preside in such a trial at Jerusalem. And this reason must appear sufficient to the Jews; and especially, as he gave them all liberty to come and appear against him, who were able to prove the alleged charges.

Verse 5. Let them—which among you are able] Οι δυνατοι those who have authority; for so is this word often used by good Greek authors, and by Josephus. Festus seems to have said: "I have heard clamours from the multitude relative to this man; but on such clamours, no accusation should be founded: yourselves have only the voice of the multitude as the foundation of the request which you now make. I cannot take up accusations which may affect the life of a Roman citizen, on such pretences. Are there any respectable men among you; men in office and authority, whose character is a pledge for the truth of their depositions, who can prove any thing against him? If so, let these come down to Cæsarea, and the cause shall be tried before me, and thus we shall know whether he be a malefactor or not."

Verse 6. When he had tarried—more than ten days] The strangeness of this mode of expression suggests the thought, that our printed text is not quite correct in this place; and this suspicion is confirmed by an examination of MSS. and Versions: ημερας ου πλειους οκτω η δεκα not more than EIGHT OR ten days, is the reading of the ABC. several others of great respectability, with the Coptic, Armenian, and Vulgate. Griesbach admits this reading into the text, and of it, professor White says Lectio indubiè genuina: "This is doubtless the genuine reading."

Verse 7. The Jews—laid many and grievous complaints against Paul] As they must have perceived that the Roman came down from Jerusalem stood round about, [a] and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul which they could not prove.

8 ¶ While he answered for himself, [b] Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Festus, [c] willing to do the Jews a pleasure, answered Paul, and said, [d] Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 [e] For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of those things whereof these accuse me, no man may governors would not intermeddle with questions of their law &c. they no doubt invented some new charges, such as sedition, treason, &c. in order to render the mind of the governor evil affected towards Paul; but their malicious designs were defeated, for assertion would not go for proof before a Roman tribunal: this court required proof, and the blood thirsty persecutors of the apostle could produce none.

Verse 8. While he answered for himself] In this instance St. Luke gives only a general account, both of the accusations and of St. Paul's defence. But, from the words in this verse, the charges appear to have been threefold. 1. That he had broken the law. 2. That he had defiled the temple. 3. That he dealt in treasonable practices: to all of which he no doubt answered particularly; though we have nothing further here than this, Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

Verse 9. Willing to do the Jews a pleasure] This was merely to please them, and conciliate their esteem; for he knew, that as Paul was a Roman citizen, he could not oblige him to take a new trial at Jerusalem.

Verse 10. I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat] Every procurator represented the person of the emperor in the province over which he presided; and, as the seat of government was at Cæsarea, and Paul was now before the tribunal on which the emperor's representative sat; he could say, with the strictest propriety, that he stood before Cæsar's judgment-seat, where, as a freeman of Rome, he should be tried.

As thou very well knowest] The record of this trial before Felix, was undoubtedly left for the inspection of Festus; for, as he left the prisoner to his successor, he must also leave the charges against him, and the trial which he had undergone. Besides Festus, must be assured of his innocence, from the trial through which he had just now passed.

Verse 11. For if I be an offender] If it can be proved that I have broken the laws, so as to expose me to capital punishment, I do not wish to save my life by subterfuges; I am before the only competent tribunal: here my business should be ultimately decided.

No man may deliver me unto them] The words of the apostle are very strong and appropriate. The Jews asked as a favour, χαριν, from Festus, that he would send Paul to Jerusalem, ver. 3. Festus, willing to do the Jews χαριν this favour, asked Paul if he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged, ver. 9. Paul says, I have done nothing amiss either against the Jews or against Cæsar, therefore no man, με δυναται αυτοις χαρισασθαι, can make a PRESENT of me to them; that is, favour them so far as to put my life into their hands, and thus gratify them by my death. Festus, in his address to Agrippa, ver. 16. admits this, and uses the same form of speech: It is not the custom of the Romans χαριζεσθαι gratuitously, to give up any one, &c. Much of the beauty of this passage is lost, by not attending to the original words. See on ver. 16.

I appeal unto Cæsar] A freeman of Rome, who had been tried for a crime and sentence passed on him, had a right to appeal to the emperor, if he conceived the sentence to be unjust; but even before the sentence was pronounced he had the privilege of an appeal in criminal cases, if he conceived that the judge was doing any thing contrary to the laws. ANTE sententiam appellari potest in criminali negotio si judex contra leges hoc faciat.—GROTIUS.

An appeal to the emperor was highly respected. The Julian law condemned those magistrates, and others having authority, as violators of the public peace, who had put to death, tortured, scourged, imprisoned, or condemned any Roman citizen who had appealed to Cæsar. Lege Juliâ de vi publica damnatur, qui aliqua potestate præditus, Civem Romanum ad Imperatorem appellantem necarit; necarive jusserit torserit, verberaverit, condemnaverit, in publica vincula duci jusserit. Pauli Recept. Sent. lib. v. t. 26.

This law was so very sacred and imperative, that, in the persecution under Trajan, Pliny would not attempt to put to deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Cæsar.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar shalt thou go.

13 ¶ And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæsarea to salute Festus.

A.M.cir.4066. A. D. cir. 62. An Olymp. cir. CCX. 2.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, [b] There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 [c] About whom, when I was at Jerusalem,

[a] Ch. 26. 32. & 28. 19.

death Roman citizens who were proved to have turned Christians; hence in his letter to Trajan, lib. x. Ep. 97. he says, Fuerunt alii similis amentiæ, quos quia cives Romani erant, annotavi in urbem remittendos. "There were others guilty of similar folly, whom, finding them to be Roman citizens, I have determined to send to the city." Very likely these had appealed to Cæsar.

Verse 12. Conferred with the council] From this circumstance, we may learn, that the appeal of Paul to Cæsar was conditional; else Festus could not have deliberated with his council whether it should be granted; for he had no power to refuse to admit such an appeal. We may, therefore, understand Paul thus: "I now stand before a tribunal where I ought to be judged; if thou refuse to hear and try this cause; rather than go to Jerusalem, I appeal to Cæsar." Festus, therefore, consulted with the council, whether he should proceed to try the cause, or send Paul to Rome; and it appears that the majority were of opinion that he should be sent to Cæsar.

Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar, &c.] Rather, Thou hast appealed unto Cæsar, and to Cæsar thou shalt go. The Jews were disappointed of their hope; and Festus got his hand creditably drawn out of a business with which he was likely to have been greatly embarrassed.

Verse 13. King Agrippa] This was the son of Herod Agrippa, who is mentioned chap. xii. 1. Upon the death of his father's youngest brother Herod, he succeeded him in the kingdom of Chalcis, by the favour of the emperor Claudius; Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 4. s. 2. and Bell. lib. ii. cap. 12. s. 1. Afterwards, Claudius removed him from that kingdom to a larger one, giving him the Tetrarchy of Philip, which contained Trachonitis, Batanea, and Gaulonitis. He gave him, likewise, the Tetrarchy of Lysanias, and the province which Varus had governed, Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 6. s. 1. Bell. lib. ii. cap. 12. s. 8. Nero made a further addition, and gave him four cities, Abila, Julias, in Peræa, Tarichææ, and Tiberias in Galilee; Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 7. s. 4. Bell. lib. ii. cap. 13. s. 2. Claudius gave him the power of appointing the high-priest among the Jews; Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 1. s. 3. and instances of his exercising this power may be seen in Joseph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 7. s. 8, 11. This king was strongly attached to the Romans, and did every thing in his power to prevent the Jews from rebelling against the Romans; and, when he could not prevail, he united his troops to those of Titus, and assisted in the siege of Jerusalem: he survived the ruin of his country several years; see Bishop Pearce and Calmet.

Bernice, or as she is sometimes called Berenice, was sister of this Agrippa, and of the Drusilla, mentioned chap. xxiv. She was at first married to her uncle Herod, king of Chalcis, Jos. Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 9. s. 1. and on his death, went to live with her brother Agrippa, with whom she was violently suspected to lead an incestuous life. Juvenal, as usual, mentions this in the broadest manner—Sat. vi. ver. 155:—

> Deinde Adamas notissimus, et Berenices
> In digito factus pretiosior: hunc dedit olim
> Barbarus incestæ, dedit hunc Agrippa sorori.

"Next, a most valuable diamond, rendered more precious by being put on the finger of Berenice, a barbarian gave it to this incestuous woman formerly; and Agrippa gave this to his sister." Josephus mentions the report of her having criminal conversation with her brother Agrippa, φημης επισχουσης, οτι τ' αδελφω συνοικει. To shield herself from this scandal, she persuaded Polemo, king of Cilicia, to embrace the Jewish religion, and marry her; this he was induced to do, on account of her great riches; but she soon left him, and he revolted to heathenism; see Jos. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. vii. s. 3. After this, she lived often with her brother, and her life was by no means creditable; she had, however, address to ingratiate herself with Titus Vespasian, and there were even rumours of her becoming empress —— propterque insignem reginæ Bernices amorem, cui etiam nuptias pollicitus ferebatur—Suet. in Vit. Titi. Which was prevented by the murmurs of the Roman people: Berenicen statim ab urbe dimisit, invitus invitam—Ibid. Tacitus also, Hist. lib. ii. cap. 1. speaks of her love intrigue with Titus. From all accounts she must have been a woman of great address; and, upon the whole, an exceptionable character.

Verse 14. Declared Paul's cause unto the king] Festus

the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

knew that Agrippa was better acquainted with such matters than he was; and he wished, in some sort, to make him a party in this business.

Verse 15. Desiring to have judgment against him.] Instead of δικην judgment, καταδικην condemnation, sentence of death, is the reading of ABC. and several others; which is probably genuine. This is evidently the meaning of the place, whichever reading we prefer. Nothing could satisfy these men but the death of the apostle. It was not justice they wanted, but his destruction.

Verse 16. It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die] Χαριζεσθαι τινα ανθρωπον, to MAKE A PRESENT of any man; gratuitously to give up the life of any man, through favour or caprice. Here is a reference to the subject discussed on verse 11.

Before that, he which is accused, have the accusers face to face, &c.] For this righteous procedure, the Roman laws were celebrated over the civilized world. APPIAN, in his Hist. Roman. says, ου πατριον σφισιν ακριτης καταδικαζεσθαι. It is not their custom to condemn men before they have been heard. And PHILO De Præsid. Rom. says, τοτε γαρ κοινους εαυτους παρεχοντες δικαστας εξ ισου, και των κατηγορων και απολογουμενων ακουομενοι, μηδενος ακριτου προκαταγινωσκειν αξιουντες, εδραδευον ουτε προς εχθραν, ουτε προς χαριν, αλλα προς την φυσιν της αληθειας τα δοξαντα ειναι δικαια. "For then, by giving sentence in common, and hearing impartially both plaintiff and defendant, not thinking it right to condemn any person unheard, they decided as appeared to them to be just; without either enmity or favour, but according to the merits of the case."—See Bp. Pearce. England can boast such laws, not only in her statute-books, but in constant operation in all her courts of justice. Even the king himself, were he so inclined, could not imprison, nor punish a man without the regular procedure of the law; and twelve honest men, before whom the evidence has been adduced, the case argued, and the law laid down and explained, are ultimately to judge whether the man be guilty or not guilty. Here, in this favoured country, are no arbitrary imprisonments—no bastiles—no lettres de cachet. Lex facit Regem: the law makes the king, says Bracton, and the king is the grand executor and guardian of the laws—laws, in the eyes of which, the character, property, and life of every subject, are sacred.

Verse 18. They brought none accusation of such things as I supposed] It was natural for Festus, at the first view of things, to suppose that Paul must be guilty of some very atrocious crime. When he found that he had been twice snatched from the hands of the Jews; that he had been brought to Cæsarea, as a prisoner two years before; that he had been tried once before the sanhedrin, and once before the governor of the province: that he had now lain two years in bonds, and that the high priest and all the heads of the Jewish nation had united in accusing him, and whose condemnation they loudly demanded; when, I say, he considered all this, it was natural for him to suppose the apostle to be some flagitious wretch; but when he had tried the case, and heard their accusations and his defence, how surprised was he to find, that scarcely any thing that amounted to a crime was laid to his charge; and that nothing that was laid to his charge could be proved!

Verse 19. Questions—of their own superstition] Περι της ιδιας δεισιδαιμονιας; questions concerning their own religion. Superstition meant something as bad among the Romans, as it does among us; and is it likely that Festus, only a procurator, should thus speak to Agrippa, a KING, concerning his own religion? He could not have done so without offering the highest insult. The word Δεισιδαιμονια must therefore simply mean Religion; the national creed, and the national worship, as I have at large proved it to mean, in the observations at the end of chap. xvii.

And of one Jesus, which was dead, &c.] In this way does this poor heathen speak of the death and resurrection of Christ! There are many who profess Christianity that do not appear to be much farther enlightened.

A.M cir.4066. A. D. cir. 62. An. Olymp. cir CCX. 2.

20 And because [a] I doubted of such manner of questions; I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the [b] hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

22 Then [c] Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To-morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 ¶ And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city; at Festus' commandment, Paul was brought forth.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom [d] all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying, that he ought [e] not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that [f] he had committed nothing worthy of death, [g] and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore, I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

27 For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

Verse 20. I doubted of such manner of questions] Such as, whether he had broken their law, defiled their temple; or, whether this Jesus, who was dead, was again raised to life?

Verse 21 Unto the hearing of Augustus] Εις την του Σεβαστου διαγνωσιν; to the discrimination of the emperor. For, although σεβαστος is usually translated Augustus, and the Roman emperors generally assumed this epithet, which signifies no more than the venerable, the august; yet here it seems to be used merely to express the emperor, without any reference to any of his attributes or titles.

Verse 22. I would also hear the man myself.] A spirit of curiosity, similar to that of Herod, Luke xxiii. 8.

As Herod, the father of this Agrippa, had been so active an instrument in endeavouring to destroy Christianity, having killed James, and was about to have put Peter to death also, had not God sent him to his own place; there is no doubt that Agrippa had heard much about Christianity: and as to St. Paul, his conversion was so very remarkable, that his name, in connection with Christianity, was known not only throughout Judea, but through all Asia Minor and Greece. Agrippa, therefore, might naturally wish to see and hear a man, of whom he had heard so much.

Verse 23. With great pomp] Μετα πολλης φαντασιας; with much phantasy, great splendour, great parade, superb attendance, or splendid retinue: in this sense the Greek word is used by the best writers. Wetstein has very justly remarked, that these children of Herod the Great, made this pompous appearance in that very city where, a few years before, their father, for his PRIDE, was smitten of God, and eaten up by worms! How seldom do the living lay any of God's judgments to heart.

The place of hearing] A sort of audience-chamber, in the palace of Festus. This was not a trial of Paul; there were no Jews present to accuse him, and he could not be tried but at Rome, as he had appealed to Cæsar. These grandees wished to hear the man speak of his religion, and in his own defence, through a principle of curiosity.

Verse 26. I have no certain thing to write] Nothing alleged against him has been substantiated.

Unto my lord] The title Κυριος Dominus, Lord, both Augustus and Tiberius had absolutely refused; and forbad, even by public edicts, the application of it to themselves. Tiberius himself was accustomed to say, that he was lord only of his slaves, emperor or general of the troops, and prince of the senate. See Suetonius, in his life of this prince. The succeeding emperors were not so modest: they affected the title. Nero, the then emperor, would have it; and Pliny the younger is continually giving it to Trajan, in his letters.

Verse 27. For it seemeth to me unreasonable, &c.] Every reader must feel the awkward situation in which Festus stood. He was about to send a prisoner to Rome, to appear before Nero, though he had not one charge to support against him; and yet he must be sent, for he had appealed to Cæsar. He hoped therefore that Agrippa, who was of the Jewish religion, would be able to discern more particularly the merits of this case; and might, after hearing Paul, direct him how to draw up those letters, which, on sending the prisoner, must be transmitted to the emperor.

This chapter ends as exceptionably as the twenty-first. It should have begun at ver. 13. and have been continued to the end of the twenty-sixth chapter; or both chapters have been united in one.

1. From St. Paul's appeal to Cæsar, we see that it is lawful to avail ourselves, even in the cause of God, of those civil privileges with which his mercy has blessed us. It is often better to fall into the hands of the heathen, than into the hands of those, who, from mistaken views of religion, have their hearts filled with bitter persecuting zeal. Those who can murder a man, pretendedly for God's sake, because he does not think exactly with them on ceremonial or speculative points of divinity, have no portion of that religion which came down from God.

2. The Jews endeavoured by every means to deny the resurrection of our Lord; and it seems to have been one part of their accusation against Paul, that he asserted, that the Man Jesus, whom they had crucified, was risen from the dead. On this subject, a pious writer observes, "What a train of errors and miseries does one single instance of deceit draw after it! and what a judgment upon those, who, by corrupting the guards of the sepulchre, the witnesses of the resurrection of our Lord, have kept their whole nation in infidelity!" Thus it often happens in the world, that one bad counsel, one single lie or calumny once established, is the source of infinite evils.

3. The grand maxim of the Roman law and government, to condemn no man unheard, and to confront the accusers with the accused, should be a sacred maxim with every magistrate and minister and among all private Christians. How many harsh judgments and uncharitable censures would this prevent. Conscientiously practised in all Christian societies, detraction, calumny, tale-bearing, whispering, back-biting misunderstandings, with every unbrotherly affection, would necessarily be banished from the church of God.

CHAPTER XXVI.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVI.

Verse 1. Then Paul stretched forth the hand] This act, as we have already seen on chap. xxi. 40. was merely to gain attention; it was no rhetorical flourish, nor designed for one. From knowing, partly by descriptions, and partly by ancient statues, how orators and others who address a concourse of people stood, we can easily conceive the attitude of St. Paul. When the right hand was stretched out, the left remained under the cloak, which being thrown off the right shoulder, to give the arm the fuller liberty; it then rested on the left: under these circumstances, the hand could be stretched out gracefully, but was confined to no one attitude, though the third and fourth fingers were generally clenched.

Verse 2. I think myself happy] As if he had said, this is a peculiarly fortunate circumstance in my favour, that I am called to make my defence before a judge so intelligent, and so well acquainted with the laws and customs of our country. It may be necessary just to observe, that this Agrippa was king of Trachonitis, a region which lay on the north of Palestine, on the east side of Jordan, and south of Damascus. For his possessions, see on chap. xxv. 13.

Verse 4. My manner of life, &c.] The apostle means to state, that though born in Tarsus, he had a regular Jewish education, having been sent up to Jerusalem for that purpose; but at what age, does not appear; probably about twelve, for at this age the male children were probably brought to the annual solemnities. See on Luke ii. 41.

Verse 5. After the most straitest sect] That is, the Pharisees; who were reputed the strictest in their doctrines, and in their moral practices, of all the sects then among the Jews. The sects were, the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes.

Verse 6. For the hope of the promise] This does not appear to mean, the hope of the Messiah, as some have imagined: but the hope of the resurrection of the dead, to which the apostle referred in chap. xxiii. 6. where he says, to the Jewish council, (from which the Roman governor took him) of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. See the notes there: and here, he says, I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise, &c. and to which, he says, ver. 7. the twelve tribes hope to come. The Messiah had come, and was gone again, as Paul well knew; and what is here meant, is something which the Jews hoped to come to, or attain; not what was to come to them: and this single observation excludes the Messiah from being meant. It was the resurrection of all men from the dead, which Paul's words signified; and this the Jews had been taught to hope for, by many passages in the Old Testament. I shall only add, that when, in the next verse, this hope of the promise is mentioned as what the Jews did then hope καταντησαι to come to; it is the very same word which Paul, in Phil. iii. 11. uses to express the same thing: If by any means (says he) καταντησω I might attain to the resurrection of the dead. Bp Pearce.

Verse 8. That God should raise the dead] As Agrippa believed in the true God, and knew, that one of his attributes was Omnipotence, he could not believe that the resurrection of the dead was an impossible thing; and to this belief of his, the apostle appeals; and the more especially, because the Sadducees denied the doctrine of the resurrection, though they professed to believe in the same God. Two attributes of God stood pledged to produce this resurrection: his truth, on which his promise was founded; and his power, by which the thing could be easily effected; as that power is unlimited.

Some of the best critics think this verse should be read thus: What! should it be thought a thing incredible with you, if God should raise the dead?

Verse 10. Many of the saints] From what is said in this verse, it seems that Paul, before his conversion, was invested with much power: he imprisoned the Christians, punished many in various synagogues, compelled them to blaspheme, to renounce, and perhaps to execrate Christ, in order to save their lives; and gave his voice, exerted all his influence and authority against them, in order that they might be put to death: and from this it would seem, that there were other 11 [a]And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

12 [b]Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests, 13 At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying, in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

persons put to death besides St. Stephen, though their names are not mentioned.

Verse 11. Being exceedingly mad against them] Only a madman will persecute another because of his differing from him in religious opinions; and the fiercest persecutor, is he who should be deemed the most furious madman.

Unto strange cities.] Places out of the jurisdiction of the Jews; such as Damascus which he immediately mentions.

Verse 12. Whereupon as I went to Damascus] See the whole account of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, explained at large in the notes on chap. ix. 2, &c.

Verse 16. But rise, &c.] The particulars mentioned here, and in the two following verses, are not given in chap. ix. nor in chap. xxii. where he gives an account of his conversion. He has detailed the different circumstances of that important event, as he saw it necessary; and perhaps there were several others which then took place, that he had no opportunity of mentioning, because there was nothing in succeeding occurrences, which rendered it necessary to produce them.

To make thee a minister] Υπηρετην, an under-rower; that is, one who is under the guidance and authority of another; an assistant, or servant. So Paul was to act solely under the authority of Jesus Christ; and tug hard at the oar, in order to bring the vessel through the tempestuous ocean, to the safe harbour. See the concluding observations on John, chap. vi.

And a witness] Μαρτυρα, a martyr. Though this word literally means a witness, yet we apply it only to such persons as have borne testimony to the truth of God, at the hazard and expence of their lives. In this sense also, ancient history states St. Paul to have been a witness; for it is said, he was beheaded at Rome, by the command of Nero.

In the which I will appear] Here Christ gives him to understand, that he should have farther communications from himself; and this may refer either to those interpositions of Divine Providence, by which he was so often rescued from destruction, or to those encouragements which he received in dreams, visions, trances, &c. or to that general inspiration under which he was enabled to apprehend and reveal the secret things of God, for the edification of the church. To all of which may be added, that astonishing power, by which he was so often enabled to work miracles, for the confirmation of the truth.

Verse 17. Delivering thee from the people] From the Jews—and from the Gentiles, put here in opposition to the Jews; and both meaning mankind at large, wheresoever the providence of God might send him. But he was to be delivered from the malice of the Jews, that he might be sent with salvation to the Gentiles.

Verse 18. To open their eyes] To be the instrument of informing their understanding in the things of God.

To turn them from darkness to light] From heathenism and superstition, to the knowledge and worship of the true God.

From the power of Satan unto God] Της εξουσιας του Σατανα, from the authority and domination of Satan; for, as the kingdom of darkness is his kingdom, so those who live in this darkness are under his dominion; and he has authority and right over them. The blessed gospel of Christ is the means of bringing the soul from this state of spiritual darkness and wretchedness, to the light and liberty of the children of God; and thus they are brought from under the power and authority of Satan, to be under the power and authority of GOD.

That they may receive forgiveness of sins] That all their sins may be pardoned, and their souls sanctified; for nothing

Satan unto God, [a] that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and [b] inheritance among them which are [c] sanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

20 But [d] shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance.

21 For these causes [f] the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

less is implied in the phrase, αφεσις αμαρτιων, which signifies the taking away, or removal of sins.

And inheritance] By remission of sins, i. e. the removal of the guilt and pollution of sin, they become children of God; and if children, then heirs; for the children of the heavenly family shall alone possess the heavenly estate. And as the inheritance is said to be among them that are SANCTIFIED; this is a farther proof that αφεσις αμαρτιων signifies not only the forgiveness of sins, but also the purification of the heart.

By faith that is in me] By believing on Christ Jesus, as dying for their offences, and rising again for their justification. Thus we see that not only this salvation comes through Christ; but, that it is to be received by faith; and, consequently neither by the merit of works nor by that of suffering.

Verse 19. I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision] This, O Agrippa, was the cause of my conversion from my prejudices and mal-practices against the doctrine of Christ. The vision was from heaven; I received it as such, and began to preach the faith which I had before persecuted.

Verse 20. But shewed first unto them of Damascus] He appears to have preached at Damascus, and in the neighbouring parts of Arabia Deserta, for about three years; and afterwards he went up to Jerusalem. See Galat. i. 17, 18. and see the note on chap. ix. 23.

That they should repent] Be deeply humbled for their past iniquities; and turn to God as their Judge and Saviour avoiding all idolatry, and all sin: and thus do works meet for repentance; that is, shew by their conduct that they had contrite hearts; and that they sincerely sought salvation from God alone. For the meaning of the word repentance, see the note on Matt. iii. 2.

Verse 21. For these causes the Jews—went about to kill me. These causes may be reduced to four heads:—1. He had maintained the resurrection of the dead. 2. The resurrection of Christ, whom they had crucified and slain. 3. That this Jesus was the promised Messiah. 4. He had offered salvation to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. He does not mention the accusation of having defiled the temple, nor of disloyalty to the Roman government; probably, because his adversaries had abandoned these charges at his preceding trial before Festus: see chap. xxv. 8. and see Calmet.

Verse 22. Having—obtained help of God] According to the gracious promise made to him: see ver. 17.

Witnessing both to small and great] Preaching before kings, rulers, priests, and peasants: fearing no evil, though ever surrounded with evils; nor slackening in my duty notwithstanding the opposition I have met with both from Jews and Gentiles. And these continual interpositions of God shew me, that I have not mistaken my call: and encourage me to go forward in my work.

Verse 23. That Christ should suffer] That the Christ, or Messiah, should suffer. This, though fully revealed in the Prophets, the prejudices of the Jews would not permit them to receive; they expected their Messiah to be a glorious secular prince; and, to reconcile the fifty-third of Isaiah, with their system, they formed the childish notion of two Messiahs—Messiah ben David, who should reign, conquer, and triumph; and Messiah ben Ephraim, who should suffer, and be put to death. A distinction which has not the smallest foundation in the whole Bible.

As the apostle says he preached none other things than those which Moses and the prophets said should come; therefore, he understood that both Moses and the prophets spoke of the resurrection of the dead, as well as of the passion and resurrection of Christ. If this be so, the favourite system of a learned bishop cannot be true; viz.

Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, [a] thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul was unknown to the ancient Jews.

That he should be the first that should rise from the dead] That is, that he should be the first who should rise from the dead, so as to die no more; and to give, in his own person, the proof of the resurrection of the human body, no more to return under the empire of death. In no other sense can Jesus Christ be said to be the first that rose again from the dead; for Elijah raised the son of the Shunamite. A dead man put into the sepulchre of the prophet Elishah, was restored to life as soon as he touched the prophet's bones. Christ himself had raised the widow's son at Nain; and he had also raised Lazarus, and several others: all these died again: but the human nature of our Lord was raised from the dead, and can die do more. Thus he was the first who rose again from the dead, to return no more into the empire of death.

And should shew light unto the people] Should give the true knowledge of the law and the prophets to the Jews; for these are meant by the term people, as in ver. 17. And to the Gentiles, who had no revelation; and who sat in the valley of the shadow of death: these also, through Christ, should be brought to the knowledge of the truth, and be made a glorious church, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. That the Messiah should be the light both of the Jews and Gentiles, the prophets had clearly foretold, see Isai. lx. 1—Arise and shine, or be illuminated, for thy LIGHT is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee; and again, Isai. xlix. 6—I will give thee for a LIGHT unto the GENTILES, that thou mayest be my salvation to the ends of the earth. With such sayings as these, Agrippa was well acquainted, from his education as a Jew.

Verse 24. Paul, thou art beside thyself] "Thou art mad Paul!" "Thy great learning hath turned thee into a madman." As we sometimes say, thou art cracked, and thy brain is turned. By the τα πολλα γραμματα, it is likely that Festus meant no more than this, that Paul had got such a vast variety of knowledge, that his brain was over-charged with it: for in his speech, Paul makes no particular show of what we call learning; for he quotes none of their celebrated authors, as he did on other occasions; see chap. xvii. 28. But he here spoke of spiritual things, of which Festus, as a Roman heathen, could have no conception; and this would lead him to conclude that Paul was actually deranged. This is not an uncommon case with many, professing Christianity; who, when a man speaks on experimental religion, on the life of God in the soul of man; of the knowledge of salvation, by the remission of sins; of the witness of the Spirit, &c. &c. things essential to that Christianity by which the soul is saved, are ready to cry out Thou art mad; he is an enthusiast; that is, a religious madman; one who is not worthy to be regarded; and yet, strange to tell, these very persons who thus cry out, are surprised that Festus should have supposed that Paul was beside himself!

Verse 25. I am not mad, most noble Festus] This most sensible, appropriate, and modest answer, was the fullest proof he could give of his sound sense and discretion. The title Κρατιστε most noble or most excellent; which he gives to Festus shews at once that he was far above indulging any sentiment of anger or displeasure at Festus, though he had called him a madman; and it shews farther, that, with the strictest conscientiousness, even an apostle may give titles of respect to men in power; which, taken literally, imply much more than the persons deserve to whom they are applied. Κρατιστος, which implies most excellent, was merely a title which belonged to the office of Festus. St. Paul hereby acknowledges him as the governor; while, perhaps, moral excellence, of any kind, could, with no propriety, be attributed to him.

Speak forth the words of truth and soberness.] Αληθειας και σωφροσυνης, words of truth and of mental soundness. The very terms used by the apostle, would at once convince Festus that he was mistaken. The σωφροσυνη of the apostle was elegantly opposed to the μανια of the governor: the one signifying mental derangement; the other, mental sanity. never was an answer on the spur of the moment, more happily conceived, Verse 26. Before whom also I speak freely] This is a farther judicious apology for himself and his discourse. As if he had said, conscious that the king understands all these subjects well, being fully versed in the law and the prophets, I have used the utmost freedom of speech, and have mentioned the tenets of my religion, in their own appropriate terms.

This thing was not done in a corner.] The preaching, miracles, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, 31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, [b] This man doeth nothing worthy of death or of bonds.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, [c] if he had not appealed unto Cæsar.

[a] 1 Cor. 7. 7.

[b] Ch. 23. 9, 29. & 25. 25. —— [c] ch. 25. 11.

were most public and notorious; and of them Agrippa could not be ignorant; and indeed it appears, from his own answer, that he was not, but was now more fully persuaded of the truth than ever; and almost led to embrace Christianity.

Verse 27. Believest thou the prophets?] Having made his elegant compliment and vindication to Festus—he turns to Agrippa; and, with the strong appeal to his religious feeling, says, Believest thou the prophets?—and immediately anticipates his reply, and with great address, speaks for him, I know that thou believest. The inference from this belief necessarily was: "As thou believest the prophets, and I have proved that the prophets have spoken about Christ, as suffering, and triumphing over death; and that all they say of the Messiah has been fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth; then thou must acknowledge that my doctrine is true."

Verse 28. Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.] Εν ολιγῳ με πειθεις Χριστιανον γενεσθαι. This declaration was almost the necessary consequence of the apostle's reasoning, and Agrippa's faith. If he believed the prophets, see ver. 22. and 23. and believed that Paul's application of their words to Christ Jesus was correct, he must acknowledge the truth of the Christian religion; but he might chuse whether he would embrace and confess this truth, or not. However, the sudden appeal to his religious faith, extorts from him the declaration Thou hast nearly persuaded me to embrace Christianity. How it could have entered into the mind of any man, who carefully considered the circumstances of the case, to suppose that these words of Agrippa are spoken ironically, is to me unaccountable. Every circumstance in the case proves them to have been the genuine effusion of a heart persuaded of the truth; and only prevented from fully acknowledging it, by secular considerations.

Verse 29. I would to God, &c.] Ευξαιμην αν τῳ Θεῳ και εν ολιγῳ και εν πολλῳ—So fully am I persuaded of the infinite excellence of Christianity, and so truly happy am I, in possession of it, that I most ardently wish that not only thou, but this whole council were not only almost, but altogether, such as I am, these CHAINS excepted. Thus, while his heart glows with affection for their best interests, he wishes that they might enjoy all his blessings, if possible, without being obliged to bear any cross on the account. His holding up his chain, which was probably now detached from the soldier's arm, and wrapped about his own, must have made a powerful impression on the minds of his audience. Indeed, it appears they could bear the scene no longer; the king was overwhelmed, and rose up instantly, and so did the rest of the council, and went immediately aside; and, after a very short conference among themselves, they unanimously pronounced him innocent; and his last word των δεσμων, BONDS! and the action with which it was accompanied, had made such a deep impression upon their hearts, that they conclude their judgment with that very identical word δεσμων. Would to God, says the apostle, that all who hear me this day, were altogether such as I am, except these BONDS! The whole council say—This man hath done nothing worthy of death nor of BONDS: Δεσμων, BONDS, is echoed by them from the last words of the apostle; as we may plainly perceive that, seeing such an innocent and eminent man suffering such indignity, had made a deep impression upon their hearts. Alas! why should such a man, be in B-O-N-D-S!

Verse 32. Then said Agrippa, &c.] The king himself, who had participated in the strongest emotions on the occasion, feels himself prompted to wish the apostle's immediate liberation; but this was now rendered impracticable, because he had appealed to Cæsar; the appeal was no doubt registered, and the business must now proceed to a full hearing. Bp. Pearce conjectures, with great probability, that Agrippa, on his return to Rome, represented Paul's case so favourably to the emperor, or his ministers of state, that he was soon set at liberty there, as may be concluded from chap. xxviii. 30. that he dwelt two whole years in his own hired place and to the same cause it seems to have been owing, that Julius, who had the care of Paul as a prisoner in the ship, treated him courteously; see chap. xxvii. 3, 43. And the same may be gathered from chap. xxviii. 14, 16. So that this defence of the apostle before Agrippa, Berenice, Festus, &c. was ultimately serviceable to his important cause.

1. The conversion of Saul was a wonderful work of the Spirit of God; and, as we have already seen, a strong proof of the truth of Christianity; and the apostle himself frequently appeals to it as such.

2. His mission to the Gentiles was as extraordinary as the calling of the Gentiles itself. Every thing is supernatural in a work of grace; for because nature cannot produce the effects, the grace of God, which implies the co-operation of his Omniscience, Omnipotence, and endless Mercy, undertakes to perform, the otherwise, impossible task.

3. From the commission of St. Paul, we see the state in which the Gentile world was, previously to the preaching of the gospel.

1. Their eyes are represented as closed; their understanding was darkened; and they had no right apprehension of spiritual or eternal things.

2. They were in a state of darkness; living without the knowledge of the true God, in a region where nothing but ignorance prevailed.

3. They were under the dominion and authority of Satan; they were his vassals, and he claimed them as his right.

4. They were in a state of guiltiness; living, in almost every respect, in opposition to the dictates even of nature itself.

5. They were polluted; not only irregular and abominable in their lives, but also impure and unholy in their hearts. Thus far their state.

Behold what the grace of the gospel is to do for these Gentiles, in order to redeem them from this state.

1. It opens their eyes; gives them an understanding, whereby they may discern the truth; and without this illumination from above, the truth of God can never be properly apprehended.

2. It turns them from the darkness to the light; a fine metaphor, taken from the act of a blind man, who is continually turning his eyes towards the light, and rolling his eyes upwards towards the sun, and in all directions, that he may collect as many of the scattered rays as he can, in order to form distinct vision. In this way the Gentiles appeared to be, in vain, searching after the light, till the gospel came and turned their eyes to the Sun of righteousness.

3. They are brought from under the bondage and slavery of sin, and Satan, to be put under the obedience of Jesus Christ. So that Christ and his grace, as truly and as fully, rule and govern them, as sin and Satan did formerly. This is a proof that the change is not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord.

4. He pardons their sin, so that they are no longer liable to endless perdition.

5. He sanctifies their nature, so that they are capable of loving and serving him fervently with pure hearts; and are thus rendered fit for the enjoyment of the inheritance among the saints in light.

Such a salvation, from such a bondage, does the gospel of Christ offer to the Gentiles—to a lost world. It is with extreme difficulty that any person can be persuaded that he needs a similar mark of grace on his heart, to that which was necessary for the conversion of the Gentiles. We may rest assured that no man is a Christian merely by birth or education. If Christianity implies the life of God in the soul of man—the remission of sins—the thorough purification of the heart, producing that holiness without which, none can see the Lord; then, it is evident, that God alone can do this work, and that neither birth, nor education, can bestow it. By birth, every man is sinful; by practice, every man is a transgressor; for all have sinned. God alone, by faith in Christ Jesus, can save the sinner from his sins. Reader, has God saved thee from this state of wretchedness, and brought thee "into the glorious liberty of his children?" Let thy conscience answer for itself.

CHAPTER XXVII.

It being determined that Paul should be sent to Rome, he is delivered to Julius, a Centurion, 1. They embark in a ship of Adramyttium, and came the next day to Sidon, 2, 3. They sail thence, and pass Cyprus, Cilicia, and Pamphylia, and come to Myra, 4, 5. They are transferred there to a ship of Alexandria going to Italy; sail past Cnidus, Crete, Salmone, and come to The Fair Havens, 6—8. Paul predicts a disastrous voyage, 9—11. They sail from the Fair Havens, in order to reach Crete, and winter there; but, having a comparatively favourable wind, they sail past Crete, meet with a tempest, and are brought into extreme peril and distress, 12—20. Paul's exhortation and prediction of the loss of the ships, 21—26. After having been tossed about in the Adriatic sea, for many days, they are at last shipwrecked on the island of Melita; and the whole crew, consisting of two hundred and seventy-six persons, escape safe to land, on broken fragments of the ship, 27—44.

AND when [a] it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one [b] Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius [c] courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

A.M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. An. Olymp. cir. CCX. 2.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVII.

Verse 1. And when it was determined, &c.] That is, when the governor had given orders to carry Paul to Rome, according to his appeal; together with other prisoners, who were bound for the same place.

We should sail] By this it is evident that St. Luke was with Paul; and it is on this account that he was enabled to give such a circumstantial account of the voyage.

Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.] Lipsius has found the name of this cohort on an ancient marble; see Lips. in Tacit. Hist. lib. ii. The same cohort is mentioned by Suetonius, in his Life of Nero, 20.

Verse 2. A ship of Adramyttium] There were several places of this name; and in different MSS. the name is variously written. The port in question appears to have been a place in Mysia, in Asia Minor. And the Abbé Vertot, in his history of the Knights of Malta, says, it is now called Mehedia. Others think it was a city and sea-port of Africa, whence the ship mentioned above, had been fitted out: but it is more probable that the city and sea-port here meant, is that on the coast of the Ægean sea, opposite Mitylene, and not far from Pergamos. See its situation on the Map.

Aristarchus, a Macedonian] We have seen this person with St. Paul at Ephesus, during the disturbances there, chap. xix. 29. where he had been seized by the mob, and was in great personal danger. He afterwards attended Paul to Macedonia, and returned with him to Asia, chap. xx. 4. Now, accompanying him to Rome, he was there a fellow-prisoner with him, Coloss. iv. 10. and is mentioned in St. Paul's epistle to Philemon, ver. 24. who was probably their common friend—Dodd. Luke and Aristarchus were certainly not prisoners at this time, and seem to have gone with St. Paul merely as his companions, through affection to him, and love for the cause of Christianity. How Aristarchus became his fellow-prisoner, as is stated Col. iv. 10. we cannot tell, but it could not have been at this time.

Verse 3. Touched at Sidon] For some account of this place, see the notes on Matt. xi. 21. and Acts xii. 20.

Julius courteously intreated Paul] At the conclusion of the preceding chapter, it has been intimated, that the kind treatment which Paul received both from Julius and at Rome, was owing to the impression made on the mind of Agrippa and Festus, relative to his innocence. It appears that Julius permitted him to go ashore, and visit the Christians which were then at Sidon, without using any extraordinary precautions to prevent his escape. He was probably accompanied with the soldier to whose arm he was chained; and it is reasonable to conclude that this soldier would fare well on St. Paul's account.

Verse 4. We sailed under Cyprus] See on chap. iv. 36.

Verse 5. Pamphylia] See on chap. ii. 10.

Myra, a city of Lycia.] The name of this city is written variously in the MSS. Myra, Murrha, Smyra, and Smyrna. Grotius conjectures that all these names are corrupted, and that it should be written Limyra, which is the name both of a river and city in Lycia. It is certain that, in common conversation, the first syllable li, might be readily dropped, and then Myra, the word in the text, would remain. Strabo mentions both Myra and Limyra, lib. xiv. p. 666. The former, he says, is twenty stadia from the sea, επι μετεωρου λοφου, upon a high hill: the latter, he says, is the name of a river; and twenty stadia up this river, is the town Limyra itself. These places were not far distant, and one of them is certainly meant.

Verse 6. A ship of Alexandria] It appears, from ver. 38. that this ship was laden with wheat, which she was carrying from Alexandria to Rome. We know that the Romans imported much corn from Egypt, together with different articles of Persian and Indian merchandise.

A.M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. An. Olymp. cir. CCX. 2.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under [a] Crete; over against Salmone;

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The fair havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, [b] because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with [c] hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

A.M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62. An. Olymp. cir. CCX. 2.

11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12 ¶ And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phœnice, and there to winter; which is a haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, a Or, Candy.——b The fast was on the tenth day of the seventh month, Lev. 23. 27, 29.——c Or, injury.

Verse 7. Sailed slowly many days] Partly because the wind was contrary, and because the vessel was heavy laden.

Over against Cnidus] This was a city, or promontory of Asia, opposite to Crete, at one corner of the peninsula of Caria. Some think that this was an island between Crete, and a promontory of the same name.

Over against Salmone] We have already seen that the island formerly called Crete, is now called Candia; and Salmone or Sammon, or Samonium, now called cape Solomon, or Salamina, was a promontory on the eastern coast of that island.

Verse 8. The Fair havens] This port still remains, and is known by the same name; it was situated towards the northern extremity of the island.

Was the city of Lasea] There is no city of this name now remaining: the Codex Alexandrinus reads Αλασσα, Alassa.

Verse 9. Sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past] It is generally allowed that the fast mentioned here, was that of the great day of atonement, which was always celebrated on the tenth day of the seventh month, which would answer to the latter end of our September; see Levit. xvi. 29. xxiii. 27, &c. as this was about the time of the autumnal equinox, when the Mediterranean sea was sufficiently tempestuous; we may suppose this feast alone, to be intended. To sail after this feast was proverbially dangerous among the ancient Jews. See proofs in Schoettgen.

Verse 10. I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt, &c.] Paul might either have had this intimation from the Spirit of God, or from his own knowledge of the state of this sea, after the autumnal equinox; and therefore gave them this prudent warning.

Verse 11. The centurion believed the master] Τῳ κυβερνητῃ, the pilot:—and owner of the ship; τῳ ναυκληρῳ the captain and proprietor. This latter had the command of the ship and the crew; the pilot had the guidance of the vessel along those dangerous coasts, under the direction of the captain: and the centurion had the power to cause them to proceed on their voyage, or to go into port, as he pleased; as he had other state-prisoners on board; and probably the ship itself was freighted for government. Paul told them if they proceeded, they would be in danger of shipwreck; the pilot and captain said there was no danger; and the centurion believing them, commanded the vessel to proceed on her voyage. It is likely that they were now in the port called The Fair havens.

Verse 12. Might attain to Phœnice] It appears that the Fair havens were at the eastern end of the island; and they wished to reach Phœnice, which lay further towards the west.

Toward the south-west and north-west] Κατα Λιβα και κατα Χωρον. The libs certainly means the south-west, called libs, from Lybia, from which it blows towards the Ægean sea. The chorus, or caurus, means a north-west wind. Virgil mentions this, Geor. iii. ver. 356.

Semper hiems, semper spirantes frigora cauri.

"It is always winter; and the cauri, the north-westers, ever blowing cold."

Dr. Shaw lays down this, and other winds, in a Greek compass, on his map; in which he represents the drifting of St. Paul's vessel from Crete, till it was wrecked at the island of Melita. Travels, p. 331. 4to. edit.

Verse 13. When the south wind blew softly] Though this wind was not very favourable: yet because it blew softly, they supposed they might be able to make their passage.

Verse 14. A tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.] Interpreters have been greatly perplexed with this word: and the ancient copyists not less so, as the word is variously written in the MSS. and Versions. Dr. Shaw supposes it to be one of those tempestuous winds called levanters, which blow in all directions, from N. E. round by the E. to S. E. The euroclydon, from the circumstances which attended it, he says, "seems to have varied very little from the true east point; for, as the ship could not bear αντοφθαλμειν, loof up, against it, ver. 15. but they were obliged to let her drive, we cannot conceive, as there are no remarkable currents in that part of the sea, and as the rudder could be of little use, that it could take any other course than as the winds directed it. Accordingly, in the description of the storm, we find that the vessel was first of all under the island Clauda, ver. 16. which is a little to the southward of the parallel of that part of the coast of Crete, from whence it may be supposed to have been driven; then it was tossed along the bottom of the gulph of Adria, ver. 27. and afterwards broken to pieces, ver. 41. at Melita, which is a little to the northward of the parallel above mentioned; so that the direction and course of this particular euroclydon, seems to have been first at east by north; and afterwards, pretty nearly east by south." These winds, called now levanters, and formerly it appears euroclydon, were no determinate winds, blowing always from one point of the compass: euroclydon was probably then, what levanter is now, the name of any tempestuous wind in that sea, blowing from the north-east round by east to the south-east; and therefore St. Luke says, there rose against it, i. e. the vessel), a tempestuous wind called euroclydon; which manner of speaking shews, that he no more considered it to be confined to any one particular point of the compass, than our sailors do their levanter. Dr. Shaw derives ευροκλυδων, from ευρου κλυδων, an eastern tempest, which is the very meaning affixed to a levanter at the present day.

The reading of the Codex Alexandrinus, is ευρακυλων, the north-east wind, which is the same with the euro-aquilo of the Vulgate. This reading is approved by several eminent critics; but Dr. Shaw, in the place referred to above, has proved it to be insupportable.

Dr. Shaw mentions a custom which he has several times seen practised by the Mohammedans in these levanters:—After having tied to the mast, or ensign-staff, same apposite passage from the Koran; they collect money, sacrifice a sheep, and throw them both into the sea. This custom, he observes, was practised some thousand years ago by the Greeks: thus Aristophanes—

Αρν', αρνα μελαιναν, παιδε, εξενεγκατε·
Τοφος γαρ εκβαινειν παρασκευαζεται.

Ran. Act. iii. s. 2. ver. 871.

A lamb! boy, sacrifice a black lamb immediately:
For a tempest is about to burst forth.

Virgil refers to the same custom—

Sic fatus, meritos aris mactavit honores:
Taurum Neptuno: taurum tibi pulcher Apollo.
Nigram Hyemi pecudem, Zephyris felicibus albam.

Æn. iii. ver. 118.

Thus he spake, and then sacrificed on the altars the proper eucharistic victims:
A bull to Neptune, and a bull to thee, O beautiful Apollo;
A black sheep to the north wind, and a white sheep to the west.

And again—

Tres Eryci vitulos, et tempestatibus agnam,
Cædere deinde jubet. Æn. iii. ver. 772.

Then he commanded three calves to be sacrificed to Erys, and a lamb to the tempests.

In the days of the prophet Jonah, the mariners in this sea were accustomed to do the same. Then they offered a sacrifice to the Lord, and vowed vows; Jonah i. 16. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. edit. p. 329—33.

The heathens supposed that these tempests were occasioned by evil spirits; and they sacrificed a black sheep, in order to drive the dæmon away. See the ancient Scholiast on Aristophanes, in the place cited above.

Sir George Staunton (Embassy to China, Vol II. p. 403.) mentions a similar custom among the Chinese, and gives an instance of it, when the yachts and barges of the embassy were crossing the Yellow River:

"The amazing velocity with which the Yellow River runs at the place where the yachts and barges of the embassy were to cross it, rendered, according to the notions of the Chinese crews, a sacrifice necessary to the spirit of the river, in order to insure a safe passage over it. For this purpose the master, surrounded by the crew of the yacht, assembled upon the forecastle; and, holding as a victim in his hand a cock, wrung off his head, which committing to the stream, he consecrated the vessel with the blood spouting from the body, and could not bear up into the wind, [a] we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which [b] when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

by sprinkling it upon the deck, the masts, the anchors, and the doors of the apartments; and stuck upon them a few of the feathers of the bird. Several bowls of meat were then brought forward, and ranged in a line across the deck. Before these were placed a cup of oil, one filled with tea, one with some ardent spirit, and a fourth with salt; the captain making, at the same time, three profound inclinations of his body, with hands uplifted, and muttering a few words, as if of solicitation to the Deity. The loo, or brazen drum, was beaten in the mean time forcibly; lighted matches were held towards heaven; papers covered with tin or silver leaf, were burnt; and crackers fired off in great abundance by the crew. The captain afterwards made libations to the river, by emptying into it from the vessel's prow, the several cups of liquids; and concluded with throwing in also that which held the salt. All the ceremonies being over, and the bowls of meat removed, the people feasted on it in the steerage; and launched afterward, with confidence, the yacht into the current. As soon as she had reached the opposite shore, the captain returned thanks to Heaven, with three inclinations of the body.

"Beside the daily offering and adoration at the altar erected on the left, or honourable side of the cabin in every Chinese vessel, the solemn sacrifices above described are made to obtain the benefit of a fair wind, or to avert any impending danger. The particular spot upon the forecastle, where the principal ceremonies are performed, is not willingly suffered to be occupied or defiled by any person on board."

Verse 15. And when the ship was caught] Συναρπασθεντος δε του πλοιου. The ship was violently hurried away before this strong levanter; so that it was impossible for her αντοφθαλμειν, to face the wind, to turn her prow to it, so as to shake it out, as I have heard sailors say; and have seen them successfully perform in violent tempests and squalls.

We let her drive.] We were obliged to let her go right before this tempestuous wind, whithersoever it might drive her.

Verse 16. A certain island—called Clauda] Called also Gaudos; situated at the south-western extremity of the island of Crete, and now called Gozo, according to Dr. Shaw.

Much work to come by the boat] It was likely to have been washed over board; or, if the boat was in tow, at the stern of the vessel, which is probable; they found it very difficult to save it from being staved, or broken to pieces.

Verse 17. Undergirding the ship] This method has been used even in modern times. A stout cable is slipped under the vessel at the prow, which they can conduct to any part of the ship's keel; and then fasten the two ends on the deck, to keep the planks from starting: as many rounds as they please may be thus taken about the vessel. An instance of this kind is mentioned in Lord Anson's voyage round the world. Speaking of a Spanish man of war in a storm: "They were obliged to throw overboard all their upper-deck guns; and take six turns of the cable round the ship, to prevent her opening." P. 24. 4to. edit.

The quicksands] Εις την συρτιν, into the syrt. There were two famous syrts, or quicksands, on the African coast; one called the syrtis major, lying near the coast of Cyrene; and the other, the syrtis minor, not far from Tripoli. Both these, like our Goodwin Sands, were proverbial for their multitude of shipwrecks. From the direction in which this vessel was driven, it is not at all likely that they were in danger of drifting on any of these syrts, as the vessel does not appear to have been driven near the African coast through the whole of her voyage. And as to what is said, ver. 27. of their being driven up and down in Adria, διαφερομενων εν τω Αδρια, it must mean their being tossed about near to Sicily, the sea of which is called Adria, according to the old Scholiast upon Dionysius's Periegesis, ver. 85. το Σικελικον τουτο το πελαγος Αδριαν καλουσι. they call this Sicilian sea, Adria. We are therefore to consider that the apprehension expressed in ver. 17. is to be taken generally: they were afraid of falling into some shoals, not knowing in what part of the sea they then were; for they had seen neither sun nor stars for many days; and they had no compass, and consequently could not tell in what direction they were now driving. It is wrong therefore to mark the course of this voyage, as if the vessel had been driven across the whole of the Mediterranean, down to the African coast, and near to the syrts, or shoal-banks; to which there is scarcely any reason to believe, she had once approximated, during the whole of this dangerous voyage.

Strake sail] Χαλασαντες το σκευος. What this means is difficult to say. As to striking or slackening sail, that is entirely out of the question, in such circumstances as they

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day [a] we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 ¶ But after long abstinence, Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

were; when it is evident they could carry no sail at all, and must have gone under bare poles. Some think that lowering the yards, and taking down the top-mast, is what is intended; but in such a perilous situation, this would have been of little service. Others think, letting go their main, or sheet anchor, is what is meant: but this seems without foundation, as it would have been foolishness in the extreme, to have hoped to ride out the storm in such a sea. Passing by a variety of meanings, I suppose cutting away, or by some means letting down the mast, is the action intended to be expressed here; and this would be the most likely means of saving the vessel from foundering.

Verse 18. Lightened the ship] Of what, we know not; but it was probably cumbrous wares, by which the deck was thronged; and which were prejudicial to the due trim of the vessel.

Verse 19. The tackling of the ship] Την σκευην; all supernumerary anchors, cables, baggage, &c.

Verse 20. Neither sun nor stars in many days appeared] And consequently they could make no observation; and having no magnetical needle, could not tell in what direction they were going.

Verse 21. After long abstinence] Πολλης δε ασιτιας υπαρχουσης. Mr. Wakefield connects this with the preceding verse, and translates it thus: Especially as there was a great scarcity of provisions. But this by no means can agree with what is said, ver. 34—38. The vessel was a corn vessel; and they had not as yet thrown the wheat into the sea, see ver. 38. And we find they had food sufficient to eat, but were discouraged, and so utterly hopeless of life, that they had no appetite for food: besides, the storm was so great, that it is not likely they could dress any thing.

Have gained this harm and loss] It seems strange to talk of gaining a loss; but it is a correct rendering of the original κερδησαι, which expresses the idea of acquisition whether of good or evil. Those who wish it, may see this use of the term well illustrated by Bp. Pearce, in his note on this verse. The harm was damage to the vessel; the loss was that of the merchandize, furniture, &c.

Verse 22. There shall be no loss of—life] This must be joyous news to those, from whom all hope that they should be saved, was taken away: ver. 20.

Verse 23. The—God, whose I am, and whom I serve] This divine communication was intended to give credit to the apostle and to his doctrine; and in such perilous circumstances, to speak so confidently, when every appearance was against him, argued the fullest persuasion of the truth of what he spoke: and the fulfilment so exactly coinciding with the prediction, must have shewn these heathens, that the God, whom Paul served, must be widely different from theirs.

Verse 24. God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.] Two hundred and seventy-six souls, saved for the sake of one man! This was a strong proof of God's approbation of Paul; and must at least have shewn to Julius the centurion, that his prisoner was an injured and innocent man.

Verse 26. We must be cast upon a certain island] The angel which gave him this information did not tell him the name of the island. It turned out to be Melita, on which, by the violence of the storm, they were wrecked some days after.

Verse 27. Driven up and down in Adria] See the note on ver. 17.

Deemed that they drew near to some country] They judged as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship, 31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for [a] there shall not a hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and [b] gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen [c] souls.

so, either by the smell of land, which those used to the sea can perceive at a considerable distance, or by the agitation of the sea, rippling of the tide, &c.

Verse 28. And sounded] Βολισαντες, heaving the lead.

Twenty fathoms] Οργυιας εικοσι, about forty yards in depth. The οργυια is thus defined by the Etymologicon. Σημαινει την εκτασιν των χειρων, συν τω πλατει του στηθους It signifies the extent of the arms, together with the breadth of the breast. This is exactly the quantum of our fathom.

Verse 29. Cast four anchors out of the stern] By this time the storm must have been considerably abated; though the agitation of the sea could not have subsided much. The anchors were cast out of the stern, to prevent the vessel from drifting ashore, as they found that the farther they stood in, the shallower the water grew; therefore they dropt the anchor a-stern, as even one ship's length might be of much consequence.

Verse 30. The shipmen] The sailors: let down the boat. Having lowered the boat from the deck into the sea, they pretended that it was necessary to carry some anchors ahead, to keep her from being carried in a dangerous direction by the tide; but with the real design to make for shore, and so leave the prisoners and the passengers to their fate. This was timely noticed by the pious and prudent apostle; who while simply depending on the promise of God, was watching for the safety and comfort of all.

Verse 31. Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.] God, who has promised to save your lives, promises this on the condition that ye make use of every means he has put in your power to help yourselves. While, therefore, ye are using these means, expect the co-operation of God. If these sailors, who only understand how to work the ship, leave it, ye cannot escape. Therefore, prevent their present design. On the œconomy of Divine Providence, see the notes on chap. xxiii.

Verse 32. The soldiers cut off the ropes] These were probably the only persons who dared to have opposed the will of the sailors: this very circumstance is an additional proof of the accuracy of St. Luke.

Verse 33. While the day was coming on] It was then apparently about day break.

This day is the fourteenth day that ye have—continued fasting] Ye have not had one regular meal for these fourteen days past. Indeed we may take it for granted, that, during the whole of the storm, very little was eaten by any man: for what appetite could men have for food, who every moment had death before their eyes?

Verse 34. A hair fall from the head] A proverbial expression, for ye shall neither lose your lives, nor suffer any hurt in your bodies, if ye follow my advice.

Verse 35. Gave thanks to God] Who had provided the food, and preserved their lives and health to partake of it. Some think that he celebrated the Holy Eucharist here: but this is by no means likely: he would not celebrate such a mystery among ungodly sailors and soldiers, Jews and Heathens; nor was there any necessity for such a measure.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had [a] taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, [b] they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape.

43 But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land:

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, [c] that they escaped all safe to land.

a Or, cut the anchors, they left them in the sea, &c b 2 Cor. 11. 25.——c ver. 22.

Verse 38. They lightened the ship] They hoped, that by casting out the lading, the ship would draw less water: in consequence of which, they could get nearer the shore.

Verse 39. They knew not the land] And therefore knew neither the nature of the coast, nor where the proper port lay.

A—creek with a shore] [illegible], sinus, a bay, with a shore; a neck of land perhaps on either side, running out into the sea, and this little bay or gulph between them; though some think it was a tongue of land, running out into the sea, having the sea on both sides, at the point of which these two seas met, ver. 41. There is such a place as this in the island of Malta, where tradition says, Paul was shipwrecked; and which is called, la Cale de St. Paul. See Calmet.

Verse 40. Taken up the anchors] Weighed all the anchors that they had cast out of the stern. Some think the meaning of the word is, they slipped their cables; and so left the anchors in the sea. This opinion is expressed in the margin.

Loosed the rudder bands] Or, the bands of the rudders; for large vessels in ancient times had two or more rudders, one at the side, and another at the stern, and sometimes one at the prow. The bands, ζευκτηριας, were some kind of fastenings, by which the rudders were hoisted some way out of the water; for, as they could be of no use in the storm, and should there come fair weather, the vessel could not do without them, this was a prudent way of securing them from being broken to pieces by the agitation of the waves. These bands being loosed, the rudders would fall down into their proper places, and serve to steer the vessel into the creek, which they now had in view.

Hoised up the mainsail] Αρτεμονα is not the mainsail (which would have been quite improper on such an occasion) but the jib, or triangular sail, which is suspended from the fore-mast to the bowsprit; with this, they might hope both to steer and carry in the ship.

Verse 41. Where two seas met] The tide running down from each side of the tongue of land, mentioned ver. 39. and meeting at the point.

Ran the ship aground] In striving to cross at this point of land, they had not taken a sufficiency of sea-room, and therefore ran aground.

The forepart stuck fast] Got into the sands; and perhaps the shore here was very bold or steep, so that the stem of the vessel might be immersed in the quicksands, which would soon close round it, while the stern, violently agitated with the surge, would soon be broken to pieces. It is extremely difficult to find the true meaning of several of the nautical terms used in this chapter. I have given that which appeared to me to be the most likely; but cannot absolutely say, that I have every where hit the true meaning.

Verse 42. The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners] What blood-thirsty cowardly villains must these have been! Though, through the providence of God, those poor men had escaped a watery grave, and had borne all the anxiety and distresses of this disastrous voyage, as well as the others; now, that there is a likelihood of all getting safe to land, that could swim; lest these should swim to shore, and so escape, those men, whose trade was in human blood, desired to have them massacred! We have not many traits in the histories of the most barbarous nations, that can be a proper counter-part to this quintessence of humano-diabolic cruelty.

Verse 43. Willing to save Paul, &c.] Had one fallen, for the reasons those cruel and dastardly soldiers gave, so must all the rest. The centurion saw that Paul was not only an innocent, but an extraordinary and divine man; and therefore, for his sake, he prevented the massacre; and unloosing every man's bonds, he commanded those that could, to swim ashore and escape. It is likely that all the soldiers escaped in this way; for it was one part of the Roman military discipline, to teach the soldiers to swim.

Verse 44. And the rest] That could not swim: some on boards, planks, spars, &c. got safe to land; manifestly by an especial providence of God; for, how otherwise could the sick, the aged, the terrified, besides women and children, (of which, we may naturally suppose, there were some) though on planks, get safe to shore? where still the waves were violent, ver. 41. and they, without either skill or power to steer their unsafe flotillas to the land? It was (in this case, most evidently,) God, who brought them to the haven where they would be.

1. Paul had appealed to Cæsar; and he must go to Rome to have his cause heard. God admitted of this appeal, and told his servant that he should testify of him at Rome; and yet every thing seemed to conspire together to prevent this appeal, and the testimony which the apostle was to bear to the truth of the Christian religion. The Jews laid wait for his life; and when he had escaped out of their hands, and from their territories, then the winds and the sea seemed to combine to effect his destruction. And God suffered all this malice of men, and war of elements, to fight against his servant, and yet overruled and counterworked the whole, so as to promote his own glory, and bring honour to his apostle. Had it not been for this malice of the Jews, Festus, Felix, Agrippa, Berenice, and many Roman nobles and officers, had probably never heard the gospel of Christ. And had it not been for Paul's tempestuous voyage, the 276 souls that sailed with him could not have had such displays of the power and wisdom of the Christians' God, as must have struck them with reverence, and probably was the cause of the conversion of many. Had the voyage been smooth and prosperous, there would have been no occasion for such striking interferences of God; and had it not been for the shipwreck, probably the inhabitants of Malta would not so soon have heard of the Christian religion. God serves his will by every occurrence, and presses every thing into the service of his own cause. This is a remark which we have often occasion to make, and which is ever in place. We may leave the government of the world and the government of the church most confidently to God: hitherto he has done all things well; and his wisdom, power, goodness, and truth, are still the same.

2. In considering the dangers of a sea voyage we may well say with pious Quesnel, To what perils do persons expose themselves, either to raise a fortune, or to gain a livelihood? How few are there who would expose themselves to the same for the sake of God? They commit themselves to the mercy of the waves; they trust their life to a plank and to a pilot; and yet it is often with great difficulty that they can trust themselves to the Providence of God, whose knowledge, power, and goodness, are infinite; and the visible effects of which they have so many times experienced.

3. What assurance soever we may have of the will of God; yet we must not forget human means. The life of all the persons in this ship was given to St. Paul; yet he does not, on that account, expect a visible miracle, but depends upon the blessing which God will give to the care and endeavours of men.

4. God fulfils his promises, and conceals his almighty power, under such means and endeavours as seem altogether human and natural. Had the crew of this vessel neglected any means in their own power, their death would have been the consequence of their inaction and infidelity.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

St. Paul, and the rest of the crew, getting safely ashore, find that the island on which they were shipwrecked is called Melita, 1. They are received with great hospitality by the inhabitants, 2. A viper comes out of the bundle of sticks laid on the fire, and seizes on Paul's hand, 3. The people seeing this, suppose him to be a murderer, and thus pursued by divine vengeance, 4. Having shook it off his hand, without receiving any damage, they change their minds, and suppose him to be a god, 5, 6. Publius, the governor of the island, receives them courteously, and Paul miraculously heals his father, who was ill of a fever, &c. 7, 8. He heals several others also, who honour them much, and give them presents, 9, 10. After three months' stay, they embark in a ship of Alexandria, land at Syracuse, stay there three days, sail thence, pass the streights of Rhegium, and land at Puteoli; find some Christians there, tarry seven days, and set forward for Rome, 11—14. They are met at Appii Forum by some Christians, and Paul is greatly encouraged, 15. They come to Rome, and Julius delivers his prisoners to the captain of the guard, who permits Paul to dwell by himself, only attended by the soldier that kept him, 16. Paul calls the chief Jews together, and states his case to them, 17—20. They desire to hear him concerning the faith of Christ, 21, 22. and having appointed unto him a day, he expounds to them the kingdom of Christ, 23. Some believe, and some disbelieve; and Paul informs them, that, because of their unbelief and disobedience, the salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles, 25—29. Paul dwells two years in his own hired house, preaching the kingdom of God, 30, 31.

NOTES ON CHAP. XXVIII.

Verse 1. They knew that the island was called Melita.] There were two islands of this name, one in the Adriatic Gulph, or Gulph of Venice, on the cost of Illyrium, and near to Epidaurus; the other in the Mediterranean Sea, between Sicily and Africa, and now called Malta. It is about fifty miles from the coast of Sicily; twenty miles long, and twelve miles in its greatest breadth; and about sixty miles in circumference. It is one immense rock of white soft free-stone, with about one foot depth of earth on an average, and most of this has been brought from Sicily! It produces cotton, excellent fruits, and fine honey; from which it appears, the island originally had its name; for Μελι meli and in the genitive case Μελιτος Melitos, signifies honey. Others suppose that it derived its name from the Phœnicians, who established a colony in it; and made it a place of refuge, when they extended their traffic to the ocean, because it was furnished with excellent harbours (on the E. and W. shores:) hence, in their tongue, it would be called מליטה Melitch, escape or refuge, from מלט malat, to escape.

The Phœacians were probably the first inhabitants of this island: they were expelled by the Phœnicians; the Phœnicians by the Greeks; the Greeks by the Carthaginians; the Carthaginians by the Romans, who possessed it in the time of the apostle; the Romans by the Goths; the Goths by the Saracens; the Saracens by the Sicilians, under Roger earl of Sicily, in 1190. Charles V. emperor of Germany, took possession of it by his conquest of Naples and Sicily; and he gave it in 1525 to the Knights of Rhodes, who are also called the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. In 1798, this island surrendered to the French, under Buonaparte; and in 1800, after a blockade of two years, the island being reduced by famine, surrendered to the British, under whose dominion it still remains (1814). Every thing considered, there can be little doubt that this is the Melita, at which St. Paul was wrecked, and not that other island in the Adriatic, or Venetian Gulph, as high up northward as Illyrium. The following reasons make this greatly evident: 1. Tradition has unvaryingly asserted this as the place of the apostle's shipwreck. 2. The island in the Venetian Gulph, in favour of which Mr. Bryant so learnedly contends, is totally out of the track in which the euroclydon must have driven the vessel. 3. It is said in ver. 11. of this chapter, that another ship of Alexandria, bound as we must suppose for Italy, and very probably carrying wheat thither, as St. Paul's vessel did, chap. xxvii. 38.) had been driven out of its course of sailing by stress of weather, up to the Illyrium Melita, and had been for that cause obliged to winter in the isle. Now, this is a supposition, which, as I think, is too much of a supposition to be made. 4. In St. Paul's voyage to Italy from Melita, on board the Alexandrian ship that had wintered there, he and his companions landed at Syracuse, ver. 12, 13. and from thence went to Rhegium. But if it had been the Illyrian Melita, the proper course of the ship would have been, first, to Rhegium, before it reached Syracuse, and needed not to have gone to Syracuse at all: whereas, in a voyage from the present Malta to Italy, it was necessary to reach Syracuse in Sicily, before the ship could arrive at Rhegium in Italy. See the Map accompanying this part; and See Bp. Pearce, from whom I have extracted the two last arguments.

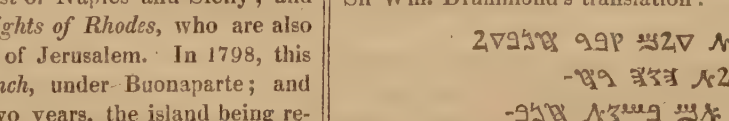
That Malta was possessed by the Phœnicians, before the Romans conquered it, Bochart has largely proved; and indeed the language to the present day, notwithstanding all the political vicissitudes through which the island has passed, bears sufficient evidence of its Punic origin. In the year 1761, near a place called Ben Ghisa, in this island, a sepulchral cave was discovered, in which was a square stone, with an inscription in Punic or Phœnician characters, on which Sir. Wm. Drummond has written a learned essay, (London, Valpy, 1810, 4to.) which he suppposes marks the burial-place, at least of the ashes of the famous Carthaginian General Hannibal. I shall give this inscription in Samaritan characters, as being the present form of the ancient Punic, with Sir Wm. Drummond's translation:



Chadar Beth ôlam kabar Chanibâal
Nakeh becalcth haveh, rachm dach Am beshuth Chanibâal ben Bar melec.

"The inner chamber of the sanctuary of the sepulchre of Hannibal.
Illustrious in the consummation of calamity.
He was beloved,
The people lament, when arrayed
In order of battle, Hannibal the son of Bar-Melec."

one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 ¶ And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, [a] and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, [b] yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

of the Punic language now in existence; and as it helps to ascertain the ancient inhabitants of this island, I thought it not improper to insert it here. For the illustration of this, and several other points of Punic antiquity, I must refer the curious reader to the Essay itself.

Verse 2. The barbarous people] We have already seen that this island was peopled by the Phœnicians, or Carthaginians, as Bochart has proved. Phaleg chap. xxvi. and their ancient language was no doubt in use among them at that time, though mingled with some Greek and Latin terms; and this language must have been unintelligible to the Romans and the Greeks. With these, as well as with other nations, it was customary to call those βαρβαροι barbarians, whose language they did not understand. St. Paul himself speaks after this manner in 1 Cor. xiv. 11. If I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh, a BARBARIAN; and he that speaketh shall be a BARBARIAN unto me. Thus Herodotus also, lib. ii. 158. says Βαρβαρους παντας Αιγυπτιοι καλεουσι τους μη σφι ομογλωσσους· The Egyptians call all those BARBARIANS who have not the same language with themselves. And Ovid, when among the Getes, says in Trist. ver. 10.

BARBARUS hîc ego sum, quia non INTELLIGOR ulli.

"Here, I am a barbarian, for no person understands me."

Various etymologies have been given of this word. I think, that of Bp. Pearce the best. The Greeks who traded with the Phœnicians, formed this word from their observing, that the Phœnicians were generally called by the name of their parent, with the word בר bar prefixed to that name; as we find, in the New Testament, men called Bar-Jesus, Bar-Tholomeus, Bar-Jonas, Bar-Timeus, &c. Hence the Greeks called them βαρ-βαροι, meaning the men who are called Bar-Bar, or have no other names than what begin with Bar. And because the Greeks did not understand the language of the Phœnicians, they first, and the Romans in imitation of them, gave the name of Barbarians to all such as talked in a language to which they were strangers." No other etymology need be attempted; this is its own proof; and the Bar-melec in the preceding epitaph, is at least collateral evidence. The word barbarian is therefore no term of reproach in itself; and was not so used by ancient authors, however fashionable it may be to use it so now.

Because of the present rain and—of the cold] This must have been some time in October; and when we consider the time of the year, the tempestuousness of the weather, and their escaping to shore on planks, spars, &c. wet of course to the skin, they must have been very cold, and have needed all the kindness that these well-disposed people shewed them. In some parts of christianized Europe, the inhabitants would have attended on the beach, and knocked the survivors on the head, that they might convert the wreck to their own use! This barbarous people did not act in this way; they joined hands with God, to make these sufferers live.

Verse 3. There came a viper out of the heat] We may naturally suppose that there had been fuel laid before on the fire, and that the viper was in this fuel, and that it had been revived by the heat; and when St. Paul laid his bundle on the fire, the viper was then in a state to lay hold on his hand.

Verse 4. The venomous beast] Το θηριον, the venomous animal; for θηρια is a general name among the Greek writers for serpents, vipers, scorpions, wasps, and such like creatures. Though the viper fastened on Paul's hand, it does not appear that it really bit him; but the Maltese supposed that it had, because they saw it fasten on his hand.

Vengeance suffereth not to live] These heathens had a general knowledge of retributive justice; and they thought that the stinging of the serpent was a proof that Paul was a murderer. There is a passage in Bamidbar Rabba, fol. 239. that casts some light on this place. "Although the sanhedrin is ceased, yet are not the four deaths ceased. For he that deserves stoning, either falls from his house, or a wild beast tears and devours him. He that deserves burning, either falls into the fire, or a serpent bites him. He that deserves cutting off with the sword, is either betrayed into the power of a heathen kingdom, or the robbers break in upon him. He that deserves strangling, is either suffocated in the water, or dies of a quinsy." See Lightfoot.

As these people were heathens, it is not likely that they had any correct notion of the justice of the true God: and therefore it is most probable that they used the word δικη, not to express the quality or attribute of any being, but the goddess Diké, or vindictive justice, herself, who is represented as punishing the iniquities of men.

When mortals violate her sacred laws,
When judges hear the bribe and not the cause,

Verse 5. Shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.] This is a presumptive evidence, that the viper did not bite St. Paul: it fastened on his hand, but had no power to injure him.

Verse 6. When he should have swollen] Πιμπρασθαι, when he should have been inflamed; by means of an acrid poison introduced into the blood, it is soon coagulated; and in consequence, the extremities of the vessels become obstructed, strong inflammation takes place, and all the parts become most painfully swollen.

Lucan ix. v. 791. gives a terrible account of this effect of the bite of a serpent:

——————illi rubor igneus ora
Succendit, tenditque cutem, pereunte figurâ
Miscens cuncta tumor jam toto corpore major:
Humanumque egressa modum super omnia membra

Nec Lorîca tenet distenti corporis auctum.

And straight a sudden flame began to spread,
And paint his visage with a glowing red.
With swift expansion swells the bloated skin,
Naught but an undistinguished mass is seen;
While the fair human form lies lost within,
The puffy poison spreads and heaves around,
Till all the man is in the monster drowned.

Verse 6. Said that he was a god.] As Hercules was one of the gods of the Phœnicians, and was worshipped in Malta under the epithet of Αλεξικακος, the dispeller of evil, they probably thought that Paul was Hercules: and the more so, because Hercules was famous for having destroyed, in his youth, two serpents that attacked him in his cradle.

Verse 7. The chief man of the island] The term πρωτος CHIEF, used here by St. Luke, was the ancient title of the governor of this island, as is evident from an inscription found in Malta, which runs thus:

Α. κ. υιος κυρ. ιππευς ρωμ. πρωτος Μελιταιων.

Lucius Caius, son of Quirinus, a Roman knight, CHIEF of the Melitese. See Bochart Phaleg. and Chan. vol. i. chap. 498, &c. Grotius. This title is another proof of the accuracy of St. Luke, who uses the very epithet by which the Roman governor of that island was distinguished.

Verse 8. The father of Publius lay sick] Πυρετοις και δυσεντερια; of a fever and dysentery.

Paul—prayed] That God would exert his power: and laid his hands on him, as the means which God ordinarily used to convey the energy of the Holy Spirit: and healed him; God having conveyed the healing power by this means. In such a disorder as that mentioned here by St. Luke, where the bowels were in a state of inflammation, and a general fever aiding the dysentery in its work of death; nothing less than a miracle could have made an instantaneous cure in the patient. Such a cure was wrought, and even the heathens saw that it was the hand of God.

Verse 9. Others—which had diseases] Luke was a physician; yet we do not find him engaging in these cures. As a medical man, he might have been of use to the father of Publius; but he is not even consulted on the occasion. PAUL enters in to him, prays for him, lays his hands on him, and he is healed. mentioned in this verse, were doubtless healed in the same way.

Verse 10. Honoured us with many honours] The word τιμη, as Bp. Pearce has remarked, is often used to signify a pecuniary recompence, or present. The Greek word seems to be thus used in 1 Tim. v. 17. Let the elders which rule well, be accounted worthy of double HONOUR, τιμης, which St. Chrysostom, on the place, explains thus: την των αναγκαιων χορηγιαν· a supplying them with all necessary things. Diodorus Siculus, and Xenophon, used the word in the same way. In the sense of a pecuniary recompence, or price, paid for any thing, the word τιμη, is met with in 1 Cor. vi. 20. and vii. 23. And in the Septuagint, Numb. xxii. 17. compared with v. 18. Such things as were necessary.] They had before given them many presents, and now they gave them a good sea-stock; all that was necessary for their passage.

Verse 11. After three months] Supposing that they had reached Malta about the end of October, as we have already seen; then it appears that they left it about the end of January, or the beginning of February; and though in the depth of winter, not the worst time for sailing, even in those seas, the wind being then generally more steady; and, on the whole, the passage more safe.

Whose sign was Castor and Pollux.] These were two fabulous semi-deities, reported to be the sons of Jupiter and Leda, who were afterwards translated to the heavens, and made the constellation called Gemini, or the Twins. This constellation was deemed propitious to mariners; and, as it was customary to have the images of their gods both on the head and stern of their ships, we may suppose that this Alexandrian ship had these on either her prow or stern, and that these gave name to the ship. We, who profess to be a Christian people, follow the same heathen custom: we have our ships called the Castor, the Jupiter, the Minerva, the Leda, (the mother of Castor and Pollux,) with a multitude of other dæmon-gods and goddesses; so that were ancient Romans or Grecians to visit our Navy, they would be led to suppose, that, after the lapse of more than 2000 years, their old religion had continued unaltered!

Virgil speaks of a vessel called the Tiger. Æneid x. ver. 166.

Massicus ærata princeps secat æquora TIGRI.

"Massicus, chief, cuts the waves in the brazen-beaked TIGER."

Of another called the Chimera. Æn. v. ver. 118, 223.

Ingentemque Gyas ingenti mole CHIMÆRAM.

"Gyas the vast Chimera's bulk commands."

And of another called the Centaur. Æn. v. ver. 122, 155, 157.

"Sergesthus, in the great Centaur, took the lading place."

Besides these names, they had their tutelary gods in the ship, from whom they expected succour; and sometimes they had their images on the stern; and when they got safely to the end of their voyage, they were accustomed to crown these images with garlands: thus Virgil, Geor. 1. ver. 304.

PUPPIBUS et læti nautæ imposuére CORONAS.

"The joyous sailors place garlands on their sterns."

Several ancient fables appear to have arisen out of the names of ships. Jupiter is fabled to have carried off Europa, across the sea, in the shape of a bull; and to have carried away Ganymede, in the shape of an eagle. That is, these persons were carried away, one in a ship called Taurus, or Bull; and the other in one denominated Aquila, the Eagle. Why not Taurus, as well as Tigris? and why not Aquila, as well as Chimera; which names did belong to ships, as we find from the above quotations.

Verse 12. Landing at Syracuse] In order to go to Rome from Malta, their readiest course was to keep pretty close to the eastern coast of Sicily, in order to pass through the streights of Rhegium, and get into the Tyrrhenian sea.

Syracuse is one of the most famous cities of antiquity: it is the capital of the island of Sicily; and was built about 730 years before the Christian æra. It lies 72 miles S. by E. of Messina, and about 112 of Palermo. Long. 15. 30. W. Lat. 37. 17. N. In its ancient state it was about 22 English miles in circumference; and was highly celebrated for the martial spirit of its inhabitants. This was the birth-place of the illustrious Archimedes: who, when this city was besieged by the Romans, under Marcellus, about 212 years before Christ, defended the place with his powerful engines against all the valour and power of the assailants. He beat their gallies to pieces by huge stones projected from his machines; and by hooks, chains, and levers, from the walls weighed the ships out of the water, and whirling them round, dashed them in pieces against each other, or sunk them to the bottom; several also, he is said to have destroyed by his burning-glasses. When the city was taken by treachery, Archimedes was found intensely engaged in the demonstration of a problem. A Roman soldier coming up, and presenting his dagger to his throat, he cried, "Stop, Soldier! or thou wilt spoil my diagram!" The brute was unmoved and murdered him on the spot.

This city was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake in 1693: its present population amounts to but about 18,000. Christianity, in some form or other, has existed, here ever since St. Paul spent the three days in it, mentioned in the text.

Verse 13. We fetched a compass] Οθεν περιελθοντες; whence we coasted about. This will appear evident, when the coast of Sicily is viewed on any correct map, of a tolerably large scale.

Rhegium] A city and promontory in Calabria, in Italy, opposite to Sicily. It is now called Reggio. It had its name Ρηγιον Rhegium, from the Greek Ρηγνυμαι, to break off; because it appears to have been broken off from Sicily.

The south wind blew] This was the fairest wind they could have from Syracuse, to reach the streights of Rhegium.

The next day to Puteoli] This place, now commonly called Pozzuoli, is an ancient town of Naples in the Terra di Lavoro; and is supposed to have been founded by the Samians, about 470 years before Christ. Within this city are several warm baths, very highly celebrated; and from these, and its springs in general, it seems to have had its ancient name Puteoli, from PUTEI, wells or pits; though some derive it from putor, a stench or bad smell, because of the sulphureous exhalations from its warm waters. Varro gives both these etymologies, lib. iv. de Ling. Lat. cap. 5. It is famous for its temple of Jupiter Serapis, which is built, not according to the Grecian or Roman manner, but according to the Asiatic. Near this place are the remains of Cicero's villa, which are of great extent. The town contains, at present, about 10,000 inhabitants. Long. 14. 40. E. Lat. 41. 50. N.

Verse 14. Where we found brethren] That is, Christians; for there had been many in Italy converted to the faith of Christ, some considerable time before this, as appears from St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, written some years before this voyage.

We went toward Rome] One of the most celebrated cities in the universe, the capital of Italy, and once of the whole world; situated on the river Tiber, 410 miles SSE. of Vienna; 600 SE. of Paris; 730 E. by N. of Madrid; 760 W. of Constantinople: and 780 S. E. of London. Long. 12. 65. E. Lat. 41. 54. N. This famous city was founded by Romulus, at the end of the seventh Olympiad, A. M. 3251; of the Flood 1595; and 753 years before the Christian Æra. The history of this city must be sought for in works written expressly on the subject, of which there are many. Modern Rome is greatly inferior to ancient Rome in every respect. Its population, taken in 1709, amounted to 138,569 souls only: among whom were 40 bishops, 2686 priests, 3359 monks, 1814 nuns, 893 courtezans, between 8 and 9000 Jews, and 14 Moors. This city which once tyrannized over the world by its arms, and over the whole Christian world by its popes, is now reduced to a very low state among the governments of Europe.

Verse 15. When the brethren heard of us.] By whom the gospel was planted at Rome is not known: it does not appear that any apostle was employed in this work. It was probably carried thither by some of those who were converted to God at the day of Pentecost; for there were then at Jerusalem, not only devout men, proselytes to the Jewish religion, from every nation under heaven, Acts ii. 5. but there were strangers of Rome also, ver. 10. And it is most reasonable to believe, as we know of no other origin, that it was by these, Christianity was planted at Rome.

As far as Appii Forum] About 52 miles from Rome! a long way to come on purpose to meet the apostle! The Appii-Forum, or market of Appius, was a town on the Appian way, a road paved from Rome to Campania, by the consul Appius Claudius. It was near the sea, and was a famous resort for sailors, pedlars, &c. Horace, lib. i. Satyrar. 5. ver. 3. mentions this place on his journey from Rome to Brundusium:

——————Inde FORUM APPI
Differtum nautis, cauponibus atque malignis.

"To Forum Appii thence we steer, a place
"Stuff'd with rank boatmen, and with vintners base."

This town is now called Cæsarilla de S. Maria.

whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

And the Three Taverns] This was another place on the same road, and about 33 miles from Rome. Some of the Roman Christians had come as far as Appii Forum; others, to the Three Taverns. Bp. Pearce remarks, there are some ruins in that place which are now called Tre Taverne; and this place Cicero mentions in his Epistles to Atticus, lib. ii. 11. Ab Appi foro horâ quartâ: dederam aliam paulo ante in Tribus Tibernis. "Dated at ten in the morning, from Appii Forum. I sent off another (epistle) a little before, from the Three Taverns.

Zozimus, lib. 2. mentions τρια καπηλεια the three taverns, or victualling houses, where the emperor Severus was strangled by the treason of Maximinus Herculeus, and his son Maxentius. See Lightfoot.

The word taberna, from trabs a beam, signifies any building formed of timber; such as those we call booths, sheds, &c. which are formed of beams, planks, boards, and the like; and therefore we may consider it as implying, either a temporary residence, or some mean building, such as a cottage, &c. And in this sense Horace evidently uses it, Carm. lib. i. Od. iv. ver. 13.

Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas
Regumque turres.

"With equal pace, impartial fate
"Knocks at the palace, as the cottage gate."

FRANCIS.

This place, at first, was probably a place for booths or sheds; three of which were remarkable; other houses became associated with them in process of time; and the whole place denominated Tres Tabernæ, from the three first remarkable booths set up there. It appears to have been a large town in the fourth century, as Optatus mentions Felix a Tribus Tabernis, Felix of the Three Taverns, as one of the Christian bishops.

Thanked God and took courage] He had longed to see Rome, (see Rom. i. 9—15.) and finding himself brought through so many calamities, and now so near the place, that he was met by a part of that church, to which, some years before, he had written an epistle, he gave thanks to God, who had preserved him; and took fresh courage, in the prospect of bearing there, a testimony for his Lord and Master.

Verse 16. The captain of the guard] Στρατοπεδαρχη. This word properly means the commander of a camp; but it signifies the præfect, or commander of the prætorian cohorts, or emperor's guards.

Tacitus (Annal. lib. iv. cap. 2.) informs us, that, in the reign of Tiberius, Sejanus, who was then præfect of these troops, did, in order to accomplish his ambitious designs, cause them to be assembled from their quarters in the city, and stationed in a fortified camp near it; so that their commander is with peculiar propriety styled by St. Luke, στρατοπεδαρχης, the commander of the camp. For the arrival of St. Paul at Rome was in the seventh year of Nero; and it is certain, from Suetonius, (in Tiber. cap. 37), that the custom of keeping the prætorian soldiers in a camp, near the city, was retained by the emperors succeeding Tiberius; for the historian observes, that both Claudius, at his accession to the empire, was received into the camp, in castra delatus est, namely of the prætorian cohorts; and so Tacitus says of Nero, An. lib. xii. cap. 69. that on the same occasion, illatus castris, he was brought into the camp. Dr. Doddridge observes, that it was customary for prisoners who were brought to Rome, to be delivered to this officer, who had the charge of the state prisoners, as appears from the instance of Agrippa, who was taken into custody by Macro, the prætorian præfect, who succeeded Sejanus, (Joseph. Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 7. sect. 6); and from Trajan's order to Pliny, when two were in commission, Plin. lib. x. ep. 65. Vinctus mitti ad præfectos prætorii mei debet: he should be sent bound to the præfects of my guards. The person who now had that office was the noted Afranius Burrhus; but both before and after him, it was held by two: Tacit. An. lib. xii. sect. 42, lib. xiv. sect. 51. See Parkhurst.

Burrhus was a principal instrument in raising Nero to the throne; and had considerable influence in repressing many of the vicious inclinations of that bad prince. With many others, he was put to death by the inhuman Nero; and is praised by the historians for moderation and love of justice. His treatment of St. Paul is no mean proof of this. Calmet.

With a soldier that kept him.] That is, the soldier to whom he was chained, as has been related before, chap. xii. 6.

Verse 17. Paul called the chief of the Jews together] We have already seen, in chap. xviii. 2. that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome; see the note

A.M. cir. 4067. A. D. cir. 63. An. Olymp. cir. CCX. 3.

Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, [a] though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet [b] was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who, [c] when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, [d] I was constrained to appeal unto Cæsar; not that I had ought to accuse my nation of.

20 For this cause, therefore, have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that [e] for the hope of Israel I am bound with [f] this chain.

23 ¶ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; [h] to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, [i] both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

there: but it seems they were permitted to return very soon; and, from this verse, it appears that there were then chiefs, probably of synagogues, dwelling at Rome.

I have committed nothing] Lest they should have heard and received malicious reports against him, he thought it best to state his own case.

Verse 20. For the hope of Israel, I am bound, &c.] As if he had said—this, and this alone, is the cause of my being delivered into the hands of the Romans; I have proclaimed Jesus as the Messiah; have maintained that though he was crucified by the Jews, yet he rose again from the dead; and, through him, I have preached the general resurrection of mankind: this, all Israel professes to hope for; and yet it is on this account that the Jews persecute me. Both the Messiah and the resurrection might be said to be the hope of Israel; and it is hard to tell which of them is here meant; see chap. xxiii. 6. xxiv. 15, 21. and xxvi. 6. It is certain that, although the Jews believed in the general resurrection, yet they did not credit it in the manner in which Paul preached it; for he laid the foundation of the general resurrection, on the resurrection of Christ.

Verse 21. We neither received letters, &c.] This is very strange, and shews us that the Jews knew their cause to be hopeless; and therefore did not send it forward to Rome. They wished for an opportunity to kill Paul; and when they were frustrated by his appeal to the emperor, they permitted the business to drop. Calmet supposes they had not time to send; but this supposition does not appear to be sufficiently solid; they might have sent long before Paul sailed; and they might have written officially by the vessel in which the centurion and the prisoners were embarked. But their case was hopeless; and they could not auger any good to themselves from making a formal complaint against the apostle, at the emperor's throne.

Verse 22. For as concerning this sect] See the note on chap. xxiv. 14. A saying of Justin Martyr casts some light on this saying of the Jews; he asserts, that the Jews not only cursed them in their synagogues, but they sent out chosen men from Jerusalem, to acquaint the world, and particularly the Jews every where, that the Christians were an atheistical and wicked sect, which should be detested and abhorred by all mankind. Justin Martyr. Dial. p. 234.

Verse 23. To whom he expounded —the kingdom of God] To whom he shewed that the reign of the Messiah was to be a spiritual reign; and that Jesus, whom the Jewish rulers had lately crucified, was the true Messiah, who should rule in this spiritual kingdom. These two points were probably those on which he expatiated from morning to evening, proving both, out of the law, and out of the prophets. How easily Jesus as the Messiah, and his spiritual kingdom, might be proved from the law of Moses, any person may be satisfied, by consulting the notes written on those books. As to the prophets, their predictions are so clear, and their prophecies so obviously fulfilled in the person, preaching, miracles, passion, and death of Jesus Christ, that it is utterly impossible, with any show of reason, to apply them to any other.

24 And some [a] believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

30 ¶ And Paul dwelt two whole years in his Verse 24. Some believed, &c.] His message was there treated as his gospel is to the present day; some believe, and are converted; others, continue in obstinate unbelief, and perish. Could the Jews then have credited the spiritual nature of the Messiah's kingdom, they would have found little difficulty to receive Jesus Christ as the MESSIAH.

Multitudes of those, now called Christians, can more easily credit Jesus as the Messiah, than believe the spiritual nature of his kingdom. The cross is the great stumbling-block; millions expect Jesus and his kingdom, who cannot be persuaded that the cross is the way to the crown.

Verse 25. Agreed not among themselves] It seems that a controversy arose between the Jews themselves, in consequence of some believing, and others disbelieving; and the two parties contested together: and, in respect to the unbelieving party, the apostle quoted the following passage from Isai. vi. 9.

Verse 26. Hearing ye shall hear, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xiii. 14. and John xii. 39, 40.

Verse 28. The salvation of God, is sent unto the Gentiles] St. Paul had spoken to this effect twice before, chap. xiii. 46. and chap. xviii. 6. where, see the notes; but here, he uses a firmer tone, being out of the Jewish territories, and under the protection of the emperor. By the salvation of God, all the blessings of the kingdom of Christ are intended. This salvation God could have sent unto the Gentiles, independently of the Jewish disobedience; but He waited till they had rejected it, and then reprobated them, and elected the Gentiles. Thus the elect became reprobate, and the reprobate elect.

They will hear it.] That is, they will obey it; for ακουειν, signifies not only to hear, but also to obey.

Verse 29. And had great reasoning among themselves.] The believers contending with the unbelievers; and thus we may suppose that the cause of truth gained ground. For, contentions about the truth and authenticity of the religion of Christ, infallibly end in the triumph and extension of that religion.

Verse 30. Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house] As a state-prisoner, he might have had an apartment in the common prison: but peculiar favour was shewed him; and he was permitted to dwell alone, with the soldier that guarded him, ver. 16. Finding now an opportunity of preaching the gospel, he hired a house for the purpose, and paid for it, St. Chrysostom observes, by the fruits of his own labour. Here he received all that came unto him, and preached the gospel with glorious success; so that his bonds became the means of spreading the truth, and he became celebrated even in the palace of Nero, Phil. i. 12, 13. and we find that there were several saints, even in Cæsar's household, Phil. iv. 22. which were, no doubt, the fruits of the apostle's ministry. It is said, that during his two years' residence here, he became acquainted with Seneca the philosopher, between whom and the apostle, an epistolary correspondence took place. In an ancient MS. of Seneca's epistles, in my own possession, these letters are extant, and are in number fourteen, and have a prologue to them, written by St. Jerom. That they are very ancient cannot be doubted; but learned men have long ago agreed that they are neither worthy of Paul nor of Seneca.

While he was in captivity, the church at Philippi, to which he was exceedingly dear, sent him some pecuniary assistance by the hands of their minister Epaphroditus, who, it appears, risked his life in the service of the apostle; and was taken with a dangerous malady. When he got well, he returned to Philippi, and, it is supposed, carried with him that Epistle which is still extant; and from it we learn, that Timothy was then at Rome with Paul, and that he had the prospect of being shortly delivered from his captivity. See Phil. i. 12, 18. ii. 25. iv. 15, 16, 18, &c.

Verse 31. Preaching the kingdom of God.] Shewing the spiritual nature of the true church, under the reign of the Messiah. For an explanation of this phrase, see the note on Matt. iii. 2.

Those things which concern the Lord.] The Redeemer of the world was to be represented as the LORD; as JESUS; and as the CHRIST. As the Lord, ὁ Κυριος, the sole potentate, upholding all things by the word of his power, governing the world and the church; having all things under his control; and all his enemies under his feet; in short, the maker and upholder of all things; and the judge of all men. As Jesus—the Saviour; he who saves, delivers, and preserves: and especially he who saves his people from their sins. For the explanation of the word JESUS, see the note on John i. 17. As Christ—the same as Messiah; both signifying the ANOINTED; he who was appointed by the Lord to this great and glorious work; who had the Spirit without measure, and who anoints, communicates the gifts and graces of that Spirit to all true believers. St. Paul taught the things which concerned or belonged to the Lord Jesus Christ. He proved him to be the Messiah foretold by the prophets, and expected by the Jews; he spoke of what he does as the Lord, what he does as Jesus, and what he does as Christ. These contain the sum and substance of all that is called the Gospel of Christ. Yet, the things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, necessarily include the whole account of his incarnation, preaching in Judea; miracles, persecutions, passion, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, intercession, and his sending down the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. These were the subjects on which the apostle preached for two whole years, during his imprisonment at Rome.

With all confidence.] Παῤῥησιας, liberty of speech; perfect freedom to say all he pleased, and when he pleased. He had the fullest toleration from the Roman government to preach as he pleased, and what he pleased; and the unbelieving Jews had no power to prevent him.

It is supposed, that it was during this residence at Rome that he converted Onesimus, and sent him back to his master Philemon, with the Epistle which is still extant. And it is from ver. 23 and 24, of that Epistle, that we learn that Paul had then with him Epaphras, Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke.

Here St. Luke's account of Paul's travels and sufferings ends: and, it is probable, that this history was written soon after the end of the two years, mentioned in ver. 30.

That the apostle visited many places after this, suffered much in the great cause of Christianity, and preached the gospel of Jesus with amazing success, are generally believed. How he came to be liberated we are not told; but it is likely that, having been kept in this sort of confinement for about two years, and none appearing against him, he was released by the imperial order.

Concerning the time, place, and manner of his death, we have little certainty. It is commonly believed that, when a general persecution was raised against the Christians by Nero, about A. D. 64. under pretence that they had set Rome on fire, that both St. Paul and St. Peter then sealed the truth with their blood; the latter being crucified with his head downward; the former being beheaded, either in A. D. 64 or 65. and was buried in the Via Ostia. EUSEBIUS, Hist. Eccles. lib. ii. cap. 25. intimates that the tombs of these two apostles, with their inscriptions, were extant in his time; and quotes as his authority, a holy man of the name of Caius, who wrote against the sect of the Cataphrygians, who has asserted this, as from his personal knowledge. See Eusebius, by Reading vol. i. p. 83; and see Dr. Lardner, in his life of this apostle, who examines this account with his usual perspicuity and candour. Other writers have been more particular concerning his death: they say that it was not by the command of Nero that he was martyred, but by that of the præfects of the city, Nero being then absent: that he was beheaded at Aquæ Salviæ, about three miles from Rome, on Feb. 22. that he could not be crucified as Peter was, because he was a freeman of the city of Rome. But there is great uncertainty on these subjects; so that we cannot positively rely on any account that even the ancients have transmitted to us concerning the death of this apostle; and much less on the accounts given by the moderns; and least of all, on those which are to be found in the Martyrologists. Whether Paul ever returned after this to Rome, has not yet been satisfactorily proved. It is probable that he did, and suffered death there, as stated above: but still we have no certainty.

There are several subscriptions to this book in different Manuscripts: these are the principal.—The Acts of the Apostles—The Acts of the Holy Apostles—The end of the Acts of the Holy Apostles, written by Luke the evangelist, and fellow-traveller of the illustrious apostle Paul—By the holy apostle and evangelist Luke, &c. &c.

The Versions are not less various in their subscriptions.

The end of the Acts, that is, the History of the Holy Apostles. SYRIAC.

Under the auspices, and help of God, the book of the Acts of the pure Apostles is finished; whom we humbly supplicate to obtain us mercy by all their prayers.—Amen. And may praise be ascribed to God, the Lord of the universe. ARABIC.

On the nature and importance of the Acts of the Apostles, see what is said in the Preface to this Book. To which may be added the following observations, taken from the conclusion of Dr. Dodd's Commentary.

"The plainness and simplicity of the narration are strong circumstances in its favour; the writer appears to have been very honest and impartial, and to have set down, very fairly, the objections which were made to Christianity, both by Jews and Heathens, and the reflections which enemies cast upon it, and upon the first preachers of it. He has likewise, with a just and honest freedom, mentioned the weaknesses, faults, and prejudices, both of the apostles and their converts. There is a great and remarkable harmony between the occasional hints dispersed up and down in St. Paul's Epistles, and the facts recorded in this history; insomuch, as that, it is generally acknowledged, that the history of the Acts is the best clue to guide us in the studying of the Epistles written by that Apostle. The other parts of the New Testament do likewise agree with this history, and give great confirmation to it; for the doctrines and principles are every where uniformly the same: the conclusions of the Gospels contain a brief account of those things which are more particularly related in the beginning of the Acts. And there are frequent intimations in other parts of the Gospels, that such an effusion of the Spirit was expected; and that, with a view to the very design which the apostles and primitive Christians are said to have carried on, by virtue of that extraordinary effusion which Christ poured out upon his disciples after his ascension: and, finally, the Epistles of the other apostles, as well as those of St. Paul, plainly suppose such things to have happened as are related in the Acts of the Apostles; so that the history of the Acts is one of the most important parts of the sacred history, for neither the Gospels nor Epistles could have been so clearly understood without it; but by the help of it the whole scheme of the Christian revelation is set before us in an easy and manifest view.

"Even the incidental things mentioned by St. Luke are so exactly agreeable to all the accounts which remain of the best ancient historians, among the Jews and heathens, that no person who had forged such a history, in later ages, could have had that external confirmation, but would have betrayed himself by alluding to some customs or opinions since sprung up; or by misrepresenting some circumstance, or using some phrase or expression not then in use. The plea of forgery, therefore, in later ages, cannot be allowed; and, for a man to have published a history of such things so early as St. Luke wrote, (that is, while some of the apostles, and many other persons were alive, who were concerned in the transactions which he has recorded,) if his account had not been punctually true, could have been only to have exposed himself to an easy confutation and certain infamy.

"As, therefore, the Acts of the Apostles are, in themselves, consistent and uniform, the incidental things agreeable to the best ancient historians which have come down to us, and the main facts supported and confirmed by the other books of the New Testament, and by the unanimous testimony of so many of the ancient fathers, we may, I think, very fairly, and with great justness, conclude that, if any history of former times deserves credit, the Acts of the Apostles ought to be received and credited; and, if the history of the Acts of the Apostles be true, Christianity cannot be false: for a doctrine, so good in itself, and attended with so many miraculous and Divine testimonies, has all the possible marks of a true revelation."

On St. PAUL's character and conduct, see the Observations at the end of chap. ix. where the subject is particularly considered.

The Book of the ACTS is not only a History of the Church, the most ancient and most impartial, as it is the most authentic extant; but it is also a History of God's Grace and Providence. The manner in which he has exerted himself in favour of Christianity, and of the persons who were originally employed to disseminate its doctrines, shew us the highest marks of the Divine approbation. Had not that cause been of God, could he have so signally interposed in its behalf? would he have wrought such a series of miracles for its propagation and support? And would all its genuine professors have submitted to sustain the loss of all things, had not his own Spirit, by its consolations in their hearts, given them to feel that his favour was better than life?

That the hardships suffered by the primitive Apostles and Christians were great, the facts themselves related in this Book, sufficiently declare: that their consolation and happiness were abundant, the cheerful manner in which they met and sustained those hardships, demonstrates. He who cordially embraced Christianity, found himself no loser by it; if he lost earthly good in consequence, it was infinitely over-balanced by the spiritual good which he received. Paul himself, who suffered most, had this compensated by a superabounding happiness. Wherever the gospel comes, it finds nothing but darkness, sin, and misery; wherever it is received, it communicates light, holiness, and felicity. Reader, magnify thy God and Saviour, who hath called thee to such a state of salvation. Should thou neglect it, how grievous must thy punishment be! Not only receive its doctrines as a system of wisdom and goodness; but receive them as motives of conduct; and as a rule of life: and shew thy conscientious belief of them, by holding the truth in righteousness; and thus adorn these doctrines of God thy Saviour, in all things.—Amen.

I have often with pleasure, and with great advantage to my subject, quoted Dr. Lardner, whose elaborate works in defence of Divine Revelation are really beyond all praise. The conclusion of his Credibility of the Gospel History is peculiarly appropriate; and the introduction of it here can need no apology. I hope, with him, I may also say,

"I have now performed what I undertook, and have shewn, that the account given by the sacred writers of persons and things, is confirmed by other ancient authors of the best note. There is nothing in the books of the New Testament unsuitable to the age in which they are supposed to have been written. There appears in these writers a knowledge of the affairs of those times, not to be found in authors of later ages. We are hereby assured that the books of the New Testament are genuine, and that they were written by persons, who lived at or near the time of those events, of which they have given the history.

"Any one may be sensible, how hard it is for the most learned, acute, and cautious man, to write a book in the character of some person of an earlier age; and not betray his own time by some mistake about the affairs of the age in which he pretends to place himself; or by allusions to customs or principles since sprung up; or by some phrase or expression not then in use. It is no easy thing to escape all these dangers in the smallest performance, though it be a treatise of theory or speculation: these hazards are greatly increased when the work is of any length; and especially if it be historical, and be concerned with characters and customs. It is yet more difficult to carry on such a design in a work consisting of several pieces, written, to all appearance by several persons. Many indeed are desirous to deceive, but all hate to be deceived; and therefore, though attempts have been made to impose upon the world in this way, they have never, or very rarely succeeded; but have been detected and exposed by the skill and vigilance of those who have been concerned for the truth.

"The volume of the New Testament consists of several pieces; these are ascribed to eight several persons; and there are the strongest appearances, that they were not all written by any one hand, but by as many persons as they are ascribed to. There are lesser differences in the relations of some facts, and such seeming contradictions, as would never have happened, if these books had been all the work of one person, or of several who wrote in concert. There are as many peculiarities of temper and style, as there are names of writers; divers of which shew no depth of genius nor compass of knowledge. Here are representations of cities, posts, behaviour of persons of higher and lower rank, in many parts of the world; persons are introduced, and their characters are set in a full light; here is a history of things done in several cities and countries; and there are allusions to a vast variety of customs and tenets of persons of several nations, sects, and religions. The whole is written without affectation, with the greatest simplicity and plainness; and is confirmed by other ancient writers of unquestionable authority. If it be difficult for a person of learning and experience, to compose a small treatise concerning matters of speculation, with the characters of a more early age than that in which he writes; it is next to impossible, that such a work of considerable length, consisting of several pieces, with a great variety of historical facts, representations of characters, principles, and customs of several nations, and distant countries, of persons of ranks and degrees, of many interests and parties, should be performed by eight several persons, the most of them unlearned, without any appearance of concert.

"I might perhaps call this argument a demonstration, if that term had not been often misapplied by men of warm imaginations; and been bestowed upon reasonings that have but a small degree of probability. But though it should not be a strict demonstration that these writings are genuine; or though it be not absolutely impossible, in the nature of the thing, that the books of the New Testament should have been composed in a later age, than that to which they are assigned, and of which they have innumerable characters; yet, I think, it is in the highest degree improbable, and altogether incredible.

"If the books of the New Testament were written by persons who lived before the destruction of Jerusalem, that is, if they were written at the time in which they are said to have been written, the things related in them are true. If they have not been matter of fact, they would not have been credited by any persons near that time, and in those parts of the world in which they are said to have been done, but would have been treated as the most notorious lies and falsehoods. Suppose three or four books should now appear amongst us, in the language most generally understood, giving an account of many remarkable and extraordinary events, which had happened in some kingdom of Europe, and in the most noted cities of the countries next adjoining to it; some of them said to have happened between sixty and seventy years ago, others between twenty and thirty, others nearer our own time: would they not be looked upon as the most manifest and ridiculous forgeries and impostures that ever were contrived? Would great numbers of persons, in those very places, change their religious principles and practices upon the credit of things reported to be publicly done, which no man had ever heard of before? Or, rather, is it possible that such a design as this would be conceived by any sober and serious persons, or even the most wild and extravagant? If the history of the New Testament be credible, the Christian religion is true. If the things that were related to have been done by Jesus, and by his followers, by virtue of powers derived from him, do not prove a person to come from God, and that his doctrine is true and divine, nothing can. And as Jesus does here, in the circumstances of his birth, life, sufferings, and after exaltation, and in the success of his doctrine, answer the description of the great Person promised and foretold in the Old Testament, he is at the same time shewed to be the Messiah.

"From the agreement of the writers of the New Testament with other ancient writers, we are not only assured that these books are genuine, but also that they are come down to us pure and uncorrupted, without any considerable interpolations or alterations. If such had been made in them, there would have appeared some smaller differences at least between them and other ancient writings.

"There has been in all ages a wicked propensity in mankind, to advance their own notions and fancies by deceits and forgeries: they have been practised by heathens, Jews, and Christians, in support of imaginary historical facts, religious schemes and practices, and political interests. With these views some whole books have been forged; and passages inserted into others of undoubted authority. Many of the Christian writers of the second and third centuries, and of the following ages, appear to have had false notions concerning the state of Judea between the nativity of Jesus and the destruction of Jerusalem; and concerning many other things occasionally mentioned in the New Testament. The consent of the best ancient writers with those of the New Testament, is a proof that these books are still untouched; and that they have not been new modelled and altered by Christians of later times, in conformity to their own peculiar sentiments.

"This may be reckoned an agreement, that the generality of Christians have had a very high veneration for these books; or else, that the several sects among them have had an eye upon each other, that no alterations might be made in those writings to which they have all appealed. It is also an argument, that the Divine Providence has all along watched over and guarded these best of books (a very fit object of especial care), which contain the best of principles, were apparently written with the best views, and have in them inimitable characters of truth and simplicity."

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLES,

TO THE

BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT;

With some Additional Observations on LUKE iii. 1.

THE Chronology of the New Testament being, in some sort, completed in the Book of the Acts, I have judged it necessary to lay before the Reader a series of Tables, which might enable him to judge more readily of the facts laid down in the Evangelical and Apostolic Histories; and of such transactions of the different Heathen Governments, as took place during the period through which these Tables extend; and which had less or more influence on the infant cause of Christianity.

TABLE I.—Contains all the important epochs which have been used by the different civilized nations of the earth; extending from the sixth year before the nativity of our Lord, according to the Vulgar Æra, to A. D. 100; in which, 1st. the reigns of the Roman Emperors are included, together with—2. the Governors of the Jews under the Romans—3. the Kings of the Parthians—4. the Governors of Syria—5. and the Jewish High-priests: and, to make this complete, I have added—1. the Epact—2. Easter term—3. Jewish Pass-over—4. Dominical Letters—5. years of the Solar Cycle—6. ditto of the Jewish Cycle—7. Golden Number—and 8. the years of the Dionysian period.

TABLE II.—Contains the Fasti Consulares, or years and names of the Roman Consuls, which are indispensably necessary to ascertain the dates of several transactions in the Roman, Jewish, and Christian history.

TABLE III.—Contains a chronological arrangement of important events, during the period of the above 106 years; in which every occurrence of moment, whether among the Jews, Christians, or Romans, is faithfully noted: the whole calculated to throw light on the connected history of those times and nations. For a particular description of the Æras above-mentioned, the Reader is requested to refer to page vi. of the Preface to St. Matthew's Gospel. As these Tables are so plain in themselves, as to require very little illustration; and the epochs are so fully explained in the Preface already referred to; I need say nothing farther of them in this place: but, as some doubts have been entertained concerning the correctness of a chronological statement in the gospel of Luke, chap. iii. ver. 1. I think it necessary to enter into a more particular consideration of that subject than is contained in my notes on that place.

Additional Observations on Luke, chap. iii. ver. 1.

CHRONOLOGERS are generally agreed that our Lord was born four years before the commencement of what is termed the VULGAR ÆRA of his Nativity; that is, in the 749th year from the building of Rome, according to Varro. Herod the Great died about the 751st year of Rome, two years before the present vulgar æra, according to the most accurate chronologers; therefore, our common computation must be four years too late. It is universally agreed that Augustus reigned till A. D. 14, according to the common reckoning; therefore, the 30th year of Christ's age must correspond to the 12th year after the death of Augustus; or, which is the same, to the 12th year of the sole reign of Tiberius Cæsar: and as, according to the general custom of the Jews, a person was not deemed qualified to enter on the public work of the ministry before he was 30 years of age, (though some did it at 25,) it may be safely stated, that the 15th year of the reign of Tiberius, coincided with the 30th year of the Baptist's age; and therefore it must have coincided also with the 30th year of our Lord's age, as the latter was born only six months after the former.

But here a question of great importance, and apparent difficulty, arises: if, as the greatest chronologers agree, Christ's 30th year was the same with the 12th year after the death of Augustus, how then can A. D. 26. which appears in these Notes in the margin of Luke, chap. iii. 1. be called both the 12th and 15th year of the reign of Tiberius? There are several ways of solving this difficulty; but I need refer only to the following, which is sufficiently obvious: on August 28, A. D. 11. Augustus associated Tiberius with himself, in the full government of the empire; or, as Velleius Paterculus expresses it, ut æquum ei jus in omnibus provinciis exercitibusque esset, quam erat ipsi; "that he might have equal power with himself in all the provinces, and in all the armies of the empire." Now, this accounts exactly for the three years of difference which appear to exist between the statement of St. Luke, and the computation of modern chronologists; the former, reckoning from the time in which Tiberius was associated in the empire with Augustus; the latter, from the death of Augustus, when Tiberius became sole emperor. For, as Tiberius was associated with Augustus on August 28, A. D. 11. and Augustus died August 19, A. D. 14, it appears that the time in which the two emperors reigned conjointly, was exactly two years and 356 days, or three years all but nine days.

That St. Luke reckoned the years of Tiberius from the above period, as many others certainly did, and not from the death of Augustus is exceedingly probable; because, taken thus, all his dates agree: and a person who has been so careful as St. Luke evidently was, to fix the dates of the most important transactions he relates, by several chronological data, (as I have had occasion, more than once, to remark on the Notes on his gospel and the Acts,) could not be guilty of such an oversight as this would be, had he dated from the death of Augustus every candid reader must allow. Besides, he uses a term which may be fairly thus explained, Luke iii. 1. Εν ετει δε πεντεκαιδεκατῳ της ἡγεμονιας Τιβεριου; In the fifteenth year of the GOVERNMENT of Tiberius; a term which is applied not only by the sacred writers, but also by the best Greek authors, to signify government in general, whether administered by king, emperor, deputy, toparch, prætor, or any other; and that the word should be understood of government in this general way, and not of that which is restricted to a basileus, imperator, or monarch, who reigns alone, not dividing the empire with any, and consequently being accountable to none, is rendered extremely probable by this use of the term in the very next word, in this sentence; Pontius Pilate being GOVERNOR, ἡγεμονευοντος, (executing the office of governor,) of Judea; who certainly was not monarch of Judea, but a deputy of the Roman emperor. As Pilate, therefore, governed by the authority of Augustus, so Tiberius reigned in conjoint power with Augustus himself; and therefore the term ἡγεμονια, government; and ἡγεμονευω, to exercise, or execute the office of a governor, is with equal propriety attributed both to Tiberius, in his conjoint authority with Augustus; and to Pontius Pilate, or any other governor, acting under the imperial authority. It would be easy to multiply examples here to shew that the word may be as well understood of a conjoint or deputy governor, as of an emperor or monarch. To all this might be added, the consideration that Tiberius must be reputed and called emperor by all the Roman people, as well during the time he was associated with Augustus, as after he became sole monarch. And, would it not be natural for them, in speaking on the subject, to say, Tiberius is now in the first, second, or third year of his reign; even while Augustus was yet living; nor could they speak any other language with propriety. It is true that, after the death of Augustus, the Roman historians generally attribute the whole forty-four years of the reign of Augustus, (the latter three of which he had reigned conjointly with Tiberius,) to Augustus himself; and date the reign of Tiberius from the death of his predecessor; and this they do merely for distinction's sake: but we may safely state, that no man, who lived in the time of the conjoint reign of these emperors, as Luke did, would write in any other way concerning the reign of the surviving emperor, than Luke has done.

The chronology of very few facts in the whole compass of ancient history can be ascertained with greater accuracy than that of Herod's death. Josephus, in his Jewish Antiquities, lib. xiv. cap. 14. s. 5. has fixed the time when Herod was named king by the Romans with so great precision, as to inform us who were the Roman consuls that were in office at the period of this monarch's accession to the throne. His words are: Ὁ μεν ουτως την βασιλειαν παρελαμβανει, τυχον αυτης επι της εκατοστης και ογδοηκοστης και τεταρτης Ολυμπιαδος, ὑπατευοντος Γαιου Δομετιου Καλβινου το δευτερον, και Γαιου Ασινιου Πωλιωνος. "And thus he (Herod) received the kingdom, having obtained it in the one hundred and eighty-fourth Olymiad, when Caius Domitius Calvinus was consul the second time, and Caius Asinius Pollio the first time." Now it is certain, that these Consuls were in office A. U. C. 714, according to the computation of Varro, which was that used by the Romans in the celebration of their secular games; and, consequently, this year must have been the same with the thirty-ninth before the commencement of the vulgar æra of Christ's nativity, according to the chronological table of Archbishop Ussher, unquestionably one of the most accurate chronologers of modern times. Therefore as Josephus. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8. s. 1. and Bell. lib. i. cap. 33. s. 8. as well as other historians, has assigned the length of the reign of Herod the Great to be 37 years, it is certain that the death of this king must have happened about the 751st year of Rome, that is to say, about two years after Christ's birth, and in the 28th year of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, if we reckon the years of his reign from the battle of Actium, at which time the government of the Triumviri was abolished, and that of Emperors properly commenced. It is also certain, from most indisputable evidence collected from the whole body of the Roman and Greek historians, that Augustus Cæsar died 44 years after the battle of Actium, and, consequently, the 12th year of Tiberius's sole reign, must have been 28 years after the death of Herod; for 16, the years that Augustus reigned after Herod's death + 12 = 28. It therefore follows, from the tables of Roman consuls, which have been carefully preserved in the Chronicon of Eusebius, that there was an interval of 65 years between the commencement of Herod's reign and that of Christ's public ministry; consequently, there is every evidence necessary to prove, that St. Luke did reckon the years of Tiberius's reign from the time that this monarch was associated with Augustus in the empire.

By all this it appears, that the time of which Luke speaks, was properly the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius, though only the twelfth after the death of Augustus. And that as Herod did not die, as chronologers generally agree, till the 751st year of Rome, which was the second year of our Lord; therefore, the whole account of the murder of the Innocents, as given by St. Matthew, chap. ii. is perfectly consistent. This being the real state of the case, it seems exceedingly strange, that learned men should have made objections to the verity of St. Luke's history on this account; and that some, to the disgrace of criticism, should have had the weakness or bigotry to pronounce, on such untenable ground, the evangelical history of the genealogy of our Lord, to be spurious! But wisdom is justified of her Children.

N. B. The Roman numerals in the column containing the æra of the Olympiads, do not mean that the respective Olympiads were completed in the years of the different epochs with which they are collateral, or, in other words, that so many times four years had then elapsed since the institution of the Olympic games; but they serve to point out the years in which the respective Olympiads commenced.

A. M.	A.U.C.	A. D.
4012	761	8	The Pannonians are again brought under subjection to the Romans.
			Jesus Christ, twelve years of age, disputes with the doctors in the temple, who are astonished at his understanding and answers.
4013	762	9	Ovid banished by Augustus to Tomos in Pontus.
			Baton, the Dalmatian general, surrenders the town of Anduba to Germanicus, which puts an end to the Dalmatian war.
			Memorable defeat of the Romans under P. Quintilius Varus, governor of Germany, by Arminius, chief of the revolted Germans.
4014	763	10	Tiberius marches against the Germans; and, in the course of this and the following year, reduced the Germans again under the Roman yoke; upon which a profound peace takes place in the whole Roman world.
4015	764	11	Tiberius, in consequence of his very important services, is made by Augustus his colleague in the empire, both in the civil and military government, August 28.
4016	765	12	Imperial edict against diviners and astrologers.
4017	766	13	Augustus Cæsar is again appointed emperor for ten years longer, the last prorogation expiring the end of this year.
4018	767	14	Death of Augustus Cæsar (in the consulship of Sextus Pompeius and Sextus Apuleius) at Nola, August 19, being 76 years of age, all but 35 days.
			There are four epochs from which historians date the years of this emperor's reign. The first is that of the second year of the Julian æra, or the 709th of Rome; when, after the death of Julius Cæsar, coming from Macedonia into Italy, he took upon him the rank of emperor, without making any change in the republic, and assembled by private authority some veteran soldiers. The second epoch is the third year of the Julian æra, or the 711th of Rome, when, after the death of the two consuls, Hirtius and Pansa, he entered into the consulate with Q. Pedius, Sept. 22; or when, on the 27th of November following, he was declared triumvir with Mark Antony, and Æmilius Lepidus. The third epoch is the third of September, A. U. C. 723, and the 15th of the Julian æra, that is to say, on the day of the battle of Actium. The fourth epoch is the following year, when, after the death of Antony and Cleopatra, he entered triumphantly into Alexandria, the 29th of August, or the first day of the Ægyptian year. Thus Augustus, according to the first epoch, reigned fifty-eight years, five months and four days. This is the epoch which Josephus appears to have followed. According to the second epoch, Augustus reigned fifty-five years, ten months, and twenty-eight days, if we reckon from the time in which he was first made consul; or fifty-five years, eight months, and twenty-two days, from his becoming one of the triumviri. It is from one of these two periods, that Suetonius, Eusebius, Epiphanius, and some others, compute the fifty-six years which they assign to this emperor. But the most common mode of computing the years of the reign of Augustus, is from the battle of Actium, from which time he lived and reigned forty-four years, all but thirteen days.
			Tiberius Nero Cæsar succeeds Augustus in the empire, August 19.
			Death of Julia, daughter of Augustus, in the sixteenth year of her exile. She was banished by her father, on the charge of vicious and irregular conduct.
4019	768	15	Extraordinary overflowing of the Tiber, by which several houses are destroyed, and lives lost.
			Achaia and Macedonia become provinces to Cæsar, having been governed before by Proconsuls.
			War in Germany. Arminius makes the Cherusci take up arms against Germanicus. Drawn battle between the Romans and Germans.
4020	769	16	Battle of Idistavisus gained by the Romans over the Germans under Arminius.
			Second battle gained by Germanicus over Arminius, in the neighbourhood of the Elbe.
			The Angrivarians submit to the Romans.
			Expedition of Germanicus against the Cattans and Marsians, who immediately submit.
			Conspiracy of Drusus Libo against Tiberius, discovered; upon which the conspirator kills himself.
4021	770	17	Triumph of Germanicus over the Cheruscans, the Cattans, the Angrivarians, and other nations between the Rhine and the Elbe, May 26.

A. M.	A.U.C.	A. D.
4021	770	17	Terrible earthquake in Asia, which overthrew twelve celebrated cities: among these was Sardis, which suffered the most.
			Death of Titus Livy, the historian, at Padua; and of Ovid, in his exile in Scythia.
4022	771	18	About this time Rhascupolis, called also Rhascoporis, and Rhescuporis, king of Thrace, is deprived of his kingdom, and banished.
			About this time a new island made its appearance in the Archipelago, Pliny ii. 87.
			Expedition of Germanicus into the East.
			Zeno, the son of Polemon, ascends the throne of Armenia, through the favour of Germanicus.

			Fire at Rome, which destroyed part of the circus, and the quarter of Mount Aventine.
			Tiberius declares himself friendly to the Christians, and wishes to enrol Christ among the gods; but is opposed by the senate.
4041	790	37	Death of Tiberius Nero Cæsar, on the 16th or 26th of March, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, after having reigned 22 years, six months, and 26 days, if we reckon from the death of Augustus; and 25 years, six months, and 15 days, from the time when he was first associated in the empire with Augustus. He is succeeded by Caius Caligula.
			Antiochus again put in possession of the kingdom of Commagena, which had been reduced into a Roman province by Germanicus.
			Disgrace and death of Pilate, governor of Judea.
4042	791	38	Vespasian, afterwards emperor, was ædile in this year, i. e. a magistrate, who had the care of the public buildings of the city.
4043	792	39	Getulicus and Lepidus put to death upon suspicion of a conspiracy against the emperor.
4044	793	40	The conversion of Cornelius the centurion happened about this time.
4045	794	41	The emperor Caligula slain on the fourth day of the Palatine games. He is succeeded by his uncle Claudius Cæsar.
			Seneca banished to the island of Corsica.
			War of the Romans against the Germans and Moors.
			Mauritania reduced into a Roman province.
4046	795	42	The followers of Jesus first called CHRISTIANS at Antioch.
4047	796	43	Claudius vanquishes the Britons in several battles; and at his return to Rome is honoured with a triumph.
			Dearth in Rome, occasioned by Messalina and the freedmen monopolizing and raising the price of the necessaries of life.
4048	797	44	Vespasian fought thirty battles with the Britons, took twenty of their towns, subdued two of the British nations, and possessed himself of the Isle of Wight.
			James, the brother of John, put to death by Herod.
4049	798	45	An eclipse of the sun on the birth-day of the emperor Claudius. To prevent the superstitious drawing thence any inauspicious omens concerning him, he caused notice to be posted up some time before it happened, giving a physical explanation of the phænomenon.
			The dreadful famine foretold by Agabus, rages in Judea, Acts xi. 27, 28.
4050	799	46	Asinius Gallus, half-brother to Drusus, son of Tiberius, conspires against the emperor, and is banished.
			Thrace which had hitherto its own kings, is made a Roman province.
			About this time a new island makes its appearance in the Ægean sea. It is named Therasia by Seneca.
4051	800	47	The emperor takes upon himself the title of Censor.
			Secular games celebrated at Rome, in honour of the 800th year of Rome.
			Claudius adds three new letters to the Roman alphabet, the names of two of which only remain; the Æolic digamma, which answers to our v: and the Antisigma, which answers to a p and an s joined together.
			Many of the greatest men in Rome, are put to death by Claudius, to gratify the revenge and covetousness of Messalina, his wife.
			Commotions in the East, and in Germany.
			Incursions of the Cauci into Lower Germany. Corbulo reduces them to subjection.
			Celebrated canal cut between the Rhine and the Maese.
4052	801	48	Claudius by a census is said to find 6,900,000 citizens in Rome.
			The Gauls admitted into the senate, and to the dignities of the empire.
			L. Salvius Otho, the emperor Otho's father, made patrician.

			The Catti defeated by Pomponius.
4055	804	51	Great dearth in the Roman empire.
			The Britons making incursions into the Roman settlements, are vanquished by P. Ostorius Scapula.
4056	805	52	The Jews expelled Rome by Claudius.
			Caractacus, the British king, is defeated, made prisoner, and carried to Rome.
			The aqueduct at Rome begun by Caligula, fourteen years before; finished this year by Claudius.
4057	806	53	Nero's marriage with Octavia.
			Claudius Felix made governor of Judea in the room of Ventidius Cumanus.
4058	807	54	Caius Tiberius Claudius Nero Cæsar, the Roman emperor, poisoned by the empress Agrippina, after a reign of thirteen years, eight months, and twenty-one days; and is succeeded in the empire by Nero Cæsar, his wife's son.
			Paul preaches at Athens.
			Death of Azisus, king of the Emesenians.
4059	808	55	Britannicus, son of Claudius Cæsar by Messalina, poisoned by the emperor his brother.
			War of the Romans against the Parthians.
4061	810	57	Apollos, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, preaches at Corinth, Acts xviii. 24.
4062	811	58	Artaxata, the capital of Armenia, burnt by Corbulo.
			Tigranocerta taken by Corbulo.
			Armenia totally subdued by Corbulo, and given by Nero to Tigranes, great-grandson of Archelaus, formerly king of Cappadocia.
4063	812	59	Nero puts his mother Agrippina to death.
			Death of Domitius Afer, the orator.
			Laodicea, one of the most famous cities in Asia, destroyed by an earthquake.
4064	813	60	The pantomimes recalled by Nero.
			Appearance of a comet, with which the vulgar are greatly alarmed.
			The city of Puteoli, or Pozzuola, obtains from Nero the title of August or Imperial Colony.
4065	814	61	The Britons form a league to recover their independence. They take advantage of the absence of Suetonius Paulinus, their governor, to take up arms against the Romans.
			Boadicea, the British Queen, defeats the Romans, killing 70,000 in various places; but the Britons are at last defeated by Suetonius, the Roman general, with the loss of 80,000.
			Pedanius Secundus, prefect of Rome, assassinated by one of his slaves.
			King Agrippa confers the high priesthood on Israel, the son of Phabius.
4066	815	62	Death of Mark the evangelist. He is said to have been buried at Alexandria.
			St. Paul sent in bonds to Rome. He is shipwrecked at Malta.
			Nero puts his empress Octavia to death.
			Aulus Persius Flaccus, the poet, dies in the thirtieth year of his age.
4067	816	63	On the fifth of February, a violent earthquake happened in Campania, which destroyed great part of the city of Pompeii, at the foot of Mount Vesuvius, and did considerable damage to Herculaneum.
			About this time Nero reduced the Cottian Alps into a Roman province, after the death of king Cottius.
			The Parthians vanquished by the Romans under Corbulo. Tiridates, king of Parthia, lays down his crown at the foot of Nero's statue.
			James, the brother of our Lord, is, according to Eusebius, thrown down from a pinnacle of the temple, and stoned; and a fuller striking him on the head with a club, kills him.
4068	817	64	The emperor sends two centurions up the Nile, in order to explore its source; but the centurions failed in their expedition, being stopped by the cataracts and marshy grounds.
			Great fire in Rome, by which upwards of two-thirds of this great city was consumed.
			Nero charging the late conflagration of the city upon the Christians, persecutes them with all manner of cruelties and torments.

4068	817	64	The Jews revolt from the Romans, and pelt their governor Florus with stones, which begins the first Jewish war.
4069	813	65	Several great men conspire against the emperor; but the plot is discovered. Death of Seneca and Lucan. Campania wasted by an epidemical sickness, and great tempests. Great fire at Lyons, which nearly consumed the whole city. Nero made the inhabitants of this city a present of four millions of sesterces, (about thirty-two thousand pounds,) towards repairing their losses.
4070	819	66	Tiridates receives the crown of Armenia from the hands of Nero. Vespasian sent by Nero to make war against the Jews. Disturbances in Cæsarea, between the Jews and the idolaters who inhabited that city. Sedition in Jerusalem, occasioned by Florus. This may be considered the proper commencement of the Jewish war. It took place according to Josephus, on the sixteenth day of the month Artemisius, which, according to Scaliger's calculation, corresponds to our May. The Jews of Cæsarea slain to the number of twenty thousand. All Syria filled with slaughter by the battles between the Jews and the Syrians. Cypros and Macherontum taken by the Jews from the Romans. Jerusalem besieged by Cæstius Gallus. The Christians leave Jerusalem, and fly to Pella in Cælosyria.
4071	820	67	Vespasian invades Judea with an army of 60,000 men, and carries fire and sword wherever he goes; immense numbers of Jews are slain in the various sieges. St. Peter and St. Paul put to death about this time. Jotapata taken by the Romans after a siege of forty-six days. Japha taken by the Romans. Eleven thousand six hundred Samaritans, that had assembled on the top of Mount Gerizim, slain by order of Vespasian. Joppa taken and destroyed by the Romans. Tarichæa taken by the Romans, and nearly 40,000 persons, who had taken refuge in it, slain. Death of Corbulo.
4072	821	68	Dreadful calamities in Jerusalem, occasioned by the zealots, who divide themselves into two different parties, and murder one another by thousands, committing the most horrid cruelties. The emperor Nero, on account of his great cruelty and injustice, is obliged to fly from Rome to the house of Phaon, one of his freedmen, about four miles from Rome, where he kills himself; upon which the senate declares Galba emperor.
4073	822	69	On the Kalends of January, the images of Galba, in Germany, are thrown down; and on the third day Vitellius is saluted emperor by the army; and on the fifteenth day of the same month Galba is slain by the partisans of Otho, seven months after the death of Nero; upon which Otho is proclaimed emperor. Civil war betwixt Vitellius and Otho. Engagement in an island in the Po, betwixt the troops of Otho and Vitellius, wherein the latter have the advantage. Battle of Bedriacum, in which Otho's army is defeated; upon which Otho kills himself after a reign of three months. He is succeeded by Vitellius. Dolabella put to death by order of Vitellius. Civil war betwixt Vitellius and Vespasian. Cremona sacked by Primus. Junius Blæsus poisoned by order of Vitellius. Vespasian acknowledged emperor by a great part of Italy, and all the western provinces. The capitol besieged and taken by Vitellius's soldiers. The temple of Jupiter Capitolinus destroyed by fire. Vitellius is killed, after a reign of eight months and a few days, and Vespasian succeeds him in the empire.

A. M.	A.U.C.	A. D.
4073	822	69	The Batavians, under Civilis, revolt from the Romans, over whom they obtain two great victories.
4074	823	70	Vespasian orders the capitol to be rebuilt, the first stone of which was laid on the 21st of June.
			Titus, son of Vespasian, sent by the emperor to besiege Jerusalem.
			The Jewish temple burnt, notwithstanding the endeavours of Titus to preserve it.
			Jerusalem taken Sept. 7, and destroyed by Titus, which ends the Jewish war. Josephus reckons that not less than eleven hundred thousand persons perished in this siege, by fire, sword, misery, and famine. If to this number be added all that were killed in the several battles fought out of Jerusalem, and in the taking of the several towns which the Romans stormed, it will be found that the Jews lost in the whole course of the war, one million three hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred and sixty men. The number of prisoners during the war, according to the same historian, amounted to ninety-seven thousand! See on Matt. xxiv. 31.
4075	824	71	Magnificent triumph of Vespasian for his victories over the Jews.
			Peace being re-established in the world, the temple of Janus is shut. This is the sixth time of its being shut according to Orosius.
4076	825	72	Commagena is made a Roman province.
			Vologeses, king of Parthia, molested by the Alans, a Scythian people, who over-run Media and Armenia.
4077	826	73	Rhodes, Samos, and the neighbouring islands, formed into a province, under the name of the Cyclades or island province.
4078	827	74	Vespasian who had made his son Titus his colleague in the censorship, celebrates with him the ceremony of closing the lustrum; and of numbering the Roman citizens,
4079	828	75	Dedication of the Temple of Peace. Vespasian places in it the golden vessels belonging to the temple of Jerusalem, and a great number of the finest performances of the best painters and sculptors.
			Nero's colossus, erected by his order at the entrance of the golden palace, is dedicated to Apollo, or the sun, by Vespasian.
4080	829	76	Three cities in the island of Cyprus, destroyed by an earthquake.
4081	830	77	Dreadful plague in Rome, through which ten thousand persons are said to have died in one day!
4082	831	78	Agricola appointed governor of Britain.
4083	832	79	Vespasian dies, after a reign of nine years, eleven months, and twenty-four days, and is succeeded in the Roman empire by his son Titus.
			Dreadful eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which devastated a considerable part of Campania.
			Death of the elder Pliny, who was suffocated by the smoke and ashes from the mountain, while employed in examining this dreadful phænomenon.
4084	833	80	Dreadful pestilence.
			Terrible fire at Rome, which raged with great violence for three days and three nights Many of the public buildings were destroyed, among which were the pantheon, the Octavian library, and the capitol, which had not been long rebuilt.
			Dedication of the amphitheatre begun by Vespasian, and finished by Titus.
4085	834	81	Titus dies on Sept. 13, after a reign of two years, two months and twenty days; and is succeeded in the Roman empire by his brother Domitian.
4087	836	83	Domitian's expedition against the Catti, a people of Germany. The emperor returns without having seen the enemy, and causes triumphal honours to be decreed him. It is supposed that about this time he received the surname of Germanicus.
4088	837	84	Sabinus is made colleague with Domitian in the consulate: his prænomen is not known; but he is supposed to be the same with Oppius Sabinus, who lost his life soon after in the Dacian war.
			The Caledonians defeated by Agricola, with the loss of 10,000 men. The ornaments of triumph are decreed the victor.
			The fleet of Agricola sailed round Great Britain: before this circumnavigation was made, the Romans were not sure that Britain was an island.
4089	838	85	Domitian orders the nativity of all the great men in Rome to be cast; and such as were said to be born for empire he destroyed.
			Philosophers banished from Rome by Domitian.
			The Nasamonians revolt from the Romans, but are subdued by Flaccus.

A. M.	A.U.C.	A. D.
4089	838	85	Fulvius is made colleague with the emperor this year in the consulate: his prænomen is not known. This Fulvius is supposed to be either T. Aurelius Fulvius, or Fulvius, the grandfather of the emperor Titus Antoninus.
4090	839	86	Institution of the Capitoline games. The Dacian war began this year, according to Eusebius. The Dacians enter the Roman provinces, and make great depredations; but are at last completely overthrown by Julianus.
4092	841	88	The secular games celebrated at Rome this year, not because it was the termination of an even century, from the building of the city; but through the mere caprice of the emperor.
4093	842	89	Domitian banished the astrologers from Rome.
4094	843	90	The Marcomans, &c. having defeated the emperor, the latter makes peace with Decebalus, king of the Dacians, and allows him a yearly pension, which is never demanded. He assumes the surname of Dacicus.
4095	844	91	Domitian changes the names of the months of September and October, and calls them Germanicus and Domitianus; which continued only during his life. About this time the temple of Janus is again shut. Cornelia, chief of the vestals, accused by the emperor of incontinence, is buried alive.
4096	845	92	About this time happened the revolt of L. Antonius, who commanded on the Upper Rhine. He is defeated and killed. The kingdom of Chalcis united to the Roman empire.
4097	846	93	Death of Agricola, the governor of Britain, on the 23rd of August, in the year when Collega and Priscus were consuls. The Sarmatians revolt, but are soon quelled by Domitian; in consequence of which he carries a laurel crown to the capitol, and consecrates it to Jupiter.
4098	847	94	Philosophers and scientific men banished Rome by an order of the senate. Epictetus, the famous stoic philosopher, was among the number of the exiles.
4099	848	95	Commencement of the second persecution against the Christians. About this time, St. John was thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil, near the Latin gate at Rome; but, being miraculously preserved, is afterwards banished to Patmos, where he is supposed to have written his Revelation some time in the course of this or the following year. Acilius Glabrio, who had been consul A. U. C. 844. is put to death by order of the emperor
4100	849	96	Domitian killed in his palace by some of his freedmen, after a tyrannical reign of fifteen years and five days. He was the last of the twelve Cæsars, and is succeeded in the empire by Nerva.
4101	850	97	Death of Virginius, the consul, in the 83d year of his age. Tacitus, who was at this time consul by subrogation, pronounces his funeral oration. Trajan, who commanded the army in Lower Germany, adopted by Nerva.
4102	851	98	Nerva dies, Jan. 21, after having reigned one year, four months, and eight days, and is succeeded in the empire by Trajan, a Spaniard. The Chamavians and Angrivarians defeat the Bructerians, with the loss of 60,000 men.
4103	852	99	Trajan, who was in Germany when he was proclaimed emperor, enters Rome without the least parade.
4104	853	100	Adrian afterwards emperor, married to Sabina, daughter of Trajan's nephew. The death of St. John, the apostle and evangelist, is generally supposed to have happened about this time.

PREFACE

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

THAT St. Paul was the author of this Epistle, and that it possesses every evidence of authenticity that any work of the kind can possess; or that even the most fastidious scepticism can require; have been most amply proved by Dr. W. Paley, Archdeacon of Carlisle, in his work entitled "Horæ Paulinæ; or, the Truth of the Scripture History of St. Paul evinced, by a comparison of the Epistles which bear his name, with the Acts of the Apostles, and with one another."

Of this Apostle I have spoken at large in the notes on the preceding Book; and especially in the observations at the close of the ninth chapter; to which I beg leave to refer the Reader. It will be sufficient to state here, that Saul, (afterwards called Paul,) was born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, of Jewish parents, who possessed the right of Roman citizens: (see the note on Acts xxii. 28.) that when young, he was sent to Jerusalem for the purpose of receiving a Jewish education; that he was there put under the tuition of the famous Rabbi Gamaliel, and was incorporated with the sect of the Pharisees, of whose system he imbibed all the pride, self-confidence, and intolerance; and distinguished himself as one of the most inveterate enemies of the Christian cause; but, being converted by a most singular interposition of Divine Providence and grace, he became one of the most zealous promoters and successful defenders of the cause, which he had before so inveterately persecuted.

Though this Epistle is directed to the Romans, yet we are not to suppose that Romans, in the proper sense of the word, are meant; but rather those who dwelt at Rome, and composed the Christian church in that city: that there were among these, Romans properly such, that is, heathens who had been converted to the Christian faith, there can be no doubt: but the principal part of the church in that city, seems to have been formed from Jews, sojourners at Rome; and from such as were proselytes to the Jewish religion.

When, or by whom the Gospel was first preached at Rome, cannot be ascertained. Those who assert that St. Peter was its founder, can produce no solid reason for the support of their opinion. Had this Apostle first preached the Gospel in that city; it is not likely that such an event would have been unnoticed in the Acts of the Apostles; where the labours of St. Peter are particularly detailed with those of St. Paul, which indeed form the chief subject of this Book. Nor is it likely that the author of this Epistle should have made no reference to this circumstance, had it been true. Those who say that this church was founded by these two Apostles conjointly, have still less reason on their side; for it is evident from chap. i. 8, &c. that St. Paul had never been at Rome, previously to his writing this Epistle. It is most likely that no apostle was employed in this important work; and that the Gospel was first preached there by some of those persons who were converted at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost; for, we find from Acts ii. 10. that there were then at Jerusalem strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes; and these, on their return, would naturally declare the wonders they had witnessed; and proclaim that truth by which they themselves had received salvation. Of Rome itself, then the metropolis of the world, a particular account has been given in the note on Acts, chap. xxviii. 16. to which the Reader is requested to refer.

The occasion of writing this Epistle, may be easily collected from the Epistle itself. It appears that St. Paul had been made acquainted with all the circumstances of the Christians at Rome, by Aquila and Priscilla, (see chap. xvi. 3.) and by other Jews who had been expelled from Rome, by the decree of Claudius, (mentioned Acts xviii. 2.) and finding that it was composed partly of heathens, converted to Christianity; and partly of Jews, who had, with many remaining prejudices, believed in Jesus as the true Messiah; and that many contentions arose from the claims of the Gentile converts to equal privileges with the Jews; and, from the absolute refusal of the Jews to admit these claims, unless the Gentile converts became circumcised, he wrote to adjust and settle these differences.

Dr. Paley, with his usual perspicuity, has shown that the principal object of the argumentative part of the Epistle, is, "To place the Gentile convert upon a parity of situation with the Jewish, in respect of his religious condition, and his rank in the Divine favour." The Epistle supports this point by a variety of arguments; such as, that no man, of either description, was justified by the works of the law—for this plain reason, that no man had performed them; that it became therefore necessary to appoint another medium, or condition of justification, in which new medium the Jewish peculiarity was merged and lost; that Abraham's own justification was antecedent to the law, and independent of it; that the Jewish converts were to consider the law as now dead, and themselves as married to another; that what the law in truth could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God had done by sending his Son; that God had rejected the unbelieving Jews, and had substituted in their place, a society of believers in Christ; collected indifferently from Jews and Gentiles—Therefore, in an Epistle directed to Roman believers, the point to be endeavoured after by St. Paul, was to reconcile the Jewish converts to the opinion that the Gentiles were admitted by God to a parity of religious situation with themselves; and that, without their being obliged to keep the law of Moses. In this Epistle, though directed to the Roman church in general, it is in truth, a Jew writing to Jews. Accordingly, as often as his argument leads him to say any thing derogatory from the Jewish institution; he constantly follows it by a softening clause. Having, chap. ii. 28, 29. pronounced "that he is not a Jew who is one outwardly; nor that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh," he adds immediately, "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there in circumcision? Much every way." Having, in the third chap. ver. 28. brought his argument to this formal conclusion, "that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law," he presently subjoins, ver. 31. "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid! Yea, we establish the law." In the seventh chap. when in ver. 6. he had advanced the bold assertion, "that now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held;" in the next verse he comes in with this healing question, "What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid! Nay, I had not known sin but by the law." Having, in the following words more than insinuated the inefficacy of the Jewish law, chap. viii. 3. "for what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh;" after a digression indeed, but that sort of a digression, which he could never resist, a rapturous contemplation of his Christian hope, and which occupies the latter part of this chapter: we find him in the next, as if sensible that he had said something which would give offence, returning to his Jewish brethren in terms of the warmest affection and respect; "I say the truth in Christ Jesus, I lie not: my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart; for I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh, who are Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers; and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came." When in the 31st and 32d verses of the ninth chapter, he represented to the Jews the error of even the best of their nation, by telling them that "Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness had not attained to the law of righteousness, because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, for they stumbled at that stumbling stone;" he takes care to annex to this declaration, these conciliating expressions; "Brethren, my heart's desire, and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved; for I bear them record, that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Lastly, having, chap. x. 20, 21. by the application of a passage in Isaiah, insinuated the most ungrateful of all propositions to a Jewish ear, the rejection of the Jewish nation as God's peculiar people; he hastens, as it were, to qualify the intelligence of their fall by this interesting exposition: "I say then, hath God cast away his people, (i. e. wholly and entirely?) God forbid! for I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew;" and follows this thought throughout the whole of the eleventh chapter, in a series of reflections calculated to soothe the Jewish converts, as well as to procure from their Gentile brethren, respect to the Jewish institution Dr. Paley, drawing an argument from this manner of writing in behalf of the genuineness of this Epistle, adds, "Now, all this is perfectly natural. In a real St. Paul, writing to real converts, it is, what anxiety to bring them over to his persuasion, would naturally produce; but there is an earnestness and a personality, if I may so call it, in the manner, which a cold forgery, I apprehend, would neither have conceived nor supported." Horæ Paulinæ, p. 49, &c.

From a proper consideration of the design of the Apostle in writing this Epistle; and from the nature and circumstances of the persons to whom it was directed; much light may be derived for a proper understanding of the Epistle itself. When the Reader considers that the church at Rome was composed of heathens and Jews, that the latter were taught to consider themselves the only people on earth, to whom the Divine favour extended: that these alone had a right to all the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom; that the giving the the law and the prophets, which had not been given to any other people, was the fullest proof that these privileges did not extend to the nations of the earth; and, that though it was possible for the Gentiles to be saved, yet it must be in consequence of their becoming circumcised, and taking on them the yoke of the law—When, on the other hand, the Reader considers the Roman Gentiles, who formed the other part of the church at Rome, as educated in the most perfect contempt of Judaism, and of the Jews, who were deemed to be haters of all mankind, and degraded with the silliest superstitions; and now evidently rejected and abandoned by that God, in whom they professed to trust; it is no wonder if, from these causes, many contentions and scandals arose; especially at a time when the spirit of Christianity was but little understood; and among a people too who do not appear to have had any apostolic authority established among them, to compose feuds, and settle religious differences.

That the Apostle had these things particularly in his eye, is evident from the Epistle itself. His first object is to confound the pride both of the Jews and the Gentiles; and this he does by showing the former that they had broken their own law, and consequently forfeited all the privileges which the obedient had a right to expect:—he shows the latter, that however they might boast of eminent men, who had been an honour to their country; nevertheless, the Gentiles as a people, were degraded by the basest of crimes, and the lowest idolatry:—that, in a word, the Gentiles had as little cause to boast in their philosophers as the Jews had to boast in the faith and piety of their ancestors; for all had sinned, and come short of the glory of God. This subject is particularly handled in the five first chapters; and often referred to in other places.

Concerning the time in which this Epistle was written, there is not much difference of opinion: it is most likely that it was written about A. D. 58. when Paul was at Corinth, see chap. xvi. 23. conferred with 1 Cor. i. 14. and Rom. xvi. 1. conferred with 2 Tim. iv. 20. It appears from chap. xvi. 22. that Paul did not write this Epistle with his own hand, but used a person called Tertius, as his amanuensis; and that it was sent by the hands of Phœbe, a deaconess, (ουσαν διακονον.) of the church of Cenchrea, which was the eastern Port, on the Isthmus of Corinth.

From internal evidence, Dr. Paley has demonstrated the authenticity of this Epistle, and its existence in the ancient Antehieronymian versions, and the Syriac, as well as its being mentioned by the Apostolic Fathers, Barnabas, chap. xii. 13. Clemens Romanus, Ep. i. c. i. 30, 32, 35, 46. Ignatius, Epist. ad Ephes. 20. ad Smyrn. 1. ad Trall. 8. and Polycarp. 3 and 6. and by all succeeding writers, put it beyond all dispute.

Of the fourteen Epistles attributed to St. Paul, (thirteen only of which bear his name,) this has been reckoned the first in importance, though certainly not in order of time; for there is every reason to believe that both the Epistles to the Thessalonians, that to the Galatians, those to the Corinthians, the first to Timothy, and that to Titus, were all written before the Epistle to the Romans. See the dates of the books of the New Testament, at the end of the Introduction to the Gospels, &c.

In the arrangement of the Epistles, nothing seems to have been consulted besides the length of the Epistle, the character of the writer, and the importance of the place to which it was sent. Rome, being the mistress of the world, the Epistle to that city was placed first. Those to the Corinthians, because of the great importance of their city, next: Galatia, Ephesus, Philippi, Colosse, and Thessalonica, follow in graduated order. Timothy, Titus, and Philemon, succeed in the same way: and the Epistle to the Hebrews, because the author of it was long in dispute, was placed at the end of the Epistles of Paul, as being probably written by him. James, as Bp. of Jerusalem, precedes Peter; Peter precedes John, as the supposed chief of the apostles; and John the beloved disciple, Jude. The book of the Revelation, as being long disputed in the Christian church, was thrown to the conclusion of the New Testament Scriptures. The surats, or chapters of the Koran, were disposed in the same sort of order; the longest being put first, and all the short ones thrown at the end, without any regard to the times in which it was pretended, they were revealed.

There have been some doubts concerning the language in which this Epistle was written. John Adrian Bolten endeavoured to prove that St. Paul wrote it in Syriac, and that it was translated into Greek by Tertius: but this supposition has been amply refuted by Griesbach. Others think that it must have been written originally in Latin, the language of the people to whom it was addressed; "for although the Greek tongue was well known in Rome, yet it was the language of the great and the learned; and it is more natural to suppose that the Apostle would write in the language of the common people, as those were most likely to be his chief readers, than in that of the great and the learned." This argument is more specious than solid. 1. It is certain that at this time, the Greek language was very generally cultivated in Rome, as it was in most parts of the Roman empire. Cicero pro Arch. 10. says Græca leguntur in omnibus fere gentibus: Latina, suis finibus, exiguis sane continentur. "The Greek writings are read in almost all nations: those of the Latin, within their own narrow limits." Tacitus, Orator. 29. observes, Nunc natus infans delegatur Græculæ alicui ancillæ. "Now the newborn child is put under the care of some Greek maid;" and this undoubtedly for the purpose of its learning to speak the Greek tongue. And Juvenal, Sat. vi. ver. 184. ridicules this affectation of his countrymen, which in his time appears to have been carried to a most extravagant excess.

Nam quid rancidius, quàm quòd se non putat ulla
Formosam, nisi quæ de Tuscâ Græcula facta est?
De Sulmonensi mera Cecropis? Omnia Græce,
Cùm sit turpe magìs nostris nescire Latinè.
Hôc Sermone pavent, hâc Iram, Gaudia, Curas, Hôc cuncta effundunt animi secreta. Quid ultra?—

"For what so nauseous and affected too,
As those that think they due perfection want
Who have not learned to list the Grecian cant?
In Greece their whole accomplishments they seek:
Their fashion, breeding, language, must be Greek.
But raw in all that does to Rome belong,
They scorn to cultivate their mother-tongue.
In Greek they flatter, all their fears they speak, Tell all their secrets, nay, they scold in Greek." Dryden.

From these testimonies, it is evident, that the Greek was a common language in Rome in the days of the Apostle, and that, in writing in this language, which he probably understood better than he did Latin, he consulted the taste and propensity of the Romans; as well as the probability of his Epistle being more extensively read, in consequence of its being written in Greek.

2. But were these arguments wanting, there are others of great weight, that evince the propriety of choosing this language in preference to any other. The sacred writings of the Old Testament were, at that time, confined to two languages, the Hebrew and the Greek. The former was not known out of the confines of Palestine; the latter over the whole Roman empire: and the Latin tongue appears to have been as much confined to Italy as the Hebrew was to Judea. The Epistle, therefore, being designed by the Spirit of God, to be of general use to the Christian churches, not only in Italy, but through Greece, and all Asia Minor, where the Greek language was spoken and understood; it was requisite that the instructions to be conveyed by it should be put in a language the most generally known; and a language too which was then in high, and in daily increasing credit.

3. As the Jews were the principal objects of this Epistle, and they must be convinced of the truth of Christianity, from the evidence of their own Scriptures; and as the Greek version of the Septuagint was then their universal text-book, in all their dispersions; it was absolutely requisite that the Epistle should be written in a tongue with which they were best acquainted; and in which their acknowledged Scriptures were contained. These arguments seem conclusive for a Greek and not a Latin original of this Epistle.

From the manner in which this Epistle has been interpreted and applied, various most discordant and conflicting opinions have originated. Many commentators, forgetting the scope and design of it, have applied that to men in general, which most obviously belongs to the Jews, as distinguished from the Gentiles, and to them only. From this one mistake, the principal controversies that have agitated and divided the Church of Christ, concerning the doctrines of unconditional reprobation and election, have arisen. Men, eminent for their talents, learning, and piety, have interpreted and applied the whole on this mistaken ground. They have been opposed by others, not at all their inferiors either in religion or learning, who, not attending properly to the scope of the Apostle, have rather argued from the perfections of the Divine Nature, and the general concurrent sense of Scripture, and thus proved that such doctrines cannot comport with those perfections, nor with the analogy of faith; and that the Apostle is to be interpreted according to these, and not according to the apparent grammatical import of the phraseology which he employs. On both sides the disputes have run high; the cause of truth has gained little, and Christian charity and candour have been nearly lost. Dispassionate men, on seeing this, have been obliged to exclaim—> ———tantæne animis cœlestibus iræ?

> Can such fierce zeal in heavenly bosoms dwell?

To compose these differences, and do justice to the Apostle, and set an important portion of the word of God in its true and genuine light; Dr. John Taylor, of Norwich, a divine who yielded to few in command of temper, benevolent feeling, and deep acquaintance with the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, undertook the elucidation of this much controverted Epistle. The result of his labours was a paraphrase and notes on the whole book, to which is prefixed, "A Key to the Apostolic Writings; or an Essay to explain the Gospel Scheme, and the principal words and phrases, the apostles have used in describing it." 4to. 1769. fourth edition. This Key, in the main, is a most invaluable work; and has done great justice to the subject. Christians, whether advocates for general or particular redemption, might have derived great service from this work, in explaining the Epistle to the Romans: but the author's creed, who was an Arian, (for he certainly cannot be ranked with modern unitarians,) has prevented many from consulting his book.

To bring the subject of this Epistle before the Reader, into the fairest and most luminous point of view, in my power, I think it right to make a large extract from this Key, steering as clear as possible of those points in which my own creed is certainly at variance with that of my author; especially in the articles of Original Sin, the Atonement, and Deity of Christ: but as these points are seldom directly touched in this introductory Key, the Reader need be under no apprehension that he shall meet with any thing in hostility to the orthodoxy of his own creed.

A Key to the Apostolic Writings: or, an Essay to explain the Gospel Scheme, and the principal Words and Phrases which the Apostles have used in describing it.

§ 1. On the Original and Nature of the Jewish Constitution of Religion.

1. God, the Father of the Universe, who has exercised his boundless wisdom, power, and goodness, in producing various beings of different capacities; who created the earth, and appointed divers climates, soils, and situations in it, hath, from the beginning of the world, introduced several schemes and dispensations for promoting the virtue and happiness of his rational creatures; for curing their corruption, and preserving among them the knowledge and worship of himself, the true God, the possessor of all being, and the fountain of all good.

2. In pursuance of this grand and gracious design, when, about four hundred years after the flood, the generality of mankind were fallen into idolatry, (a vice which, in those times, made its first appearance in the world,) and served other gods, thereby renouncing allegiance to the one God, the maker and governor of Heaven and earth; He, to counteract this new and prevailing corruption, was pleased, in his infinite wisdom, to select one family of the earth, to be a repository of true knowledge, and the pattern of obedience and reward among the nations. That, as mankind were propagated, and idolatry took its rise and was dispersed from one part of the world into various countries; so also the knowledge, worship, and obedience of the true God, might be propagated and spread from nearly the same quarter; or, however, from those parts which then were most famous and distinguished. To this family he particularly revealed himself, visited them with several public and remarkable dispensations of Providence; and at last formed them into a nation, under his special protection; and governed them by laws delivered from himself; placing them in the open view of the world, first in Egypt, and afterwards in the land of Canaan.

3. The head, or root of this family was Abraham, the son of Terah, who lived in Ur of the Chaldees, beyond Euphrates; his family was infected with the common contagion of idolatry, as appears from Joshua xxiv. 2, 3. And Joshua said unto all the people, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood, (or river Euphrates,) in old time; even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor: and they served other gods. And I took your father Abraham from the other side of the flood, &c. And the apostle Paul intimates as much, Rom. iv. 3, 4, 5. For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh, is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. Abraham is the person he is discoursing about; and he plainly hints, though he did not care to speak out, that even Abraham was chargeable with not paying due reverence and worship to God; as the word ΑΣΕΒΗΣ, which we render ungodly, properly imports.

4. But, though Abraham had been an idolater; God was pleased, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, to single him out to be the head, or root of that family or nation which he intended to separate to himself from the rest of mankind, for the fore-mentioned purposes. Accordingly, he appeared to him in his native country, and ordered him to leave it, and his idolatrous kindred; and to remove into a distant land, to which he would direct and conduct him; declaring, at the same time, his covenant, or grant of mercy to him, in these words, Gen. xii. 1, 2, 3. I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed. So certainly did God make himself known to Abraham, that he was satisfied this was a revelation from the one true God; and that it was his duty to pay an implicit obedience to it. Accordingly, upon the foot of this faith, he went out, though he did not know whither he was to go. The same covenant, or promise of blessings, God afterwards, at sundry times, repeated to him; particularly when it is said, Gen. xv. 5. And the Lord brought him forth abroad, and said, look now towards Heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, so shall thy seed be. Here again, he believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Also, Gen. xvii. 1—8, he repeats and established the same covenant for an everlasting covenant to be a God unto him and his seed after him: promising them the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession; and appointing circumcision as a perpetual token of the certainty and perpetuity of this covenant. Thus Abraham was taken into God's covenant, and became entitled to the blessings it conveyed; not because he was not chargeable before God with impiety, irreligion, and idolatry; but because God, on his part, freely forgave his prior transgressions; and because Abraham, on his part, believed in the power and goodness of God; without which belief or persuasion, that God was both true and able to perform what he had promised, he could have paid no regard to the divine manifestations; and consequently must have been rejected as a person altogether improper to be the head of that family, which God intended to set apart to himself.

5. And as Abraham, so likewise his seed, or posterity, were at the same time, and before they had a being, taken into God's covenant, and entitled to the blessings of it. (Gen. xvii 7. I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy SEED AFTER THEE, &c.) Not all his posterity, but only those whom God intended in the promise; namely, first the nation of the Jews, who hereby became particularly related to God, and invested in sundry invaluable privileges; and after them the believing Gentiles, who were reckoned the children of Abraham, as they should believe in God as Abraham did.

6. For about two hundred and fifteen years, from the time God ordered Abraham to leave his native country, he and his son Isaac, and grand-son Jacob, sojourned in the land of Canaan, under the special protection of Heaven, till infinite wisdom thought fit to send the family into Egypt, the then head-quarters of idolatry; with a design they should there increase into a nation; and there, notwithstanding the cruel oppression they long groaned under, they multiplied to a surprising number. At length God delivered them from the servitude of Egypt, by the most dreadful displays of his Almighty power; whereby he demonstrated himself to be the one true God, in a signal and complete triumph over idols, even in their metropolis; and in a country of fame and eminence among all the nations round about. Thus freed from the vilest bondage, God formed them into a kingdom, of which he himself was king; gave them a revelation of his nature and will; instituted sundry ordinances of worship, taught them the way of truth and life; set before them various motives to duty, promising singular blessings to their obedience and fidelity, and threatening disobedience and apostacy, or revolt from his government, with very heavy judgments; especially that of being expelled from the land of Canaan, and scattered among all people, from one end of the earth unto the other, in a wretched persecuted state, Deut. xxviii. 63—68. Lev. xxvi. 3, 4, &c. Having settled their constitution, he led them through the wilderness, where he disciplined them for forty years together; made all opposition fall before them; and, at last, brought them to the promised land.

7. Here I may observe, that God did not choose the Israelites out of any partial regard to that nation, nor because they were better than other people, (Deut. ix. 4, 5.) and would always observe his laws. It is plain he knew the contrary. (Deut. xxxi. 29. xxxii. 5, 6, 15) It was indeed with great propriety that, among other advantages, he gave them also that of being descended from progenitors illustrious for piety and virtue; and that he grounded the extraordinary favours they enjoyed, upon Abraham's faith and obedience, Gen. xxii. 16, 17, 18. But it was not out of regard to the moral character of the Jewish nation that God chose them; any other nation would have served as well on that account; but as he thought fit to select one nation of the world, he selected them out of respect to the piety and virtue of their ancestors. Exod. iii. 15. vi. 3, 4, 5. Deut. iv. 37.

8. It should also be carefully observed, that God selected the Israelitish nation, and manifested himself to them by various displays of his power and goodness; not principally for their own sakes, to make them a happy and flourishing people; but to be subservient to his own high and great designs with regard to all mankind And we shall entertain a very wrong, low, and narrow idea of this select nation, and of the dispensations of God towards it; if we do not consider it as a beacon, or a light set upon a hill, as raised up to be a public voucher of the being and providence of God, and of the truth of the revelation delivered to them in all ages, and in all parts of the world; and consequently, that the Divine scheme, in relation to the Jewish polity, had reference to other people, and even to us at this day, as well as to the Jews themselves. The situation of this nation, lying upon the borders of Asia, Europe, and Africa, was very convenient for such a general purpose.

9. It is further observable, that this scheme was wisely calculated to answer great ends under all events. If this nation continued obedient, their visible prosperity under the guardianship of an extraordinary Providence, would be a very proper and extensive instruction to the nations of the earth. And no doubt so; for as they were obedient, and favoured with the signal interpositions of the Divine power; their case was very useful to their neighbours. On the other hand, if they were disobedient, then their calamities, and especially their dispersions, would nearly answer the same purpose; by spreading the knowledge of the true God and of revelation, in the countries where before they were not known. And so wisely was this scheme laid at first, with regard to the laws of the nation; both civil and religious; and so carefully has it all along been conducted by the Divine providence; that it still holds good, even at this day, full 3600 years from the time when it first took place; and is still of public use for confirming the truth of revelation. I mean, not only as the Christian profession spread over a great part of the world, has grown out of this scheme; but as the Jews themselves, in virtue thereof, after a dispersion of about 1700 years, over all the face of the earth, every where in a state of ignominy and contempt have, notwithstanding, subsisted in great numbers, distinct and separate from all other nations. This seems to me a standing miracle; nor can I assign it to any other cause, but the will and the extraordinary interposal of Heaven; when I consider that, of all the famous nations of the world, who might have been distinguished from others with great advantage, and the most illustrious marks of honour and renown, as the Assyrians, Persians, Macedonians, Romans, who all, in their turns, held the empire of the world, and were, with great ambition, the lords of mankind; yet these, even in their own countries, the seat of their ancient glory, are quite dissolved, and sunk into the body of mankind; nor is there a person upon earth can boast he is descended from those renowned and imperial ancestors. Whereas a small nation generally despised, and which was both by Pagans and pretended Christians, for many ages harassed, persecuted, butchered, and distressed, as the most detestable of all people upon the face of the earth; (according to the prophecy of Moses, Deut. xxviii. 63, &c. see Dr. Patrick's commentary upon that place,) and which, therefore, one would imagine, every soul that belonged to it should have gladly disowned; and have been willing the odious name should be entirely extinguished: yet, I say, this hated nation has continued in a body quite distinct and separate from all other people, even in a state of dispersion and grievous persecution, for about 1700 years; agreeably to the prediction, Isai. xlvi. 28. I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee. This demonstrates that the wisdom which so formed them into a peculiar body, and the providence which has so preserved them; that they have almost, ever since the deluge, subsisted in a state divided from the rest of mankind, and are still likely to do so, is not human but divine. For, no human wisdom nor power could form, or however could execute, such a vast extensive design. Thus the very being of the Jews, in their present circumstances, is a standing public proof of the truth of Revelation.

§ II. The peculiar Honours and Privileges of the Jewish Nation, while they were the peculiar People of God: and the Terms signifying those Honours, explained.

10. The nature and dignity of the foregoing scheme, and the state and privileges of the Jewish nation, will be better understood, if we carefully observe the particular phrases by which their relation to God, and his favours to them, are expressed in Scripture.

11. As God, in his infinite wisdom and goodness, was pleased to prefer them before any other nation, and to single them out for the purposes of revelation, and preserving the knowledge, worship, and obedience of the true God; God is said to choose them, and they are represented as his chosen or elect people: Deut. iv. 37. vii. 6. x. 15. The Lord had a delight in thy fathers—and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people. 1 Kings iii. 8. Thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people that cannot be numbered. 1 Chron. xvi. 13, O ye seed of Israel his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen ones. Psal. cv. 6. xxxiii. 12, Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance; cv. 43. cvi. 5, That I may see the good of thy chosen or elect, that I may rejoice in the goodness of thy nation; cxxxv. 4. Isai. xli. 8, 9. xliii. 20. xliv. 1, 2. xlv. 4, For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name; Ezek. xx. 5, Thus saith the Lord, in the day when I chose Israel, and lifted my hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt.—Hence, reinstating them in their former privileges, is expressed by choosing them again. Isai. xiv. 1, For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land, Zech. i. 17. ii. 12.

12. The first step he took in execution of his purpose of election, was to rescue them from their wretched situation, in the servitude and idolatry of Egypt; and to carry them, through all enemies and dangers, to the liberty and happy state to which he intended to advance them. With regard to which, the language of Scripture is—1. that he delivered—2. saved—3. bought, or purchased—4. redeemed them. Exod. iii. 8. And I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them unto a good land. So Exod. xviii. 8, 9, 10. Judg. vi. 8, 9. Exod. vi. 6, I am the Lord, and I will bring you from under the burthens of the Egyptians, and I will rid, (deliver,) you out of their bondage. So Exod. v. 23. 1 Sam. x. 18.

13. As God brought them out of Egypt, invited them to the honours and happiness of his people, and by many express declarations, and acts of mercy, engaged them to adhere to him, as their God; he is said to call them, and they were his called. Isai. xli. 8, 9, But thou, Israel, art my servant,—thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof. See ver. 2. chap. li. 2. Hos. xi. 1, When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt. Isai. xlviii. 12, Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel my called.

14. And as he brought them out of the most abject slavery, and advanced them to a new and happy state of being, attended with distinguishing privileges, enjoyments, and marks of honour: he is said—1. to create, make, and form them—2. to give them life—3. to have begotten them. Isai. xliii. 1, But thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: ver. 5. Fear not, for I am with thee: I will bring thy Seed from the East, and gather thee from the West: ver. 7, Even every one that is called by my name; for I have created him for my glory; I have formed him; yea, I have made him: ver. 15, I am the Lord, your Holy One, the creator of Israel, your King. Deut. xxxii. 6, Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people?—Hath he not made thee, and established thee? Ver. 15. Psal. cxlix. 2. Isai. xxvii. 11, It is a people of no understanding; therefore, he that made them will have no mercy on them; and he that formed them will show them no favour. xliii. 21. xliv. 1, 2, Yet hear now, O Jacob, my servant, and Israel whom I have chosen, thus saith the Lord that made thee, and formed thee from the womb. Ver. 21, 24, Thus saith the Lord thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, &c.

15. Thus, as God created the whole body of the Jews, and made them to live, they received a being or existence; Isai. lxiii. 19, We are; thou hast never ruled over them, (the heathen,) they are not called by thy name. Or rather thus; We are of old; thou hast not ruled over them; thy Name hath not been called upon them. It is in the Hebrew, היינו מעולם לא משלת בם hayinu me-ólam, lo mashalta bam; and are therefore called by the Apostle things that ARE in opposition to the Gentiles, who, as they were not formerly created in the same manner, were the things which ARE NOT; 1 Cor. i. 28, God has chosen things which ARE NOT, to bring to nought things that ARE. Further—

16. As he made them live, and begat them, (1) He sustains the character of a Father, and (2) they are his children, his sons and daughters, which were born to him. Deut. xxxii. 6, Do ye thus requite the Lord, O foolish people?—Is he not thy father, that hath bought thee? Isai. lxiii. 16, Doubtless thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer, &c. Jer. xxxi. 9, For I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born. Mal. ii. 10, Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us?

17. And, as the whole body of the Jews were the children of one father, even of God, this naturally established among themselves the mutual and endearing relation of brethren, (including that of sisters,) and they were obliged to consider, and to deal with each other accordingly. Lev. xxv. 46. Deut. i. 16. iii. 8. xv. 7, If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren, thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand against thy poor brother, xvii. 15. xviii. 15. xix. 19. xxii. 1. xxiii. 19. xxiv. 14. Judg. xx. 13. 1 Kings xii. 24. [Acts xxiii. 1.] And in many other places.

18. And the relation of God, as a father to the Jewish nation, and they his children, will lead our thoughts to a clear idea of their being, as they are frequently called, the house or family of God. Num. xii. 7, My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all my house. 1 Chron. xvii. 14, I will settle him in my house, and in my kingdom for ever. Jer. xii. 7, I have forsaken my house, I have left my heritage. Hos. ix. 15, For the wickedness of their (Ephraim's,) doings, I will drive them out of my house, I will love them no more: all their Princes are revolters, Zech. ix. 8. Psal. xciii. 5. And in other places, and perhaps frequently in the Psalms, xxiii. 6. xxvii. 4, &c.

19. Further; the Scripture directs us to consider the land of Canaan as the estate or inheritance belonging to this house or family. Num. xxvi. 53, Unto these, (namely all the children of Israel, the land shall be divided for an inheritance. Deut. xxi. 23, That thy land be not defiled which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance. See the same in many other places.

20. Here it may not be improper to take notice that the land of Canaan, in reference to their trials, wanderings, and fatigues in the wilderness is represented as their rest. Exod. xxxiii. 14, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee REST. Deut. iii. 20. xii. 9, For ye are not yet come to the rest, and to the inheritance which the Lord your God giveth you, ver. 10. xxv. 19. Psal. xcv. 11, Unto whom I sware in my wrath that they should not enter into my REST.

21. Thus the Israelites were the house, or family of God. Or we may conceive them formed into a nation, having the Lord Jehovah, the true God, at their head; who, on this account, is styled their God, governor, protector, or king; and they his people, subjects, or servants. Exod. xix. 6, Ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation. Deut. iv. 34, Hath God essayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation? Isai. li. 4, Hearken unto me, my people, and give ear unto me, my NATION.

22. And it is in reference to their being a society peculiarly appropriated to God, and under his special protection and government, that they are sometimes called the city, the holy city, the city of the Lord, of God. Psal. xlvi. 4, There is a river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God: the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. Ci. 8, I will early destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord. Isai. xlviii. 1, 2, Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel: for they call themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel.

23. Hence the whole community, or church, is denoted by the city Jerusalem, and sometimes by Zion, Mount Zion, the city of David. Isai. lxii. 1, 6, 7, I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace—and give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth: lxvi. 18, 19, I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: lxvi. 10. Ezek. xvi. 3, 13. Joel iii. 17. Zech. i. 14. viii. 3, &c. xiii. 1. Isai. xxviii. 16, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, &c. lxi. 3. Joel ii. 32. Obad. 17, But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance, &c. ver. 21.

24. Hence also they are said to be written, or enrolled in the book of God, as being citizens invested in the privileges and immunities of his kindgom. Exod. xxxii. 32, Yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their sin; and, if not, blot me I pray thee, out of the book thou hast written. Ver. 33, And the Lord said—Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book. Ezek. xiii. 9.

25. And it deserves our notice; that as the other nations of the world did not belong to this city, commonwealth, or kingdom of God, and so were not his subjects, and people, in the same peculiar sense as the Jews; for these reasons, they are frequently represented as strangers and aliens, and as being not a people. And as they served other gods, and were generally corrupt in their morals, they have the character of enemies. Exod. xx. 10. Lev. xxv. 47, And if a sojourner, or a stranger, wax rich by thee, and thy brother sell himself to the stranger. Deut. xiv. 21, Thou mayest sell it to an alien. Isai. lxi. 5, And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your ploughmen. And in many other places. Deut. xxxii. 21, I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people. Isai. vii. 8. Hos. i. 10. ii. 23, I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people: And they shall say, Thou art my God. Psal. lxxiv. 4, Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregation: lxxviii. 66. lxxxiii. 2. lxxxix. 10. Isai. xlii. 13. lix. 18.—Rom. v. 10, When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God. Col. i. 21.

26. The kind and particular regards of God for the Israelites, and their special relation to him, is also signified by that of husband and wife; and his making a covenant with them, to be their God, is called espousals. Jer. xxxi. 32, Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt, (which my covenant they broke, although I was an husband unto them saith the Lord,) iii. 20. Ezek. xvi. 31, 32. Hos. ii. 2, Plead (ye children of Judah, and children of Israel, chap. i. 2.) with your mother; plead, for she is not my wife, neither am I her husband; that is, for her wickedness I have divorced her, (Isai. lxii. 4, 5.) Jer. ii. 2, Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, thus saith the Lord, I remember thee the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals; when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in the land that was not sown; iii. 14, Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you, Isai. lxii. 4, 5.

27. Hence it is that the Jewish church, or community, is represented as a mother; and particular members as her children. Isai. l. 1, Thus saith the Lord, where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, &c.? Hos. ii. 2, 5, For their mother hath played the harlot? Isai. xlix. 17, Thy children, (O Zion,) shall make haste, &c. Ver. 22, 25. Jer. v. 7. Ezek. xvi. 35, 36. Hos. iv. 6, My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge—seeing thou hast forgotten the law of God, I will also forget thy children.

28. Hence also, from the notion of the Jewish church being a wife to God, her husband; her idolatry, or worshipping of strange gods, comes under the name of adultery and whoredom, and she takes the character of a harlot. Jer. iii. 8, And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery: ver. 9, And it came to pass, through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks: xiii. 27. Ezek. xvi. 15. xxiii. 43. Jer. iii. 6, Backsliding Israel is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there has played the harlot.

29. As God exercised a singular providence over them in supplying, guiding, and protecting them, as he was their shepherd, and they his flock, his sheep. Psal. lxxvii. 20. lxxviii. 52. lxxx. 1, Give ear, O shepherd of Israel: Isai. xl. 11, He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: Psal. lxxiv. 1, O God, why hast thou cast us off for ever? Why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture? Lxxix. 13. xcv. 7. Jer. xiii. 17, Mine eye shall weep sore—because the Lord's flock is carried captive. See Ezek. xxxiv. throughout; and in many other places.

30. Upon nearly the same account, as God established them, provided proper means for their happiness, and improvement in knowledge and virtue; they are compared to a vine and a vineyard, and God to the husbandman, who planted and dressed it; and particular members of the community are compared to branches. Psal. lxxx. 8, Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt; thou hast cast out the heathen and planted it: ver. 14, Return, we beseech thee, O Lord of Hosts; look down from Heaven, behold and visit thy vine; and the vineyard which thy right hand has planted. Isai. v. 1, Now I will sing to my well-beloved a song, touching his vineyard: my well-beloved has a vineyard in a very fruitful hill: ver. 2, And he fenced it, &c. ver. 7, For the vineyard of the Lord—is the house of Israel: Exod. xv. 17. Jer. ii. 21. Psal. lxxx. 11, She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river: Isai. xxvii. 9, 10, 11, By this shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged;—yet the defenced city shall be desolate—there shall the calf feed—and consume the branches thereof. When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for it is a people of no understanding; therefore, he that made them will have no mercy on them: Jer. xi. 16, The Lord hath called thy name a green olive tree, fair and of goodly fruit, &c. Ezek. xvii. 6. Hos. xiv. 5, 6. Nahum ii. 2. and in many other places. (Rom. xi. 17, And if some of the branches were broken off, &c. ver. 18, 19, Thou wilt say then, the branches were broken off that I might be grafted in.)

31. As they were, by the will of God, set apart, and appropriated in a special manner to his honour and obedience, and furnished with extraordinary means and motives to holiness; so God is said to sanctify or hallow them. Exod. xxxi. 13, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, verily my sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you, throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord, that doth sanctify you: Ezek. xx. 12. Lev. xx. 8, And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them; for I am the Lord which sanctify you: xxi. 8. xxii. 9, 16, 32. Ezek. xxxvii. 28.

32. Hence it is that they are styled a holy nation, or people, and saints: Exod. xix. 6, And ye shall be to me—a holy nation: Deut. vii. 6, For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: xiv. 2. xxvi. 19. xxxiii. 3. 2 Chron. vi. 41, Let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness. Psal. xxxiv. 9, O fear the Lord, ye his saints: 1. 5, Gather my saints together unto me: ver. 7, Hear, O my people, &c. lxxix. 2. cxlviii. 14, He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of his saints; even of the children of Israel, &c.

33. Further, by his presence among them, and their being consecrated to him, they were made his house, or building, the sanctuary, which he built. And this is implied by his dwelling and walking amongst them. Psal. cxiv. 2, Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion: Isai. lvi. 3, Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, the Lord hath utterly separated me from his people: ver. 4, for thus saith the Lord; ver. 5, Even unto them will I give in my house, and within my walls, a place and a name. Jer. xxxiii. 7, And I will cause the captivity of Judah, and of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first. Amos ix. 11, I will raise up the tabernacle of David—I will raise up its ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old. Exod. xxv. 8, And let them, the children of Israel, make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them, xxix. 45, 46, And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God, &c. Lev. xxxvi. 11, 12, And I will set my tabernacle among you:—And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people. Numb. xxxv. 34. 2 Sam. vii. 7. Ezek. xliii. 7, 9, And he said unto me—the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I dwell in the midst of the children of Israel, &c. Hence we may gather, that dwell, in such places, imports to reign; and may be applied figuratively to whatever governs in our hearts, Rom. vii. 17, 20. viii. 9, 11.

34. And not only did God, as their king, dwell among them as in his house, temple, or palace; but he also conferred upon them the honour of kings, as he redeemed them from servitude, made them lords of themselves, and raised them above other nations to reign over them: and of priests too, as they were to attend upon God, from time to time continually, in the solemn offices of religion, which he had appointed. Exod. xix. 6, And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, or a kingly priesthood. Deut. xxvi. 19, And to make thee high above all nations—in praise, and in name, and in honour, and that thou mayest be a holy people unto the Lord thy God: xxviii. 1. xv. 6, For the Lord thy God blesseth thee—and thou shalt reign over many nations. Isai. lxi. 6, But ye, (the seed of Jacob) shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God:—

35. Thus the whole body of the Jewish nation were separated unto God. And as they were more nearly related to him than any other people, as they were joined to him in covenant, and felt access to him in the ordinances of worship, and in virtue of his promise, had a particular title to his regards and blessings, he is said to be near unto them, and they unto him. Exod. xxxiii. 16. Lev. xx. 24, I am the Lord your God, who have separated you from other people. Ver. 26. 1 Kings viii. 52, 53. Deut. iv. 7, For what nation is there so great that hath God so near unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for? Psal. cxlviii. 14, The children of Israel, a people near unto him.

36. And here I may observe; that as the Gentiles were not then taken into the same peculiar covenant with the Jews, nor stood in the same special relation to God, nor enjoyed their extraordinary religious privileges, but lay out of the commonwealth of Israel, they are, on the other hand, said to be far off. Isai. lvii. 19, I create the fruit of the lips: peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord, and I will heal him. Zech. vi. 15, And they that are far off shall come and build in the temple. Eph. ii. 17, And come and preached to you, (Gentiles,) which were afar off, and to them that were nigh, (the Jews.)

37. And, as God had, in all these respects, distinguished them from all other nations, and sequestered them unto himself, they are styled his peculiar people: Deut. vii. 6. The Lord has chosen thee to be a special, (or peculiar,) people, unto himself: xiv. 2, The Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth; xxvi. 18.

38. As they were a body of men particularly related to God, instructed by him in the rules of wisdom, devoted to his service, and employed in his true worship, they are called his congregation, or church. Num. xvi. 3. xxviii. 17. Josh. xxii. 17. 1 Chron. xxviii. 8, Now therefore, in the sight of all Israel the congregation, the church, of the Lord. Psal. lxxiv. 2.

39. For the same reason, they are considered as God's possession, inheritance, or heritage. Deut. ix. 26, O Lord, destroy not thy people, and thine inheritance. Ver. 29. Psal. xxxiii. 12. cxvi. 40. Jer. x. 16. xii. 7, I have forsaken my house, I have left my heritage. I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hands of her enemies. And in many other places.

§ III. Reflections on the foregoing Privileges and Honours.

40. Whether I have ranged the foregoing particulars in proper order, or given an exact account of each, let the studious of Scripture knowledge consider. What ought to be specially observed is this; that all the forementioned privileges, benefits, relations, and honours, did belong to ALL the children of Israel without exception. The Lord Jehovah, was the God, King, Saviour, Father, Husband, Shepherd, &c. to them ALL. He saved, bought, redeemed; he created, he begot, he made, he planted, &c. them ALL. And they were ALL his people, nation, heritage; his children, spouse, flock, vineyard, &c. They all had a right to the ordinances of worship, to the promises of God's blessing, and especially to the promise of the land of Canaan. ALL enjoyed the protection and special favours of God in the wilderness, till they had forfeited them: ALL ate of the manna, and ALL drank of the water out of the rock, &c. That these privileges and benefits belonged to the whole body of the Israelitish nation, is evident from all the texts I have already quoted; which he, who observes carefully, will find do all of them speak of the whole nation, the whole community without exception.

41. And that all these privileges, honours, and advantages were common to the whole nation, is confirmed by this further consideration; that they were the effect of God's free Grace, without regard to any prior righteousness of theirs; and therefore they are assigned to God's love as the spring from whence they flowed; and the donation of those benefits is expressed by God's loving them: they are also assigned to God's mercy, and the bestowing of them is expressed by God's showing them mercy. Deut. ix. 4, 5, 6, Speak not thou in thy heart, after that the Lord has cast them out before thee, saying, for my righteousness the Lord hath brought me in to possess this Land.—Not for thy righteousness or the uprightness of thy heart dost thou go to possess their land, &c. Understand, therefore, that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this good land to possess it for thy righteousness; for thou art a stiff-necked people.

42. Deut. vii. 7, The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people. Verse 8, But because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers; hath the Lord brought you out (of Egypt,) xxxiii. 3, He loved the people. Isai. xliii. 3, 4. Jer. xxxi. 3. Hos. iii. 1. ix. 15.

43. It is on account of this general love to the Israelites, that they are honoured with the title of Beloved. Psal. lx. 5, That thy beloved may be delivered, save with thy right hand, and hear me. Psal cviii. 6. Jer. xi. 15. What hath my beloved to do in my house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many? xii. 7, I have forsaken my house, I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hands of my enemies, (and in their present condition at this day the Jews are still, in a sense, beloved, Rom. xi. 28.) 44. Exod. xv. 13, Thou, in thy mercy, hast led forth the people which thou hast redeemed, &c. Psal. xcviii. 3. Isai. liv. 10. Mic. vii. 20, Thou shalt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old. Luke i. 54, 55. He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy, as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham and his seed for ever. Agreeably to this, he showed them mercy as he continued them to be his people, when he might have cut them off. Exod. xxxiii. 19, I will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and I will show mercy on whom I will show mercy. And when, after their present state of rejection, they shall again be taken into the church, this too is expressed by their obtaining mercy. Rom. xi. 31.

45. In these texts, and others of the same kind, it is evident the love and mercy of God hath respect not to particular persons among the Jews, but to the whole nation; and therefore is to be understood of that general love and mercy whereby he singled them out to be a peculiar nation to himself, favoured with extraordinary blessings.

46. And it is with regard to this sentiment and manner of speech, that the GENTILES, who were not distinguished in the same manner, are said, not to have obtained mercy. Hos. ii. 23, And I will sow her unto me in the earth, and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy, and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, thou art my God.

47. Further; it should be noted, as a very material and important circumstance, that all this mercy and love was granted and confirmed to the Israelites under the sanction of a Covenant; the most solemn declaration and assurance, sworn to and ratified by the oath of God. Gen. xvii. 7, 8, And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God. Gen. xxii. 16, 17, 18, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice. This covenant with Abraham was the Magna Charta, the basis of the Jewish constitution, which was renewed afterwards with the whole nation; and is frequently referred to as the ground and security of all their blessings. Exod. vi. 3, 7, I appeared unto Abraham, Isaac, &c. And I have also established my covenant with them, to give them the land of Canaan. I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel, and I have remembered my covenant, and will take you to me for a people, and I will be to you a God. Deut. vii. 8. Psal. cv. 8, 9, 10, He hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting COVENANT. Jer. xi. 5. Ezek. xvi. 8. xx. 5.

48. But, what most of all deserves our attention is this; that the Jewish constitution was a scheme for promoting Virtue, true religion, or a good and pious life. In all the forementioned instances they were very happy. But were they to rest in them? Because these blessings were the gift of love and mercy, without respect to their righteousness or obedience; was it therefore needless for them to be obedient? or were they, purely on account of benefits already received, secure of the favour and blessing of God for ever? by no means. And that I may explain this important point more clearly, I shall distinguish their blessings into antecedent and consequent, and show, from the Scriptures, how both stand in relation to their duty.

49. Antecedent blessings are all the benefits hitherto mentioned, which were given by the mere grace of God, antecedently to their obedience, and without respect to it; but yet so that they were intended to be motives to obedience. Which effect if they produced, then their Election, Redemption, and Calling were confirmed, and they were entitled to all their blessings, promised in the covenant; which blessings I therefore call Consequent, because they were given only in consequence of their obedience. But, on the other hand, if the antecedent blessings did not produce obedience to the will of God; if his chosen people, his children did not obey his voice, then they forfeited all their privileges, all their honours and relations to God, all his favours and promises, and fell under the severest threatenings of his wrath and displeasure. Thus life itself may be distinguished into I. Antecedent, which God gives freely to all his creatures of his mere good will and liberality, before they can have done any thing to deserve it. II. Consequent life; which is the continuance of life in happy circumstances, and has relation to the good conduct of a rational creature. As he improves life antecedent, so he shall through the favour of God, enjoy life consequent.

50. And that this was the very end and design of the dispensation of God's extraordinary favours to the Jews, namely, to engage them to duty and obedience; or that it was a scheme for promoting Virtue, is clear beyond all dispute from every part of the Old Testament. Note, I shall make Ant. stand for antecedent love or motives; Cons. for consequent love or reward; and Thr. for threatenin[illegible] (Ant.) Gen. xvii. 1, I am God, All-sufficient, (Duty) walk thou before me, and be thou perfect. Verse 4, 8, (Ant.) I will be a God unto thee, and thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee and unto thy seed, the land of Canaan, and I will be their God. Verse 9, (Duty) Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou and thy seed after thee. Gen. xxii. 16, 18, (Duty) Because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, because thou hast obeyed my voice, Verse 16, 17, (Cons.) By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, that in blessing, I will bless thee, and in multiplying, I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

51. (Here let it be noted, that the same blessings may be both consequent and antecedent with regard to different persons. With regard to Abraham, the blessings promised in this place, (Gen. xxii. 16, 17, 18,) are consequent, as they were the reward of his obedience, because thou hast obeyed my voice. But with regard to his posterity these same blessings were of the antecedent kind; because, though they had respect to Abraham's obedience; yet, with regard to the Jews, they were given freely or antecedently to any obedience they had performed. So the blessings of redemption, with regard to our Lord's obedience, are consequent; but with regard to us, they are of free grace and antecedent, not owing to any obedience of ours, though granted in consequence of Christ's obedience. Phil. ii. 8, 9, &c. Eph. i. 7. Heb. v. 8, 9. Nor doth the donation of blessings upon many, in consequence of the obedience of one, at all diminish the grace, but very much recommends the wisdom that bestows them.

52. Isai. xliii. 7, 21, (Ant.) This people have I made for myself, (Duty) they shall show forth my praise. Jer. xiii. 11. Lev. xx. 7, 8.

(Ant.) I am the Lord your God, I am the Lord which sanctify you. (Duty) Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy, and ye shall keep my statutes and do them. Deut. iv. 7, 8.

(Ant.) What nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh them, as the Lord our God is? And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous, &c. Verse 9, (Duty) Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, Verse 20.

(Ant.) The Lord hath taken you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are at this day, Verse 23; (Duty) Take heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God, Verse 24. (Thr.) For the Lord thy God is a consuming fire, Verse 25, When ye shall corrupt yourselves, and do evil in the sight of the Lord thy God, Verse 26, I call heaven and earth to witness, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land, Verse 34.

(Ant.) Hath God essayed to go, and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by signs and wonders, &c. &c. Verse 39, (Duty) Know therefore this day, and consider it in thy heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, &c. Thou shalt keep, therefore, his statutes and his commandments, (Cons.) that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, &c. Deut. v. 6.

(Ant.) I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage, Verse 7, (Duty) Thou shalt have no other gods before me, &c. Verse 20, O that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me and keep all my commandments always, (Cons.) that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever. Verse 33. (Duty) You shall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God hath commanded you, (Cons.) that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, &c. chap. vi. 21.

(Ant.) We were Pharaoh's bondmen, and the Lord brought us out of Egypt, &c. Verse 24, (Duty) And the Lord commanded us to do all these statutes, to fear the Lord our God, (Cons.) for our good always that he might preserve us alive, &c. chap. vii. 6, 7, 8.

(Ant.) Thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself; the Lord loved you and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen. Verse 9. (Duty) Know therefore that the Lord thy God he is God, &c. Verse 11. Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments and the statutes and the judgments which I command thee this day, to do them. Verse 12, 13, 18. (Cons.) Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments and keep and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he swore unto thy fathers. And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee, &c. chap. viii. 2.

(Ant.) Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee, &c. Verse 5, Thou shalt also consider in thy heart, that as a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee. Verse 6. (Duty) Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him, Verse 11, Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, &c. Verse 19. (Thr.) And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, I testify against you this day, that ye shall surely perish. chap. x. 15.

(Ant.) The Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, Verse 12, 16, (Duty) Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, &c. Verse 22.

(Ant.) Thy fathers went down into Egypt, with threescore and ten persons, and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude, chap. xi. 1. (Duty) Therefore shalt thou love the Lord thy God, and keep his charge, &c. Verse 13, And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently unto my commandments, &c. Verse 14, (Cons.) That I will give you the rain of your land, &c. Verse 26. Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse. A blessing, if you obey the commandments of the Lord; and a curse, if ye will not obey, &c. chap. xii. 28, (Duty) Observe and hear all these words which I command thee, (Cons.) that it may go well with thee and thy children after thee for ever, when thou hast done that which is good and right in the sight of the Lord thy God. Chap. xiii. 17, 18. xv. 4, 5. xxvii. 9.

(Ant.) Take heed and hearken, O Israel, this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God. Verse 10. (Duty) Thou shalt therefore obey the voice of the Lord thy God, and do his commandments, &c. chap. xxviii. 1. And it shall come to pass, if thou hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do his commandments, (Cons.) That the Lord will set thee on high above all nations of the earth. And all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, &c. Verse 15. (Thr.) But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments and his statutes, that all these curses shall come upon thee and overtake thee, &c. Verse 45, Moreover, all these curses shall come upon thee till thou be destroyed, because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the Lord thy God. Chap. xxix. 2, 10. xxx. 15, 18, (Duty) See, I have set before you this day life and good, and death and evil; in that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes, and his judgments, (Cons.) that thou mayest live and multiply; and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. (Thr.) But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away and worship other gods, and serve them, I denounce unto you this day that ye shall surely perish.

53. Whosoever peruses the first sixteen, and the 28th, 29th, 30th, 31st, and 32nd chapters of Deuteronomy, will clearly see, that all the privileges, honours, instructions, protections, &c. which were given them as a select body of men, were intended as motives to obedience; which, if thus wisely improved, would bring upon them still further blessings. Thus God drew them to duty and virtue by his loving-kindness. Jer. xxxi. 3. He drew them with cords of a man, such considerations as are apt to influence the rational nature, and with the bands of love, Hos. xi. 4. But if they were disobedient, and did not make a right use of God's benefits and favours, then they were subjected to a curse, and should perish. And this is so evident from this single book that I shall not need to heap together the numerous quotations which might be collected from other parts of scripture, particularly the prophetic writings. Only I may further establish this point by observing—that, in fact, though all the Israelites in the wilderness were the people, children, and chosen of God; all entitled to the Divine blessing, and partakers of the several instances of his goodness; yet, notwithstanding all their advantages and honours, when they were disobedient to his will, distrustful of his power and providence, or revolted to the worship of idol gods, great numbers of them fell under the Divine vengeance, Exod. xxxii. 8, 27, 28. Num. xi. 4, 5, 6, 33. xvi. 2, 3, 32, 35, 41, 49. xxi. 5, 6. And though they had all a promise of entering into the land of Canaan, yet the then generation, from twenty years old and upwards, for their unbelief, were, by the righteous judgment of God, excluded from the benefit of that promise; they forfeited their inheritance, and died in the wilderness, Num. xiv. 28—36. Heb. iii. 7, &c.

53. From all this it appears, that all the high privileges of the Jews, before-mentioned, and all the singular relations, in which they stood to God, as they were saved, bought, redeemed by him; as they were his called and elect; as they were his children whom he begot, created, made, and formed, his sons and daughters, born to him; his heritage, church, house, and kingdom; his saints, whom he sanctified; his vine or vineyard, which he planted; his sheep and flock: I say these, and such like honours, advantages, and relations, as they are assigned to the whole body, do not import an absolute, final state of happiness and favour of any kind; but are to be considered as displays, instances, and descriptions of God's love and goodness to them, which were to operate as a mean, a moral mean, upon their hearts. They were, in truth, motives to oblige and excite to obedience; and only, when so improved, became final and permanent blessings; but neglected, or misimproved, they were enjoyed in vain, they vanished and came to nothing; and wicked Israelites were no more the objects of God's favour, than wicked heathens. Amos ix. 7, speaking of corrupt Jews, Are ye not as children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord.

54. And upon the whole, we may from the clearest evidence conclude, that the selecting the Jewish nation from the rest of the world, and taking them into a peculiar relation to God; was a scheme for promoting true religion and virtue in all its principles and branches, upon motives adapted to rational nature; which principles and branches of true religion are particularly specified in their law. And to this end, no doubt, every part of their constitution, even the ceremonial, was wisely adapted, considering their circumstances, and the then state of the world.

55. The love of God, as it was the foundation and original of this scheme, so it was the prime motive in it. God begun the work of salvation among them, antecedently to any thing which they might do, on their part, to engage his goodness. They did not first love God, but God first loved them: their obedience did not first advance towards God; but his mercy first advanced towards them, and saved, bought, redeemed them, took them for his people, and gave them a part in the blessings of his covenant. And as for his displeasure, they were under that only consequentially; or after they had neglected his goodness, and abused the mercy and means, the privileges and honours which they enjoyed. This, I think, must appear very evident to any one, who closely and maturely deliberates upon the true state of the Jewish church.

Thus, and for those ends, not excluding others before or afterwards mentioned, the Jewish constitution was erected.

§ IV. The Jewish Peculiarity not prejudicial to the rest of Mankind—The Jewish Œconomy being established for the Benefit of the World in general.

56. But although the Father of mankind was pleased, in his wisdom, to erect the foregoing scheme, for promoting virtue, and preserving true religion in one nation of the world, upon which he conferred particular blessings and privileges; this was no injury nor prejudice to the rest of mankind. For, as to the original favours, or external advantages, God, who may do what he pleases with his own, bestows them in any kind or degree, as he thinks fit. Thus he makes a variety of creatures; some angels in a higher sphere of being, some men in a lower. And among men, he distributes different faculties, stations and opportunities in life. To one he gives ten talents, to another five, to another two, and to another one, severally as he pleases; without any impeachment of his justice, and to the glorious display and illustration of his wisdom. And so he may bestow different advantages, and favours upon different nations, with as much justice and wisdom, as he has placed them in different climates, or vouchsafed them various accommodations and conveniences of life. But, whatever advantages some nations may enjoy above others, still God is the God and Father of all; and his extraordinary blessings to some are not intended to diminish his regards to others. He erected a scheme of polity and religion for promoting the knowledge of God, and the practice of virtue in one nation; but not with a design to withdraw his goodness or providential regards from the rest. God has made a variety of soils and situations; yet he cares for every part of the globe; and the inhabitants of the North Cape, where they conflict a good part of the year with night and extreme cold, are no more neglected by the universal Lord, than those who enjoy the perpetual summer and pleasures of the Canary Isles. At the same time, God chose the children of Israel to be his peculiar people, in a special covenant; he was the God of the rest of mankind; and regarded them as the objects of his care and benevolence. Exod. xix. 5, Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: כי לי כל הארץ, ALTHOUGH all the earth is mine. So it should be rendered. Deut. x. 14, 15, Behold the Heaven, and the Heaven of Heavens is the Lord's thy God, the earth with all that therein are. Only the Lord had a delight in thy fathers, to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day. Ver. 17, 18, For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not persons, (or is no respecter of persons, (Acts x. 34. through partiality to one person, or one nation more than another,) nor taketh reward. He doth execute the judgment of the Fatherless and Widow, and LOVETH THE STRANGER, in giving him food and raiment. A Stranger was one who was of any other nation beside the Jewish. Psal. cxlvi. 9, The Lord preserveth the STRANGERS. viii. 1. xix. 1, 2, 3, 4. xxiv. 1. xxxiii. 5, The EARTH is full of the goodness of the Lord. Ver. 8, Let ALL the earth fear the Lord; let ALL the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him. Ver. 12, Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he has chosen for his own inheritance. Ver. 13, The Lord looketh from Heaven; He beholdeth all the sons of men. From the place of his habitation he looketh upon ALL the inhabitants of the earth. He fashioneth their hearts alike; He considereth all their works. xlvii. 2, 8, The Lord most high is a great king over ALL the earth. God reigneth over the heathen. lxvi. 7. cvii. 8, 15, 21. cxlv. 9, The Lord is good to ALL, and his tender mercies are over ALL his WORKS. Many more passages might be brought out of the Scriptures of the Old Testament to show that all the nations of the earth were the objects of the divine care and goodness; at the same time that he vouchsafed a particular and extraordinary providence towards the Jewish nation.

57. And agreeably to this, the Israelites were required to exercise all benevolence to the Gentiles, or Strangers, to abstain from all injurious treatment, to permit them to dwell peaceably and comfortably among them, to partake of their blessings, to incorporate into the same happy body, if they thought fit; and to join in their religious solemnities. Exod. xxii. 21, Thou shalt neither vex a stranger nor oppress him. xxii. 9, 12. Lev. xix. 10. Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger; I am the Lord your God. xxiii. 22. xxx. 33, 34, And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him. But the stranger that dwelleth with you, shall be unto you as one born amongst you, and thou shalt love him as thyself. xxv. 35, And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him: yea, though he be a stranger or a sojourner; that he may live with thee. Num. xv. 14, 15, And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the Lord; as ye do so shall he do. One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations; as ye are, so shall the stranger be, before the Lord. Deut. xxvi. 11, 12, And thou shalt rejoice in every good thing, which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thy house, thou, and the Levite, and the stranger that is among you. Ezek. xxii. 7, 29.

58. And not only were they required to treat strangers, or men of other nations, with kindness and humanity; but it appears from several parts of Scripture, that the whole Jewish dispensation had respect to the nations of the world. Not, indeed, to bring them all into the Jewish church, (that would have been impracticable, as to the greatest part of the world,) but to spread the knowledge and obedience of God in the earth. Or, it was a scheme which was intended to have its good effects beyond the pale of the Jewish enclosure, and was established for the benefit of all mankind. Gen. xii. 3, And in thee (Abraham) shall all families of the earth be blessed. xxii. 18, And in thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed. Exod. vii. 5, And the Egyptians shall know that I am the Lord, when I stretch forth my hand upon Egypt, and bring out the children of Israel. ix. 16, and indeed for this very cause have I raised thee (Pharaoh) up, for to show in thee my power, and that my name may be declared throughout all the earth. xv. 14. Lev. xxvi. 45. Num. xiv. 13, 14, 15.

59. But though the Jewish peculiarity did not exclude the rest of the world from the care and beneficence of the universal Father; and though the Jews were commanded to exercise benevolence towards persons of other nations; yet about the time when the gospel was promulgated, the Jews were greatly elevated on account of their distinguishing privileges: they looked upon themselves as the only favourites of Heaven, and regarded the rest of mankind with a sovereign contempt, as nothing, as abandoned of God, and without a possibility of salvation; unless they should incorporate, in some degree or other, with their nation. Their constitution, they supposed, was established for ever, never to be altered, or in any respect abolished. They were the true and only church, out of which no man could be accepted of God; and consequently, unless a man submitted to the Law of Moses, how virtuous or good soever he were, it was their belief, he could not be saved. He had no right to a place in the church, nor could hereafter obtain life.

§ V. The Jewish peculiarity was to receive its perfection from the Gospel.

60. But the Jewish dispensation, as peculiar to that people, though superior to the mere light of nature, which it supposed and included, was but of a temporary duration, and of an inferior and imperfect kind, in comparison of that which was to follow, and which God from the beginning, (when he entered into covenant with Abraham, and made the promise to him,) intended to erect, and which he made several declarations under the Old Testament, that he would erect, in the proper time, as successive to the Jewish dispensation; and, as a superstructure, perfective of it. And as the Jewish dispensation was erected by the ministry of a much nobler hand, even that of the Son of God, the Messiah, foreordained before the world was made, promised to Abraham, foretold by the prophets, and even expected by the Jews themselves; though under no just conceptions of the end of his coming into the world. He was to assume, and live in a human body, to declare the truth and grace of God more clearly and expressly to the Jews, to exhibit a pattern of the most perfect obedience; and to be obedient even unto death in compliance with the will of God.* When Christ came into the world, the Jews were ripe for destruction; but he published a general indemnity for the transgressions of the former covenant, upon their repentance; and openly revealed a future state, as the true land of promise, even eternal life in Heaven. Thus he confirmed the former covenant with the Jews as to the favour and blessing of God; and enlarged, or more clearly explained it, as to the blessings therein bestowed; instead of an earthly Canaan, revealing the resurrection from the dead, and everlasting happiness and glory in the world to come.

61. That the gospel is the Jewish scheme enlarged and improved, will evidently appear, if we consider that we Gentiles believing in Christ, are said to be incorporated into the same body with the Jews; and that believing Jews and Gentiles, are now become One, One Flock, One Body in Christ. John x. 16, And other sheep I have which are not of this (the Jewish) Fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice, and there shall be one Flock, (so the word ποιμνη signifies, and so our translators have rendered it in all the other places, where it is used in the New Testament. See Mat. xxvi. 31. Luke ii. 8. 1 Cor. ix. 7. And here also it should have been translated flock, not fold,) and one shepherd. 1 Cor. xii. 13, By one spirit we are all baptised in one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles. Gal. iii. 28, There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all ONE in Christ Jesus; that is, under the gospel dispensation. Ephes. ii. 14, 15, 16, For he is our peace, who has made both (Jews and Gentiles) one, and has broken down the middle wall of partition between us, (Jews and Gentiles.) Having abolished by his flesh the enmity, even the Law of Commandments, contained in ordinances,) for to make in himself of twain, one new man, so making peace; and that he might reconcile both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby.

* Yes, and thus to become a Sacrifice for sin, that those who believe in him might have redemption in his blood. This is the light in which the New Testament places the Death of Christ. A. C.

62. And that this union or coalition, between believing Jews and Gentiles, is to be understood of the believing Gentiles being taken into that church and covenant in which the Jews were before the Gospel dispensation was erected; and out of which the unbelieving Jews were cast, is evident from the following considerations.

63. First, that Abraham, the head or root of the Jewish nation, is the Father of us all. Rom. iv. 16, 17, Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end that the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the Law (the Jews) but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, (the believing Gentiles) who is the Father of us all, (as it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, that is to say, in the account and purpose of God, whom he believed, he is the Father of US ALL. Abraham, when he stood before God and received the promise, did not, in the account of God, appear as a private person, but as the Father of us all; as the head and father of the whole future church of God, from whom we were all, believing Jews and Gentiles, to descend; as we were to be accepted, and interested in the divine blessing and covenant after the same manner as he was; namely, by faith. Gal. iii. 6, &c. Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness. Know ye, therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. For the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify, would take into his church and covenant, the heathen through faith, preached before the Gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith, (of what country soever they are, heathens as well as Jews,) are blessed (justified, taken into the kingdom and covenant of God,) together with believing Abraham, (and into that very covenant which was made with him and his seed.*) In this covenant were the Jews during the whole period, from Abraham to Moses, and from Moses to Christ. For the covenant with Abraham was with him, and with his seed after him, Gen. xvii. 7, To Abraham and his seed were the promises made, Gal. iii. 16. And the Apostle in the next verse tells us, that (the promises or) the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the Law which was (given by Moses) four hundred and thirty years after, could not disannul, that it should make the promise, (or covenant with Abraham) of none effect; consequently, the Jews, during the whole period of the Law, or Mosaical dispensation, were under the covenant with Abraham; and into that same covenant the Apostle argues, Rom. iv. and Gal. iii. that the believing Gentiles are taken. For which reason he affirms, that they are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the Saints, that is, the Patriarchs, &c. And that the great mystery, not understood in other ages, was this; That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body with his church and children, the Jews, Eph. ii. 19. iii. 5, 6.

64. Secondly. Agreeably to this sentiment, the believing Gentiles are said to partake of all the spiritual privileges which the Jews enjoyed, and from which the unbelieving Jews fell; and to be taken into that kingdom and church of God, out of which they were cast. Several of the parables of our Lord are intended to point out this fact. And many passages in the Epistles, directly prove it.

65. Mat. xx. 1—16, In this parable the vineyard is the kingdom of Heaven, into which God, the householder, hired the Jews early in the morning; and into the same vineyard, he hired the Gentiles at the eleventh hour, or an hour before sun-set.

* Being justified does not merely signify being taken into covenant, so as to be incorporated with the visible church of God; it is used repeatedly by St. Paul, to signify that act of God's mercy whereby a penitent sinner, believing on Christ as a sacrifice for sin, has his transgressions forgiven for Christ's sake. Rom. v. 1, &c. A. C.

66. Mat. xxi. 33—34. The Husbandmen to whom the vineyard was first let, were the Jews; to whom God first sent his servants, the prophets, ver. 34—36, and at last he sent his Son, whom they slew, ver. 37—39. and then the vineyard was let out to other husbandmen; which our Saviour clearly explains Ver. 43, Therefore I say unto you (Jews) the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation (the believing Gentiles,) bringing forth the fruits thereof. Hence it appears, that the very same kingdom of God, which the Jews once possessed, and in which the ancient prophets exercised their ministry, one after another, is now in our possession; for it was taken from them, and given to us.

67. Rom. xi. 17—24. The church or kingdom of God is compared to an Olive-tree, and the members of it to the branches. And if some of the branches, (the unbelieving Jews,) be broken off, and thou, Gentile Christian, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the Olive-tree; that is, the Jewish church and covenant. Ver. 24, For if thou, Gentile Christian, wert cut out of the Olive-tree, which is wild by nature, and wert grafted, contrary to nature, into the good Olive-tree, &c.

68. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8, 9, 10, Unto you, Gentiles who believe, he (Christ) is an honour, τιμη, but unto them which be disobedient, (the unbelieving Jews.) *the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and also a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. They stumble at the word being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed. (They are fallen from their privileges and honour, as God appointed they should, in case of their unbelief.) But ye, (Gentiles are raised into the high degree from which they are fallen, and so) are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of the heathenish darkness into his marvellous light.

69. Thirdly. The Jews vehemently opposed the admission of the uncircumcised Gentiles into the kingdom and covenant of God, at the first preaching of the gospel. But if the Gentiles were not taken into the same church and covenant, in which the Jewish nation had so long gloried, why should they so zealously oppose their being admitted into it? Or why so strenuously insist that they ought to be circumcised in order to their being admitted? For what was it to them, if the Gentiles were called, and taken into another kingdom and covenant, distinct, and quite different from that which they would have confined wholly to themselves, or to such only as were circumcised? it is plain the Gentiles might have been admitted into another kingdom and covenant, without any offence to the Jews; as they would still have been left in the sole possession of their ancient privileges. And the apostles could not have failed of using this as an argument to pacify their incensed brethren, had they so understood it. But seeing they never gave the least intimation of this, it shows they understood the affair as the unbelieving Jews did, namely, that the Gentiles, without being circumcised, were taken into the kingdom of God, in which they and their forefathers had so long stood.

70. Fourthly, It is upon this foundation, namely, that the believing Gentiles are taken into that church and kingdom in which the Jews once stood, that the Apostles drew parallels, for caution and instruction, between the state of the ancient Jews, and that of the Christians. 1 Cor. x. 1—13, Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were all baptised into Moses, and did all eat of the same spiritual meat, and did all drink of the same spiritual drink; but with many of them God was not well pleased; for they were overthrown in the wilderness. Now those things were our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things as they also lusted. Neither be ye Idolaters, as were some of them; neither let us provoke Christ, as some of them provoked, &c. Heb. iii. 7, &c. Wherefore as the Holy Ghost saith to Day,† when or while you hear his voice, harden not your hearts

* We render this passage thus, a stone of stumbling and rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient, &c. as if it were one continued sentence. But thus, violence is done to the text, and the Apostle's sense is thrown into obscurity and disorder, which is restored by putting a period after offence, and beginning a new sentence, thus, they stumble at the word, &c. For observe, the Apostle runs a double Antithesis between the unbelieving Jews and believing Gentiles.

† Σημερον εαν της φωνης αυτου ακουσητε. EAN, if, should here have been rendered When; as it is rendered 1 John iii. 2. and it should have been rendered John xii. 32. xiv. 3. xvi. 7. 2 Cor. v. 1. In like manner the particle ⊐א Psal. xcv. 7, (whence the place is quoted,) should have been translated WHEN or WHILE. For it is translated When, 1 Sam. xv. 17. Prov. iii. 24. iv. 12. Job vii. 4. xvii. 16. Psal. 1. 18. and might have been so translated in other places.

as in the day of temptation in the wilderness, when your fathers tempted me, wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and sware in my wrath, they shall not enter into my rest. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief. Chap. iv. 1, Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Ver. 2, For unto us hath the Gospel been preached, as well as to them, that is, we have the joyful promise of a happy state, or of entering into rest, as well as the Jews of old. Ver. 11, Let us labour, therefore, to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief.

71. Fifthly. Hence also the Scriptures of the Old Testament are represented as being written for our use and instruction, and to explain our dispensation as well as theirs. Mat. v. 17, Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfil. And when our Saviour taught his disciples the things pertaining to his kingdom, he opened to them the Scriptures, which were then no other than the Old Testament. Luke iv. 17—22. xviii. 31. xxiv. 27, And beginning at Moses and all the Prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself. Ver. 45, Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures. Thus the Apostles were instructed in the things pertaining to the Gospel dispensation. And always in their sermons in the Acts, they confirm their doctrine from the scriptures of the Old Testament. And in their Epistles they not only do the same, but also expressly declare, that those scriptures were written as well for the benefit of the Christian as the Jewish church. Rom. xv. 4, After a quotation out of the Old Testament, the Apostle adds, for whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning; that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. 1 Cor. ix. 9, It is written in the law of Moses, thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Ver. 10, For our sakes, no doubt, this is written. Cor. x. 11, Now all these things, (namely, the before-mentioned privileges sins and punishments of the ancient Jews,) happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the earth are come. 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17, All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

72. Sixthly. Agreeably to this notion, that the believing Gentiles are taken into that church or kingdom, out of which the unbelieving Jews are cast, the Christian church considered in a body, is called by the same general names, as the church under the Old Testament. Israel was the general name of the Jewish church, so also of the Christian. Gal. vi. 16, As many as walk according to this rule peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God. Rev. vii. 3, 4, Speaking of the Christian church, the angel said, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them that were sealed: and there were sealed a hundred and forty-four thousand, of all the tribes of the children of Israel. Rev. xxi. 10—13, He showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, (the Christian church,) having the glory of God,—and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, (as comprehending the whole church.) Ver. 14, And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb. Jews was another running title of the church in our Saviour's time, and this is also applied to Christians. Rev. ii. 8, 9, And unto the angel of the (Christian) church in Smyrna, write, I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty; and I know the blasphemy of them who say they are Jews, (members of the church of Christ,) and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan. And again, chap. iii. 9.

§ VI. The particular honours and privileges of Christians; and the terms signifying these honours explained.

73. Seventhly. In conformity to this sentiment, (namely, that the believing Gentiles are taken into that church, covenant, and kingdom, out of which the unbelieving Jews were cast,) the state, membership, privileges, honours, and relations of professed Christians, particularly of believing Gentiles, are expressed by the same phrases with those of the ancient Jewish church; and therefore, unless we admit a very strange abuse of words, must convey the same general ideas of our present state, membership, privileges, honours, and relations to God, as we are professed Christians. For instance,

74. I. As God chose his ancient people the Jews, and they were his chosen and elect, so now the whole body of Christians, Gentiles as well as Jews, are admitted to the same honour; as they are selected from the rest of the world, and taken into the kingdom of God, for the knowledge, worship, and obedience of God, in hopes of eternal life. Rom. viii. 33, Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? &c. Eph. 1. 4, According as he hath chosen us, (Gentiles, chap. ii. 11.) in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy, and without blame before him in love. Col. iii. 12, Put on, therefore, (as the elect of God, holy and beloved,) bowels of mercies, &c. 2 Thes. ii. 13, But we are bound to give thanks to God always for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation; through sanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth. Tit. i. 1, Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness. 2 Tim. ii. 10, Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they, also, may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus, with eternal glory. 1 Pet. i. 1, 2, Peter to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, elect, according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience. ii. 9, Ye (Gentiles) are a chosen generation, &c. v. 13, The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you, saluteth you.

75. II. The first step which the goodness of God took in execution of his purpose of Election, with regard to the Gentile world, was to rescue them from their wretched situation in the sin and idolatry of their heathen state, (by sending his Son Jesus Christ into the world to die for mankind, and thus) to bring them into the light and privileges of the gospel. With regard to which, the language of Scripture is, 1st. that he delivered, 2nd. saved, 3rd. bought or purchased, 4th. redeemed them. i. 4, Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, the vices and lusts in which the world is involved. Col. i. 12, 13, Giving thanks to the Father who has delivered us from the power of (heathenish) darkness, (Acts xxvi. 18. 1 Pet. ii. 9. Eph. iv. 18. v. 8.) and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. And thus consequentially, we are delivered from the wrath to come. 1 Thes. i. 10.

76. 1 Cor. i. 18, For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness, but unto us which are saved it is the power of God. vii. 16, What knowest thou, O Wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband? or how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife? that is, convert her to the Christian faith, x. 33, even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved. Eph. ii. 8, For by grace are you saved through faith. 1 Thes. ii. 16, The Jews forbid us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, 1 Tim. ii. 4, Who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. 2 Tim. i. 9, Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace. In this general sense, saved is in other places applied to both Jews and Gentiles; particularly to the Jews. Rom. ix. 27. x. 1. xi. 26, Hence God is styled our Saviour. Tit. iii. 4, 5, But after that the kindness and love of God our Saviour towards man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us. 1 Tim. i. 1, Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the commandment of God our Saviour. ii. 3. Tit. i. 3. Rom. xi. 11, Through their (the Jews') fall salvation is come to the Gentiles. And as this salvation is by Jesus Christ, he also is frequently called our Saviour.

77. Acts xx. 28, Feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood. 1 Cor. vi. 20, And ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price. vii. 23, Ye are bought with a price. 2 Pet. ii. 1, False prophets shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. Rev. v. 9, Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed (bought) us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

78. Tit. iii. 14, Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity. 1 Pet. i. 18, Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, from your vain (heathenish) conversation, received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ. And at the same time he redeemed or bought us from death, or the curse of the law. Gal. iii. 13. And the Jews, in particular, from the law, and the condemnation to which it subjected them. Gal. iv. 5. Hence frequent mention is made of the redemption, which is in Jesus Christ, Rom. iii. 24. 1 Cor. i. 30. Eph. i. 7. Col. i. 14. Heb. ix. 12, 15. Hence also Christ is said to give himself a ransom for us. Matt. xx. 28. Mark x. 45. 1 Tim. ii. 6, Who gave himself a ransom for all."—That is, that he might redeem them unto God by the sacrificial shedding of his blood.

79. III. As God sent the Gospel to bring Gentiles, Christians, out of heathenism, and invited and made them welcome to the honours and privileges of his people, he is said to call them, and they are his called. Rom. i. 6, 7, Among whom are ye also called of Jesus Christ. To all that are at Rome called saints—viii. 28. 1 Cor. i. 9, God is faithful, by whom ye were called into the fellowship of his son—viii. 20. Gal. i. 6, I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you—v. 13. Eph. iv. 1, I beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, iv. 4. 1 Thess. ii. 12, That ye walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory—iv. 7, God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. 2 Tim. i. 9, Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling; not according to our works, &c. 1 Pet. i. 15, But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation—ii. 9, Ye (Gentile Christians,) are a chosen generation—to show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.

80. Note—The Jews also were called. Rom. ix. 24, Even us, whom he has called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles. 1 Cor. i. 24. vii. 18, Is any man called being circumcised—Heb. ix. 15. But the calling of the Jews must be different from that of the Gentiles. The Gentiles were called into the kingdom of God as strangers and foreigners, who had never been in it before. But the Jews were then subjects of God's kingdom under the old form; and therefore could be called only to submit to it, as it was now modelled under the Messiah. Or they were called to repentance, to the faith, allegiance, and obedience of the Son of God, and to the hope of eternal life through him; whom rejecting, they were cast out of God's peculiar kingdom.

81. IV. And as we stand in the relation of children to the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; hence it is that we are his brethren, and he is considered as the First Born among us. Matt. xxviii. 10. John xx. 17, Jesus saith—Go to my Brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God, and your God. Heb. ii. 11, 17. Rom. viii. 29, That he might be the first-born among many brethren.

82. V. And the relation of God, as a father, to us Christians, who are his children, will lead our thoughts to a clear idea of our being, as we are called, the house or family of God, or of Christ. 1 Tim. iii. 15, But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God. Heb. iii. 6, But Christ, as a Son over his own house; whose house are we, (Christians,) if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end. Heb. x. 21, And having a great high-priest over the house of God, &c. 1 Pet. ix. 17, For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God; (that is, when the Christian church shall undergo sharp trials and sufferings;) and if it first begin at us, (Christians, who are the house or family of God,) what shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel? (that is, of the infidel world, who lie out of the church. See Rom. i. 5. xv. 18. 1 Pet. i. 22.) Eph. ii. 19, We are of the household (domestics,) of God—iii. 14, 15, I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in Heaven and earth is named, &c.

83. VI. Further; as the land of Canaan was the estate, or inheritance belonging to the Jewish family, or house; so the heavenly country is given to the Christian house, or family, for their inheritance. Acts xx. 32, And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified. Col. ii. 24, Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance. Heb. ix. 15, He is the mediator of the New Testament, that they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. 1 Pet. i. 4, God has begotten us again,—to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in Heaven for us. Hence we have the title of heirs. Tit. iii. 7, That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Jam. ii. 5, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he has promised to them that love him? See Rom. viii. 17. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

84. And as Canaan was considered as the rest of the Jews, so, in reference to our trials and afflictions in this world, Heaven is considered as the rest of Christians. 2 Thes. i. 7, And to you who are troubled, (he will give) rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from Heaven. Heb. iv. 1, Let us therefore, fear, lest a promise being left us, of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us hath the Gospel been preached, as well as to them; that is, we have the joyful promise of entering into rest, as well as the Jews of old. Ver. 9, There remains, therefore, a rest for the people of God; that is, for Christians now in this world, as well as for the Jews formerly in the Wilderness. Which is the point the Apostle is proving from ver. 3 to 10.

85. VII. Thus Christians, as well as the ancient Jews, are the house or family of God: or we may conceive the whole body of Christians formed into a nation, having God at their head; who, on this account, is styled our God, Governor, Protector, or King; and we his people, subjects, or servants.

86. VIII. And it is in reference to our being a society peculiarly appropriated to God; and under his special protection and government, that we are called the city of God, the Holy city. Heb. xii. 22, Ye are come unto —the city of the living God. Rev. xi. 2, And the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. This city is described in some future happy state, Rev. 21*st* and 22*nd* chapters.

87. Hence the whole Christian community or church is denoted by the city Jerusalem, and sometimes by Mount Zion. Gal. iv. 26, But Jerusalem, which is above, is free, which is the Mother of us all—In her reformed, or future happy state, she is the New Jerusalem. Rev. iii. 12. xxi. 2. Heb. xii. 22, Ye are come unto Mount Zion, &c. Rev. xiv. 1.

88. Hence also we are said to be written, or enrolled in the Book of God, or, which comes to the same thing, of the Lamb, the Son of God. Rev. iii. 5, He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the Book of Life—xxii. 19, And if any man take away from the words of the Book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of Life, and out of the holy city, &c. which shows, that the names of such as are in the Book of Life may be blotted out; consequently, that to be enrolled there, is the privilege of all professed Christians.

89. And whereas the believing Gentiles were once strangers, aliens, not a people, enemies; now (Eph. ii. 19.) they are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens, with the saints. 1 Pet. ii. 10, Which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God. Now we are at peace with God, Rom. v. 1. Now we are reconciled, and become the servants of God, the subjects of his kingdom, Rom. v. 10. 1 Thes. i. 9. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19.

90. On the other hand; the body of the Jewish nation, (having through unbelief, rejected the Messiah, and the Gospel; and being, therefore, cast out of the city and kingdom of God,) are, in their turn, at present, represented under the name and notion of enemies; Rom. xi. 28, As concerning the Gospel, they are enemies for your sake.

91. IX. The kind and particular regards of God to the converted Gentiles, and their relation to Jesus Christ, is also signified by that of a husband and wife: and his taking them into his covenant, is represented by his espousing them. 2 Cor. xi. 2, For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy; for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.

92. Hence the Christian church, or community, is represented as a mother, and particular members as her children. Gal. iv. 26, But Jerusalem, which is above, is free, which is the Mother of us all. Ver. 27, For it is written, rejoice thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children, than she which hath a husband. Ver. 28, Now we, brethren, as Israel was, are the children of promise. Ver. 31, So then, Brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

93. Hence also, from the notion of the Christian church being the spouse of God in Christ, her corruption and her idolatry come under the name of fornication, and adultery.

94. X. As God, by Christ, exercises a particular providence over the Christian church, in supplying them with all spiritual blessings, guiding them through all difficulties, and guarding them in all spiritual dangers; He is their shepherd, and they his flock, his sheep. John x. 11, I am the good shepherd—Ver. 16, And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one flock and one shepherd. Acts xx. 28, 29. Heb. xiii. 20. 1 Pet. ii. 25, For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop, (overseer,) of your souls—v. 2, 3, 4, Feed the flock of God, &c.

95. XI. Nearly on the same account, as God, by Christ, has established the Christian church, and provided all means for our happiness and improvement in knowledge and virtue, we are compared to a vine, and a vineyard, and God to the husbandman, who planted and dresses it; and particular members of the community are compared to branches. John xv. 1, 2, I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, &c. Ver. 5, I am the vine, ye are the branches. Matt. xv. 13, Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up. Rom. vi. 5, If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death; we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection. Matt. xx. 1, The vineyard into which labourers were hired is the Christian as well as the Jewish church: and so chap. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1. Luke xx. 9. 1 Cor. iii. 9, Ye are God's husbandry. Rom. xi. 17, And if some of the branches, (Jews,) be broken off, and thou being a wild olive-tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive-tree, &c.—See also ver. 24.

96. XII. As Christians are, by the will of God, set apart and appropriated in a special manner to his honour, service, and obedience, and furnished with extraordinary means and motives to holiness, so they are said to be sanctified. 1 Cor. i. 2, Unto the church of God, which is at Corinth, to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus—vi. 11. And such were some of you; but ye are washed; but ye are sanctified; but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. Heb. ii. 11. For both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one, x. 9.

97. XIII. Further; by the presence of God in the Christian church, and our being by profession consecrated to him, we, as well as the ancient Jews, are made his house, or temple, which God has built, and in which he dwells, or walks. 1 Pet. ii. 5, Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, &c. 1 Cor. iii. 9, Ye are God's building—Ver. 16, 17, Know ye not that ye, (Christians,) are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you; if any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are. 2 Cor. vi. 16, And what agreement hath the temple of God, (the Christian church,) with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God: as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them. Eph. ii. 20, 21, 22, And are built upon the foundation of the Apostles, &c. Christ Jesus being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are builded together, for a habitation of God through the Spirit. 2 Thes. ii. 4, So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, SHOWING HIMSELF that he is God.

98. XIV. And not only does God, as our King, dwell in the Christian church, as in his house or temple; but he has also conferred on Christians the honours of kings; as he has redeemed us from the servitude of sin, made us lords of ourselves, and raised us above others, to sit on thrones, and to judge and reign over them. And he has made us priests too, as we are peculiarly consecrated to God, and obliged to attend upon him, from time to time continually, in the solemn offices of religion, which he has appointed. 1 Pet. ii. 4, Ye also as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood. Ver. 9, But ye (Gentile Christians,) are a chosen generation, a royal, (or kingly,) priesthood. Rev. i. 5, 6, Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, &c.

99. XV. Thus the whole body of the Christian church is separated unto God from the rest of the world. And, whereas before, the Gentile believers were afar off, lying out of the commonwealth of Israel; now, they are nigh, as they are joined to God in covenant, have full access to him in the ordinances of worship; and, in virtue of his promise, a particular title to his regards and blessing. 2 Cor. vi. 17, Wherefore, come out from among them, and be separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. Eph. ii. 13, But now in Christ Jesus ye, who sometimes were afar off, are made nigh, by the blood of Christ.

100. XVI. And, as God, in all these respects, has distinguished the Christian church, and sequestered them unto himself, they are styled his peculiar people. Tit. ii. 14, Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. 1 Pet. ii. 9, But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, &c.

101. XVII. As Christians are a body of men, particularly related to God, instructed by him in the rules of wisdom, devoted to his service, and employed in his true worship; they are called his church or congregation. Acts xx. 28, Feed the church of God. 1 Cor. x. 32, Giving none offence to the church of God. xv. 9. Gal. i. 13, and elsewhere. Eph. i. 22, Head over all things to the church :—and particular societies are churches. Rom. xvi. 16, The churches of Christ salute you—and so in several other places.

102. XVIII. For the same reason, they are considered as God's possession or heritage. 1 Pet. v. 3, Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. The reader cannot well avoid observing, that the words and phrases, by which our Christian privileges are exprest in the New Testament, are the very same with the words and phrases by which the privileges of the Jewish church are expressed in the Old Testament: which makes good what St. Paul says concerning the language in which the Apostles declared the things that are freely given to us of God. 1 Cor. ii. 12, 13, We, Apostles, have received, not the Spirit of the World, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are given to us of God; namely, the forerecited privileges and blessings. Which things we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, not in philosophic terms of human invention, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth in the writings of the Old Testament, the only Scriptures from which they took their ideas and arguments, comparing spiritual things under the Gospel.

Whence we may conclude—1. That the Holy Scriptures are admirably calculated to be understood in those things, which we are most of all concerned to understand. Seeing the same language runs through the whole, and is set in such a variety of lights, that one part is well adapted to illustrate another. An advantage I reckon peculiar to the sacred writings above all others—2. It follows, that to understand the sense of the Spirit in the New, it is essentially necessary that we understand its sense in the Old Testament.

From what has been said it appears—

103. I. That the believing Gentiles are taken into that kingdom and covenant, in which the Jews once stood, and out of which they were cast for their unbelief, and rejection of the Son of God; and that we Christians ought to have the same general ideas of our present religious state, membership, privileges, honours, and relations to God, as the Jews had, while they were in possession of the kingdom. Only in some things the kingdom of God, under the Gospel dispensation, differs much from the kingdom of God, under the Mosaical—As, 1. For, that it is now so constituted, that it admits, and is adapted to, men of all nations upon the earth, who believe in Christ—2. That the law, as a ministration of condemnation, which was an appendage to the Jewish dispensation, is removed and annulled under the gospel, [but the moral law, as a rule of life, is still in force.]—3. And so is the polity, or civil state of the Jews, which was interwoven with their religion; but has no connexion with the Christian religion—4. The ceremonial part of the Jewish constitution, is likewise abolished, for we are taught the spirit and duties of religion, not by figures and symbols, as sacrifices, offerings, watchings, &c. but by express and clear precepts—5. The kingdom of God is now put under the special government of the Son of God, who is the head and king of the church, to whom we owe faith and allegiance.*

104. II. From the above recited particulars, it appears that the Christian church is happy, and highly honoured with privileges of the most excellent nature; of which the Apostles, who well understood this new constitution, were deeply sensible. Rom. i. 16, I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. v. 1, 2, 3. &c. Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access, by faith, into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice (glory) in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also, &c. Ver. 11, And not only so, but we also joy (glory) in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. chap. viii. 31, &c. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how should he not, with him, also freely give us all things? Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? who is he that condemneth? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Chap. ix. 23, 24, He has made known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had afore prepared unto glory, even on us whom he has called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles. 2 Cor. iii. 18, But we all, with open face, beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord. Eph. i. 3, 4, &c. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as he has chosen us in him, &c. &c.

* Add to this, that all the privileges under the Gospel are abundantly more spiritual than they were under the law—THAT being the shadow, THIS the substance. Hence, while we consider these privileges, the same in kind, we must view them as differing widely in degree.——A. C.

105. And it is the duty of the whole body of Christians to rejoice in the goodness of God, to thank and praise him for all the benefits conferred upon them in the Gospel. Rom. xv. 10. Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people. Phil. iii. 1, My brethren, rejoice in the Lord. iv. 4, Rejoice in the Lord alway; again I say rejoice. 1 Thes. v. 16, Rejoice evermore. Jam. i. 9. 1 Pet. i. 6, 8. Col. i. 12, Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light. ii. 7, Rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith, abounding therein with thanksgiving. 1 Thes. v. 18. Heb. xiii. 15, By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name. Eph. i. 6, To the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he has made us accepted in the Beloved. Ver. 12, 14.

106. Further, it is to be observed, that all the foregoing privileges, benefits, relations, and honours, belong to all professed Christians without exception. God is the God, King, Saviour, Father, Husband, Shepherd, &c. to them all. He created, saved, bought, redeemed, he begot, he made, he planted, &c. them all. And they are all as created, redeemed, and begotten by him; his people, nation, heritage; his children, spouse, flock, vineyard, &c. We are all enriched with the blessings of the gospel. Rom. xi. 12, 13, 14, all reconciled to God. Ver. 15, all the seed of Abraham, and heirs according to the promise; Gal. iii. 29, all partake of the root and fatness of the good olive, the Jewish church; all the brethren of Christ and members of his body, all are under grace, all have a right to the ordinances of worship, all are golden candlesticks in the temple of God, Rev. i. 12, 13, 20; even those who by reason of their misimprovement of their privileges, are threatened with having the candlestick removed out of its place, ii. 5; either every professed Christian is not in the church, or all the forementioned privileges belong to every professed Christian; which will appear more evidently if we consider,

107. III. That all the aforementioned privileges, honours, and advantages are the effects of God's free grace, without regard to any prior righteousness, which deserved or procured the donation of them. It was not for any goodness or worthiness which God found in the heathen world, when the gospel was first preached to them; not for any works of obedience or righteousness which we, in our Gentile state, had performed; whereby we had rendered ourselves deserving of the blessings of the Gospel, namely, to be taken into the family, kingdom, or church of God; by no means. It was not thus of ourselves that we are saved, justified, &c. So far from that, that the Gospel, when first preached to us Gentiles, found us sinners, dead in trespasses and sins, enemies through wicked works, disobedient; therefore, I say, all the forementioned privileges, blessings, honours, &c. are the effects of God's free grace or favour, without regard to any prior works, or righteousness in the Gentile world, which procured the donation of them. Accordingly, they are always in Scripture assigned to the love, grace, and mercy of God, as the sole spring from whence they flow. John iii. 16, For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Rom. v. 8, But God commendeth his love to us, in that while we were sinners Christ died for us. Eph. ii. 4—9, 10, But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he has loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace ye are saved,) and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. That in ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us, through Jesus Christ. For by grace are ye saved, through faith, and that (salvation is) not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not of works, so that * no man, (nor Gentile nor Jew,) can boast. For we, (Christians converted from heathenism,) are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained, that we should walk in them.

108. It is on account of this general love that Christians are honoured with the title of beloved. Rom. i. 7, To all that are in Rome, beloved of God, called Saints. ix. 25, I will call her, (the Gentile church,) beloved, which was not beloved. Col. iii. 12, Put on, therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, &c.

109. Rom. iii. 23, 24, For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. v. 2. 1 Cor. i. 4, I thank my God for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ. Eph. i. 6, 7, To the praise of the glory of his grace, whereby he has made us accepted in the beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. Col. i. 6. 2 Thes. i. 12. 2 Tim. i. 9, Who has saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Jesus Christ before the world began. Tit. ii. 11. Heb. xii. 15. Hence grace and the grace of God, is sometimes put for the whole gospel, and all its blessings, as Acts xiii. 43, Paul and Barnabas persuaded them to continue in the grace of God. 2 Cor. vi. 1. 1 Pet. v. 12, Testify that this is the true grace of God in which we stand. 1 Cor. i. 4. Rom. v. 2. 2 Cor. vi. 1. Tit. ii. 11. Jude 4 Rom. xii. 1, I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies, &c. xv. 9, And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy. 1 Pet. i. 3, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who, according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again to a lively hope, &c.

110. In these texts, and others of the same kind, it is evident that the love, grace, and mercy of God hath respect, not to particular persons in the Christian church, but to the whole body or whole societies: and therefore are to be understood of that general love, grace, and mercy, whereby the whole body of Christians is separated unto God, to be his peculiar people, favoured with extraordinary blessings. And it is with regard to this sentiment and mode of speech, that the Gentiles, who before lay out of the church, and had not obtained mercy, are said now to have obtained mercy. Rom. xi. 30.

III. Hence also we may conclude that all the privileges and blessings of the Gospel, even the whole of our redemption and salvation, are the effect of God's pure, free, original love and grace, to which he was inclined of his own motion, without any other motive besides his own goodness, in mere kindness and good will to a sinful, perishing world. These are the things that are FREELY given to us of God, 1 Cor. ii. 12.

§ VIII. All the grace of the Gospel is dispensed to us by, in, or through Christ Jesus.

112. Nevertheless, all the forementioned love, grace, and mercy, is dispensed, or conveyed to us in, by, or through the Son of God, Jesus Christ, our Lord. To quote all the places to this purpose, would be to transcribe a great part of the New Testament. But it may suffice, at present, to review the texts under the numbers 107 and 109. From which texts it is evident, that the grace, or favour of God, is given unto us BY Jesus Christ: that he has shown the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness to us, THROUGH Jesus Christ: that he has sent his Son into the world that we might live THROUGH him; to be the propitiation, (or mercy seat,) for our sins: that he died for us: that we who were afar off are made nigh BY his blood: that God has made us accepted IN the Beloved, (in his beloved Son,) IN whom we have redemption THROUGH his blood, the forgiveness of sins: that we are his workmanship created IN Christ Jesus: that before the world began, the purpose and grace of God, relating to our calling and salvation, was given us IN Christ Jesus: before the foundation of the world God chose us IN Christ, Eph. i. 4. We have peace with God THROUGH our Lord Jesus Christ, BY whom also we have access into this grace wherein we stand, Rom. v. 1, 2. God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN his Son, 1 John v. 11. Nothing is clearer from the whole current of Scripture, than that all the mercy and love of God, and all the blessings of the Gospel, from first to last, from the original purpose and grace of God, to our final salvation in the possession of eternal life, is IN, BY, or THROUGH Christ; and particularly BY HIS BLOOD, by the redemption which is in him, as he is the propitiation, or atonement, for the sins of the whole world, 1 John ii. 2. This can bear no dispute among Christians. The only difference that can be must relate to the manner, how these blessings are conveyed to us in, by, or through CHRIST. Doubtless they are conveyed through his hands, as he is the minister, or agent, appointed of God to put us in possession of them. But his blood, death, cross, could be no ministring cause of blessings assigned to his blood, &c. before we were put in possession of them—See Rom. v. 6, 8, 10, 19. Eph. ii. 13, 16. Col. i. 20, 21, 22. Nor truly can his blood be possibly considered as a ministring or instrumental cause in any sense at all; for it is not an agent, but an object, and therefore, though it may be a moving cause, or a reason for bestowing blessings, yet it can be no active, or instrumental cause, in conferring them. His blood and death is indeed to us an assurance of pardon: but it is evidently something more; for it is also considered as an offering and sacrifice to God, highly pleasing to him, to put away our sin, and to obtain eternal redemption, Heb. ix. 12, 14, 26. Eph. v. 2.

* Ινα μη τις καυχησηται, lest any man should boast. So we render it: as if the Gospel salvation were appointed to be not of Works, to prevent our boasting; which supposes, we might have boasted, had not God taken this method to preclude it. Whereas, in truth, we had nothing to boast of. Neither Jew nor Gentile could pretend to any prior righteousness, which might make them worthy to be taken into the house and kingdom of God under his Son; therefore the apostle's meaning is, "We are not saved from heathenism, and translated into the church and kingdom of Christ, for any prior goodness, obedience, or righteousness we had performed. For which reason, no man can boast, as if he had merited the blessing, &c." This is the apostle's sense; and the place should have been translated, so that no man can boast: For ινα signifies so that. See Rom. iii. 19. 1 Cor. vii. 29. 2 Cor. i. 17. vii. 9. Gal. v. 17. Heb. ii. 17. vi. 18. Mark iv. 12.

113. But why should God choose to communicate his grace in this mediate way, by the interposition, obedience, and agency, of his Son, who again employs subordinate agents and instruments under him? I answer; for the display of the glory of his nature and perfections. The sovereign disposer of all things may communicate his blessings by what means, and in any way, he thinks fit. But whatever He effects by the interposition of means, and a train of intermediate causes, He could produce by his own immediate power. He wants not clouds to distil rain; nor rain nor human industry to make the earth fruitful; nor the fruitfulness of the earth to supply food; nor food to sustain our life. He could do this by his own immediate power; but He chooses to manifest his providence, power, wisdom, and goodness, in a variety of ways and dispositions, and yet his power and goodness are not only as much concerned and exercised in this way, as if he produced the end without the intervention of means; but even much more, because his power, wisdom, and goodness, are as much exerted and illustrated in every single intermediate step, as if he had done the thing at once, without any intermediate step at all. There is as much power and wisdom exercised in producing rain, or in making the earth fruitful, or in adapting food to the nourishment of our bodies; I say there is as much power in any one of these steps, as there would be in nourishing our bodies by one immediate act without those intermediate means. Therefore, in this method of procedure, the displays of the Divine providence and perfections are multiplied and beautifully diversified, to arrest our attention, exercise our contemplation, and excite our admiration and thankfulness; for thus we see God in a surprising variety of instances. Nor, indeed, can we turn our eyes to any part of the visible creation, but we see His power, wisdom, and goodness in perpetual exercise, every where. In like manner, in the moral world, he chooses to work by means, the mediation of the Son, the influences of his Spirit, the teachings of his word, the endeavours of Apostles and ministers; not to supply any defects of his power, wisdom, or goodness; but to multiply the instances of them; to show himself to us in a various display of his glorious dispensations; to exercise the moral powers and virtues of all the subordinate agents employed in carrying on his great designs, and to set before our thoughts the most engaging subjects of meditation, and the most powerful motives of action. And this method, in the moral world, is still more necessary; because, without the attention of our minds, the end proposed, our sanctification, cannot be obtained.*

114. But how is it agreeable to the infinite distance there is between the Most High God, and creatures so low and imperfect, who are of no consideration when compared to the immensity of his nature, that he should so greatly concern himself about our redemption? Answer—He who is all-present, all-knowing, all-powerful, attends to all the minutest affairs, in the whole Universe, without the least confusion or difficulty. And, if it was not below his infinite greatness to make mankind, it cannot be so to take care of them, when created. For kind, he can produce no beings more excellent than the rational and intelligent; consequently, those must be most worthy of his regard. And when they are corrupted, as thereby the end of their being is frustrated, it must be as agreeable to his greatness to endeavour, (when he sees fit,) their reformation, or to restore them to the true ends for which they were created, as it was originally to create them.

115. And as for mankind's being a mean and inconsiderable part of the creation, it may not be so easy to demonstrate, as we may imagine. The sin that is, or hath been, in the world, will not do it: for then the beings, which we know stand in a much higher, and, perhaps, in a very high rank of natural perfection, will be proved to be as mean and inconsiderable as ourselves; seeing they in great numbers have sinned. Neither will our natural weakness and imperfection prove, that we are a mean and inconsiderable part of God's creation: for the Son of God, when clothed in our flesh, and encompassed with all our infirmities and temptations, lost nothing of the real excellency and worth he possessed, when in a state of glory with the Father, before the world was. Still he was the beloved Son of God, in whom he was well pleased. Besides, since God may bestow honours and privileges, as he pleases; who will tell me, what pre-eminence, in the purpose of God, this world may possibly have, above any other part of the Universe? Or what relation it bears to the rest of the creation? We know that even angels have been ministering spirits to some part, at least, of mankind. Who will determine, how far the scheme of redemption may exceed any scheme of Divine wisdom, in other parts of the Universe? Or how far it may affect the improvement and happiness of other beings, in the remotest regions. Eph. iii. 10, To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church, the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose, which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord. 1 Pet. i. 12, Which things that are reported by them that have preached the Gospel, the angels desire to look into. It is therefore the sense of Revelation, that the heavenly principalities and powers study the wisdom and grace of redemption; and even increase their stock of wisdom from the displays of the Divine love in the Gospel. Who can say how much our virtue is, more or less, severely proved, than in other worlds? Or, how far our virtue may excel that of other beings, who are not subjected to our long and heavy trials; may not a virtue, firm and steady under our present clogs, inconveniences, discouragements, persecutions, trials, and temptations, possibly surpass the virtue of the highest angel, whose state is not attended with such embarrassments? Do ye know how far such, as shall have honourably passed through the trials of this life, shall hereafter be dispersed through the creation? How much their capacities will be enlarged? How highly they shall be exalted? What power and trusts will be put into their hands? How far their influence shall extend, and how much they shall contribute to the good order and happiness of the Universe? Possibly the faithful soul, when disengaged from our present incumbrances, may blaze out into a degree of excellency equal to the highest honours, the most important and extensive services. Our Lord has made us kings and priests unto God and the Father, and we shall sit together in heavenly places, and reign with him. To him that overcomes the trials of this present state, he will give to sit with him in his throne. True, many from among mankind shall perish among the vile and worthless, for ever: and so shall many of the angels. These considerations may satisfy us; that possibly mankind are not so despicable as to be below the interposition of the Son of God. Rather the surprising condescensions and sufferings of a being so glorious, should be an argument that the scheme of redemption is of the utmost importance: and that, in the estimate of God, who alone confers dignity, we are creatures of very great consequence. Lastly, God by Christ created the world; and if it was not below his dignity to create, it is much less below his dignity to redeem the world; which, of the two, is the more honourable.

* But it certainly was not merely to display the various operations of Divine Providence, and to multiply the displays of the Divine perfections, that God required the sacrifice and death of his Son; as he was a sacrifice for sin, and the true notion of sacrifice, is redeeming the life of a guilty creature, by the death of one that is innocent, therefore Christ died, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, 1 Pet. iii. 18. Consequently the justice and righteousness of God required this sacrifice; and justice must have required it; else such a sacrifice could not have taken place: for had not justice required it, no attribute of God could, without injustice, have demanded it. A. C.

116. It is further to be observed; that the whole scheme of the Gospel in Christ, and as it stands in relation to his blood, or obedience unto death, was formed in the council of God, before the calling of Abraham, and even before the beginning of the world. Acts xv. 18, Known unto God are all his works, (the dispensations which he intended to advance,) from the beginning of the world. Eph. 1. 4, According as he hath chosen us in him, (Christ,) before the foundation of the world: (προ καταβολης κοσμου·) 2 Tim. 1. 9, Who hath saved us and called us—according to his own purpose and grace which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began. 1 Pet. 1. 20, Who, (Christ,) verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, (προ καταβολης κοσμου,) but was manifest in these last times for you, (Gentiles.) Hence it appears, that the whole plan of the Divine mercy in the Gospel, in relation to the method of communicating it, and the person, through whose obedience it was to be dispensed, and by whose ministry it was to be executed, was formed, in the mind and purpose of God, before this earth was created. God, by his perfect and unerring knowledge, foreknew the future state of mankind; and so, before-appointed the means, which he judged proper for their recovery: which fore-knowledge is fully confirmed by the promise to Abraham, and very copiously by the repeated predictions of the prophets, in relation to our Lord's work, and particularly to his death, with the end and design of it.

117. Again; it is to be noted, that all the fore-mentioned MERCY and LOVE, privileges and blessings, are granted and confirmed to the Christian church, under the sanction of a covenant; which is a grant or donation of blessings confirmed by a proper authority. The Gospel covenant is established by the promise and oath of God, and ratified by the blood of Christ, as a pledge and assurance, that it is a reality, and will certainly be made good. Matt. xxvi. 28, This is my blood in the New TESTAMENT, or COVENANT. Luke xxii. 26, This cup is the New Testament, (covenant) in my blood. 2 Cor. iii. 6, Made us able ministers of the New Testament, (covenant) Heb. vii. 22, Jesus made a surety of a better Testament. Heb. viii. 6. He is the mediator of a better covenant, established upon better promises—viii. 8. ix. 15. xii. 24. xiii. 20.—Here observe, 1. Jesus is the surety, (Εγγυος,) sponsor, and mediator, (Μεσιτης,) of the New Covenant, as he is the great agent appointed of God to negotiate, transact, secure, and execute all the blessings which are conferred by this covenant. Obs. 2. That as the covenant is a donation or grant of blessing, hence it is, that the promise, or promiser, is sometimes put for the covenant; as, Gal. iii. 17, The covenant that was confirmed before, to Abraham, of God in Christ, the law which was 430 years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect: or if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise. But God gave it to Abraham by promise; and so ver. 19: again ver. 21, Is the law then against the promises of God. Ver. 22.—Obs. 3. That the Gospel covenant was included in that made with Abraham, Gen. xvii. 1, &c. xxii. 16, 17, 18. As appears from Gal. iii. 17, and from Heb. vi. 13, When God made the promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, &c. Ver. 17, He confirmed, (εμεσιτευειν, he mediator'd,) it by an OATH; that by two immutable things, the promise and oath of God, we (Christians,) might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us.

118. But what should carefully and specially be observed is this, that the Gospel-constitution is a scheme, and the most perfect and effectual scheme, for restoring true religion, and for promoting virtue and happiness, that the world has ever yet seen. Upon faith in Christ, men of all nations were admitted into the church, family, kingdom, and covenant of God by baptism; were all numbered among the justified, regenerate or born again, sanctified, saved, chosen, called, saints, and beloved; were all of the flock, church, house, vine, and vineyard of God; and were entitled to the ordinances and privileges of the church; had exceeding great and precious promises given unto them, especially that of entering into the rest of Heaven. And in all these blessings and honours we are certainly very happy, as they are the things which are freely given to us of God, 1 Cor. ii. 12. But because these things are freely given, without respect to any obedience or righteousness, of ours, prior to the donation of them; is our obedience and personal righteousness, therefore, unnecessary? Or are we, on account of benefits already received, secure of the favour and blessing of God, in a future world, and for ever? By no means.

117. To explain this important point more clearly, I shall proceed as before, and show that these privileges and blessings, given in general to the Christian church, are ANTECEDENT blessings; given indeed freely, without any respect to the prior obedience of the Gentile world, before they were taken into the church; but intended to be motives to the most upright obedience for the future, after they were joined to the family and kingdom of God. Which effect, if they produce, then our election, and calling, our redemption, adoption, &c. are made good; upon which account I shall call them CONSEQUENT blessings; because they are secured to us, and made ours for ever, only in consequence of our obedience. But on the other hand, if the antecedent blessings do not produce obedience to the will of God; if we, his chosen people and children, do not obey the laws and rules of the Gospel, then we, as well as any other wicked persons, may expect tribulation and wrath; then we forfeit all our privileges, and all our honours and relations to God; all the favour and promises given freely to us are of no avail; we receive the grace of God in vain, and everlasting death will certainly be our wretched portion.

118. That this is the great end of the dispensation of God's grace to the Christian church—namely, to engage us to duty and obedience; and, that it is a scheme for promoting virtue and true religion, is clear from every part of the New Testament, and requires a large and particular proof: not because the thing in itself is difficult or intricate; but because it is of great importance to the right understanding of the Gospel, and the Apostolic writings; and serves to explain several points which stand in close relation to it. As particularly; that all the fore-mentioned privileges belong to all professed Christians, even to those that shall perish eternally. For—

1. If the Apostles affirm them of all Christians, to whom they write:
2. If they declare some of those Christians, who were favoured with those privileges, to be wicked, or suppose they might be wicked:
3. If they declare those privileges are conferred by mere grace, without regard to prior works of righteousness:
4. If they plainly intimate, those privileges are conferred in order to produce true holiness:
5. If they exhort all to use them to that purpose, as they will answer it to God at the last day:
6. If they declare they shall perish, if they do not improve them to the purifying their hearts, and the right ordering of their conversation; then it must be true that these privileges belong to all Christians, and are intended to induce them to a holy life. And the truth of all those six particulars will sufficiently appear, if we attend to the Gospels and Epistles.

119. Though, in the foregoing collection, I have faithfully and impartially endeavoured to give the true sense of every text; yet possibly in some few, that are doubtful, I may have erred. But there are so many indisputably plain and full to the purpose, as will, I am persuaded, sufficiently justify the following conclusions:—

120. I. That the Gospel is a scheme for restoring true religion, and for promoting virtue and happiness.

121. II. That election, adoption, vocation, salvation, justification, sanctification, regeneration, and the other blessings, honours, and privileges, which come under the head of ANTECEDENT blessings, do, in a sense, belong at present, to all Christians, even those who, for their wickedness, may perish eternally.

122. III. That those antecedent blessings, as they are offered and assigned to the whole body of Christians, do not import an absolute final state of favour and happiness; but are to be considered as displays, instances, and descriptions of God's love and goodness to us; which are to operate as a moral mean upon our hearts. They are a display of the love of God, who is the FATHER of the universe, who cannot but delight in the well being of his creatures; and being perfect in goodness, possessed of all power, and the only original of all life and happiness, must be the prime author of all blessedness; and bestow his favours in the most free, generous, and disinterested manner. And therefore, those blessings, as freely bestowed antecedently to our obedience, and perfectly consonant to the nature and moral character of God. He has freely, in our first birth and creation, given us a distinguished and eminent degree of being, and all the noble powers and advantage of reason: and what should stop the course of his liberality, or hinder his conferring new and higher blessings, even when we could pretend no title or claim to them? And as the blessings of the Gospel are of the most noble kind, raising us to high dignity, and the most delightful prospects of immortality; they are well adapted to engage the attention of men, to give the most pleasing ideas of God, to demonstrate most clearly what nature itself discovers, that he is our FATHER, and to win and engage our hearts to him in love, who has, in a manner, so surprising, loved us. By promising the remission of sins, protection and guidance through this world, and the hope of eternal life, every cloud, discouragement, and obstacle, is removed; and the grace of God, in its brightest glory, shines full upon our minds, and is divinely powerful to support our patience, and animate our obedience under temptations, trials, and difficulties; and to inspire peace of conscience, comfort, and joy.

123. IV. These principles ought to be admitted and claimed by all Christians, and firmly established in their hearts; as containing privileges and blessings in which they are all undoubtedly interested. Otherwise it is evident, they will be defective in the true principles of their religion, the only ground of their Christian joy and peace, and the proper motives of their Christian obedience. Now those principles, (namely, our election, vocation, justification, regeneration, sanctification, &c. in Christ, through the free grace of God,) are admitted, and duly established in our hearts, by FAITH. Faith then, as exercised upon the blessings which God has gratuitously bestowed upon us, is, in our hearts, the foundation of the Christian life: and retaining and exercising this Christian virtue of Faith, is called tasting that the Lord is gracious, 1 Pet. ii. 3. having,* or holding fast grace, Heb. xii. 28. growing in grace, 2 Pet. iii. 18. being strong in the grace of Jesus Christ, 2 Tim. ii. 1. holding faith, 1 Tim. i. 19. iii. 9. continuing in the faith grounded and settled, and not being moved away from the hope of the Gospel, Col. i. 23. holding fast the confidence and rejoicing of hope, Heb. iii. 6. holding the beginning of our confidence steadfast, Heb. iii. 14. having (holding) hope, 1 John iii. 3. hoping perfectly for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the Revelation of Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. i. 13. giving earnest heed to the things we have heard, Heb. ii. 1. having (holding) the Son, or Christ, 1 John v. 12. By these, and such like phrases, the Apostles express our being thoroughly persuaded of, and duly affected with, the blessings included in our election, vocation, justification, &c. Or, their being firmly established in our hearts as principles of obedience, to secure our perseverance and final happiness; through the mighty working of God's power, to purify our hearts, and to guard us through all our spiritual dangers and conflicts; which power will always assuredly attend every one, who holds faith, grace, and hope, 1 Pet. i. 5. Here note; that the primary object of faith is not in ourselves, but in God. Not our own obedience or goodness, but the free grace of God, is the primary object of Faith. But the fruit of Faith must be in ourselves. The grace or free gift of God is the foundation of faith; and faith is the foundation of the whole life of a true Christian. 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7, Giving all diligence, add to your FAITH virtue, &c. Jude 20, Building up yourselves on your most holy FAITH, &c.

124. These antecedent blessings, are the first principles of the Christian religion: but the first principles of religion must be free from all doubt or scruple; otherwise the religion which is built upon them, must sink, as having no foundation. The principles of natural religion, that I am endowed with a rational nature, that there is a God in whom I live, move, and have my being, and to whom I am accountable for my actions, are perfectly evident; otherwise the obligations of natural religion would be necessarily doubtful and uncertain. In like manner, the first principles of the Christian religion must be free from all perplexity; otherwise its obligations must be doubtful and perplexed. If it be doubtful whether ever Christ came into the world to redeem it, the whole Gospel is doubtful; and it is the same thing, if it be doubtful who are redeemed by him; for, if he has redeemed we know not whom, it is nearly the same thing, with regard to our improvement of redemption, as if he had redeemed no body at all.

* Ἐχειν, to have, in such passages signifies to keep, or hold, as a property or principle for use. Mat. xiii. 12. xxv. 29. John iii. 29. v. 42. viii. 12. Rom. i. 28. xv. 4. 1 Thes. iii. 6. 1 Tim. i. 19. iii. 9. Heb. vi. 9. ix. 4. 1 John ii. 23. iii. 3. v. 12. 2 John ver. 9.

125. Faith is the first act of the Christian life to which every Christian is obliged, and therefore it must have a sure and certain object to work upon; but if the love of God in our election, calling, adoption, justification, redemption, &c. be in itself uncertain to any persons, in the Christian church, then faith has no sure nor certain object to work upon with respect to some Christians; and consequently some Christians are not obliged to believe; which is false.

126. Further, the Apostles make our election, calling, adoption, &c. motives to obedience and holiness. And therefore these (our election, calling, adoption, &c.) must have an existence antecedent to our obedience; otherwise they can be no motive to it. And if only an uncertain, unknown number of men be elected to eternal life, no individual can certainly know that he is of that number; and so, election can be no motive to obedience to any person in the Christian church. To confine election, adoption, &c. to some few, is unchurching the greatest part of the church, and robbing them of common motives and comforts.

127. Our election, adoption, and other antecedent blessings, are not of works; consequently we are not to work for them, but upon them. They are not the effect of our good works, but our good works are the effect of them; they are not founded upon our holiness, but our holiness is founded upon them. We do not procure them by our obedience, for they are the effect of free grace, but they are motives and reasons exciting and encouraging our obedience. Therefore our election is not proved by our sanctification, or real holiness. Our real happiness proves, that our election is made sure; but our election itself is proved by the free grace of God.

128. From all this it follows, that we, as well as the Christians of the first times, may claim, and appropriate to ourselves all the fore-mentioned antecedent blessings, without any doubt or scruple. In confidence of hope and full assurance of faith we may boldly say, "the Lord is my helper," and come with boldness to the throne of grace. Our life, even eternal life, is sure to every one of us in the promise of God, and the hands of our Lord Jesus Christ. And the business of every Christian is not to perplex himself with doubts, and fears, and gloomy apprehensions; but to rejoice in the Lord, and to do the duties of his place cheerfully and faithfully, in the assured hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ, to him be everlasting glory and praise. Amen.*

129. V. From the preceding collection of texts we may gather; that some of the expressions, whereby the antecedent blessings are signified, such as elect, justify, sanctify, &c. may be used in a double sense; namely, either as they are applied to all Christians in general in relation to their being translated into the kingdom of God, and made his peculiar people, enjoying the privileges of the Gospel. Or, as they signify the effects of those privileges. Wherever any blessing is assigned to all Christians without exception; wherever it is said not to be of works, wherever Christians are expected to make a due improvement of it, and threatened with the loss of God's blessing, and of eternal life if they do not; there, the expressions which signify that blessing, are to be understood in a general sense as denoting a gospel privilege, profession, or obligation. And in this general sense, saved, elect, chosen, justified, sanctified, are sometimes used; and calling, called, election are, I think, always used in the New Testament. But when any blessing denotes real holiness, as actually existing in the subject, then it may be understood in the special and eminent sense, and always must be understood in this sense, when it implies the actual possession of eternal life. And in this sense, saved, elect, chosen, justify, sanctify, born of God, are sometimes used. Matt. xx. 16, Many are called but few are chosen, (who make a worthy use of their calling.) Mat. xxiv. 31, He shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect. xii. 36, 37, In the day of judgment, by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned. 1 Thes. v. 24, The God of peace sanctify you wholly, &c. 1 John ii. 29, Every one that doth righteousness is born of him. iv. 7, Every one that loveth is born of God, in the eminent sense.

* This is all right, when the sinner has been led by a deep knowledge of his lost estate, to seek and find redemption in the blood of the Lamb: then it is his business to rejoice in the Lord, and do the duties of his place cheerfully and faithfully, in the assured hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ. But he must not presume, because he is in a Christian church, and believes the doctrines of Christianity, that therefore he is safe. He cannot be safe unless Christ be formed in his heart the hope of glory. A. C.

130. The Faith, which gave a person a place or standing in the Christian church, was a profession considered simply, and separately from the fruits and effects of it. But it included a profession of repentance, of forsaking sin and idolatry, and of bringing forth the fruits of righteousness. And it is the continued profession of this faith in Christ, which gives us a continued right to a place in the church. For, if we cast off our first faith, we renounce our profession, we cease to be Christians, or we no longer continue to be the peculiar family of God.

131. Here it should be carefully observed that it is very common, in the sacred writings, to express, not only our Christian privileges, but also the duty to which they oblige in the present or preterperfect tense; or to speak of that as done, which only ought to be done; and which, in fact, may possibly never be done. Mal. i. 6, A son honours, (ought to honour,) his father. Matt. v. 13, Ye are, (ought to be,) the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost his savour, &c. Rom. ii. 4, The goodness of God leads, (ought to lead,) thee to repentance. Rom. vi. 2, 11. viii. 9. Col. iii. 3. 1 Pet. i. 6, Wherein ye (ought) greatly (to) rejoice. 2 Cor. iii. 18, We all with open face, (enjoying the means of) beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord are, (ought to be, enjoy the means of being,) changed into the same image, from glory to glory. 1 Cor. v. 7, Purge out the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are (obliged by the Christian profession to be,) unleavened. Heb. xiii. 14, We seek, (we ought to seek, or according to our profession, we seek,) a city to come. 1 John ii. 12, 15.—iii. 9. v. 4, 18. and in various other places.

132. The man of true goodness, courage, and greatness of soul, is he who has that faith which worketh by love; who lives the life he now lives, by faith in the Son of God. Such a man is happy under all events. This is he, who, while he despises a vain life, has the truest and highest enjoyment of all that can be enjoyed in it. This is the man who alone properly lives; for he has nothing but life and immortality before him; death itself giving no interruption to his life. Blessed, unspeakably blessed is this man. Such the gospel is designed to make us all; and such we all may be, if we do not shamefully neglect the grace of God, and our own happiness. But the knowledge and sense of these things are generally lost among those called Christians; to whom the words of the Psalmist may be, too truly, applied: They are a people that do err in their hearts, for they have not known my ways. Psal. xcv. 10.

133. From all the preceding observations and arguments we may clearly see what is implied in preaching Christ. It is not teaching, that only a small, uncertain number among Christians, are ARBITRARILY redeemed, elected, called, adopted, born again or regenerated; and that all the rest are, by a sovereign, absolute, and eternal DECREE, passed by, or reprobated. These are no principles of Christianity, but stand in direct contradiction to them, and have drawn a dark veil over the grace of the Gospel, sunk the Christian world into an abject state of fear, and a false superstitious humility; and thrown ministers into endless absurdities. It is such doctrines as these that have misrepresented the Christian religion, harassed the Christian world endlessly, by blending and confounding men's understandings, and embittering their spirits; and have been the reason of calling in a false kind of learning, logic, metaphysics, and school divinity, in order to give a colour of reason to the grossest absurdities; and to enable divines to make a plausible show of supporting and defending palpable contradictions." See Dr. Taylor's Key to the Apostolical Writings.

A GENERAL SURVEY

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

"PAUL had never been at Rome when he wrote this letter, and therefore it cannot turn upon some particular points, to revive the remembrance of what he had more largely taught in person; or to satisfy the scrupulous in some things he might not have touched upon at all. But in it, we may expect a full account of his Gospel, or those glad tidings of salvation, which he preached among the Gentiles; seeing this Epistle was intended to supply the total want of his preaching at Rome.

He understood perfectly well the system of religion he taught, for he was instructed in it by the immediate Revelation of Jesus Christ, Gal. i. 11. Eph. iii. 3. 1 Cor. xi. 23; and being also endowed with the most eminent gifts of the Holy Spirit, a man disinterested and quite unbiassed by any temporal considerations, we may be sure he has given us the truth, as he received it from our Lord, after his ascension. On the other hand, he was also well acquainted with the sentiments and system of religion which he opposed; for he was well skilled in Jewish literature, having had the best education his country could afford; and having been once a most zealous advocate for Judaism. Having frequently disputed with the Jews, he was thoroughly versed in the controversy, and knew very well what would be retorted upon every point: and therefore we may very reasonably suppose that the queries and objections, which the Apostle in this Epistle puts into the mouth of the Jews, were really such as had been advanced in opposition to his arguments.

He was a great genius and a fine writer; and he seems to have exercised all his talents, as well as the most perfect Christian temper, in drawing up this Epistle. The plan of it is very extensive; and it is surprising to see what a spacious field of knowledge he has comprised; and how many various designs, arguments, explications, instructions, and exhortations, he has executed in so small a compass.

This letter was sent to the world's metropolis, where it might be exposed to all sorts of persons, Heathens, Jews, Christians, Philosophers, Magistrates, and the Emperor himself. And I make no doubt that the Apostle kept this in view while he was writing; and guarded and adapted it accordingly.

However, it is plain enough it was designed to confute the unbelieving, and to instruct the believing Jew; to confirm the Christian, and to convert the idolatrous Gentile. Those several designs he reduces to one scheme, by opposing and arguing with the infidel or unbelieving Jew, in favour of the Christian or believing Gentile.

Upon this plan, if the unbelieving Jew escaped and remained unconvinced; yet the Christian Jew would be more inoffensively, and more effectually instructed in the nature of the Gospel, and the kind brotherly regards he ought to have to the believing Gentiles, than if he had directed his discourse plainly and immediately to him. But if his arguments should fail, in reference to the believing Jew, yet the believing Gentile would see his interest in the covenant and kingdom of God as solidly established, by a full confutation of the Jewish objections, (which were the only objections that could, with any show of reason, be advanced against it,) as if the Epistle had been written for no other purpose. And thus it is of the greatest use to us at this day.

It is also at present exceeding useful as it entirely demolishes the engrossing pretensions, and imposing principles of the church of Rome. For a professed faith in Christ, and a subjection to him, is, in this Epistle, fully shown to be the only gospel condition of a place in his church, an interest in the covenant of God, and of Christian fellowship. By this extensive principle God broke down the pales of his own ancient enclosure, the Jewish church; and, therefore, by the same principle, more strongly forbids the building any other partition-wall of schemes, and terms of Christian fellowship, devised by human wisdom, or imposed by human authority. He then, who professes faith in Christ and subjection to him, is, by the Apostle, allowed and demonstrated to be a member of the true visible church, and to have a right to all its privileges.

Both ancients and moderns make heavy complaints of the obscurity of this Epistle, though all agree it is a great and useful performance. Origen, one of the fathers, compares our Apostle to a person who leads a stranger into a magnificent palace, but perplexed with various cross and intricate passages, and many remote and secret apartments; shows him some things at a distance, out of an opulent treasury; brings some things near to his view; conceals others from it; often enters in at one door, and comes out at another: so that the stranger is surprised, and wonders whence he came, where he is, and how he shall get out. But we shall have a tolerable idea of this princely structure, if we observe, that it consists of four grand parts or divisions. The first division contains the five first chapters: the second, the sixth, seventh, and eighth: the third, the ninth, tenth, and eleventh: the fourth, the five last chapters.

Part I.—Displays the riches of Divine grace, as free to all mankind. Jews and Gentiles are equally sinful and obnoxious to wrath; and therefore there was no way for the Jew to be continued in the kingdom of God, but by grace through faith; and by grace and faith, the Gentile might be admitted into it.—To reject this way of justification, was to reject the very method in which Abraham himself was justified, or interested in the covenant made with him: in which covenant, believing Gentiles were included, as well as believing Jews; and had as great or greater privileges, to glory in.—But if the Jew should pertinaciously deny that, he could not deny, that all mankind are interested in the grace of God, which removes the consequence of Adam's offence. Through that offence all mankind were subjected to death; and through Christ's obedience all mankind should be restored to life at the last day. The resurrection from the dead is, therefore, a part of the grace of God in the Redeemer. And if all mankind have an interest in this part of the grace of God, why not in the whole of it? If all mankind were subjected to death through Adam's one offence; is it not much more reasonable that, through the opposite nobler cause, the obedience of the Son of God, all mankind should be interested in the whole of the grace, which God has established upon it?—And as for law, or the rule of right action, it was absurd for any part of mankind to expect pardon, or any blessedness upon the foot of that, seeing all mankind had broken it. And it was still more absurd, to seek pardon and life by the law of Moses, which condemned those that were under it to death for every transgression.

Part II.—Having proved that believing Jews and Gentiles were pardoned, and interested in all the privileges and blessings of the Gospel, through mere grace; he next shows the obligations laid upon them to a life of virtue and piety, under the new dispensation. And upon this subject he adapts this discourse to the Gentile Christians in the sixth chapter; and in the seventh, and part of the eighth, he turns himself to the Jewish Christians: then, from verse 12, to the end of the eighth chapter, he addresses himself upon the same head, to both Christian Jews and Gentiles; particularly, giving them right notions of the sufferings to which they were exposed, and by which they might be deterred from the duties required in the Gospel; and concluding with a very strong and lively assertion of the certain perseverance of all who love God, notwithstanding any infirmities or trials in this world.

Part III.—Gives right sentiments concerning the rejection of the Jews, which was a matter of great moment to the due establishment of the Gentile converts.

Part IV.—Is filled with exhortations to several instances of Christian duty; and concludes with salutations to and from particular persons. It will be an advantage to the reader to have this sketch of the Epistle ready in his thoughts.

Further; we cannot enter into the spirit of this Epistle, unless we enter into the spirit of a Jew in those times; and have some just notion of his utter aversion to the Gentiles; his valuing and raising himself high upon his relation to God, and to Abraham; upon his law, and pompous worship, circumcision, &c. as if the Jews were the only people in the world who had any manner of right to the favour of God.

And let it also be well noted, that the Apostle, in this Epistle, disputes with the whole body of the Jews, without respect to any particular sect or party among them, such as Pharisees, Sadducees, &c. For the grand proposition or question in debate is, Are WE, Jews, better than THEY, Gentiles? (chap. iii. 9.) And one argument, in proof of the negative, which the Apostle espouses, is this, (chap. iii. 29.) Is God the God of the Jews only? Is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also. These are the two points through which the line of the Apostle's discourse in the third chapter, and consequently in all the argumentative part of the Epistle, must necessarily run. And as, both in the proposition and in the argument, he evidently means the whole body of the Jews, in opposition to the whole body of the Gentiles, he who doth not give such a sense of the Apostle's discourse, throughout the argumentative part of the Epistle, as exactly hits and suits this general, collective notion of Jews and Gentiles, certainly misses his aim, and shoots wide of the mark.

Lastly, the whole Epistle is to be taken in connexion, or considered as one continued discourse; and the sense of every part must be taken from the drift of the whole. Every sentence, or verse, is not to be regarded as a distinct mathematical proposition, or theorem; or as a sentence in the book of Proverbs, whose sense is absolute, and independent of what goes before or comes after: but we must remember, that every sentence, especially in the argumentative part, bears relation to, and is dependent upon, the whole discourse; and cannot be understood unless we understand the scope and drift of the whole. And therefore, the whole Epistle, or at least the eleven first chapters of it, ought to be read over at once, without stopping.

As to the use and excellency of this epistle, I shall leave it to speak for itself, when the Reader has studied and well digested the contents of it. And methinks curiosity, if nothing else, should invite us to examine carefully the doctrine, by which (accompanied with the gifts and operations of the Spirit of God) a few men, otherwise naked, weak, and contemptible, in opposition to the power, learning, and deep rooted prejudices of the world, confronted and overthrew the Pagan religion and idolatry throughout the Roman empire. A victory far more difficult and surprising than all the achievements of Alexander and Cæsar. The fact cannot be denied. And surely the dignity and virtue of the cause must be proportionable to such an unusual and wonderful event. It is certain the world never, either before or since, has seen any thing equal to the writings of the New-Testament. Never was the love of God, and the dignity to which he has raised the human nature, so clearly shown and demonstrated; never were motives so divine and powerful proposed to induce us to the practice of all virtue and goodness. In short, there we find whatever ennobles and adorns the mind; whatever gives solid peace and joy; whatever renders us the most excellent and happy creatures, taught, recommended, and enforced by light and authority derived from the only fountain of truth and of all good.

As to the Apostle's manner of writing, it is with great spirit and force, I may add, perspicuity too; for it will not be difficult to understand him if our minds are unprejudiced, and at liberty to attend to the subject he is upon, and to the current scriptural sense of the words he uses. For he keeps very strictly to the standard of Scripture phraseology. He takes great care to guard and explain every part of his subject. And I may venture to say, he has left no part of it unexplained or unguarded. Never was author more exact and cautious in this than he. Sometimes he writes notes upon a sentence, liable to exception and wanting explanation, as Rom. ii. 12—16. Here the 13th and 15th verses are a comment upon the former part of it. Sometimes he comments upon a single word; as Chap. x. 11, 12, 13. The 12th and 13th verses are a comment upon πας every one, in the 11th.

He was studious of a perspicuous brevity. Chap. v. 13, 14, For until the Law, sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when Law is not in being. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression. Surely never was a greater variety of useful sentiments crowded into a smaller compass; and yet so skilfully, that one part very clearly explains another. Hence we learn, 1, that here imputing of sin means, men's being subject to death for sin; for it follows, Nevertheless death reigned. 2. That law is the constitution that subjects the sinner to death; for he saith, Sin is not imputed when law is not in being. 3. That until the Law, is the times before the law of Moses was given; for he saith, Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses. Until the law, is the same as until Moses. 4. That law was not in being from Adam to Moses; for having said, when law is not in being, he immediately adds, nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses. 5. That Adam was under the law; for if the law was not in being from Adam, or after the dispensation he was under, it is plain it was in being before; or, that law was the dispensation under which God placed Adam. 6. That the clause, even over those that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression, it is not to be understood only of some particular persons, as infants, but of all that lived from Adam to Moses, because none that lived from Adam to Moses were under the law, and so none could sin after the likeness of Adam's transgression. 7. That the law was in being after Moses, for it was not in being from Adam to Moses, which evidently supposes it was in being afterwards, and that the Jews, from that time, sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression, or were by the law condemned to death for every transgression. 8. Lastly, from the whole it is evident that from Adam to Moses men did not die for their own personal transgressions, but in consequence of Adam's one transgression, which is the point to be proved. One shall hardly find in any other author, an argument so justly managed, so fully established, attended with such a variety of instructive sentiments in the compass of thirty words; for setting aside the articles there are no more in the Greek. It is by this unparalleled art, that the Apostle has brought such a variety of arguments, instructions, and sentiments, all stated, proved, and sufficiently guarded, explained, and defended, within the limits of this letter; which has made it a magazine of the most real, extensive, useful, and profitable knowledge.

He treats his countrymen, the Jews, with great caution and tenderness. He had a natural affection for them, was very desirous of winning them over to the gospel; he knew that their passions and prejudices were very strong for their own constitution: therefore, in his debates with them, he avoids every thing harsh, introduces every kind and endearing sentiment, and is very nice in choosing soft and inoffensive expressions, so far as he honestly could, for he never flatters, nor dissembles the truth.

His transitions and advances to an ungrateful subject, are very dextrous and apposite, as chap. ii. 1—17. viii. 17.

He often carries on a complicated design, and while he is teaching one thing, gives us an opportunity of learning one or two more. So chap. xiii. 1—8, he teaches the duty of subjects, and at the same time instructs magistrates in their duty, and shows the true grounds of their authority.

He is a nervous reasoner, and a close writer, who never loses sight of his subject, and who throws in every colour that may enliven it.

He writes under a deep and lively sense of the truth and importance of the Gospel, as a man who clearly understood it, and in whose heart and affections it reigned far superior to all temporal considerations."

See Dr. Taylor's Preface to the Romans.

There is so much good sense and sound criticism in the above remarks, that I cannot help considering them of high importance to a proper understanding of this epistle. The Apostle's manner of writing, is here well vindicated; and proved to be close, nervous, and conclusive; and such a testimony from such a man as Dr. Taylor, must, with every unprejudiced reader, outweigh the miserable sentiment of that philosopher, who, while professing to hold the same creed with the above writer, has had the awful temerity to say, that St. Paul was "an inconclusive reasoner." By such a saying, a man fixes the broad seal to his own incompetency to judge either of the Apostle's writings or doctrine.

In the preceding pages I have borrowed largely from the work of Dr. Taylor, on a full conviction that it is the best ever written upon this subject, that it is indispensably necessary to a proper understanding of the Apostolic writings; and that I could not hope to equal it by any production of my own. Those parts of his Key which did not fall in with my plan, I have taken the liberty to pass by; the rest I have greatly abridged, and only added a few notes where I thought there might be any danger of misapprehending the subject.

PRELIMINARY OBSERVATIONS.

Different Interpreters have divided this Epistle into certain parts or divisions, by which they suppose its subject and matter may be the better understood. Some of these divisions have been mentioned in the preceding preface.

The Epistle contains three grand divisions.

I. The PREFACE, chap. i. 1—17.

II. The TRACTATION, or setting forth of the main subject, including two sections, 1. Dogmatic, or what relates to Doctrine. 2. Parænetic, or what relates to the necessity and importance of the virtues and duties of the Christian life. The Dogmatic part is included in the first eleven chapters, the grand object of which is to show, that eternal salvation cannot be procured by any observation of the Jewish law, and can be hoped for, only on the Christian scheme; for by the works of the law no man can be justified; but what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God has accomplished by sending his Son into the world, who, becoming an offering for sin, condemned sin in the flesh. The Parænetic part commences with chap. xii. 1. I beseech

4 And [c] declared [d] to be the Son of God with power, according [e] to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead:

you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service, &c. and extends to chap. xv. 14.

III. The Peroration or Epilogue, which contains the Author's apology for writing; his commendation of his apostolical office; his promise to visit them; his request of an interest in their prayers; his commendations of certain persons, and his salutations to others. These points are contained in the succeeding parts of the Epistle, from chap. xv. 14. to chap. xvi. 24. The 25th, 26th, and 27th verses of this chapter evidently belong to another part of the Epistle, and should come in, as they do in a vast majority of the best MSS. after the 23rd verse of the xiv. chapter.

For every thing necessary to a general knowledge of the Epistle itself, see the preceding Preface.

The inscriptions to this Epistle are various in the different MSS. and Versions. The following are the principal:—To the Romans—The Epistle of Paul to the Romans—The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans—The Epistle of the Holy Apostle Paul to the Romans. The word αγιος holy, we have translated saint; and thus, instead of saying the holy Paul, &c. we say Saint Paul, &c. and this is now brought into general use. The older the MSS. are, the more simple the appellatives given to Apostles and Apostolic men.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ] The word δουλος which we translate servant, properly means a slave, one who is the entire property of his master; and is used here by the Apostle with great propriety. He felt he was not his own, and that his life and powers belonged to his heavenly owner, and that he had no right to dispose of, or employ them but in the strictest subserviency to the will of his Lord. In this sense, and in this spirit, he is the willing slave of Jesus Christ: and this is, perhaps, the highest character which any soul of man can attain on this side eternity. "I am wholly the Lord's; and wholly devoted in the spirit of sacrificial obedience to the constant, complete, and energetic performance of the Divine will." A friend of God is high; a son of God is higher; but the servant, or, in the above sense, the slave of God, is higher than all; in a word, he is a person who feels he has no property in himself, and that God is all, and in all.

Called to be an apostle] The word Αποστολος Apostle, from Αποστελλειν to send, signifies simply a messenger or envoy; one sent on a confidential errand: but here it means an extraordinary messenger; one sent by God himself, to deliver the most important message on behalf of his Maker: in a word, one sent by the divine authority to preach the Gospel to the nations. The word κλητος called, signifies here the same as constituted, and should be joined with Αποστολος as it is in the Greek, and translated thus, Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, constituted an Apostle, &c. This sense the word called has in many places of the Sacred Writings; e. g. Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called κληθωμεν, CONSTITUTED, or made the sons of God. As it is likely that no Apostle had been employed in founding the church of Rome, and there was need of much authority to settle the matters that were there in dispute; it was necessary that he should show them, that he derived his authority from God; and was immediately delegated by him to preach and write as he was now doing.

Separated unto the gospel] Set apart and appointed to this work, and to this only; as the Israelites were separate from all the people of the earth, to be the servants of God, see Levit. xx. 26. St. Paul may here refer to his former state as a Pharisee, which literally signifies a separatist, or one separated. Before, he was separated unto the service of his own sect; now, he is separated unto the gospel of God. On the word GOSPEL, and its meaning, see the Preface to the notes on St. Matthew; and for the meaning of the word Pharisee, see the same Gospel, chap. iii. at the end.

Verse 2. Which he had promised afore] Both in the law and in the prophets, God showed his purpose to introduce into the world a more perfect and glorious state of things: which state was to take place by and under the influence of the Messiah; who should bring life and immortality to light by his gospel.

Verse 3. Concerning his Son] That is, the gospel relates every thing concerning the Conception, Birth, Preaching, Miracles, Passion, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of Jesus Christ, who was of the seed royal, being, as far as his humanity was considered, the Son of David; and then, the only rightful heir to the Israelitish throne.

Verse 4. And declared to be the Son of God] See the note on Acts chap. xiii. 33. where this subject is considered at large. The word οριστεντος, which we render declared, comes from οριζω to bound, define, determine, or limit, and hence our word horizon, the line that determines the farthest visible part of the earth, in reference to the heavens. In this place, the word signifies such a manifest and complete exhibition of the subject, as to render it indubitable. The resurrection of Christ from the dead, was such a manifest proof of our Lord's innocence, the truth of his doctrine, and the fulfilment of all that the Prophets had spoken, as to leave no doubt on any considerate and candid mind.

With power] Εν δυναμει, with a miraculous display of divine energy; for, how could his body be raised again, but by the miraculous energy of God? Some apply the word here to the proof of Christ's Sonship; as if it were said, that he was most manifestly declared to be the Son of God, with such powerful evidence and argument, as to render the truth irresistible.

According to the spirit of holiness] There are many differences of sentiment relative to the meaning of this phrase in this place; some supposing, that the spirit of holiness implies the divine nature of Jesus Christ; others his immaculate sanctity, &c. To me it seems that the apostle simply means that the person called Jesus, lately crucified at Jerusalem, and in whose name salvation was preached to the world, was the Son of God, the very Messiah promised before in the Holy Scriptures; and that he was this Messiah, was amply demonstrated. 1st, By his resurrection from the dead, the irrefragable proof of his purity, innocence, and the divine approbation; for, had he been a malefactor, as the Jews pretended, the miraculous power of God would not have been exerted in raising his body from the dead. 2nd, He was proved to be the Son of God, the promised Messiah, by the Holy Spirit, (called here the Spirit of holiness) which he sent down upon his apostles, and not on them only, but on all that believed on his name; by whose influence multitudes were convinced of sin, righteousness, and judgment, and multitudes sanctified unto God; and it was by the peculiar unction of this Spirit of holiness, that the apostles gave witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, Acts iv. 33. Thus then, Christ was proved to be the true Messiah, the son of David, according to the flesh, having the sole right to the throne of Israel; and God recognized this character, and this right, by his resurrection from the dead, and sending forth the various gifts and graces of the Spirit of holiness in his name.

Verse 5. Grace and apostleship] The peculiar influence, and the essential qualifications which such an office requires: without the GRACE, favour, and peculiar help of God, he could not have been an Apostle: he had an extraordinary conversion; and an extraordinary call to preach the Gospel. Probably χαριν και Αποστολην grace and apostleship, mean the same as χαριν της Αποστολης, the apostolical office; for so the word χαρις means in chap. xii. 3. xv. 15. 1 Cor. iii. 10. Eph. iii. 8. See the various acceptations of the word grace, on verse 7.

For obedience to the faith] That by this office, which I have received from God, and the power by which it is accompanied, I might proclaim the faith, the Gospel of Jesus; and show all nations the necessity of believing in it, in order to their salvation. Here is, first, the Gospel of the Son of God—2. An Apostle divinely commissioned and empowered to preach it—3. The necessity of faith in the name of Jesus, as the only Saviour of the world.—4. Of obedience, as the necessary consequence of genuine faith—and, 5. This is to be proclaimed among all nations; that all might have the opportunity of believing and being saved.

Verse 6. Ye are the called] Ye Romans are all invited to believe in Christ Jesus, for the salvation of your souls: and to you, with the rest, my apostolical mission extends. This appears to be the most obvious sense of the word called in this place—to be called by the Gospel, is to be invited to believe in Christ Jesus, and become his disciples. The word sometimes means constituted, or made, as in verse 1.

Verse 7. Called to be saints] Invited to become holy persons, by believing the gospel, and receiving the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Or here the word may have the meaning of made or constituted, as above; κλητοις αγιοις, to all that be in Rome, CONSTITUTED Saints, for they had already received the gospel of grace; and were formed into a Christian church.

Grace to you] Χαρις υμιν; may you be partakers of the Divine favour, the source whence every blessing is derived.

I think it necessary, once for all, to give the several acceptations of this word grace, which occur in the Sacred Writings.

1. The word χαρις signifies in general favour, or benevolence, but especially that favour which is powerful and active, and loads its object with benefits. Luke i. 30, Fear not, Mary, thou hast found FAVOUR, χαριν, with God. Luke ii. 40, And the child grew—and the GRACE of God, χαρις peace from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

8 First, [a] I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that [b] your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

[a] 1 Cor. 1. 4. Phil. 1. 3. Col. 1. 3, 4. 1 Thes. 1. 2. Philem. 4.

[b] Ch. 16. 19. 1 Thes. 1. 8.

Θεου, the favour of God was upon him. Ib. v. 52, And Jesus increased in FAVOUR, χαριτι, GRACE with God and man. Acts ii. 47, Having FAVOUR, χαριν, GRACE, with all the people. Acts iv. 33, And great GRACE, χαρις, FAVOUR was upon them all. The Apostles were at that time in universal favour with the multitude. In this sense the word occurs in a great variety of places, both in the Old and New Testaments.

2. Hence it is often used for the blessing which it dispenses; for if God be favourably disposed towards a person, his beneficent acts in that person's behalf, will be a necessary consequence of such favour. John i. 14, Full of GRACE and truth; accomplished in all spiritual blessings. Ib. v. 16, And GRACE upon GRACE: he who is full of the most excellent blessings, confers them liberally on all believers. Acts xi. 23, When he had seen the GRACE of God, i. e. he had the fullest evidence that they were richly endowed with heavenly gifts. 1 Cor. i. 4, For the GRACE of God which is given you, the Divine blessings conferred upon you. 2 Cor. ix. 8, God is able to make all GRACE abound towards you; i. e. to enrich you with every benediction. This also is a very common acceptation of the word; and in this sense the word grace, or favour, is now generally understood among religious people. The grace of God meaning with them some divine or spiritual blessing communicated.

3. It is sometimes taken for the whole of the Christian Religion, as being the grandest possible display of God's favour, to a lost, ruined world: and in this sense it appears to be used. John i. 17, For the LAW was given by Moses; but GRACE and truth came by Jesus Christ: where the term GRACE is evidently opposed to LAW; the latter meaning the Mosaic, the other the Christian, dispensation. Acts xiii. 43, Barnabas persuaded them to continue in the GRACE of God—i. e. to hold fast their profession of the religion of Christ. Rom. vi. 14, Ye are not under the LAW, but under GRACE: ye are no longer under obligation to fulfil the Mosaic precepts; but are under the Christian dispensation.—See also verse 15. of the same chap. and see 2 Cor. i. 10. vi. 1. Gal. i. 6. Coloss. i. 6. 2 Tim. ii. 1. Tit. ii. 11, The GRACE of God, that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared. The Jewish religion was restricted in its benefits to a few; but the Christian religion proposes the salvation of all men; and the Author of it has become a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. Heb. xii. 15, Looking diligently lest any man fall from the GRACE of God; lest any man apostatize from the Christian religion, and the blessings of pardon and holiness which he has received through it. 1 Pet. v. 12, This is the true GRACE of God wherein ye stand. The Christian religion which ye have received, is the genuine religion of God.

4. It signifies all the blessings and benefits which Christ has purchased; and which he gives to true believers, both in time and eternity. See Rom. v. 15 and 17. where the grace of God is opposed to death; i. e. to all the wretchedness and misery brought into the world by Adam's transgression.—1 Cor. xvi. 23, The GRACE of the Lord Jesus Christ be with you all: may every blessing purchased by Christ's passion and death be the portion of you all. Gal. v. 4, Ye are fallen from GRACE—ye have lost the blessings of the Gospel by submitting to circumcision.

5. It signifies the apostolic and ministerial office; or the authority to propagate the Christian religion; and the unction or influence by which that office is executed: so in the 5th verse of this chapter, as has been already noted—By whom we have received GRACE and apostleship, or, the apostolic office. Rom. xii. 3, I say, through the GRACE given unto me: i. e. I command you by the authority of my apostolic office, &c. See also verse 6.

6. It signifies a gift, salary, or money collected for the use of the poor. 1 Cor. xvi. 3, Whomsoever ye shall approve—them will I send to bring your LIBERALITY, την χαριν υμων, your GRACE—i. e. the collection made for the poor saints: see ver. 1. 2 Cor. viii. 4, Praying us—that we would receive the GIFT, την χαριν, the GRACE, the contribution made in the churches of Macedonia, for the relief of the poor. In this sense it is used in Ecclus. xvii. 22, He will keep the GOOD DEEDS of man, χαριν, the same as ελεημοσυνη, alms, in the beginning of the verse, and it signifies a kind or friendly act, in the same author. Chap. xxix. 15, Forget not the FRIENDSHIP, χαριτας, of thy surety. GRACE, or χαρις, was a deity among the ancients; and the three GRACES, αι τρεις χαριτες, were called Pitho, Aglaia, and Euphrosyne: Πειθω, mild persuasion; Αγλαια, dignity; Ευφροσυνη, liberality and joyfulness; and these were always painted naked, to show that all benefits should be gratuitous, this being essential to the nature of a gift. See Suidas, in χαριτας.

7. It sometimes signifies merely thanks or thanksgiving.—See Luke xvii. 9, Doth he THANK, μη χαριν εχει, that servant? Rom. vi. 17, But God be THANKED, χαρις δε τω Θεω. 1 Cor. x. 30, For if I by GRACE, χαριτι, THANKSGIVING, as our margin has it, and properly.

8. It signifies remuneration, wages, or reward. Luke vi.

32, 33, and 34, If ye love them that love you—do good to them which do good to you—lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what THANK have ye? ποια υμιν χαρις εστι, what REWARD have ye? This appears, from the parallel place, Matt. v. 64, to be most evidently the meaning: τιν μισθον εχετε; what REWARD have ye? The word is used in this sense by several Greek writers.

9. It signifies whatever is the means of procuring the favour or kindness of another. 1 Pet. ii. 19, 20, For this is THANKWORTHY, τουτο γαρ χαρις παρα Θεῳ, this is the means of PROCURING FAVOUR from God.

10. It signifies joy, pleasure, and gratification, which is the meaning of χαρὰ, and with which it is often confounded in the New Testament. Philemon 7, For we have great JOY, χαριν γαρ εχομεν πολλην. Tobit vii. 18, The Lord give thee JOY, χαριν, for this thy sorrow. In this sense the word is used by the best Greek writers; and in this sense it appears to be used, 2 Cor. i. 15.

11. It signifies the performance of an act which is pleasing or grateful to others. Acts xxiv. 27, Felix, willing to show the Jews a PLEASURE, χαριτας καταθεσθαι, to perform an act which he knew would be highly gratifying to them.

12. It signifies whatever has the power or influence to procure favour, &c. Suavity, kindness, benevolence, gentle demeanour. Luke iv. 22, All wondered at the GRACIOUS words οι λογοι της χαριτος, the benevolent, kind, and tender expressions; such as his text ver. 18. would naturally lead him to speak—He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, &c. Eph. iv. 29. Col. iv. 6, Let your speech be always with GRACE: i. e. gracious, kind, benevolent, savouring of the doctrine of Christ: it is thus used by several Greek writers. See Schleusner. As the word χαρις, GRACE, most frequently signifies some blessing or benefit, calculated to promote human happiness; it is generally derived from χαιρω, I rejoice, because of the effect produced by the blessing.

And Peace] Ειρηνη, the same as שלום shalom in Hebrew, generally signifying all kinds of blessing, but especially harmony and unity—and the bond of such unity. The most probable derivation of the word ειρηνη is from ειρω I bind, and εἷς one—because peace unites and binds those who were, by discord, before disunited. In the New Testament it signifies—1. Peace, public or private, in the general acceptation of the word, as implying reconciliation and friendship; and to the etymology of the word the Apostle seems to allude in Eph. iv. 3, Endeavouring to keep the UNITY of the Spirit, in the BOND of PEACE. Acts xii. 20, They of Tyre and Sidon, desired PEACE; they sought reconciliation with Herod, by means of Blastus, the king's chamberlain.

2. It signifies regularity, good order. 1 Cor. xiv. 33, God is not the God of confusion, but of PEACE.

3. It signifies, the labour or study of preserving peace and concord; and this is supposed to be its meaning, Matt. x. 34. Luke xii. 51. and Acts vii. 26. Rom. xiv. 17, For the kingdom of God is—righteousness and PEACE. The Christian dispensation admits of no contention, but inculcates peace. 1 Cor. vii. 15, God hath called us to PEACE—to labour to preserve quietness and concord. Heb. xii. 14, Follow PEACE—labour to preserve it.

4. It signifies the author or procurer of peace and concord. Eph. ii. 14. He is our PEACE—the author of concord betwixt Jews and Gentiles.

5. It signifies the Gospel and its blessings. Eph. ii. 17, And came and preached PEACE to you which were afar off; and to them that were nigh.

6. It signifies all kinds of mental and corporeal happiness; and especially the happiness of Christians. Luke i. 79, To guide our feet into the way of PEACE; to show us the way to obtain true happiness. Luke xix. 42, The things which belong unto thy PEACE—that by which thou mightest have been made truly happy. 1 Thess. v. 23. The very God of PEACE—God, the only source of true felicity. John xvi. 33, These things have I spoken unto you that in me ye might have PEACE—that ye might have confidence and happiness in believing on me as your only Saviour.

7. It signifies good wishes and affectionate prayers. Matt. x. 13, And if the house be worthy, let your PEACE come upon it. Our Lord commands his disciples, ver. 12. to salute the house into which they entered; and this was done by saying peace be unto this house! that is, let every blessing, spiritual and temporal, be the portion of this family; See Luke x. 6. John xiv. 27. and Acts xv. 33. they were let go in PEACE; they had the most fervent and affectionate prayers of the church.

8. It signifies Praise. Luke xix. 38, PEACE in Heaven, and glory in the Highest. May all the heavenly host praise God, and give him the highest honour!

9. It signifies benignity, benevolence, favour, Rom. v. 1, Being justified by faith, we have PEACE with God. In consequence of having our sins forgiven, we have a clear sense of the Divine favour. Phil. iv. 7, The PEACE of God, which passeth all understanding; the inexpressible blessedness of a sense of the Divine favour. See Schleusner's Lexicon.

From God our Father] The Apostle wishes them all the blessings which can flow from GOD, as the fountain of grace; producing in them all the happiness which a heart filled with the peace of God can possess; all of which are to be communicated to them through the Lord Jesus Christ. See the note on Acts xxviii. 31.

Verse 8. First, I thank my God] From this, to the end of ver. 17. belongs to the preface, in which the Apostle endeavours to conciliate the good opinion of the Christians at Rome; and to prepare their minds for his reproofs and exhortations.

Your faith is spoken] Καταγγελλεται is celebrated—throughout the whole world—In every place where the Christian religion is professed, through all parts of the Roman dominions; for in this sense we should understand the words the whole world.

Verse 9. Whom I serve with my spirit] Λατρευω, whom I worship with the profoundest religious reverence; for so the original certainly means: I not only employ all the powers of my body in this service, but all those of my soul; being thoroughly convinced of the absolute truth of the religion I preach. Probably St. Paul opposes, in this place, the spiritual worship of the gospel, to the external, or what some call, the carnal worship of the Jews. Mine is not a religion of ceremonies, but one in which the life and power of the eternal Spirit, are acknowledged and experienced.

Verse 10. Making request, &c.] By this we see how earnestly the Apostle longed to see Rome. It had long been a subject of continual prayer to God, that he might have a prosperous journey to, or rather meeting with them, for so we should understand the word ευοδωθησομαι: that he had a prosperous meeting with them we cannot doubt; that he had a disastrous journey to them, the 27th of the Acts fully proves.

Verse 11. Some spiritual gift] This probably means some of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit; which, being given to them, might tend greatly to establish their faith in the gospel of Christ; and it is very likely, that such gifts were only conferred by means of apostles; and as the Apostle had not yet been at Rome, consequently the Roman Christians had not yet received any of these miraculous gifts, and thus they differed widely from all the other churches which had been raised by the Apostles' ministry.

Verse 12. That I may be comforted together with you] He here, with great address, intimates that he longs for this opportunity, as well on his own account as on theirs; and to show them that he arrogates nothing to himself, for he intimates that it will require the conjoint action of their faith as well as his own, to be the means of receiving those blessings from God to which he refers.

Verse 13. But was let hitherto] The word let, from the Anglo-Saxon, lettan to hinder, signifies impediment, or hindrance of any kind: but it is likely that the original word εκωλυθην, I was forbidden, refers to a Divine prohibition:—he would have visited them long before, but God did not see right to permit him.

Verse 14. I am a debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians] It has been remarked before, that all the nations of the earth, themselves excepted, were termed barbarians by the Greeks. See the origin of the word barbarus, in the note on Acts, chap. xxviii. 2. The Apostle considers himself, by his apostolical office and call, under obligation to preach the gospel to all people, as far as the providence of God might open his way; for this is implied in the Divine commission—Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; to the wise and the unwise; to the learned and cultivated, as well as to the unlearned and uncultivated: this evidently appears to be the import of the terms.

Verse 15. I am ready to preach] Προθυμον; I have a ready mind. I was only prevented by the Providence of Verse 16. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ] This text is best illustrated by Isai. xxviii. 16. xlix. 23. quoted by the Apostle chap. x. 11. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed; i. e. they shall neither be confounded, nor disappointed of their hope. The Jews, by not believing on Jesus Christ, by not receiving him as the promised Messiah, but trusting in others, have been disappointed, ashamed, and confounded, from that time to the present day. Their expectation is cut off: and while rejecting Christ, and expecting another Messiah, they have continued under the displeasure of God, and are ashamed of their confidence. On the other hand, those who have believed on Christ, have, in and through him, all the blessings of which the prophets spoke; every promise of God being yea and amen through him. Paul, as a Jew, believed on Christ Jesus; and in believing he had life through his name; through him he enjoyed an abundance of grace, so that being filled with that happiness which an indwelling Christ produces, he could cheerfully say, I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ. And why? because he felt it to be the power of God to the salvation of his believing soul. This appears to be the true sense of this passage, and this interpretation acquires additional strength from the consideration that St. Paul is here most evidently addressing himself to the Jews.

It is the power of God unto salvation] Δυναμις γαρ Θεου εστιν. The almighty power of God accompanies this preaching to the souls of them that believe; and the consequence is, they are saved; and what but the power of God can save a fallen, sinful soul?

To the Jew first] Not only the Jews have the first offer of this gospel, but they have the greatest need of it; being so deeply fallen, and having sinned against such glorious privileges, they are much more culpable than the Gentiles, who never had the light of a divine revelation.

And also to the Greek] Though the salvation of God has hitherto been apparently confined to the Jewish people; yet it shall be so no longer, for the gospel of Christ is sent to the Gentiles, as well as the Jews; God having put no difference between them; and Jesus Christ having tasted death for EVERY man.

Verse 17. For therein] In the gospel of Christ.

Is the righteousness of God] God's method of saving sinners.

Revealed from faith to faith] ~~Shown to~~ be by faith, and not by the works of any law; for Abraham, the father and founder of the Jewish people, was justified by faith, before even the law was given; and from believing in reference to the spiritual object held forth in the various ordinances of the law, and now revealed under the gospel, he and all his believing descendants have been justified. And thus the faith of the old covenant led on to the faith of the new covenant; which shows that salvation has been by faith, from the call of Abraham to the present time. And from the beginning, all that were just or righteous in the earth, became such by faith, and by this principle alone, they were enabled to persevere; as it is written, the just shall live by faith. That Δικαιοσυνη, which we translate righteousness in this verse, signifies God's method of saving mankind by faith in Christ, is fully evident from the use of the term in chap. ix. 30. The Gentiles which followed not after RIGHTEOUSNESS; who had no knowledge by revelation, of God's method of justifying and saving sinners, have attained to RIGHTEOUSNESS; have had imparted to them God's method of salvation by faith in Christ, verse 31. But Israel, the Jews, which followed after the law of righteousness; that law, the end or object of which is CHRIST, and through him Justification to all that believe; (ch. x. 4.) have not attained to the law of righteousness; have not found out the genuine plan of salvation, even in that law which so strongly and generally proclaims justification by faith; and why have they not found it? verse 32, because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law; they did not discern that even its works or prescribed religious observances were intended to lead to faith in that glorious Mediator, of whom they were the types and representatives; but the Jews trusted in the observances themselves, hoping to acquire justification and final salvation by that means. For they stumbled at the stumbling-stone, at the doctrine of Christ crucified, as the only sure ground on which the expectation of future salvation can be founded. Therefore being ignorant of God's righteousness; God's method of saving sinners, and going about to establish their own righteousness, their own method of salvation, by the observance of those rites and ceremonies which should have led them, by faith, to Christ; they did not submit themselves to the righteousness of God; they would not submit to be saved in God's way, and therefore rejected, persecuted, and crucified the Lord Jesus, see chap. x. 3. This collation of passages most evidently shows that the word righteousness here means simply God's method of saving sinners, or God's way of salvation; in opposition to the ways and means invented by the fancies or prejudices of men.

There are few words in the Sacred Writings which are taken in a greater variety of acceptations, than the word צדקה tsedekah in Hebrew, and Δικαιοσυνη in Greek, both of which we generally translate righteousness. Our English word was originally rightwiseness, from the Anglo-Saxon ꝑihꞇ justice, right, and ꝑiꞇan to know; and thus the righteous man was a person who was allowed to understand the claims of justice and right, and who knowing them, acted according to their dictates. Such a man is thoroughly wise, he aims at the attainment of the best end, by the use of the best means. This is a true definition of wisdom, and the righteous man is he that knows most and acts best. The Hebrew צדק tsadak, in its ideal meaning, contains the notion of a beam or scales in equipoise, what we call even balance; and it is well known, that in all the personifications of justice, both ancient and modern, she is represented as a beautiful female with a bandage on her eyes, and a beam and scales in her hand, so perfectly poised that neither end preponderates.

The Greek word Δικαιοσυνη has been derived from δικαζω to divide; and hence Δικη justice, because it is the property of this virtue to divide to each his due. With other etymologies, it is useless to trouble the Reader. Both the noun δικαιοσυνη and the verb δικαιοω have a great variety of meaning in the New Testament, but they are all reducible to this original idea, acting according to the requisitions of justice or right. It may not be improper to notice some of the chief of these acceptations in this place.

1. The act of distributing to each man his due, is the sense of the word. Acts xvii. 31, He will judge the world in RIGHTEOUSNESS, i. e. according to the principles of eternal justice and rectitude. See also Rev. xix. 2, In RIGHTEOUSNESS doth he judge and make war.

2. It signifies a holy life, as proceeding from piety towards God. Luke i. 75, Might serve him in holiness and RIGHTEOUSNESS all the days of our life.

3. It signifies benignity, liberality, and particularly almsgiving; as justice and righteousness require us, being only stewards of God's bounty, to share it with the necessitous. Matt. vi, Take heed that ye do not your ALMS, δικαιοσυνη, your RIGHTEOUSNESS, before men. Rom. iii. 5, But if our unrighteousness commend the RIGHTEOUSNESS, the benignity of God. 2 Cor. ix. 10, Increase the fruits of your RIGHTEOUSNESS, i. e. of your liberality.

4. It signifies God's method of saving sinners; the way which is agreeable to his righteousness and liberality. See the former part of this note, and the Scriptures there referred to.

5. It signifies the reward, or issue of liberality. 2 Cor. ix. 9, He hath scattered abroad; he hath given to the poor; his RIGHTEOUSNESS, the reward of his bounty, remaineth for ever. See Psal. cxii. 9.

6. It signifies the whole collection of graces, which constitute the complete Christian character. Matt. v. 6, Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after RIGHTEOUSNESS; they who ardently long for the full salvation of God. Ib. v. 10, 20, If your RIGHTEOUSNESS exceed not the righteousness, &c. Ib. vi. 33, Seek the kingdom of God and his RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7. It signifies the result of faith in God, and submission to his will, exemplified in a holy and useful life. Heb. xi. 7. By faith Noah prepared an ark, and became heir of the RIGHTEOUSNESS which is by faith; he escaped the deluge, and was made the instrument of re-peopling the world.

8. It signifies an exact observance of religious ordinances, and precepts. Phil. iii. 6, Touching the RIGHTEOUSNESS which is of the law, blameless; having lived in an exact conformity to all the Mosaic precepts. In this sense it is to be understood, Matt. iii. 15, Thus it becomes us to fulfil all RIGHTEOUSNESS; to observe every precept of the law.

9. It signifies the favour or pardoning mercy of God. Rom. iv. 6, The blessedness of the man unto whom God imputeth RIGHTEOUSNESS without works; the man is happy to whom God has granted the remission of sins, without respect to his observance of the law of Moses.

10. In 2 Cor. v. 21, δικαιοσυνη, righteousness, is put for δικαιος, righteous; that we might become the righteousness of God; that we might receive such a righteousness or holiness, such a salvation, as is worthy of God's grace to impart; and such as the necessities of mankind require.

A few of the leading acceptations of the verb δικαιοω, which we translate to justify, may be here properly subjoined, as this verb is so repeatedly used in this Epistle.

1. It signifies to declare or pronounce one just or righteous; or, in other words, to declare him to be what he really is. 1. Tim. iii. 16, He was JUSTIFIED in the Spirit. By the almighty power of the Spirit, he was proved to be the TRUE MESSIAH.

2. To esteem a thing properly. Matt. xi. 19, Wisdom is JUSTIFIED of her children. Wisdom, propriety of conduct, is properly estimated by wise men.

3. It signifies to approve, praise, and commend. The publicans JUSTIFIED God, Luke vii. 29. praised him for calling them to such a state of salvation. Ib. xvi. 15, Ye are they which JUSTIFY yourselves before God; ye are self-commended, self-applauded, and self-praised. In this sense it is often used in the Greek Apocryphal books. Ecclus. vii. 5, JUSTIFY not thyself before the Lord; do not applaud thyself in the presence of thy Maker. Ib. x. 29, Who will JUSTIFY, (praise or applaud) him that sinneth against his own soul. Ib. xviii. 2, The Lord only is righteous, δικαιωθησεται, shall be JUSTIFIED, i. e. praised, because there is none other but he.

4. The verb δικαιόομαι is used to clear from all sin. 1 Cor. iv. 4, For I know nothing by myself; yet am I not hereby JUSTIFIED. A man's own consciousness of integrity, is not a proof that he is clear from all sin in the sight of God.

5. A judge is said to justify, not only when he condemns and punishes, but also when he defends the cause of the innocent. See EURIP. Heraclid. ver. 190. THUCYD. iii. p. 200. POLYB. iii. 31. and SCHLEUSNER on δικαιοω. Hence δικαιουσθαι, is taken in a forensic sense, and signifies to be found or declared righteous, innocent, &c. Matt. xii. 37, By thy words thou shalt be JUSTIFIED; thou shalt be declared to be righteous. Rom. iii. 4, That thou mightest be JUSTIFIED in thy sayings; that thou mightest be proved to be true in what thou hast said.

6. It signifies to set free, to escape from. Acts xiii. 39, And by him, all that believe are JUSTIFIED from all things from which ye could not be JUSTIFIED by the law; by faith in Christ a man escapes those evils, which, otherwise, the law of Moses would inflict upon him. Rom. vi. 7, For he that is dead, δεδικαιωται, is JUSTIFIED, properly rendered by our translators, is FREED from sin.

7. It signifies also to receive one into favour, to pardon sin. Rom. viii. 30, Whom he called, them he also JUSTIFIED; he received them into favour and pardoned their sins. Luke xviii. 14, This man went down to his house JUSTIFIED; he humbled himself, repented of his iniquity, and God forgave his sin. Rom. iii. 20, By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be JUSTIFIED; no soul can have his sins forgiven, through the observance of the Mosaic law. Ib. iv. 2, If Abraham were JUSTIFIED, (had his sin pardoned) by works. 1 Cor. vi. 11, Such were some of you, but ye are JUSTIFIED; ye are received into the divine favour, and have your sins forgiven. See Jam. ii. 21—25. Rom. iii. 24, 28. v. 1, 9. Galat. ii. 16, 17. iii. 11, 24. v. 4. Tit. iii. 7. In all these texts, the word justify is taken in the sense of remission of sins through faith in Christ Jesus; and does not mean making the person just or righteous, but treating him as if he were so, having already forgiven him his sins.

The just shall live by faith] This has been understood two ways: 1. that the just or righteous man cannot live a holy and useful life, without exercising continual faith in our Lord Jesus: which is strictly true; for He only, who has brought him into that state of salvation, can preserve him in it; and he stands by faith. 2. It is contended by some able critics that the words of the original text should be pointed thus: Ὁ δε δικαιος εκ πιστεως, ζησεται. The just by faith, shall live, that is, he alone that is justified by faith, shall be saved; which is also true, as it is impossible to get salvation in any other way. This last meaning is probably the true one, as the original text in Hab. ii. 4. speaks of those, who believed the declarations of God when the Chaldeans besieged Jerusalem; and having acted conformably to them, they escaped with their lives.

Verse 18. For the wrath of God is revealed] The Apostle has now finished his Preface, and comes to the grand subject of the Epistle; namely, to show the absolute need of the Gospel of Christ, because of the universal corruption of mankind; which was so great as to incense the justice of God, and call aloud for the punishment of the world. 1. He shows that all the heathen nations were utterly corrupt, and deserved this threatened punishment. And this is the subject of the first chapter from verse 18 to the end. 2. He shows that the Jews, notwithstanding the greatness of their privileges, were no better than the Gentiles; and therefore the wrath of God was revealed against them also. This subject he treats in chap. ii. and chap. iii. 1—19. 3. He returns, as it were, on both, chap. iii. 20—31. and proves that as the Jews and power and Godhead; [a] so that they are without excuse:

Gentiles were equally corrupt, they could not be saved by the deeds of any law; that they stood equally in need of that salvation which God had provided; that both were equally entitled to that salvation, for God was the God of the Gentiles as well as of the Jews.

By οργη Θεου, the wrath of God, we are not to understand any uneasy passion in the Divine Being: but the displeasure of his righteousness, which is expressed by the punishments inflicted on the ungodly, those who retain not God in their knowledge; and the unrighteous, those whose lives are profligate.

As in the Gospel, the righteousness of God is revealed for the salvation of the ungodly; so is the wrath of God revealed against the workers of iniquity. Those who refuse to be saved in the way revealed by his mercy, must be consumed in the way revealed by his justice.

Ungodliness] Ασεβεια, from α, negative, and σεβω or σεβομαι, I worship, probably intended here to express Atheism, Polytheism, and Idolatry of every kind.

Unrighteousness] Αδικια, from α, negative, and δικη justice, every thing contrary to strict morality; all viciousness and profligacy of conduct.

Who hold the truth in unrighteousness] In what sense could it be said that the heathen held the truth in unrighteousness, when they really had not that truth? Some think this refers to the conduct of their best philosophers, such as Socrates, Plato, Seneca, &c. who knew much more of the divine nature than they thought safe or prudent to discover; and who acted in many things contrary to the light which they enjoyed. Others think this to be spoken of the Gentiles in general, who either did know, or might have known much of God from the works of creation, as the apostle intimates in the following verses. But Rosenmüller and some others contend that the word κατεχειν here does not signify to hold, but to hinder; and that the place should be translated who through maliciousness hinder the truth; i. e. prevent it from taking hold of their hearts, and from governing their conduct. This is certainly a very usual acceptation of the verb κατεχειν, which Hesychius interprets κρατειν, κωλυειν, συνεχειν, to retain, hinder, &c. these men hindering, by their vicious conduct, the truth of God from being propagated in the earth.

Verse 19. That which may be known of God] Dr. Taylor paraphrases this and the following verse thus; "Although the Gentiles had no written revelation, yet what may be known of God is every where manifest among them, God having made a clear discovery of himself to them. For his being and perfections, invisible to our bodily eyes, have been, ever since the creation of the world, evidently to be seen, if attentively considered, in the visible beauty, order, and operations observable in the constitution and parts of the universe; especially his eternal power and universal dominion and providence; so that they cannot plead ignorance in excuse of their idolatry and wickedness."

Verse 20. The invisible things of him] His invisible perfections are manifested by his visible works, and may be apprehended by what he has made; their immensity showing his omnipotence; their vast variety and contrivance, his omniscience; and their adaptation to the most beneficent purposes, his infinite goodness and philanthropy.

His eternal power] Αϊδιος αυτου δυναμις, that all-powerful energy that ever was, and ever will exist; so, that ever since there was a creation to be surveyed, there have been intelligent beings to make that survey.

And Godhead] Θειοτης, his acting as God in the government and support of the universe. His works prove his being; the government and support of these works prove it equally. Creation and Providence form a twofold demonstration of God, 1st. in the perfections of his nature, and, 2dly. in the exercise of those perfections.

Verse 21. Because that when they knew God] When they thus acquired a general knowledge of the unity and perfections of the divine nature; they glorified him not as God; they did not proclaim him to the people, but shut up his glory, (as Bishop Warburton expresses it) in their mysteries, and gave the people in exchange for an incorruptible God, an image made like to corruptible man. Wherefore God, in punishment for their sins, thus turning his truth into a lie, suffered even their mysteries which they had erected for a school of virtue, to degenerate into an odious sink of vice and immorality; giving them up unto all uncleanness and vile affections.

They glorified him not] They did not give him that worship which his perfections required.

Neither were thankful] They manifested no gratitude for the blessings they received from his providence; but became vain in their imaginations; διαλογισμοις, in their reasonings. This certainly refers to the foolish manner, in which even the wisest of their philosophers discoursed about the divine nature, not excepting Socrates, Plato, or Seneca. Who can read their works without being struck with the vanity of their reasonings, as well as with the stupidity of their nonsense, when and their foolish heart was darkened.

22 [a] Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools,

23 And changed the glory of the incorruptible [b] God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things.

24 [c] Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, [d] to dishonour their own bodies [e] between themselves:

25 Who changed [f] the truth of God [g] into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature [h] more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

26 For this cause God gave them up unto [i] vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature:

27 And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one towards another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in them-

speaking about God? I might crowd my page with proofs of this; but it is not necessary to those who are acquainted with their writings; and to others it would not be useful. In short, their foolish, darkened minds sought God no where but in the place in which he is never to be found; viz. the vile corrupted and corrupting passions of their own hearts. As they did not discover him there, they scarcely sought him any where else.

Verse 22. Professing themselves to be wise] This is most strikingly true of all the ancient philosophers, whether Greeks or Romans, as their works, which remain, sufficiently testify. The word φασκοντες signifies not merely the professing, but the assumption of the philosophic character. In this sense the word φασκειν is used by the best Greek writers. See Kypke. A dispassionate examination of the doctrine and lives of the most famed philosophers of antiquity, of every nation, will show that they were darkened in their mind, and irregular in their conduct. It was from the Christian religion alone, that true philosophy and genuine philosophers sprung.

Verse 23. They changed the glory, &c.] The finest representation of their duties was in the human figure; and on such representative figures the sculptors spent all their skill; hence the HERCULES of Farnese, the VENUS of Medicis, and the APOLLO of Belvidere. And when they had formed their gods according to the human shape, they endowed them with human passions; and as they clothed them with attributes of extraordinary strength, beauty, wisdom, &c. not having the true principles of morality, they represented them as slaves to the most disorderly and disgraceful passions; excelling in irregularities the most profligate of men, as possessing unlimited powers of sensual gratification.

And to birds] As the Eagle of Jupiter among the Romans, and the Ibis and hawk among the Egyptians; which were all sacred animals.

Four-footed beasts] As the Apis, or white ox among the Egyptians; from which the idolatrous Israelites took their golden calf. The Goat, the Monkey, and the Dog, were also sacred animals among the same people.

Creeping things] Such as the crocodile and scarabeus, or beetle, among the Egyptians.

Verse 24. God gave them up, &c.] They had filled up the measure of their iniquities; and God, by permitting them to plunge into all manner of irregularities, thus, by one species of sin, inflicted punishment on another.

Dishonour their own bodies] Probably alluding here to what is more openly expressed verses 26 and 27.

Between themselves] Εν εαυτοις, of themselves, of their own free accord; none inciting, none impelling.

Verse 25. Changed the truth of God into a lie] In the place of the true worship of God, they established idolatry. In various places of Scripture, idols are termed lies. Isai. xliv. 20. Jer. iii. 23. and xiii. 25. The true God was known among the primitive inhabitants of the earth; those who first became idolaters, literally changed the truth of God into a lie; they did know the true God, but they put idols in his place.

Verse 26. For this cause God gave them up, &c.] Their system of idolatry necessarily produced all kinds of impurity. How could it be otherwise, when the highest objects of their worship were adulterers, fornicators, and prostitutes of the most infamous kind; such as Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, Venus, &c. Of the abominable evils with which the apostle charges the Gentiles in this and the following verse, I could produce a multitude of proofs from their own writings; but it is needless to make the subject plainer than the apostle has left it.

Verse 27. Receiving in themselves that recompense, &c.] Both the women and men, by their unnatural prostitutions, enervated their bodies, so that barrenness prevailed; and those disorders which are necessarily attendant on prostitution, and sodomitical practices.

and as the substance is from the shadow projected by it. It is a scheme as worthy of God, as it is necessary for man; hence, there are no excluding clauses in it—it is for the Jew and for the Greek; for the wise, and for the unwise; for all the nations of the universe; and for all the individuals of those nations.

2. As God never does any thing that is not fitting, suitable, and necessary to be done; he has not made an unnecessary display of his mercy and goodness in the incarnation and death of his Son—all this was necessary, else it had not been done. But how does the necessity appear?—In the deep rooted, and widely extended, corruption and profligacy of the nations of the earth. Of these the apostle gives a most affecting and distressing picture. 1. Almost every trace of original righteousness had been obliterated. 2. The proofs of God's eternal power and providence, so manifest in the creation and preservation of the universe, were wholly disregarded. 3. A vain philosophy, without right, principle, or end, was substituted for those Divine truths which had been discovered originally to man. 4. Their hearts were contaminated with every vice which could blind the understanding, pervert the judgment, corrupt the will, and debase the affections and passions. 5. This was proved in the most unequivocal manner, by a profligacy of conduct which had debased them far, far below the beasts that perish; and the Apostle here gives a list of their crimes, every article of which can be incontrovertibly proved, from their own history, and their own writers: crimes which, even bad as the world is now, would shock common decency to describe. See the whole of the second, third, sixth, and ninth Satires of Juvenal.

3. So completely lost were the heathens to a knowledge of the influence of God on the soul, and the necessity of that influence; that they asserted, in the most positive manner, that man was the author of his own virtue and wisdom. Cicero, Nat. Deor. lib. iii. c. 36. declares it a general opinion that, although mankind received from the gods the outward conveniences of life—virtutem autem nemo unquam acceptam Deo retulit—"but virtue none ever thought they received from the Deity." And again, "this is the persuasion of all, that fortune is to be had from the gods: wisdom from ourselves." And again, "whoever thanked the gods for his being a good man? Men pray to Jupiter, not that he would make them just, temperate, and wise; but rich and prosperous."

JUVENAL, on this point, speaks thus:—

Monstro quod ipse sibi possis dare; Semita certe
Tranquillæ per virtutem patet unica vitæ.
Sat. x. v. 363.

The path to peace is virtue; which I show,
Thyself may fully on thyself bestow.

In the same strain, HORACE, EPIST. lib. i. E. xviii. v. penult.

Hæc satis est orare Jovem, qui donat et aufert:
Det vitam, det opes: æquum mî animum ipse parabo.

To love for life and wealth I pray,
These Jove may give or take away;
But, for a firm and tranquil mind,
That blessing for myself I find.

Thus, they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened; and professing themselves to be wise, they became fools. See Madan's Juvenal, Vol. II. p. 53.

4. By all this we see what the world was, and what it would have continued to be, had not God sent a Divine revelation of his will; and established a public ministry to proclaim and enforce it. Were man left to the power and influence of his fallen nature, he would be in all places of his dispersion on the earth, what the Apostle describes in the 29th, 30th, and 31st verses of this chapter.

Reader, magnify God, who has called thee from such deep darkness, to the marvellous light of the glorious Gospel of his Son; and walk as a child of the light and of the day, in whom there shall be no cause of stumbling.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle shows that the Jew, who condemns the Gentiles, and considers them utterly unworthy of the blessings of the gospel, is inexcusable, because he is guilty of the same crimes; and therefore shall not escape the righteous judgment of God, 1—3. It is an awful thing to despise the goodness and long-suffering of God, which lead to repentance, 4, 5. God, the impartial judge, will render to every man according to his works, 6—11. The Jews and the Gentiles will be judged according to their respective advantages and disadvantages, 12, 13. In some cases, the Gentiles, who had no law, have shown a better disposition than the Jews, 14—16. The Jews, by their unfaithfulness, have been a stumbling-block to the Gentiles, 17—24. Jewish rites and ceremonies of no advantage, unless productive of change of heart and conduct, 25. The Gentiles who attend to the small light which they have received from God, are in a better state than the unfaithful Jews, with all their superior religious privileges, 26, 27. What constitutes a real Jew in the sight of God, 28, 29.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Dr. Taylor makes the following sensible observations at the commencement of this chapter.

"The representation of the moral state of the heathen world, in the foregoing chapter, is a demonstration of the necessity of the Gospel, for the reformation and salvation of man. And how rich is the favour wherewith God has visited the world! To have destroyed a race of apostate rebels, who had abused their understandings and every gift of a bountiful Creator, would have been justice; to have spared them would have been lenity and goodness: but to send his only begotten Son from Heaven to redeem us from all iniquity and ungodliness by his own blood; to grant us a free pardon for all our sins; to put us in a state of mercy and salvation; to take us into his kingdom and family; to give us an inheritance among his saints; to bless us with immortality, and all spiritual blessings in heavenly places, this is most wonderful and exuberant favour. Rightly is the doctrine which teaches it, called the Gospel, or glad tidings; one would think it could not possibly have met with opposition from any part of mankind. But the JEW opposed it! He abhorred the Gentile: and contradicted the grace that honoured and saved him. The Apostle pleads and defends our cause. His business is to confound the Jew, and to prove that we have as good a right as he, to all the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom. And by his description of the vicious state of the Gentiles in the former chapter; he has wisely made his advantage of the prejudices of the Jew; for nothing could please him more than the preceding discourse, in which the Gentiles are reduced to so vile and abject a state. Thus, the Apostle gives him an opportunity to condemn the Gentiles; but he does this that he may the more effectually humble him in this chapter; in which he proves, that the Jews, having in an aggravated manner, despised the goodness, and broken the law of God, were as obnoxious to his wrath as the Gentiles; and if so, how could they, with any conscience or modesty, arrogate all the Divine mercy to themselves; or pretend that others were unworthy of it, when they had done as much or more to forfeit it? Must they not exclude themselves from being the people of God under the gospel, by the same reason that they would have the Gentiles excluded? But this was an argument highly ungrateful to the Jew; and it would be very difficult to fix any conviction upon his mind. Therefore the Apostle addresses him in a covert way, Thou art therefore inexcusable, O man! whosoever thou art, that judgest; not giving out expressly that he meant the Jew, that the Jew might more calmly attend to his reasoning, while he was not apprehensive that he was the man. This point secured, the Apostle very judiciously, and with great force of reasoning, turns his thoughts from his present superior advantages to the awful day of judgment, ver. 5, 6. when God, in the most impartial equity, will render to all mankind, without exception, according to their works. Thus the Apostle grounds his following argument, very methodically and solidly, in God's equal regards to all men, in all nations, who uprightly practise truth and godliness; and his disapproving, and at last condemning all men, in any nation, however privileged, who live wickedly. This was a blow at the root; and demolished, in the most effectual manner, the Jew's prejudices in favour of his own nation, and the unkind thoughts he had entertained of the Gentiles. For, if a Jew could be convinced that a sober, upright heathen, might be blessed with eternal salvation; he must be persuaded that it was no absurd matter that believing Gentiles should now be pardoned, and taken into the visible church. Thus the apostle advances with great skill; insinuating himself, by degrees, into the Jew's conscience. This reasoning is well adapted to encourage the Gentile, humbled by the dismal representation in the preceding chapter; for he would here see, that he was not utterly abandoned of God, but might, upon good grounds, hope for his mercy and kindness."

Verse 1. Who judgest] Ὁ κρινων, the judger; thou who assumest the character of a judge; and, in that character, condemnest others who are less guilty than thyself.

Verse 2. We are sure that the judgment of God, &c.] God is impartial, and will punish sin wheresoever he finds it. Transgression in a Jew, is not less criminal than iniquity in a Gentile.

Verse 4. Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness] Wilt thou render of none effect that marked benevolence of ness and [a] forbearance and [b] long-suffering; [c] not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

God towards thee, which has given so many superior advantages; and that forbearance which has tolerated thy many miscarriages: and that long-suffering, which, after repeated provocations, still continues to bear with thee?

Not knowing] Αγνοων, not acknowledging, that this goodness of God, which has so long manifested itself in forbearance and long-suffering, leadeth thee to repentance; was designed to accomplish this blessed end; which thy want of consideration and acknowledgment has rendered, hitherto, ineffectual. This was a maxim among the Jews themselves; for, in Synopsis Sohar it is said, the holy blessed God delays his anger against the wicked, to the end that they may repent and be converted.

Verse 5. But after thy hardness] Occasioned by thy long course of iniquity. And impenitent heart; produced by thy hardness, through which thou art callous to the calls and expostulations of conscience. Treasurest up; continuest to increase thy debt to the Divine justice, which will infallibly inflict wrath, punishment, in the day of wrath; the judgment-day, in which he will render to every man according to his works. The word treasure, the Hebrew uses to express any kind of store, or collection:—Treasure, or plenty of rain. Deut. xxviii. 12, The Lord shall open unto thee his good TREASURE, to give the RAIN unto thy land. Treasure, of punishment. Deut. xxxii. 34, 35, Is not this sealed up among my TREASURES? To me belongeth VENGEANCE and RECOMPENSE. Treasures of mines, i. e. abundance of minerals. Deut. xxxiii. 19, They shall seek of the ABUNDANCE of the seas, and of TREASURES hid in the sand. So treasures of gold, silver, corn, wine, oil, &c. mean collections, or an abundance of such things; the word is used by the Greek writers precisely in the same sense. By wrath we are to understand punishment, as in chap. i. 18. and is used so by the very best Greek writers. See Kypke.

The treasure of wrath, in this verse, is opposed to the riches of goodness, in the preceding. As surely as thou despisest, or neglectest, to improve the RICHES of God's GOODNESS, so surely thou shalt share in the TREASURES of his WRATH. The punishment shall be proportioned to the mercy thou hast abused.

Verse 6. Who will render] Who, in the day of judgment, will reward and punish every man according as his life and conversation have been.

Verse 7. To them, &c.] In this manner will God, in the great day, dispense punishments and rewards: 1. He will give eternal life to them, who, in all the trials and difficulties of the present state, have persevered in well-doing; seeking for, and expecting glory, honour, and immortality.

Verse 8. But unto them, &c.] 2. He will manifest his indignation, and inflict wrath, punishment, on all who are contentious, who obstinately dispute against the truth, and obey unrighteousness; who act under the influence of the principle of sin, and not under the influence of the Spirit of God.

Verse 9. Tribulation and anguish] Misery of all descriptions, without the possibility of escape, will this righteous Judge inflict upon every impenitent sinner. The Jew first, as possessing greater privileges; and having abused greater mercies: and also on the Gentile, who, though he had not the same advantages, had what God saw was sufficient for his state; and having sinned against them, shall have punishment proportioned to his demerit.

Verse 10. But glory, honour, and peace] While the finally impenitent Jew and Gentile shall experience the fullest effects of the righteous indignation of the supreme Judge. Every man that worketh good, that lives in a conscientious obedience to the known will of God, whether he be Jew or Gentile, shall have glory, honour, and peace; i. e. eternal blessedness.

Verse 11. For, there is no respect of persons with God.] The righteous Judge will not act according to any principle of partiality; the character and conduct alone, of the persons shall weigh with him. He will take no wicked man to glory, let his nation or advantages be what they may: and he will send no righteous man to perdition, though brought up in the very bosom of Gentilism. And as he will judge in that day, according to character and conduct; so his judgment will proceed on the ground of the graces, privileges, and blessings, which they had received, improved, or abused. And, as there is no respect of persons with God in judgment; so there can be none in the previous administration of his saving blessings: he that will be condemned for his unrighteousness, will be condemned on the ground that he had sufficient grace afforded him for the salvation of his soul: and his condemnation will rest on the simple principle, that he abused the grace which was sufficient to save him; by acting in opposition to its dictates and influence. No man, in that great day, shall be brought to heaven through any partiality of the Judge: and no man sent to hell, because God did not afford him sufficient grace; or because he had made a decree, which rendered even his use of it, ineffectual to his salvation. In reference to the great design of God, in the salvation of man; it shall be said, in time, at the day of judgment, and throughout eternity, THERE IS NO RESPECT OF PERSONS WITH GOD.

Verse 12. For, as many as have sinned without law, &c.] They, viz. the Gentiles, who shall be found to have transgressed against the mere light of nature; or rather, that true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, John i. ver. 9. shall not come under the same rule with those, the Jews, who have, in addition to this, enjoyed an extraordinary revelation; but they shall be dealt with according to the inferior dispensation, under which they lived: whilst those, the Jews, who have sinned against the law, the positive divine revelation granted to them, shall be judged by that law; and punished proportionably to the abuse of such an extraordinary advantage.

Verse 13. For, not the hearers of the law, &c.] It does not follow that because one people are favoured with a divine revelation, that therefore they shall be saved; while the others, who have not had that revelation, shall finally perish: this is not God's procedure; where he has given a law, a divine revelation, he requires obedience to that law; and only those who have been doers of that law, who have lived according to the light and privileges granted in that revelation, shall be justified; shall be finally acknowledged to be such as are fit for the kingdom of God.

Verse 14. For, when the Gentiles, which have not the law, &c.] Nor does it follow that the Gentiles who have not had a divine revelation, shall either perish, because they had it not; or their unrighteous conduct pass unpunished; because, not having this revelation, might be considered an excuse for their sins:—

Do by nature the things contained in the law] Do without this divine revelation, through that light which God imparts to every man, the things contained in the law, act according to justice, mercy, temperance, and truth, the practice of which the revealed law so powerfully enjoins; these are a law unto themselves, they are not accountable to any other law; and are not to be judged by any dispensation different from that under which they live.

Rabbi Tanchum brings in the Supreme Being as saying—When I have decreed any thing against the Gentiles, to whom I have not given laws and statutes, and they know what I have decreed, immediately they repent; but the Israelites do not so. Tanchum, fol. 43. 2.

Verse 15. Which show the work of the law] In acting according to justice, mercy, temperance, and truth; they show that the great object of the law, which was to bring men from injustice, cruelty, intemperance, and falsity, is accomplished so far in them: their conscience also bearing witness; that faculty of the soul, where that divine light dwells and works, shows them that they are right; and thus they have a comfortable testimony in their own souls, of their own integrity: their thoughts, the mean while accusing, or else excusing, one another; or, rather, their reasonings between one another, accusing or answering for themselves; as if the apostle had said—And this point, that they have a law, and act according to it, is farther proved from their conduct in civil affairs; and from that correct sense which they have of natural justice in their debates, either in their courts of law, or in their treatises on morality. All these are ample proofs that God has not left them without light; and that, seeing they have such correct notions of right and wrong, they are accountable to God for their conduct, in reference to these notions and principles. This seems to be the true meaning of this difficult clause. See below.

Verse 16. In the day when God shall judge] And all this shall be further exemplified and proved in the day that God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ; which judgment shall be according to my gospel; according to what I am now laying down before you, relative to the impartiality of God, and his righteous procedure in judging men, not according to their opinions or prejudices; not according to revelations which they never possessed; but according to the various advantages or disadvantages of their political, religious, or domestic situation in life.

Much stress has been laid on the word φυσει, by nature, in ver. 14. as if the apostle designed to intimate that Nature, independently of the influence of divine grace, possessed such principles as were sufficient to guide a man to glory. But certainly the term cannot be so understood here. I rather think that the sense given to it in Suicer's Thesaurus, Vol. II. col. 1475. reipsâ, reverâ, CERTAINLY, TRULY, is its sense here: for when the Gentiles, which have not the law, φυσει ποιη, TRULY, or in effect, DO the things contained in the law, &c. This seems to be its sense in Galat. iv. 8. When ye knew not God, ye did service to them which, φυσει, CERTAINLY are no gods; i. e. are false gods. Suicer quotes Cyril of Alexandria, (sub Anathematismo iii. in Actis Ephesinis, p. 212.) speaking of the union of the two natures in Christ, he calls this union φυσικην, natural; that is, says he, αληθη true, or real. He adds, that the word should be thus understood in Ephes. ii. 3, we were by nature, φυσει, children of wrath; and says, φυσει, αντι του, αληθως. Φυσει, is here used for αληθως, TRULY; we were TRULY, INCONTESTABLY, the children of wrath, even as others. That is, like the rest of mankind, we have all sinned, and come short of the glory of God; and consequently are exposed to punishment. Some think that this text refers to the natural corruption of man; but although it is true that man comes into the world corrupt, and that all men, since the fall, are very far gone from original righteousness, yet it is not clear that the text in Eph. ii. 3. speaks of any other thing than the effects of this degeneracy.

I prefer this sense, in the passage in question, to that which says the light of nature, or natural instinct, is here meant: for I know of no light in nature that is not kindled there by the grace of God. But I have no objection to this sense, "When the Gentiles, which have not the law, do, by the influence of God upon their hearts, the things contained in the law, they are a law unto themselves; that light and influence serving instead of a divine revelation." That the Gentiles did really do the things contained in the law, in reference to what is termed natural justice: and made the wisest distinctions relative to the great principles of the doctrine of civil RIGHTS and WRONGS; every man conversant with their writings will admit. And in reference to this, the word φυσει, may be legitimately understood thus—they incontestably did the things contained in the law, &c.

The passage in ver. 15. their thoughts, accusing or excusing one another, certainly does not refer to any expostulations or operations of conscience; for this is referred to in the preceding clause. The words accusing, κατηγορουντων, and excusing, απολογουμενων, answering, or defending, one another; μεταξυ αλληλων, among themselves; are all forensic, or law terms; and refer to the mode of conducting suits of law in courts of justice, where one is plaintiff, who produces his accusation; another is defendant, who rebuts the charge, and defends himself; and then the business is argued before the judges. This process shows that they have a law of their own; and that to this law it belongs to adjust differences; to right those who have suffered wrong; and to punish the guilty.

As to the phrase, written in their hearts, it is here opposed to the Jewish laws, which were written on tables of stone. The Jews drew the maxims by which their conduct was regulated from a divine revelation: the GENTILES theirs, from what God, in the course of his providence and gracious influence, had shown them to be right, useful, and necessary. And with them this law was well known and affectionately regarded; for this is one meaning of the phrase written in the heart. It was from this true light, enlightening the Gentiles, that they had so many wise and wholesome laws; laws which had been among them from time immemorial; and of which they did not know the origin. Thus Sophocles, in the noble speech which he puts in the mouth of Antigone—

Ζη ταυτα, χ' ουδεις οιδεν εξ οτου φαγη.

"Not now, nor yesterday, but evermore

Antig. ver. 463—4.

These are the laws, Νομιμα, which the Spirit of God wrote originally on their hearts; and which, in different forms, they had committed to writing.

Verse 17. Behold, thou art called a Jew] What the apostle had said in the preceding verses, being sufficient to enforce conviction on the conscience of the Jew, he now throws off the cover, and openly argues with him in the most plain and nervous manner; asserting that his superior knowledge, privileges, and profession, served only to aggravate his condemnation. And that, in fact, he who under all his greater advantages transgressed the law of God, stood condemned by the honest Gentile, who, to the best of his knowledge, obeyed it. Dr. Taylor.

And restest in the law] Thou trustest in it for thy endless salvation. The word επαναπαυη, implies the strongest confidence of safety and security. Thou reposest thy whole trust and confidence in this law.

And makest thy boast of God] That thou knowest his nature and attributes, which are not known to the Gentiles. The word καυχασαι, implies the idea of exulting in any thing, as being a proper object of hope and dependence: and, when referred to GOD, it points out that HE is the sure cause of hope, dependence, joy, and happiness. And that it is the highest honour to be called to know his name, and be employed in his service. As if the apostle had said, you rejoice in God as the object of your hope and dependence; you praise and magnify him; you account it your greatest honour that HE is your God; and that you worship him. See Taylor.

Verse 18. Knowest his will] Have been favoured with a revelation of his own will, immediately from himself.

The things that are more excellent] Τα διαφεροντα, the things that differ; that revelation which God has given of himself, makes the nicest distinctions between right and wrong; between vice and virtue; showing how you should walk so as to please God; and, consequently, acquire the most excellent portion that human spirits can have on this side heaven: for all these blessings ye acknowledge to receive from your law, being instructed κατηχουμενος, being catechised from your infancy in the knowledge of divine things.

Verse 19. And art confident, &c.] In consequence of all these religious advantages, ye believe that ye are able to teach others, and to be guides and lights to the bewildered, darkened Gentiles, who may become proselytes to your religion.

Verse 20. An instructer of the foolish, &c.] Ye believe the Gentiles to be babes and fools, when compared with yourselves: that ye alone possess the only true knowledge; that ye are the only favourites of heaven; and that all nations must look up to you as possessing the only form of knowledge, μορφωσιν της γνωσεως, the grand scheme and draught of all true science; of every thing that is worthy to be learned: the system of eternal truth, derived from the law. If, therefore, ye act not as becomes those who have such eminent advantages, it must be to your endless disgrace and infamy.

Verse 21. Thou therefore] Dr. Taylor has paraphrased this, and the three following verses, thus—"What signify your pretensions to knowledge, and the office of teaching others; if you have no regard to your own doctrine? What are you the better for preaching against theft, if you are a thief yourself? Or for declaring adultery unlawful, if you live in the practice of it? Or for representing idolatry abominable, if you are guilty of sacrilege? What honours, or singular favours, do you deserve, if, while you glory in the law and your religious privileges, you dishonour God, and discredit his religion by transgressing his law, and living in open contradiction to your profession? And this is more than supposition; notorious instances might be produced of the fore-mentioned crimes, whereby the Jews of the present age have brought a reproach upon religion among the Gentiles; as well as those Jews of former times, of whom the prophet Ezekiel speaks, chap. xxxvi. 23. And I will sanctify my great name, which was PROFANED among the HEATHEN; which ye have PROFANED in the midst of them."

That the Jewish priesthood was exceedingly corrupt in the time of the apostle, and that they were so, long before, is fully evident from the Sacred Writings, and from Josephus. The high-priesthood was a matter of commerce; and was bought and sold like other commodities. Of this, Josephus gives many instances. The rapine of Eli's sons descended to several generations. Dr. Whitby well observes, that of all these things mentioned by the apostle, the Jewish doctors were notoriously guilty; and of most of them they were accused by our Lord. 1. They said and did not; and laid heavy burdens upon others, which they would not touch with their own fingers. Matt. xxiii. 3, 4. 2. They made the house of God a den of thieves, Matt. xxi. 13. John ii. 16. 3. They were guilty of adultery, by unjust divorces, Matt. xix. 9. 4. Their polygamy was scandalous: even their rabbins, when they came to any place, would proclaim, Who will be my wife for a day? As to idolatry, they were perfectly saved from it, ever since the Babylonish captivity: but to this succeeded sacrilege, as is most evident in the profanation of the temple, by their commerce transacted even within its courts. And their teaching the people that even their aged parents might be left to starve, provided the children made a present to the temple, of that which should have gone for their support. According to Josephus, Bel. Jud. l. vi. c. 26. they were guilty of theft, treachery, adultery, sacrilege, rapine, and murder. And he adds, that new ways of wickedness were invented by them; and that, of all their abominations, the temple was the receptacle. In his Antiquities of the Jews, b. xx. c. 8. he says, The servants of the high-priests took away, by violence, the tithes of the priests, so that many of them perished for want of food. Even their own writers acknowledge that there were great irregularities and abominations among the rabbins.

So Bereshith rabba, sect. 55. fol. 54.—"Rabbi Abun proposed a parable concerning a master, who taught his disciple not to pervert justice, and yet did it himself; not to show respect of persons, and yet did it himself; not to receive bribes, and yet received them himself; not to take usury, and yet took it himself: the disciple replied—Rabbi, thou teachest me not to take usury, and yet thou takest it thyself! Can that be lawful to thee which is forbidden to me?"

Verse 24. For the name of God is blasphemed, &c.] In Debarim rabba, sect. 2. fol. 251. it is said, "The rulers destroy the influence of their own words among the people; and this is done, when a rabbin, sitting and teaching in the academy, says—do not take usury, and himself takes it; do not commit rapine, and himself commits it; do not steal, and himself steals." That they were exceedingly lax in their morals, the following fact proves: "Rabbi Ilai said, if a man see that his evil propensities are likely to prevail against him, let him go to some place where he is not known, and let him put on black clothes, and cover his head with a black veil; and then let him do whatsoever he pleases, lest the name of God should be publicly profaned." Moed katon, fol. 17. 1. In Sohar levit. fol. 31. col. 122. it is said, "On three accounts the Jews are obliged to remain in captivity—1. Because they openly reproach the Shechinah—2. Because they profane themselves before the Shechinah—3. Because they turn away their faces from the Shechinah."

But it would be endless to collect from their history, the proofs of the charges brought here against them by the apostle. See Whitby, Schoettgen, and others.

Verse 25. For circumcision verily profiteth] It is a blessing to belong to the church of God, and wear the sign of the covenant; provided the terms of the covenant are complied with.

But if thou be a breaker of the law] If thou do not observe the conditions of the covenant; the outward sign is both without meaning and without effect. This was a max-righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

27 And shall not uncircumcision, which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, [a] judge thee who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

28 For [b] he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh:

29 But he is a Jew, [c] which is one inwardly; and [d] circumcision is that of the heart, [e] in the spirit, and not in the letter; [f] whose praise is not of men, but of God.

im of the Rabbins themselves; for they allowed that an apostate or ungodly Israelite must go to hell, notwithstanding his circumcision.

Verse 26. Therefore, if the uncircumcision, &c.] If the Gentiles be found to act according to the spirit and design of the law; his acting thus uprightly, according to the light which God has afforded him, will be reckoned to him as if he were circumcised, and walked agreeably to the law.

Verse 27. And shall not uncircumcision, which is by nature] And shall not the Gentile, who is εκ φυσεως, according to the custom of his country; who is by birth not obliged to be circumcised.

If it fulfil the law] If such a person act according to the spirit and design of the law; judge, κρινει, condemn thee, who, whilst thou dost enjoy the letter, the written law; and bearest in thy body the proof of the circumcision which it requires, dost transgress that law?

Verse 28. For he is not a Jew] A genuine member of the church of God, who has only an outward profession.

Neither is that circumcision] Circumcision is a rite which represents a spiritual thing, viz. the change and purification of the heart, as may be seen Jer. iv. 4, 6, 10. ix. 26. Ezek. xliv. 7, 9.

Verse 29. But he is a Jew] A true member of the church of God.

Which is one inwardly] Who has his heart purified, according to what God has uniformly prescribed by his prophets, see above; for circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit εν πνευματι, by the Spirit of God, who is the author of all spiritual affections and holy purposes: or every thing here is to be understood spiritually and not literally; for without holiness none can please God, and without holiness none can see him.

Whose praise is not of men] It has, with great probability, been conjectured, that the apostle may here refer to the signification of the name Jew, or Judah, יהודה Yehudah, PRAISE, from ידה Yadah, he PRAISED. Such a one is a true Israelite, who walks in a conformity to the spirit of his religion; his countrymen may praise him because he is a steady professor of the Jewish faith; but GOD praises him, because he has entered into the spirit and design of the covenant made with Abraham; and has got the end of his faith, the salvation of his soul. Sentiments like these, on the same subject, may be found in the ancient Jewish writers. Rabbi Lipman gives the opinion of their most ancient and pure writers in these words: "A certain Christian mocked us, saying, 'Women, who cannot be circumcised, cannot be reckoned among Jews.' Such persons are ignorant that faith does not consist in circumcision, but in the heart. He, who has not genuine faith, is not a partaker of the Jewish circumcision; but he who has genuine faith, is a Jew, although not circumcised." NIZZACHON Num. 21. p. 19. It is a curious maxim of the Talmudists, That the Jews sit in the inmost recesses of the heart. NIDDA fol. 20. 2. This is exactly the sentiment of St. Paul, circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit. In short, common sense, as well as their law and their prophets, taught every considerate man among them that God could be pleased with their rites and external performances, no further than they led to holiness of heart and righteousness of life.

1. What the apostle says in the preceding chapter concerning the Gentiles doing by nature the things contained in the law, if properly considered, would lead certain persons from forming erroneous judgments concerning the divine dispensations. We are not to suppose that God is not to be found, where his written word does not appear; nor, that the salvation of the nations yet unblessed with the light of the Gospel, is impossible. God has never confined himself to any one particular way, of communicating his salvation; no more than he has confined his saving grace to one people. His word is an indescribable blessing; but that word becomes effectual to salvation, when accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit. It was that Spirit which gave the word originally; and that same Spirit can speak without this word. It is through his influence alone, that the Gentiles do the things contained in his own law; and it is not to be wondered at, that the work is the same, both in the law and in the heart, when it has proceeded from the same Spirit.

2. God therefore will judge all nations according to the use and abuse they have made of this word, whether it was written in the heart, or written on tables of stone.

3. As he is no respecter of persons, all nations are equally dear to him; and he has granted and will grant to them such discoveries of himself, as have been, and will be sufficient for their salvation.

4. His WORD is an infinite blessing; and he has given it to one people that they may be the means of conveying it to another. Europe, and especially Christian Europe, has got the BIBLE; and God requires Europe to send the Bible throughout the earth. If this be not done through their neglect, the Gentile nations will not be destroyed by a merciful God; yet the Europeans will have a most solemn and awful account to render to their judge, that they have hidden the heavenly light under their own bushel. BRITAIN is shaking herself from the dust, and by means of the BRITISH and FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY is sending the holy Scriptures to every kingdom, and nation, and people, and tongue. The Gentiles are now learning from the written law more fully and savingly what the Spirit of God had before written on their hearts; and it seems as if the kingdom of God were now about to come, with all conquering power.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Dr. Taylor observes, "In the preceding chapter, the apostle has carried his argument to the utmost length: what remains is to keep the Jew in temper, to fix his convictions, and to draw the grand conclusion.

"He has shown that the Jews were more wicked than the Gentiles; that their possession of the law, circumcision and outward profession of relation to God, were no ground of acceptance with him. This was, in effect, to say, that the Jews had forfeited their right to the privileges of God's peculiar people; and that they were as unworthy to be continued in the church, as the Gentiles were to be taken into it; and consequently, in order to their enjoying the privileges of the church under the Messiah, they stood in need of a fresh display of grace, which, if they rejected, God would cast them out of the vineyard. The apostle was sensible that the Jew would understand what he said in this sense; and that it must be very irritating to him to hear that his law, circumcision, and all his external advantages, were utterly insufficient to procure him the favour of God. This at once stripped him of all his peculiar honours and privileges; and the apostle, who had often argued with his countrymen on these points, knew what they would be ready to say on this subject; and, therefore, introduces a dialogue between himself and a Jew, in which he gives him leave to answer and defend himself. In this dialogue the apostle, undoubtedly, refers to the rejection of the Jews, which he considers at large in the ix. x. and xi. chapters. After the dialogue is finished, he resumes his argument, and proves by their own Scriptures, that the Jews were guilty as well as other men; and that no part of mankind could have any right to the blessings of God's kingdom by any works which they had performed; but merely through the propitiatory sacrifice offered by Christ: and that this, far from destroying the law, was just the thing that the law required, and by which its claims were established.

"The sum and force of the apostle's argument is this, all sorts of men, Jews as well as Gentiles, have sinned; therefore, none of them can lay claim to the blessings of his kingdom on the ground of obedience. The Jew, therefore, stands as much in need of God's grace to give him a title to those blessings, as the Gentile; and, consequently, the Gentile has as good a title as the Jew. And when all are in the same circumstances, it is perfectly absurd for any to pretend to engross it to themselves exclusively of others, who are only as bad as they.

"Thus the apostle solidly proves, that we Gentiles, through faith alone, have a good and firm title to all the blessings of the gospel covenant, election, adoption, pardon, privileges, ordinances, the Holy Spirit, and the hope of eternal life." Taylor's Notes, p. 259, 260.

As the nine first verses are a dialogue between the Apostle and a Jew, I shall prefix the speakers to their respective questions and answers, to make the whole the more intelligible to the reader.

Verse 1. JEW. What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision] As if he had said, you lately allowed (chap. ii. 25.) that circumcision verily profited; but if circumcision, or our being in covenant with God, raises us no higher in the divine favour than the Gentiles; if the virtuous among them are as acceptable as any of us, nay, and condemn our nation too, as no longer deserving the divine regards; pray tell me, wherein lies the superior honour of the Jew; and what benefit can arise to him from his circumcision, and being vested in the privileges of God's peculiar people?

Verse 2. APOSTLE. Much every way] The Jews, in reference to the means and motives of obedience, enjoy many advantages beyond the Gentiles, and principally, because to them were committed the oracles of God; that revelation of his will to Moses and the prophets, containing a treasure of excellencies, with which no other part of the world has been favoured; though they have most grievously abused these privileges.

Verse 3. JEW. For what] Τι γαρ, what then? if some did not believe, &c. If some of the Jewish nation have abused their privileges, and acted contrary to their obligations, shall their wickedness annul the PROMISE which God made to Abraham, that he would, by an everlasting covenant, be a God to him, and to his seed after him, Gen. xvii. 7. Shall God, therefore, by stripping the Jews of their peculiar honour, as you intimate he will, falsify his promise to the nation, because some of the Jews are bad men?

Verse 4. APOSTLE. God forbid] Μη γενοιτο, let it not be, far from it, by no means. Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar, &c. We must ever maintain that God is true, and that if in any case, his promise appear to fail, it is because the condition on which it was given has not been complied with; which is the sense of what is written, Psal. li. 4. I acknowledge my sin, and condemn myself that the truth of thy promise, (2 Sam. vii. 15, 16.) to establish my house and throne for ever, may be vindicated when thou shalt execute that dreadful threatening (2 Sam. xii. 10.) that the sword shall never depart from my house, which I own I have brought upon myself by my own iniquity. Should any man say, that the promise of God had failed towards him; let him examine his heart and his ways, and he will find that he has departed out of that way in which alone God could, consistently with his holiness and truth, fulfil the promise.

Verse 5. JEW. But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God] May we not suppose that our unrighteousness may serve to commend and illustrate the mercy of God, in keeping and fulfilling to us the promise which he made to our forefathers? The more wicked we are, the more his faithfulness to his ancient promise is to be admired. And if so, would not God appear unjust in taking vengeance and casting us off?

I speak as a man] I feel for the situation both of myself and my countrymen; and it is natural for one to speak as I do.

Verse 6. APOSTLE. God forbid] Μη γενοιτο, by no means. God cannot be unjust; were he unjust, he could not be qualified to judge the world, nor inflict that punishment on the unfaithful Jews, to which I refer.

Verse 7. JEW. For if the truth of God, &c.] But to resume my reasoning, (see verse 5.) If the faithfulness of God in keeping his promise made to our fathers, is, through our unfaithfulness, made far more glorious than it otherwise would have been; why should we then be blamed for that which must redound so much to the honour of God?

Verse 8. APOSTLE.—And not rather, &c.] And why do you not say, seeing you assume this ground, that in all cases we should do wickedly, because God, by freely pardoning, can so glorify his own grace? This is a most impious sentiment, but it follows from your reasoning; it has indeed been most injuriously laid to the charge of us apostles, who preach the doctrine of free pardon, through faith, without the merit of works; but this is so manifest a perversion of the truth that a just punishment may be expected to fall on the propagators of such a slander.

Verse 9. JEW—What then?] After all, have not we Jews a better claim to the privileges of the kingdom of God, than the Gentiles have?

APOSTLE—No, in nowise] For I have already proved that both Jews and Gentiles are under the guilt of sin; that they are equally unworthy of the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom; and that they must both, equally, owe their salvation to the mere mercy of God.—From this, to the end of the 26th verse, the apostle proceeds to prove his assertion, that both Jews and Gentiles were all under sin; and that he might enforce the conviction upon the heart of the Jew, he quotes his own scriptures, which he acknowledged had been given by the inspiration of GOD, and consequently true.

Verse 10. As it is written] See Psal. xiv. 1, 2, 3. from which this, and the two following verses, are taken.

There is none righteous] This is true, not only of the Jews, but of the Gentiles; of every soul of man considered in his natural and practical state, previously to his receiving the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ. There is no righteous principle in them, and, consequently, no righteous act can be expected from them; see on ver. 12. God himself is represented as looking down from heaven, to see if there were any that feared and sought after him; and yet he, who cannot be deceived, could find none! And therefore, we may safely conclude there was none to be found.

Verse 12. They are all gone out of the way] Παντες εξεκλιναν; they have all diverged from the right way; they have either abandoned or corrupted the worship of God; the Jews, in forsaking the law and the prophets; and the Gentiles, in acting contrary to the law which God had written on their hearts. And the departure of both from the truth, proves the evil propensity of human nature in general.

They are together become unprofitable] Ηχρειωθησαν; they are useless; good for nothing; or, as the Hebrew has it, נאלחו ne-elachu, they are putrid; he views the whole mass of mankind as slain, and thrown together, to putrify in heaps. This is what is termed the corruption of human nature; they are infected and infectious: what need of the mercy of God to save from such a state of degeneracy!

There is none that doeth good] In ver. 10. it is said, there is none righteous—here, there is none that doeth good: the first may refer to the want of a righteous principle; the 2d, to the necessary consequence of the absence of such a principle. If there be no righteousness within, there will be no acts of goodness without.

Verse 13. Their throat is an open sepulchre] This, with all the following verses, to the end of the 18th, are found in the Septuagint, but not in the Hebrew text; and it is most evident that it was from this Version that the apostle quoted, as the verses cannot be found in any other place with so near an approximation to the apostle's meaning and words. The verses in question, however, are not found in the Alexandrian MS. But they exist in the Vulgate, the Æthiopic, and the Arabic. As the most ancient copies of the Septuagint do not contain these verses; some contend that the apostle has quoted them from different parts of Scripture; and later transcribers of the Septuagint, finding that the 10th, 11th, and 12th verses were quoted from the xivth Psalm, imagined that the rest were found originally there too, and so incorporated them in their copies, from the apostle's text.

Their throat is an open sepulchre—By their malicious and wicked words, they bury, as it were, the reputation of all men: the whole of this verse appears to belong to their habit of lying, defamation, slandering, &c. by which they wounded, blasted, and poisoned the reputation of others.

Verse 14. Whose mouth is full of cursing, &c.] They never speak but in profane oaths, blasphemies and malice.

Verse 15. Their feet are swift to shed blood] They make use of every means in their power, to destroy the reputation and lives of the innocent.

Verse 16. Destruction and misery are in their ways] DESTRUCTION is their work, and MISERY to themselves and to the objects of their malice, is the consequence of their impious and murderous conduct.

Verse 17. And the way of peace have they not known] They neither have peace in themselves, nor do they suffer others to live in quiet: they are brooders and fomenters of discord.

Verse 18. There is no fear of God before their eyes.] This completes their bad character: they are downright atheists, at least practically such. They fear not God's judgments; although his eye is upon them in their evil ways. There is not one article of what is charged against the Jews and Gentiles here, that may not be found justified by the histories of both, in the most ample manner. And what was true of them in those primitive times, is true of them still. With very little variation, these are the evils in which the vast mass of mankind delight and live. Look especially at men in a state of warfare; look at the nations of Europe, who enjoy most of the light of God; see what has taken place among them, from 1792 to 1814; see what destruction of millions; and what misery of hundreds of millions, have been the consequence of Satanic excitement in fallen ferocious passions! O SIN, what hast thou done! How many myriads of souls hast thou hurried, unprepared, into the eternal world! Who, among men or angels, can estimate the greatness of this calamity! this butchery of souls! What widows, what orphans, are left to deplore their sacrificed husbands and parents; and their own consequent wretchedness! And whence sprang all this? From that, whence come all wars and fightings; the evil desires of men; the lust of dominion; the insatiable thirst for money; and the desire to be sole and independent. This is the sin that ruined our first parents, expelled them from Paradise; and which has descended to all their posterity; and proves fully, incontestably proves, that we are their legitimate offspring; the fallen progeny of fallen parents. Children in whose ways are destruction and misery; in whose heart there is no faith; and before whose eyes there is nothing of the fear of God.

Verse 19. What things soever the law saith] That the word law, here, does not mean the pentateuch, is evident from the preceding quotations, not one of which is taken from that work. Either the term law must here mean the Jewish writings in general; or that rule of moral conduct which God had given to both Jews and Gentiles: to the former in their own Scriptures; to the latter, in that law written in their hearts by his own Spirit, and acknowledged in their written codes, and in their pleadings in every civil case. Now, according to this great law, this rule of moral conduct, whether given in a written revelation, as to the Jews, or by the secret inspiration of his Spirit, as in certain cases, to the Gentiles; every mouth must be stopped, and the whole world, πας ὁ κοσμος, both Jews and Gentiles, stand convicted before God: for all mankind have sinned against this law.

Verse 20. Therefore, by the deeds of the law] On the score of obedience to this moral law, there shall no flesh, ου πασα σαρξ, no human being, be justified; none can be accepted in the sight of God. And why? Because, by the law is the knowledge of sin: it is that which ascertains what sin is; shows how men have deviated from its righteous demands; and sentences them to death because they have broken it. Thus the law is properly considered as the rule of right; and unless God had given some such means of discovering what SIN is; the darkened heart of man could never have formed an adequate conception of it. For, as an acknowledged straight edge is the only way in which the straightness or crookedness of a line can be determined; so, the moral obliquity of human actions can only be determined by the law of God; that rule of right which proceeds from his own immaculate holiness.

Verse 21. But now the righteousness of God] God's method of saving sinners, is now shown by the gospel, to be through his own mere mercy, by Christ Jesus; without the law, without any right or claim which might result from obedience to the law; and is evidently that which was intended by God from the beginning; for it is witnessed by the law and the prophets; the rites and ceremonies of the one, and the preachings and predictions of the others, all bearing testimony to the great design of God; and to the absolute necessity there was for the sacrifice and salvation which God has provided.

Verse 22. Even the righteousness of God] That method of saving sinners, which is not of works, but by faith in Christ Jesus; and is not restrained to any particular people, as the law and its privileges were; but is unto all mankind in its intention and offer; and becomes effectual to them that believe: for God hath now made no difference between the Jews and the Gentiles.

Verse 23. For all have sinned] And consequently are equally helpless and guilty: and, as God is no respecter of persons, all human creatures, being equally his offspring, and there being no reason why one should be preferred before another: therefore, his endless mercy has embraced ALL.

And come short of the glory of God] Και υστερουνται της δοξης του Θεου· These words have been variously translated; failed of attaining the glory of God: Have not been able to bring glory to God: stand in need of the glory, (that is) the mercy of God. The simple meaning seems to be this; that, as all have sinned, and none can enjoy God's glory, but they that are holy! consequently, both Jews and Gentiles, have failed in their endeavours to attain it; as, by the works of any law, no human being can be justified.

Verse 24. Being justified freely by his grace] So far from being able to attain the glory of God by their obedience, they are all guilty; and, to be saved, must be freely pardoned by God's grace; which is shown to them who believe, through the redemption, απολυτρωσις, the ransom price, which is in the sacrifice of Christ Jesus. The original is compounded of απο, from; and λυτροω, I redeem; and properly means the price laid down for the redemption of a captive. Comprehendit hæc Christi, Απολυτρωσις, quicquid is docuit, fecit et passus est, eo concilio, ut homines malis liberati, præcipuè peccato, malorum fonte immunes, veram felicitatem adipiscerentur.—Rosenmüller. This redemption of Christ comprehends whatsoever he taught, did, or suffered, in order to free men from evil; especially to free them from sin, the source of evils; that they might attain true felicity. And that it here means the liberation purchased by the blood-shedding of Christ, is evident from Eph. i. 7, We have REDEMPTION, απολυτρωσιν δια του αιματος αυτου, THROUGH HIS BLOOD, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace. See also Coloss. i. 14. where the same words are found.

Λυτρα according to Suidas, is μισθος, η τα παρεχομενα υπερ ελευθεριας, επι τω λυτρωσασθαι βαρβαρων δουλειας· A reward; or the price given to be redeemed from the slavery of the barbarians. Schleusner, under the word Απολυτρωσις, says, Negari quidem non potest, hanc vocem propriè notare redemptionem ejus, qui captivus detinetur, sive bello, sive alio captus sit modo, quæ fit per pretii solutionem; quo sensu verbum, απολυτροω, legitur haud raro in Scripp. Græcis. No man certainly can deny that this word properly means the redemption of a captive, (whether he may have been taken in war or in any other way) which is procured by the payment of a price. That the word also means any deliverance, even where no price is paid down, no body will dispute: but that it means redemption by a price laid down; and the redemption of the soul by the price of the death of Christ, the above scriptures sufficiently prove.

Verse 25. Whom God hath set forth] Appointed and published; to be a propitiation, Ιλαστηριον, the mercy-seat, or place of atonement; because the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled on and before that, in order to obtain remission of sin, punishment, &c. The mercy-seat was the lid, or cover of the ark of the covenant, where God was manifest in the symbol of his presence, between the cherubim; therefore his righteousness [a] for the [b] remission of [c] sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;

26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

27 [d] Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay, but by the law of faith.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

28 Therefore we conclude [e] that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:

the atonement that was made in this place, was properly made to God himself. See the note on Luke xviii. 13.

Through faith in his blood] This shows what we are to understand both by the Απολυτρωσις, redemption, and the Ιλαστηριον, propitiation; viz. that they refer to the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ, as the atonement made, and the price paid down for the redemption of the souls of men.

To declare his righteousness] Εις ενδειξιν, for the manifestation of his righteousness; his mercy in saving sinners, by sending Jesus Christ to make an atonement for them; thereby declaring his readiness to remit all past transgressions committed both by Jews and Gentiles, during the time in which his merciful forbearance was exercised towards the world; and this applies to all who hear the gospel now: to them is freely offered, remission of all past sins.

Verse 26. To declare, I say, at this time] To manifest now, by the dispensation of the gospel, his righteousness, his infinite mercy; and to manifest it in such a way, that he might still appear to be the just God, and yet the justifier, the pardoner of him who believeth in Jesus. Here we learn, that God designed to give the most evident displays, both of his justice and mercy. Of his justice in requiring a sacrifice; and absolutely refusing to give salvation to a lost world in any other way; and of his mercy, in providing THE sacrifice which his justice required. Thus, because Jesus was an atonement, a ransom price for the sin of the world, therefore God can, consistently with his justice, pardon every soul that believeth in Jesus. This is the full discovery of God's righteousness, of his wonderful method of magnifying his law, and making it honourable; of showing the infinite purity of his justice, and of saving a lost world.

Hitherto, from the 9th verse, the apostle had gone on without interruption; proving that Jew and Gentile were in a state of guilt and condemnation; and that they could be saved only by the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. The Jew, finding his boasted privileges all at stake, interrupts him, and asks:

Verse 27. JEW—Where is boasting then?] Η καυχησις, this glorying of ours. Have we nothing in which we can trust for our acceptance with God? No merit of our own? Nothing accruing to us from our circumcision, and being in covenant with God?

APOSTLE—It is excluded] Εξεκλεισθη, It is shut out; the door of heaven is shut against every thing of this kind.

JEW—By what law?] By what rule, doctrine, or reason is it shut out? by the law of works? The rule of obedience which God gave to us; and by which obedience we are accepted by him?

APOSTLE—Nay] Not by the law of works; glorying is not cut off, or shut out by that; it stands in full force as the rule of life; but you have sinned, and need pardon. The law of works grants no pardon, it requires obedience, and threatens the disobedient with death. But all glorying in the expectation of salvation, through your own obedience, is excluded by the law, the doctrine of faith: faith alone, in the mercy of God, through the propitiation made by the blood of Jesus, (ver. 25.) is that, by which you can be justified, pardoned and taken into the Divine favour.

Verse 28. Therefore we conclude, &c.] Seeing these things cannot be denied, viz. that all have sinned; that all are guilty; that all are helpless; that none can deliver his own soul; and that God, in his endless mercy, has opened a new and living way to the holiest by the blood of Jesus, Heb. x. 19, 20, &c. therefore we, apostles and Christian teachers, conclude λογιζομεθα, prove by fair, rational consequence, that a man, any man, is justified, has his sins blotted out, and is received into the Divine favour, by faith in Christ's blood, without the deeds of the law, which never could afford, either to Jew or Gentile, a ground for justification; because both have sinned against the law which God has given them; and, consequently, forfeited all right and title to the blessings which the obedient might claim.

Verse 29. Is he the God of the Jews only?] Do not begin to suppose that because you cannot be justified by the works of the law, and God has in his mercy found out a new method of saving you; that therefore this mercy shall apply to the Jews exclusively. Is not God the maker, preserver, and redeemer, also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also, as much as of the Jews; for all have equally sinned:

30 Seeing [a] it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

31 Do we then [b] make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law.

and there is no reason, if God be disposed to show mercy at all, that he should prefer the one to the other; since they are all equally guilty, sinful, and necessitous.

Verse 30. Seeing it is one God] Επειπερ εις ο Θεος, this has been rendered, seeing God is one. It however makes little difference in the sense: the apostle's meaning most evidently is, it is one and the same God who made both Jews and Gentiles, who shall justify, pardon the circumcision, the believing Jews, by faith; and the uncircumcision, the believing Gentiles by the same faith; as there is but one Saviour, and one atonement provided for the whole.

It is fanciful to suppose that the apostle has one meaning when he says, εκ πιστεως, BY faith; and a different meaning, when he says δια της πιστεως, THROUGH faith. Both the prepositions are to be understood in precisely the same sense; only the addition of the article της, in the last case extends, and more pointedly ascertains, the meaning. It is one and the same God who shall justify the believing Jews by faith; and the believing Gentiles δια της πιστεως, by THAT SAME faith.

Verse 31. Do we then make void the law through faith?] 1. By law here we may understand the whole of the Mosaic law, in its rites and ceremonies; of which, Jesus Christ was the subject and the end. All that law had respect to him; and the doctrine of faith in Christ Jesus, which the Christian religion proclaimed, established the very claims and demands of that law; by showing that all was accomplished in the passion and death of Christ; for, without shedding of blood, the law would allow of no remission; and Jesus was that Lamb of God, which was slain from the foundation of the world; in whose blood we have redemption, even the remission of sins. 2. We may understand also, the moral law, that which relates to the regulation of the manners or conduct of men. This law also was established by the doctrine of salvation by faith; because this faith works by love, and love is the principle of obedience: and whosoever receives salvation through faith in Christ, receives power to live in holy obedience to every moral precept: for, such are God's workmanship, created anew in Christ Jesus, unto good works; in which they find it their duty and their interest, incessantly to live.

1. In the notes on the preceding chapter, I have, in general, followed the plan of Dr. Taylor, and especially in regard to its dialogue form; but I have often differed much from that very learned and judicious man, in the application of many words and doctrines. He cannot allow that the death of Christ should be considered as a price paid down for the salvation of men: and, I confess, I cannot understand the apostle in any other way. Nor can I see the weight of many of his observations, nor the force of his conclusions on any other ground than this, that the passion and death of Christ were an atonement made to Divine justice, in the behalf of man; and that it is through the merit of that great sacrifice, that God forgives sin. Nor can I see any reason why such great stress should be laid on faith, but as that lays hold on, and takes up, the sacrifice of Christ as a ransom price for the redemption of the soul from the thraldom and misery of sin and Satan.

2. This chapter contains a fine and striking synopsis of the whole Christian system. The wretched state of man is awfully exhibited, from the 10th to the 18th verse; and the plan of salvation, in the 24th, 25th, and 26th verses. A pious writer calls these the Catechism of Christian Righteousness. The following points in this catechism are worthy of high consideration—viz. How is God glorified in us, and we in him?—By his GRACE. What does his grace work in us?—True holiness. Upon what motive?—Because it is pleasing to him. By whom does he give us salvation?—By Jesus Christ. How has Christ obtained this for us?—By redeeming us. What price did he give? His BLOOD. What does his blood effect? It reconciles us to God. How is it applied?—By FAITH. Who has given this victim of reconciliation?—God the Father. Why did he choose these means?—To confound the false righteousness of the Gentiles; to abolish the FIGURATIVE righteousness of the Jews; and to establish his own. What does this grace of God perform?—It pardons sin; and purifies the heart. For whom is this designed?—For all mankind, both Jews and Gentiles. To whom are these blessings actually communicated?—To all who repent, turn from their sin, and believe on the Lord Jesus. Why did not God make known this grand method of salvation sooner?—1. To make it the more valued: 2. to show his fidelity in the performance of his promises: and 3. to make known the virtue and efficacy of the blood of Christ, which sanctifies the present, extends its influence to the past, and continues the availing sacrifice, and way of salvation, to all future ages.

3. On considering this glorious scheme of salvation, there is great danger; lest, while we stand amazed at what was done FOR us, we neglect what must be done IN us. Guilt in the conscience, and sin in the heart, ruin the man. Pardon in the conscience, and Christ in the heart, save the soul.

Christ has done much to save us; and the way of salvation is made plain: but unless he justify our conscience from dead works, and purify our hearts from all sin, his passion and death will profit us nothing. While we boast in Christ Jesus, let us see that our rejoicing, καυχησις, our boasting; be this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have our conversation in the world, 2 Cor. i. 12.

4. We must beware of Antinomianism: that is, of supposing that, because Christ has been obedient unto death, there is no necessity for our obedience to his righteous commandments. If this were so, the grace of Christ would tend to the destruction of the law; and not to its establishment. He only is saved from his sins who has the law of God written in his heart; and he alone has the law written in his heart who lives an innocent, holy, and useful life. Wherever Christ lives, he works: and his work of righteousness will appear to his servants; and its effect will be quietness and assurance for ever. The life of God, in the soul of man, is the principle which saves and preserves eternally.

CHAPTER IV.

Abraham was justified by faith, and not by the works of the law; for his faith was imputed to him for righteousness, 1—5. David also bears testimony to the same doctrine, 6—8. Abraham, the father of the Jewish race, was justified by faith, even before he was circumcised; therefore salvation must be of the Gentiles as well as the Jews, 9—12. And the promise that all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him, was made to him while he was in an uncircumcised state; and therefore, if salvation were of the Jews alone, the law that was given after the promise, would make the promise of no effect, 13—17. Description of Abraham's faith, and its effects, 18—22. This account is left on record for our salvation, that we might believe on Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification, 23—25.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

The apostle having proved in the foregoing chapter, that neither Jews nor Gentiles have a right to the blessings of God's peculiar kingdom, otherwise than by grace, which is as free for the one as the other; in this chapter advances a new argument, to convince the Jew, and to show the believing Gentile, in a clear light, the high value, and strong security, of the mercies freely bestowed on them in the gospel: and at the same time, to display the scheme of Divine Providence, as laid in the counsel and will of God. His argument is taken from Abraham's case: Abraham was the father and head of the Jewish nation: he had been an idolater, but God pardoned him, and took him and his posterity into his special covenant; and bestowed upon them many extraordinary blessings above the rest of mankind: and it is evident, that Abraham was not justified by any obedience to law, or rule of right action, but in the only way in which a sinner can be justified, by prerogative, or the mercy of the law-giver. Now, this is the very same way in which the gospel saves the believing Gentiles, and gives them a part in the blessings of God's covenant. Why then should the Jews oppose the Gentiles? especially as the Gentiles were actually included in the covenant made with Abraham: for the promise, Gen. xvii. 4. stated, that he should be the father of many nations; consequently, the covenant being made with Abraham, as the head, or father of many nations, all, in any nation who stood on the same religious principle with him, were his seed, and with him interested in the same covenant. But Abraham stood by faith in the mercy of God, pardoning his idolatry; and upon this foot the believing Gentiles stand in the gospel; and therefore they are the seed of Abraham, and included in the convenant and promise made to him.

To all this the apostle knew well it would be objected; that it was not faith alone that gave Abraham a right to the blessings of the covenant, but his obedience to the law of circumcision; and this being peculiar to the Jewish nation, gave them an interest in the Abrahamic covenant; and that, consequently, whoever among the Gentiles would be interested in that covenant, ought to embrace Judaism, become circumcised, and thus come under obligation to the whole law. With this very objection the apostle very dextrously introduces his argument, ver. 1, 2. Shows that, according to the Scripture account, Abraham was justified by faith, ver. 3—5. explains the nature of that justification, by a quotation out of the Psalms, ver. 6—9. proves that Abraham was justified long before he was circumcised, ver. 9—11. that the believing Gentiles are his seed to whom the promise belongs, as well as the believing Jews, ver. 12—17. and he describes Abraham's faith, in order to explain the faith of the gospel, ver. 17—25. See Dr. Taylor's notes. We may still suppose that the dialogue is carried on between the Apostle and the Jew; and it will make the subject still more clear to assign to each his respective part. The Jew asks a single question, which is contained in the 1st, and part of the 2nd verses. And the apostle's answer takes up the rest of the chapter.

Verse 1.—Jew—What shall we then say that Abraham, our father, as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?] The κατα σαρκα, pertaining to the flesh, must here refer to the sign in Abraham's flesh, viz. his circumcision; on which the Jew would found his right to peculiar blessings. That this is the meaning of κατα σαρκα, according to the flesh, Dr. Taylor has proved by a collation of several parallel Scriptures, which it is not necessary to produce here. We may, therefore, suppose the Jew arguing thus: but you set your argument on a wrong footing, viz. the corrupt state of our nation; whereas we hold our prerogative above the rest of mankind, from Abraham, who is our father; and we have a right to the blessings of God's peculiar kingdom, in virtue of the promise made to him: his justification is the ground of ours. Now what shall we make of his case, on your principles? Of what use was his obedience to the law of circumcision, if it did not give him a right to the blessing of God? And if, by his obedience to that law, he obtained a grant of extraordinary blessings, then, according to your own concession, chap. iii. 27. he might ascribe his justification to something in himself; and, consequently, so may we too, in his right: and if so, this will exclude all those who are not circumcised as we are.

Verse 2. For, if Abraham were justified by works] The Jew proceeds: I conclude therefore, that Abraham was justified by works, or by his obedience to this law of circumcision: and, consequently, he has cause for glorying, καυχημα, to exult in something which he has done to entitle him to these blessings. Now, it is evident that he has this glorying, and consequently that he was justified by works.

Apostle—But not before God] These seem to be the apostle's words, and contain the beginning of his answer to the arguments of the Jew: as if he had said—Allowing that Abraham might glory in being called from heathenish darkness into such marvellous light; and exult in the privileges which God had granted to him. Yet this glorying was not before God, as a reason why those privileges should be granted; the glorying itself being a consequence of these very privileges.

Verse 3. For, what saith the Scripture?] The scriptural account of this transaction, Gen. xv. 6. is decisive; for, there it is said, Abraham believed God, and it was counted, ελογισθη, it was reckoned to him for righteousness; εις δικαιοσυνην, for justification.

Verse 4. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.] Therefore, if Abraham had been justified by works, the blessings he received would have been given to him as a reward for those works; and consequently his believing could have had no part in his justification; and his faith would have been useless.

Verse 5. But to him that worketh not] Which was the case with Abraham, for he was called when he was ungodly, i. e. an idolater; and, on his believing, was freely justified: and, as all men have sinned, none can be justified by works; and therefore, justification, if it take place at all, must take place in behalf of the ungodly, forasmuch as all mankind are such. Now, as Abraham's state and mode, in which he was justified, are the plan and rule according to which God purposes to save men; and as his state was ungodly, and the mode of his justification was by faith in the goodness and mercy of God; and this is precisely the state of Jews and Gentiles at present: there can be no other mode of justification than by faith in that Christ who is Abraham's seed; and in whom, according to the promise, all the nations of the earth are to be blessed.

It is necessary to observe here, in order to prevent confusion and misapprehension, that although the verb δικαιοω, has a variety of senses in the New Testament, yet here it is to be taken as implying the pardon of sin; receiving a person into the favour of God. See these different acceptations cited in the note on chap. i. ver. 17. and particularly under godly, his faith is counted for righteousness.

6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works,

7 Saying, [a] Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

9 Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And [b] he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that [c] he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

[a] Ps. 32. 1, 2.—[b] Gen. 17. 10.

[c] Luke 19. 9. ver. 12, 16. Gal. 3. 7.

No. 7. It is also necessary to observe, that our translators render the verb λογιζομαι differently, in different parts of this chapter. It is rendered counted, ver. 3, 5. reckoned, ver. 4, 9, 10. imputed, ver. 6, 8, 11, 22, 23, and 24. Reckoned is probably the best sense in all these places.

Verse 6. Even as David also, &c.] David, in Psal. xxxii. 1, 2. gives us also the true notion of this way of justification, i. e. by faith, without the merit of works, where he says—

Verse 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven] That is, the man is truly happy whose iniquities, αι ανομιαι, his transgressions of the law, are forgiven; for by these he was exposed to the most grievous punishment. Whose sins, αι αμαρτιαι, his innumerable deviations from the strict rule of truth and righteousness, are covered, entirely removed out of sight; and thrown into oblivion. See the meaning of the word sin, in the note on Gen. xiii. 13.

Verse 8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.] That man is truly happy, to whose charge God does not reckon sin: that is, they alone are happy who are redeemed from the curse of the law, and the consequence of their ungodly life, by having their sins freely forgiven, through the mercy of God.

Verse 9. Cometh this blessedness—upon the circumcision only] The word μονον only, is very properly supplied by our translators, and indeed is found in some excellent MSS. and is here quite necessary to complete the sense. The apostle's question is very nervous. If this pardon, granted in this way, be essential to happiness? and David says it is so: then is it the privilege of the Jews exclusively? this cannot be; for as it is by the mere mercy of God, through faith, the circumcision cannot even claim it. But if God offer it to the circumcision, not because they have been obedient, for they also have sinned, but because of his mere mercy; then, of course, the same blessedness may be offered to the Gentiles who believe in the Lord Jesus. And this is evident; for we say, following our own Scriptures, that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness: he had no merit, he was an idolater; but he believed in God, and his faith was reckoned to him εις δικαιοσυνην, in reference to his justification; he brought faith when he could not bring works; and God accepted his faith in the place of obedience; and this became the instrumental cause of his justification.

Verse 10. How was it then reckoned?] In what circumstances was Abraham, when this blessing was bestowed upon him? When he was circumcised, or before?

Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.] Faith was reckoned to Abraham for justification, as we read Gen. xv. 6. (where see the note,) but circumcision was not instituted till about fourteen or fifteen years after, Gen. xvii. 1, &c. for faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness or justification, at least one year before Ishmael was born; compare Gen. xv. and xvi. At Ishmael's birth he was 86 years of age, Gen. xv. 16. and at the institution of circumcision, Ishmael was 13, and Abraham 99 years old.—See Gen. xvii. 24, 25. and see Dr. Taylor.

Verse 11. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal, &c.] So far was obedience to the law of circumcision, from being the reason of his justification, that he not only received this justification before he was circumcised; but he received the sign of circumcision, as a seal of the pardon which he had before actually received. And thus he became the father, the great head and representative of all them that believe; particularly the Gentiles, who are now in precisely the same state in which Abraham was, when he received the mercy of God. Hence it appears, says Dr. Taylor, that the covenant established with Abraham, Gen. xvii. 2—15. is the same with that Gen. xii. 2, 3. and xv. 5, &c. for circumcision was not a seal of any new grant, but of the justification and promise which Abraham had received before he was cir-

13 For the promise, that he should be the [a] heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law; but through the righteousness of faith.

14 For, [b] if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect:

cumcised; and that justification and promise, included the gospel covenant, in which we are now interested. St. Paul refers to this Galat. iii. 8. the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify us, heathens, through faith, preached before, the gospel unto Abraham; saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed. The whole of the apostle's argument in this 4th chapter to the Romans, proves that we, believing Gentiles, are the seed of Abraham: to whom, as well as to himself, the promise was made; and that the promise made to him, is the same in effect, as that promise which is now made to us; consequently, it is the Abrahamic covenant in which we now stand; and any argument taken from the nature of that covenant, and applied to ourselves, must be good and valid. It is also undeniably evident from this 11th verse, as well as from Gen. xvii. 1—11. that circumcision was a seal or sign of the gospel covenant in which we now stand. See Taylor.

There is nothing more common in the Jewish writers than the words אות oth, SIGN; and חותם chotham, SEAL; as signifying the mark in the flesh, by the rite of circumcision, see on Gen. iv. 15. SOHAR Genes. fol. 41. col. 161. has these words: And God set a mark upon Cain; this mark was the sign of the covenant of circumcision. TARGUM, Cant. iii. 8. the seal of circumcision is in your flesh; as Abraham was sealed in the flesh. YALCUT RUBENI, fol. 64. Joseph did not defile the sign of the holy covenant; i. e. he did not commit adultery with the wife of Potiphar. Liber Cosri, part i. c. 115. p. 70, Circumcision is a Divine sign which God has placed on the member of concupiscence, to the end that we may overcome evil desire. SHEMOTH RABBA, sect. 19. fol. 118, Ye shall not eat the pass-over, unless the SEAL of Abraham be in your flesh. Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 36, God said to Abraham, I will seal thy flesh. Sohar Levit. fol. 6, Abraham was sealed with the holy seal. See Schoettgen.

Verse 12. And the father of circumcision] He is also the head and representative of all the circumcision, of all the JEWS, who walk in the steps of that faith; who seek for justification by faith only, and not by the works of the law; for this was the faith that Abraham had, before he received circumcision. So that the Jews, to be saved, must come under that Abrahamic covenant, in which the Gentiles are included. This is an unanswerable conclusion; and must, on this point, for ever confound the Jews.

Verse 13. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world] This promise intimated that he should be the medium, through whom the mercy of God should be communicated to the world, to both Jews and Gentiles; and the manner in which he was justified, be the rule and manner according to which all men should expect this blessing. Abraham is here represented as having all the world given to him as his inheritance; because, in him, all nations of the earth are blessed; this must therefore relate to their being all interested in the Abrahamic covenant; and every person, now that the covenant is fully explained, has the privilege of claiming justification through faith, by the blood of the Lamb, in virtue of this original grant.

Verse 14. For, if they which are of the law be heirs] If the Jews only be heirs of the promise made to Abraham, and that on the ground of prior obedience to the law; then faith is made void; is entirely useless: and the promise, which was made to faith, is made of none effect.

Verse 15. Because the law worketh wrath] For law, νομος, any law, or rule of duty. No law makes provision for the exercise of mercy, for it worketh wrath; οργην, punishment for the disobedient. Law necessarily subjects the transgressor to punishment; for where no law is, where no rule of duty is enacted and acknowledged, there is no transgression; and, where there is no transgression, there can be no punishment; for there is no law to enforce it. But the Jews have a law which they have broken; and now they are exposed to the penal sanctions of that law; and if the promises of pardon, without the works of the law, do not extend to them, they must be finally miserable; because they have all broken the law; and the law exacts punishment. This was a home stroke; and the argument is unanswerable.

Verse 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace] On this account, the promise is mercifully grounded, not on obedience to a law, but on the infinite goodness of God: and thus the promise is sure to all the seed, to all both Jews and Gentiles, who, believing in Christ Jesus, have a right to all the blessings contained in the Abrahamic covenant. All the seed necessarily comprehends all mankind.—Of the Gentiles there can be no doubt, for the promise was given to Abraham while he was a Gentile; and the salvation of the Jews may be inferred, because they all sprang from him, after he became an heir of the righteousness or justification which is received by faith; for he is the father of us all, both Jews and Gentiles. Dr. Taylor has an excellent note on this verse. "Here," says he, "it should be well observed that faith and grace do mutually and necessarily infer each other. For the grace and favour of God, in its own nature, requires faith in us; and faith on our part, in its own nature, supposes the grace or favour of God. If any blessing is the gift of God, in order to influence our temper and behaviour; then, in the very nature of things, it is necessary that we be sensible of this blessing, and persuaded of the grace of God that bestows it; otherwise it is not possible we should improve it. On the other hand, if faith in the goodness of God with regard to any blessing, is the principle of our religious hopes and action; then it follows that the blessing is not due in strict justice, nor on the foot of law, but that it is the free gift of divine goodness. If the promise to Abraham and his seed be of faith on their part; then it is of grace on the part of God. And it is of faith, that it might be by grace: grace being the mere good will of the donor, is free and open to all whom he chooses to make the objects of it; and the divine wisdom appointed faith to be the condition of the promise; because faith is, on our part, the most simple principle, bearing an exact correspondence to grace, and reaching as far as that can extend; that so the happy effects of the promise might extend far and wide, take in the largest compass, and be confined to no condition, but what is merely necessary, in the nature of things."

Verse 17. As it is written, I have made thee a father] That Abraham's being a father of many nations, has relation to the covenant of God made with him, may be seen, Gen. xvii. 4, 5, Behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations: neither shall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name shall be called Abraham, for a father of many nations have I made thee, i. e. he was constituted the head of many nations by virtue of the covenant, which God made then with him.

God, who quickeneth the dead, &c.] God is the most proper object of trust and dependence; for being Almighty, Eternal, and Unchangeable, he can even raise the dead to life; and call those things which be not as though they were. He is the Creator, he gave being when there was none; he can as infallibly assure the existence of those things which are not, as if they were already actually in being. And on this account, he can never fail of accomplishing whatsoever he has promised.

Verse 18. Who, against hope, believed in hope] The faith of Abraham bore an exact correspondence to the power and never-failing faithfulness of God; for though, in the ordinary course of things, he had not the best foundation of hope, yet he believed that he should be the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken; namely, that his posterity should be like the stars of heaven for multitude, and like the dust of the earth.

Verse 19. He considered not his own body, now dead] He showed at once the correctness and energy of his faith: God cannot lie; Abraham can believe. It is true, that, according to the course of nature, he and Sarah are so old that they cannot have children; but God is almighty, and can do whatsoever he will, and will fulfil his promise. This was certainly a wonderful degree of faith; as the promise stated that it was in his posterity that all the nations of the earth were to be blessed; that he had, as yet, no child by Sarah; that he was 100 years old; that Sarah was 90; and that, added to the utter improbability of her bearing at that age, she had ever been barren before. All these were so many reasons why he should not credit the promise; yet he believed;

21 And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, [a] he was able also to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

23 Now, [b] it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe [c] on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

25 [d] Who was delivered for our offences, and [e] was raised again for our justification.

[a] Ps. 115. 3. Luke 1. 37, 45. Heb. 11. 19.——[b] ch. 15. 4. 1 Cor. 10. 6, 11.——[c] Acts 2. 24. & 13. 30.

[d] Isa. 53. 5, 6. ch. 3. 25. & 5. 6. & 8. 32. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Gal. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 2. 24. & 3. 18. Heb. 9. 28.——[e] 1 Cor. 15. 17. 1 Pet. 1. 21.

therefore it might be well said, verse 20, that he staggered not at the promise, though every thing was unnatural and improbable; but he was strong in faith, and by this almost inimitable confidence, gave glory to God. It was to God's honour, that his servant put such unlimited confidence in him; and he put this confidence in him on the rational ground that God was fully able to perform what he had promised.

Verse 21. And being fully persuaded] Πληροφορηθεις, his measure, his soul was full of confidence, that the truth of God bound him to fulfil his promise; and his power enabled him to do it.

Verse 22. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.] The verse is thus paraphrased by Dr. Taylor. "For which reason God was graciously pleased to place his faith to his account; and to allow his fiducial reliance upon the divine goodness, power, and faithfulness, for a title to the divine blessing, which, otherwise, having been an idolater, he had no right to."

Abraham's strong faith in the coming of the promised Saviour, for this was essential to his faith, was reckoned to him for justification: for it is not said that any righteousness, either his own, or that of another, was imputed or reckoned to him for justification; but it, i. e. his faith in God. His faith was fully persuaded of the most merciful intentions of God's goodness; and this, which, in effect, laid hold on Jesus Christ, the future Saviour, was the means of his justification; being reckoned unto him in the place of personal righteousness, because it laid hold on the merit of Him who died to make an atonement for our offences, and rose again for our justification.

Verse 23. Now, it was not written for his sake alone] The fact of Abraham's believing and receiving salvation through that faith, is not recorded as a mere circumstance in the patriarch's life, intended to do him honour: see below.

Verse 24. But for us also] The mention of this circumstance has a much more extensive design than merely to honour Abraham. It is recorded as the model, according to which God will save both Jews and Gentiles: indeed there can be no other way of salvation; as all have sinned, all must either be saved by faith through Christ Jesus; or finally perish. If God, therefore, will our salvation, it must be by faith; and faith contemplates his promise, and his promise comprehends the Son of his love.

Verse 25. Who was delivered for our offences] Who was delivered up to death as a sacrifice for our sins; for in what other way, or for what other purpose, could He who is innocence itself, be delivered for our offences?

And was raised again for our justification.] He was raised that we might have the fullest assurance that the death of Christ had accomplished the end for which it took place; viz. our reconciliation to God, and giving us a title to that eternal life, into which he has entered, and taken with him our human nature, as the first-fruits of the resurrection of mankind.

1. From a careful examination of the divine oracles, it appears, that the death of Christ was an atonement or expiation for the sin of the world: For, him hath God set forth to be a PROPITIATION through FAITH in HIS BLOOD, chap. iii. 25. For, when we were yet without strength, in due time, Christ DIED FOR the UNGODLY, chap. v. 6. And when we were ENEMIES, we were RECONCILED to God by the DEATH of his Son, ver. 10. In whom we have REDEMPTION THROUGH HIS BLOOD, the FORGIVENESS of SINS, Eph. i. 7. Christ hath loved us, and GIVEN HIMSELF FOR US an OFFERING and a SACRIFICE to God for a sweet-smelling savour, Ibid. chap. v. 2. In whom we have REDEMPTION THROUGH HIS BLOOD, the FORGIVENESS of SINS; Col. i. 14. And having made PEACE THROUGH the BLOOD of his CROSS, in the BODY of HIS FLESH through DEATH, Ib. ver. 20, 22. Who GAVE HIMSELF a RANSOM for all, 1 Tim. ii. 6. Who GAVE HIMSELF FOR US, that he might REDEEM us from all iniquity, Tit. ii. 14. By which will we are sanctified, through the OFFERING of the BODY of Jesus Christ, Heb. x. 14. So Christ was once OFFERED TO BEAR THE SINS of many, Heb. ix. 27. See also Eph. ii. 13, 16. 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. Rev. v. 9. But it would be transcribing a very considerable part of the New Testament, to set down all the texts that refer to this most important and glorious truth.

2. And as his death was an atonement for our sins, so his resurrection was the proof and pledge of our eternal life. See 1 Cor. xv. 17. 1 Pet. i. 3. Ephes. i. 13, 14, &c. &c.

3. The doctrine of justification by faith, which is so nobly proved in the preceding chapter, is one of the grandest displays of the mercy of God to mankind. It is so very plain that all may comprehend it; and so free, that all may attain it. What more simple than this? Thou art a sinner; in consequence, condemned to perdition; and utterly unable to save thy own soul. All are in the same state with thyself, and no man can give a ransom for the soul of his neighbour. God, in his mercy, has provided a Saviour for thee. As thy life was forfeited to death, because of thy transgressions, Jesus Christ has redeemed thy life, by giving up his own; he died in thy stead, and has made an atonement to God for thy transgressions; and offers thee the pardon he has thus purchased, on the simple condition, that thou believe that his death is a sufficient sacrifice, ransom, and oblation for thy sin: and that thou bring it as such, by confident faith, to the throne of God, and plead it in thy own behalf there. When thou dost so, thy faith in that sacrifice shall be imputed to thee for righteousness; i. e. it shall be the means of receiving that salvation which Christ has bought by his blood.

4. The doctrine of the imputed righteousness of Christ, as held by many, will not be readily found in this chapter, where it has been supposed to exist in all its proofs. It is repeatedly said that FAITH is imputed for righteousness; but in no place here, that Christ's obedience to the moral law is imputed to any man. The truth is, the moral law was broken, and did not now require obedience; it required this before it was broken; but, after it was broken, it required death. Either the sinner must die, or some one in his stead: but there was none whose death could have been an equivalent for the transgressions of the world, but JESUS CHRIST. Jesus therefore died for man; and it is through his blood, the merit of his passion and death, that we have redemption; and not by his obedience to the moral law in our stead. Our salvation was obtained at a much higher price. Jesus could not but be righteous and obedient; this is consequent on the immaculate purity of his nature: but his death was not a necessary consequent. As the law of God can claim only the death of a transgressor, for, such only forfeit their right to life: it is the greatest miracle of all, that Christ could die, whose life was never forfeited. Here we see the indescribable demerit of sin, that it required such a death; and here we see the stupendous mercy of God, in providing the sacrifice required. It is, therefore, by Jesus Christ's death, or obedience unto death, that we are saved, and not by his fulfilling any moral law. That he fulfilled the moral law, we know; without which he could not have been qualified to be our mediator: but we must take heed lest we attribute that to an obedience (which was the necessary consequence of his immaculate nature) which belongs to his passion and death. These were free-will offerings of eternal goodness, and not even a necessary consequence of his incarnation.

5. This doctrine, of the imputed righteousness of Christ, is capable of great abuse. To say that Christ's personal righteousness is imputed to every true believer, is not scriptural: to say that he has fulfilled all righteousness for us, or in our stead, if by this is meant his fulfilment of all moral duties, is neither scriptural nor true: that he has died in our stead, is a great, glorious, and scriptural truth: that there is no redemption but through his blood, is asserted, beyond all contradiction, in the oracles of God. But there are a multitude of duties which the moral law requires, which Christ never fulfilled in our stead, and never could. We have various duties of a domestic kind which belong solely to ourselves, in the relation of parents, husbands, wives, servants, &c. in which relations Christ never stood. He has fulfilled none of these duties for us, but he furnishes grace to every true believer to fulfil them to God's glory, the edification of his neighbour, and his own eternal profit. The salvation which we receive from God's free mercy, through Christ, binds us to live in a strict conformity to the moral law; that law which prescribes our manners, and the spirit by which they should be regulated; and in which they should be performed. He who lives not in the due performance of every Christian duty, whatever faith he may profess, is either a vile hypocrite, or a scandalous Antinomian.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

In the former chapter, the apostle, having proved that the believing Gentiles are justified in the same way with Abraham, and are, in fact, his seed, included with him in the promise and covenant; he judged this a proper place, as the Jews built all their glorying upon the Abrahamic covenant, to produce some of the chief of those privileges and blessings in which the Christian Gentile can glory, in consequence of his justification by faith. And he produces three particulars, which, above all others, were adapted to this purpose. 1. The hope of eternal life, in which the law, wherein the Jew gloried, chap. ii. 17. was defective, ver. 2. 2. The persecutions and sufferings to which Christians were exposed, ver. 3, 4. and on account of which the Jews were greatly prejudiced against the Christian profession: but he shows that these had a happy tendency to establish the heart in the hope of the gospel. 3. An interest in God, as our GOD and FATHER: a privilege upon which the Jews valued themselves highly above all nations, ver. 11.

These three are the singular privileges belonging to the gospel state; wherein true Christians may glory, as really belonging to them, and greatly redounding, if duly understood and improved, to their honour and benefit. Taylor, page 278.

Verse 1. Therefore being justified by faith] The apostle takes it for granted that he has proved that justification is by faith; and that the Gentiles have an equal title with the Jews, to salvation by faith. And now he proceeds to show the effects produced in the hearts of the believing Gentiles, by this doctrine. We are justified, have all our sin pardoned by faith, as the instrumental cause; for, being sinners, we have no works of righteousness that we can plead.

We have peace with God] Before, while sinners, we were in a state of enmity with God, which was sufficiently proved by our rebellion against his authority; and our transgression of his laws: but now, being reconciled, we have peace with God. Before, while under a sense of the guilt of sin, we had nothing but terror and dismay in our own consciences; now, having our sin forgiven, we have peace in our hearts; feeling that all our guilt is taken away. Peace is generally the first fruits of our justification.

Through our Lord Jesus Christ] His passion and death being the sole cause of our reconciliation to God.

Verse 2. By whom also] We are not only indebted to our Lord Jesus Christ for the free and full pardon which we have received; but our continuance in a justified state depends upon his gracious influence in our hearts; and his intercession before the throne of God.

We have access] Προσαγωγην εσχηκαμεν, we have received this access. It was only through Christ that we could at first approach God: and it is only through him that the privilege is continued to us. And this access to God, or introduction to the Divine presence, is to be considered as a lasting privilege. We are not brought to God for the purpose of an interview, but to remain with him; to be his household: and, by faith, to behold his face, and walk in the light of his countenance.

Into this grace] This state of favour and acceptance.

Wherein we stand] Having firm footing, and a just title through the blood of the Lamb, to the full salvation of God.

And rejoice] Have solid happiness, from the evidence we have of our acceptance with Him.

In hope of the glory of God] Having our sins remitted, and our souls adopted into the heavenly family, we are become heirs; for if children, then heirs, Gal. iv. 7. and that glory of God is now become our endless inheritance. While the Jews boast of their external privileges; that they have the temple of God among them; that their priests have an entrance to God as their representatives, carrying before the mercy-seat, the blood of their offered victims; we exult in being introduced by Jesus Christ to the Divine presence; his blood having been shed and sprinkled for this purpose; and thus we have spiritually and essentially, all that these Jewish rites, &c. signified. We are in the peace of God; and we are happy in the enjoyment of that peace; and have a blessed foretaste of eternal glory. Thus, we have heaven upon earth, and the ineffable glories of God in prospect.

Verse 3. And not only so] We are not only happy from being in this state of communion with our God, and the prospect of being eternally with him;

But we glory in tribulations also] All the sufferings we endure for the testimony of our Lord, are so sanctified to us by his grace, that they become powerful instruments of increasing our happiness.

Tribulation worketh patience] Υπομονην, endurance under trials, without sustaining loss or deterioration. It is a me-tions also: [a] knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 [b] And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

5 [c] And hope maketh not ashamed; [d] because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

taphor taken from refining metals. We do not speak thus from any sudden raptures, or extraordinary sensations we may have of spiritual joy: for we find that the tribulations through which we pass, are the means of exercising and increasing our patience, our meek forbearance of injuries received, or persecutions experienced, on account of the gospel.

Verse 4. And patience, experience] Δοκιμην, full proof by trial, of the truth of our religion, the solidity of our Christian state, and the faithfulness of our God. In such cases, we have the opportunity of putting our religion to the test; and, by every such test, it receives the deeper sterling stamp. The apostle uses here also a metaphor, taken from the purifying, refining, and testing of silver and gold.

Experience, hope] For we thus calculate, that he who has supported us in the past, will support us in those which may yet come; and as we have received so much spiritual profiting by means of the sufferings through which we have already passed, we may profit equally by those which are yet to come; and this hope prevents us from dreading coming trials: we receive them as means of grace, and find that all things work together for good, to them that love God.

Verse 5. And hope maketh not ashamed] A hope that is not rationally founded, will have its expectation cut off; and then shame and confusion will be the portion of its possessor. But our hope is of a different kind; it is founded on the goodness and truth of God; and our religious experience shows us that we have not misapplied it; nor exercised it on wrong or improper objects.

Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts] We have the most solid and convincing testimony of God's love to us, by that measure of it which he has communicated to our hearts. There, εκκεχυται, it is poured out, and diffused abroad; filling, quickening, and invigorating all our powers and faculties. This love is the spring of all our actions; it is the motive of our obedience; the principle through which we love God; we love him because he first loved us: and we love him with a love worthy of himself, because it springs from him: it is his own; and every flame that rises from this pure and vigorous fire, must be pleasing in his sight: it consumes what is unholy; refines every passion and appetite; sublimes the whole, and assimilates all to itself. And we know that this is the love of God; it differs widely from all that is earthly and sensual. The Holy Ghost comes with it; by his energy it is diffused, and pervades every part; and, by his light, we discover what it is; and know the state of grace in which we stand. Thus we are furnished to every good word and work: have produced in us the mind that was in Christ; are enabled to obey the pure law of our God in its spiritual sense, by loving him with all our heart, soul, mind, and strength; and our neighbour; any and every soul of man, as ourselves. This is, or ought to be, the common experience of every genuine believer; but, in addition to this, the primitive Christians had, sometimes, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit.—These were then needful; and were they needful now, they would be again communicated.

Verse 6. For when we were yet without strength] The apostle having pointed out the glorious state of the believing Gentiles, takes occasion to contrast this with their former state; and the means by which they were redeemed from it. Their former state he points out in four particulars; which may be applied to men in general.

I. They were ασθενεις, without strength; in a weak, dying state: neither able to resist sin, nor do any good: utterly devoid of power to extricate themselves from the misery of their situation.

II. They were ασεβεις, ungodly; without either the worship or knowledge of the true God; they had not God in them; and, consequently, were not partakers of the Divine nature: Satan lived in, ruled, and enslaved their hearts.

III. They were αμαρτωλοι, sinners, ver. 8. aiming at happiness, but constantly, missing the mark, which is the ideal meaning of the Hebrew חטא chata; and the Greek αμαρτανω. See this explained Gen. xiii. 13. And in missing the mark, they deviated from the right way; walked in the wrong way; trespassed, in thus deviating; and, by breaking the commandments of God, not only missed the mark of felicity, but exposed themselves to everlasting misery.

IV. They were εχθροι enemies, ver. 10. from εχθος hatred, enmity, persons who hated God and holiness; and acted in continued hostility to both. What a gradation is here. 1. In our fall from God, our first apparent state is, that we are without strength; have lost our principle of spiritual power, by having lost the image of God, righteousness and true holiness, in which we were created. 2. We are un- godly, having lost our strength to do good; we have also lost all power to worship God aright. The mind which was made for God, is no longer his residence. 3. We are sinners; feeling we have lost our centre of rest, and our happiness, we go about seeking rest, but find none: what we have lost in losing God, we seek in earthly things; and thus are continually missing the mark, and multiplying transgressions against our Maker. 4. We are enemies; sin, indulged, increases in strength; evil acts engender fixed and rooted habits; the mind, every where poisoned with sin, increases in averseness from good; and mere aversion produces enmity; and enmity, acts of hostility, fell cruelty, &c. So that the enemy of God hates his Maker and his service, is cruel to his fellow-creatures; "a foe to God, was ne'er true friend to man." And even torments his own soul! Though every man brings into the world the seeds of all these evils; yet, it is only by growing up in him, that they acquire their perfection: nemo repentè fuit turpissimus; no man becomes a profligate at once; he arrives at it by slow degrees: and the speed he makes is proportioned to his circumstances; means of gratifying sinful passions, evil education, bad company, &c. &c. These make a great diversity in the moral states of men: all have the same seeds of evil, nemo sine vitiis nascitur, all come defiled into the world; but all have not the same opportunities of cultivating these seeds. Besides, as God's Spirit is continually convincing the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment; and the ministers of God are seconding its influence with their pious exhortations: as the Bible is in almost every house; and is less or more heard or read by almost every person, these evil seeds are receiving continual blasts and checks, so that, in many cases, they have not a vigorous growth. These causes make the principal moral differences that we find among men; though, in evil propensities they are all radically the same.

That all the preceding characters are applied by some learned men to the Gentiles, exclusively as such, I am well aware; and that they may be all applied to them in a national point of view, there can be little doubt. But there are too many correspondences between the state of the modern Gentiles and that of the ancient Gentiles, to justify the propriety of applying the whole as fully to the former as to the latter. Indeed the four particulars already explained, point out the natural and practical state of every human being, previously to his regeneration by the grace and Spirit of God.

In due time Christ died for the ungodly] This due or proper time, will appear in the following particulars:—1. Christ was manifested in the flesh when the world needed him most—2. When the powers of the human mind had been cultivated to the utmost, both in Greece and Rome; and had made every possible effort, but all in vain, to find out some efficient scheme of happiness—3. When the Jews were in the lowest state of corruption, and had the greatest need of the promised Deliverer—4. When the fulness of the time came, foretold by the prophets—5. When both Jews and Gentiles, the one from their jealousy, the other from their learning, were best qualified to detect imposture and to ascertain fact—6. In a word, Christ came, when his advent was most likely to promote its great object, glory to God in the highest; and peace and good will among men. And the success that attended the preaching of Christ and his apostles, together with the wide and rapid spread of the gospel, all prove that it was the due time, κατα καιρον, the proper season; and, that Divine wisdom was justified in fixing upon that time in preference to all others.

Died for the ungodly.] Υπερ ασεβων απεθανε, He died INSTEAD of the ungodly, see also ver. 8. so Luke xxii. 19. The body of Christ, το υπερ υμων διδομενον, which was given FOR you; i. e. the life that was laid down in your STEAD. In this way the preposition, υπερ, is used by the best Greek writers.

Verse 7. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die] The Jews divide men, as to their moral character, into four classes. 1. Those who say, "what is mine is my own; and what is thine, is thy own." These may be considered the just, who render to every man his due; or rather, they who neither give nor take. The second class is made up of those who say, "What is mine, is thine; and what is thine, is mine." These are they who accommodate each other; who borrow and lend. The third class is composed of those who say, "What is mine, is thine; and what is thine, let it be thine." These are the pious, or good, who give up all for the benefit of their neighbour. The fourth class are those who say, "What is thine, is mine; and what is thine shall be mine." These are the impious, who take all, and give nothing. Now, for one of the first class, who would die? There is nothing amiable in his life or conduct that would so endear him to any man, as to induce him to risk his life to save such a person.

Peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.] That is, for one of the third class, who gives all he has for the good of others. This is the truly benevolent man.

whose life is devoted to the public good: for such a person, peradventure, some who have had their lives perhaps preserved by his bounty, would even dare to die: but such cases may be considered merely as possible: they exist, it is true, in romance: and we find a few rare instances of friends exposing themselves to death for their friends. See the case of Jonathan and David; Damon and Pythias, Val. Max. lib. iv. c. 7. And our Lord says, John x. 11, 12. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend. This is the utmost we can expect among men.

Verse 8. But God commendeth his love, &c.] Συνιστησι, God hath set this act of infinite mercy in the most conspicuous light, so as to recommend it to the notice and admiration of all.

While we were yet sinners] We were neither righteous nor good; but impious and wicked. See the preceding verse, and see the note on ver. 6.

Verse 9. Much more then, being now justified] If Jesus Christ, in his endless compassion towards us, gave his life for ours, while we were yet enemies; being now justified by his blood, by his death on the cross; and thus reconciled to God, we shall be saved from wrath, from punishment for past transgression, through him, by what he has thus suffered for us.

Verse 10. For if, when we were enemies] See under ver. 6.

We were reconciled] The enmity existing before, rendered the reconciliation necessary. In every human heart there is a measure of enmity to holiness; and, consequently, to the author of it. Men seldom suspect this; for one property of sin is, to blind the understanding, so that men do not know their own state.

We shall be saved by his life] For, as he died for our sins, so he rose again for our justification: and his resurrection to life, is the grand proof that he has accomplished whatever he had purposed in reference to the salvation of man. 2. This may be also understood of his life of intercession: for it is written, he ever LIVETH to make INTERCESSION for us, Heb. vii. 25. Through this life of intercession at the right hand of God, we are spared and blessed. 3. And it will not be amiss to consider that, as our salvation implies the renovation of our nature, and our being restored to the image of God, so, σωθησομεθα εν τη ζωη αυτου, may be rendered we shall be saved IN his life; for, I suppose, it is pretty generally agreed, that the life of God, in the soul of man, is essential to its salvation. 4. The example also of the life of Christ, is a means of salvation. He hath left us an example that we should follow his steps; and he that followeth him, shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of LIFE, John viii. 12.

Verse 11. We also joy (καυχωμενοι, we exult, or glory) in God, &c.] We now feel that God is reconciled to us, and we are reconciled to him: the enmity is removed from our souls; and he, for Christ's sake, through whom we have received the atonement, καταλλαγην, the reconciliation, has remitted the wrath, the punishment which we deserved: and now, through this reconciliation, we expect an eternal glory.

It was certainly improper to translate καταλλαγη here, by atonement, instead of reconciliation; as καταλλασσω, signifies to reconcile, and is so rendered by our translators in all the places where it occurs. It does not mean the atonement here, as we generally understand that word, viz. the sacrificial death of Christ; but rather the effect of that atonement, the removal of the enmity, and by this, the change of our condition and state; from κατα intensive, and αλλασσω to change; the thorough change of our state from enmity to friendship. God is reconciled to us, and we are reconciled to him by the death of his Son; and thus there is a glorious change from enmity to friendship; and we can exult in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have received this reconciliation. Though boasting is forbidden to a Jew, because his is a false confidence; yet boasting is enjoined to a Christian; to one reconciled to God: for, his boasting is only in that reconciliation, and the endless mercy by which it was procured. So, he that glorieth, boasteth, must glory in the Lord.

Verse 12. Wherefore, as by one man, sin entered into the world] From this verse, to the conclusion of the chapter, the apostle produces a strong argument to prove, that as all mankind stood in need of the grace of God in Christ, to redeem them from their sins; so this grace has been afforded equally to all, both Jews and Gentiles.

Dr. Taylor has given the following analysis of the apostle's mode of argumentation. The argument stands thus.—"The consequences of Christ's obedience extend as far as the consequences of Adam's disobedience. The consequences of Adam's disobedience extend to all mankind: and therefore, so do the consequences of Christ's obedience. Now, if the Jews will not allow the Gentiles any interest in Abraham, as not being naturally descended from him; yet they must own that the Gentiles are the descendants of Adam, as well as themselves; and being all equally involved in the consequences of his sin, from which," (as far as the death of the body is concerned) "they shall all equally be released at the resurrection, through the free gift of God, therefore they could not deny the Gentiles a share in all the other blessings included in the same gift."

This argument, besides proving the main point, goes to show—1. That the grace of God in the gospel abounds beyond, or very far exceeds, the mere reversing of the sufferings brought upon mankind by Adam's one offence; as it bestows a vast surplusage of blessings which have no relation to that offence, but to the many offences which mankind have committed; and to the exuberance of the Divine grace. 2. To show how justly the Divine grace is founded on the obedience of Christ; in correspondence to the dispensation Adam was under, and to the consequences of his disobedience: if this disobedience involved all mankind in death, it is proper that the obedience of Christ should be the cause not only of reversing that death to all mankind, but also of other blessings which God should see fit, (through him) to bestow on the world. 3. It serves to explain, and set in a clear view, the difference between the law and grace. It was the law, which, for Adam's one transgression, subjected him and his posterity, as included in him when he transgressed, to death, without hopes of a revival. It is grace which restores all men to life at the resurrection; and over and above that, has provided a gracious dispensation for the pardon of their sins; for reducing them to obedience; for guarding them against temptations; supplying them with strength and comfort; and for advancing them to eternal life. This would give the attentive Jew a just notion of the law, which himself was under; and under which he was desirous of bringing the Gentiles.

The order in which the apostle handles this argument is this:—1. He affirms that death passed upon all men, by Adam's one transgression, ver. 12. 2. He proves this, ver. 13, 14. 3. He affirms there is a correspondence between Adam and Christ; or between the παραπτωμα, offence; and the Χαρισμα, free gift, ver. 14. 4. This correspondence, so far as the two opposite parts answer to each other, is justly expressed, ver. 18, and 19. and there we have the main or fundamental position of the apostle's argument, in relation to the point which he has been arguing from the beginning of the Epistle; namely, the extensiveness of the grace of the gospel, that it actually reaches to ALL MEN, and is not confined to the Jews. 5. But before he laid down this position, it was necessary that he should show that the correspondence between Adam and Christ, or between the offence and the gift, is not to be confined strictly to the bounds specified in the position, as if the gift reached no farther than the consequences of the offence; when in reality it extends vastly beyond them, ver. 15, 16, 17. 6. Having settled these points, as previously necessary to clear his fundamental position, and fit to his argument, he then lays down that position in a diversified manner of speech, ver. 18, 19. just as in 1 Cor. xv. 20, 21. and leaves us to conclude, from the premises laid down, ver. 15, 16, 17. that the gift and the grace, in its utmost extent, is as free to all mankind, who are willing to accept of it, as this particular instance, the resurrection from the dead. They shall all be raised from the dead hereafter: they may all be quickened by the Spirit here. 7. Having thus shown the extensiveness of the Divine grace, in opposition to the dire effects of the law under which Adam was; that the Jews might not overlook what he intended they should particularly observe, he puts them in mind that the law given to Adam, transgress and die, was introduced into the Jewish constitution by the ministry of Moses; and for this end, that the offence, with the penalty of death annexed to it, might abound, ver. 20. But, to illustrate the Divine grace, by setting it in contrast to the law, he immediately adds, where sin, subjecting to death, hath abounded, grace hath much more abounded; that is, in blessings bestowed; it has stretched far beyond both Adam's transgression, and the transgressions under the law of Moses, ver. 20, 21. and see the note on the first of these verses.

Upon this argument the learned doctor makes the following general remarks:—

"I. As to the order of time; the apostle carries his arguments backwards from the time when Christ came into the world, (chap. i. 17. to chap. iv.) to the time when the covenant was made with Abraham, (chap. iv.) to the time when the judgment to condemnation, pronounced upon Adam, came upon all men, chap. v. 12. to the end. And thus he gives us a view of the principal dispensations from the beginning of the world.

"II. In this last case, as well as in the two former, he uses law, or forensic terms; judgment to condemnation, justification, justify, made sinners, made righteous. And therefore, as he considers both Jews and Gentiles at the coming of Christ, and Abraham, when the covenant was made with him; so he considers Adam, and all men, as standing in the court, before the tribunal of God. And this was the clearest and concisest way of representing his arguments."—Notes, p. 283.

Sin entered into the world] There was neither sin nor death before the offence of Adam; after that, there were both. Adam's transgression was therefore the cause of both.

And death by sin] Natural evil is evidently the effect of moral evil; if man had never sinned, he had never suffered. Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return, was never spoken till after Adam had eaten the forbidden fruit.

Death passed upon all men] Hence we see, that all human beings partook in the consequences of Adam's sin. He propagated his like; and, with the rudiments of his own nature, propagated those of his moral likeness.

For that all have sinned] All are born with a sinful nature; and the seeds of this evil soon vegetate, and bring forth corresponding fruits. There has never been one instance of an immaculate human soul since the fall of Adam. Every man sins, and sins too after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Adam endeavoured to be independent of God: all his offspring act in the same way; hence prayer is little used, because prayer is the language of dependence; and this is inconsistent with every emotion of original sin. When these degenerate children of degenerate parents are detected in their sins, they act just as their parents did; each excuses himself, and lays the blame on another. What hast thou done?—The woman whom THOU gavest me, to be with me; SHE gave me, and I did eat. What hast THOU done?—The SERPENT beguiled me, and I did eat. Thus, it is extremely difficult to find a person who ingenuously acknowledges his own transgression. See the notes on Gen. iii. 6, &c. where the doctrine of original sin is particularly considered.

Verse 13. For until the law, sin was in the world] As death reigned from Adam to Moses; so also did sin. Now, as there was no written law from Adam till that given to Moses; the death that prevailed could not be the consequence of the breach of that law, for sin, so as to be punished with temporal death, is not imputed when there is no law, which shows the penalty of sin to be death. Therefore, men are not subjected to death, for their own personal transgressions, but for the sin of Adam; as through his transgression, all come into the world with the seeds of death and corruption in their own nature, superadded to their moral depravity. All are sinful—all are mortal—and all must die.

Verse 14. Nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses] This supposes, as Dr. Taylor very properly observes:—1. That sin was in the world from Adam to Moses. 2. That law was not in the world from Adam to Moses, during the space of about 2500 years: for, after Adam's transgression, that law was abrogated; and, from that time, men were either under the general covenant of grace given to Adam or Noah; or under that which was specially made with Abraham. 3. That therefore the sins committed were not imputed unto them to death; for they did not sin after the similitude of Adam's transgression; that is, they did not, like him, transgress a law, or rule of action, to which death, as the penalty, was annexed. And yet—4. Death reigned over mankind during the period between Adam and Moses. Therefore, men did not die for their own transgressions, but in consequence of Adam's one transgression.

Who is the figure of him that was to come] Adam was the figure, τυπος, the type, pattern or resemblance of him who was to come: i. e. of the Messiah. The correspondence between them appears in the following particulars:—1. Through him, as its spring and fountain, sin became diffused through the world, so that every man comes into the world with sinful propensities: for, by one man, sin entered into the world; and death by sin; and so judgment passed upon all men, ver. 12. Through Christ, as its spring and fountain, righteousness becomes diffused through the earth; so that every man is made partaker of a principle of grace and truth; for he is the true light that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, John i. 9. 2. As in Adam all die; so in Christ shall all be made alive, 1 Cor. xv. 22. For, since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, ver. 21. 3. As in, or through Adam, guilt

15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. [a] For, if through the offence of one, many be dead; much [b] more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, came upon all men; so, through Christ, the free gift comes upon all men unto justification of life, ver. 18. These alone seem to be the instances, in which a similitude exists between Adam and Christ.

Verse 15. But not as the offence, so also is the free gift] The same learned writer quoted above, continues to observe; "It is evident that the apostle, in this and the two following verses, is running a parallel, or making a comparison between the offence of Adam and its consequence; and the opposite gift of God, and its consequences. And, in these three verses, he shows, that the comparison will not hold good in all respects; because the free gift, χαρισμα, bestows blessings far beyond the consequences of the offence; and which, therefore, have no relation to it. And this was necessary, not only to prevent mistakes concerning the consequence of Adam's offence, and the extent of gospel grace; but it was also necessary to the apostle's main design; which was not only to prove that the grace of the gospel extends to all men, so far as it takes off the consequence of Adam's offence, [i. e. death, without the promise or probability of a resurrection,] but that it likewise extends to all men, with respect to the surplusage of blessings; in which it stretches far beyond the consequences of Adam's offence. For, the grace that takes off the consequence of Adam's offence, and the grace which abounds beyond it, are both included in the same χαρισμα, or free gift, which should be well observed; for, in this I conceive lie the connexion and sinews of the argument: the free gift, which stands opposed to Adam's offence; and which, I think, was bestowed immediately after the offence; Gen. iii. 15, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. This gift, I say, includes both the grace which exactly answers to the offence; and also that part of the grace which stretches far beyond it. And, if the one part of the gift be freely bestowed on all mankind, as the Jews allow, why not the other? especially, considering that the whole gift stands upon a reason and foundation in excellence and worth, vastly surpassing the malignity and demerit of the offence; and, consequently, capable of producing benefits vastly beyond the sufferings occasioned by the offence. This is the force of the apostle's argument: and therefore, supposing that in the 18th and 19th verses, literally understood, he compares the consequence of Adam's offence, and Christ's obedience, only so far as the one is commensurate to the other; yet his reasoning, ver. 15, 16, 17. plainly shows, that it is his meaning and intention that we should take into his conclusion the whole of the gift, so far as it can reach, to all mankind."

For, if through the offence of one, many be dead] That the οι πολλοι, the many, of the apostle, here means all mankind, needs no proof to any but that person who finds himself qualified to deny that all men are mortal. And if the many, that is, all mankind, have died through the offence of one; certainly, the gift by grace, which abounds unto τους πολλους, the many, by Christ Jesus, must have reference to every human being. If the consequences of Christ's incarnation and death extend only to a few, or a select number of mankind, which though they may be considered many in themselves, are few in comparison of the whole human race; then, the consequences of Adam's sin have extended only to a few, or to the same select number: and if only many, and not all have fallen, only that many had need of a Redeemer. For, it is most evident, that the same persons are referred to in both clauses of the verse. If the apostle had believed that the benefits of the death of Christ had extended only to a select number of mankind; he never could have used the language he has done here: though, in the first clause, he might have said, without any qualification of the term, through the offence of one, MANY are dead; in the 2nd clause, to be consistent with the doctrine of particular redemption, he must have said, The grace of God, and the gift by grace, hath abounded unto SOME. As by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon SOME to justification, ver. 18. As by one man's disobedience, MANY were made sinners; so, by the obedience of one, shall SOME be made righteous, ver. 19. As in Adam ALL die; so, in Christ, shall SOME be made alive, 1 Cor. xv. 22. But neither the doctrine nor the thing ever entered the soul of this divinely inspired man.

Hath abounded unto many] That is, Christ Jesus died for every man; salvation is free for all; saving grace is tendered to every soul; and a measure of the Divine light is actually communicated to every heart, John i. 9. And, as the grace is offered, so it may be received; and hence the apostle says, ver. 17, they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by Christ Jesus: and, by receiving, is undoubtedly meant not only the act of receiving, but retaining and improving the grace which they receive: and, as all may receive, so ALL may improve and retain the grace they do receive; and, consequently,

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.

17 For, if [b] by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

18 Therefore, as [c] by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so [d] by the righteousness of one, the free gift came [e] upon all men unto justification of life.

ALL may be eternally saved. But of multitudes, Christ still may say, They WILL not come unto me, that they might have life.

Verse 16. And not as it was by one that sinned] That is, the judicial act that followed Adam's sin, (the sentence of death pronounced upon him, and his expulsion from Paradise,) took its rise from his one offence alone, and terminated in condemnation; but the free gift of God in Christ takes its rise also from the many offences which men, in a long course of life, have personally committed; and the object of this grace is to justify them freely, and bring them to eternal life.

Verse 17. Death reigned by one] Death is here personified, and is represented as reigning over the human race; and death, of course, reigns unto death; he is known as reigning, by the destruction of his subjects.

Shall reign in life] Those who receive, retain, and improve the abundant grace offered by Jesus Christ, shall be redeemed from the empire of death, and exalted to the throne of God, to live and reign with him ever, world without end. See Rev. i. 5, 6. ii. 7, 10, 11. iii. 21.

If we carefully compare ver. 15. with ver. 17. we shall find that there is a correspondence between περισσειαν, the abounding, ver. 17. and επερισσευσε, hath abounded, ver. 15. between της δωρεας της δικαιοσυνης, the gift of righteousness, i. e. justification, ver. 17. and η δωρεα εν χαριτι, the gift by grace, ver. 15. Therefore, if we understand the abounding of grace, and the gift of justification, ver. 17. we shall understand the grace of God, and the gift by grace which hath abounded unto the many, ver. 15. But the abounding of grace, and the gift of justification, ver. 17. is that grace and gift which is RECEIVED by those who shall reign in eternal life. Reigning in life, is the consequence of receiving the grace and gift. Therefore, receiving the grace, is a necessary qualification on our part, for reigning in life; and this necessarily implies our believing in Christ Jesus, as having died for our offences, receiving the grace so freely offered us; using the means, in order to get more grace, and bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit. Receive, must here have the same sense as in Matt. xiii. 20, He heareth the word, and with joy RECEIVETH it, John i. 12, But as many as RECEIVED him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God. John iii. 11, Ye RECEIVE not our witness.—See also ver. 32, 33. John v. 43, I am come in my Father's name, and ye RECEIVE me not. John xii. 48, He that RECEIVETH not my words. John xiii. 20, He that receiveth whomsoever I send, RECEIVETH me. John xiv. 17, The Spirit of truth whom the world cannot RECEIVE. John xvii. 8, I have given them the words which thou gavest me; and they have RECEIVED them. In all these passages it is evident that receiving and not receiving, imply improving or not improving.

Verse 18. Therefore, as by the offence of one, &c.] The Greek text of this verse is as follows, Αρα ουν, ως δι' ενος παραπτωματος, εις παντας ανθρωπους εις κατακριμα· ουτω και δι' ενος δικαιωματος, εις παντας ανθρωπους, εις δικαιωσιν ζωης; which, literally rendered, stands thus—Therefore, as by one offence unto all men, unto condemnation; so likewise, by one righteousness unto all men, to justification of life. This is evidently an elliptical sentence, and its full meaning can be gathered only from the context. He who had no particular purpose to serve, would, most probably, understand it, from the context, thus—Therefore, as by one sin, all men came into condemnation; so also, by one righteous act, all men came unto justification of life; which is more fully expressed in the following verse. Now, leaving all particular creeds out of the question; and taking in the scope of the apostle's reasoning in this, and the preceding chapter, is not the sense evidently this? Through the disobedience of Adam, a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection, passed upon all men; so by the obedience of Christ unto death, this one grand righteous act, the sentence was so far reversed, that death shall not finally triumph; for all shall again be restored to life: justice must have its due; and therefore all must die. The mercy of God, in Christ Jesus, shall have its due also; and therefore all shall be put into a salvable state here, and the whole human race shall be raised to life at the great day. Thus, both justice and mercy are magnified; and neither is exalted at the expense of the other.

The Apostle uses three remarkable words in these three verses; 1. Δικαιωμα Justification, verse 16. 2. Δικαιοσυνη, which we render righteousness, verse 17. but is best rendered justification, as expressing that pardon and salvation offered to us in the gospel: see the note chap. i. 16. 3. Δικαιωσις, which is also rendered justification, verse 18.

The first word, δικαιωμα, is found in the following places, Luke i. 6. Rom. i. 32. ii. 26. v. 16, 18. viii. 4. Heb. ix. 1, 10. Rev. xv. 4. and xix. 8. to which the reader may refer. Δικαιωμα signifies, among the Greek writers, the sentence of a judge, acquitting the innocent, condemning, and punishing the guilty; but in the New Testament it signifies whatever God has appointed or sanctioned as a law; and appears to answer to the Hebrew משפט יהוה mishpat Yehovah, the statute, or judgment of the Lord. It has evidently this sense in Luke i. 6. walking in all the commandments and ORDINANCES, δικαιωμασι, of the Lord blameless; and it has the like meaning in the principal places referred to above; but in the verse in question, it most evidently means absolution, or liberation from punishment, as it is opposed to κατακριμα condemnation, verse 18. see the note on chap. i. 16. and see Schleusner in voce.

The second word, δικαιοσυνη, I have explained at large in chap. i. 16. already referred to.

The third word, δικαιωσις, is used by the Greek writers, almost universally, to denote the punishment inflicted on a criminal, or the condemnatory sentence itself; but in the New Testament, where it occurs only twice, (Rom. iv. 25, he was raised for our justification, δικαιωσιν, and chap. v. 18, unto justification of life, δικαιωσιν ζωης,) it evidently signifies the pardon and remission of sins; and seems to be nearly synonymous with δικαιωμα. Dr. Taylor thinks that "δικαιοσυνη is gospel pardon and salvation; and has reference to God's mercy. Δικαιωμα is our being set quite clear and right; or our being restored to sanctity, delivered from eternal death, and being brought to eternal life; and has reference to the power and guilt of sin. And δικαιωσις he thinks may mean no more than our being restored to life at the resurrection." Taking these in their order: There is, first, pardon of sin. Secondly, purification of heart, and preparation for glory. Thirdly, the resurrection of the body, and its being made like to his glorious body, so as to become a fit tabernacle for the soul in a glorified state for ever and ever.

The same writer observes, that when the Apostle speaks of forgiveness of sins, simply, he insists on faith as the condition; but here where he speaks of justification of life, he mentions no condition; and therefore he supposes, justification of life, the phrase being understood in a forensic sense, to mean no more than the decree or judgment that determines the resurrection from the dead. This is a favourite point with the Doctor, and he argues largely for it: see his Notes.

Verse 19. For, as by one man's disobedience, &c.] The explanation of this verse has been anticipated in the foregoing.

Verse 20. The law entered that the offence might abound] After considering various opinions concerning the true meaning of this verse, (see under verse 12.) I am induced to prefer my own, as being the most simple. By law I understand the Mosaic law. By entering in, παρεισηλθε, or rather coming in privily, see Gal. i. 4. (the only place where it occurs besides) I understand the temporary or limited use of that law, which was, as far as its rites and ceremonies are considered, confined to the Jewish people; and to them, only till the Messiah should come; but considered as the moral law, or rule of conscience and life, it has in its spirit and power been slipt in, introduced into every conscience that sin might abound, that the true nature, deformity and extent of sin might appear; for by the law is the knowledge of sin; for how can the finer deviations from a straight line be ascertained, without the application of a known straight edge? Without this rule of right, sin can only be known in a sort of general way; the innumerable deviations from positive rectitude can only be known by the application of the righteous statutes of which the law is composed. And it was necessary that this law should be given, that the true nature of sin might be seen, and that men might be the better prepared to receive the gospel; finding that this law worketh only wrath, i. e. denounces punishment, forasmuch as all have sinned. Now, it is wisely ordered of God, that wherever the gospel goes, there the law goes also; entering every where, that sin may be seen to abound, and that men may be led to despair of salvation in any other way, or on any terms, but those proposed in the gospel of Christ. Thus the sinner becomes a true penitent, and is glad, seeing the curse of the law hanging over his soul, to flee for refuge to the hope set before him in the gospel.

the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much [a] more abound:

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so [b] might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

[a] Luke 7. 47. 1 Tim. 1. 14.

[b] 2 Cor. 15. 56, 57. ch. 6. 16, 21, 23.

But where sin abounded] Whether in the world, or in the heart of the individual, being discovered by this most pure and righteous law; grace did much more abound: not only pardon for all that is past, is offered by the gospel, so that all the transgressions for which the soul is condemned to death by the law, are freely and fully forgiven; but also the Holy Spirit, in the abundance of his gifts and graces, is communicated, so as to prepare the receiver for an exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Thus the grace of the gospel not only redeems from death, and restores to life; but brings the soul into such a relationship with God, and into such a participation of eternal glory, as we have no authority to believe ever would have been the portion even of Adam himself, had he even eternally retained his innocence. Thus, where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound.

Verse 21. That as sin hath reigned unto death] As extensively, as deeply, as universally, as sin, whether implying the act of transgression, or the impure principle from which the act proceeds, or both. Hath reigned, subjected the whole earth and all its inhabitants; the whole soul, and all its powers and faculties, unto death, temporal of the body, spiritual of the soul, and eternal of both; even so as extensively, deeply, and universally, might grace reign, filling the whole earth, and pervading, purifying, and refining the whole soul: through righteousness, through this doctrine of free salvation by the blood of the Lamb, and by the principle of holiness transfused through the soul by the Holy Ghost: unto eternal life, the proper object of an immortal spirit's hope, the only sphere where the human intellect can rest, and be happy in the place and state where God IS; where he is seen AS HE IS; and where he can be enjoyed without interruption in an eternal progression of knowledge and beatitude: by Jesus Christ our Lord, as the cause of our salvation, the means by which it is communicated, and the source whence it springs. Thus we find, that the salvation from sin here, is as extensive and complete as the guilt and contamination of sin; death is conquered, hell disappointed, the devil confounded, and sin totally destroyed. Here is glorying, to Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and has made us kings and priests to God and his Father, be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen! Hallelujah! The Lord God omnipotent reigneth! Amen, and Amen.

What highly interesting and momentous truths does the preceding chapter bring to our view! No less than the doctrine of the fall of man from original righteousness; and the redemption of the world by the incarnation and death of Christ. On the subject of the FALL, though I have spoken much in the notes on Genesis, chap. iii. yet it may be necessary to make a few farther observations:

1. That all mankind have fallen under the empire of death, through this original transgression, the apostle most positively asserts; and few men who profess to believe the Bible, pretend to dispute. This point is indeed ably stated, argued, and proved by Dr. Taylor, from whose observations the preceding notes are considerably enriched. But there is one point, which I think not less evident; which he has not only not included in his argument, but as far as it came in his way, has argued against it, viz. the degeneracy and moral corruption of the human soul. As no man can account for the death brought into the world, but on the ground of this primitive transgression; so none can account for the moral evil that is in the world, on any other ground. It is a fact, that every human being brings into the world with him the seeds of dissolution and mortality. Into this state we are fallen, according to divine revelation, through the one offence of Adam. This fact is proved by the mortality of all men. It is not less a fact, that every man that is born into the world brings with him the seeds of moral evil; these he could not have derived from his Maker; for the most pure and holy God can make nothing impure, imperfect, or unholy. Into this state we are reduced, according to the Scripture, by the transgression of Adam; for by this one man, sin entered into the world, as well as death.

2. The fact, that all come into the world with sinful propensities, is proved by another fact, that every man sins; that sin is his first work, and that no exception to this has ever been noticed, except in the human nature of Jesus Christ; and that exempt case is sufficiently accounted for from this circumstance, that it did not come in the common way of natural generation.

3. As like produces its like, if Adam became mortal and sinful, he could not communicate properties which he did not possess; and he must transmit those which constituted his natural and moral likeness. Therefore all his posterity must resemble himself Nothing less than a constant miraculous energy, presiding over the formation and developement of every human body and soul, could prevent the seeds of natural and moral evil from being propagated. That these seeds are not produced in men by their own personal transgressions, is most positively asserted by the Apostle in the preceding chapter; and that they exist before the human being is capable of actual transgression, or of the exercise of will and judgment, so as to prefer and determine, is evident to the most superficial observer; 1st, from the most marked evil propensities of children long before reason can have any influence or control over passion; and, 2ndly, it is demonstrated by the death of millions in a state of infancy. It could not, therefore, be personal transgression that produced the evil propensities in the one case; nor death in the other.

4. While misery, death, and sin are in the world, we shall have incontrovertible proofs of the fall of man. Men may dispute against the doctrine of original sin; but such facts as the above, will be a standing irrefragable argument against every thing that can be advanced against the doctrine itself.

5. The justice of permitting this general infection to become diffused, has been strongly oppugned. "Why should the innocent suffer for the guilty?" As God made man to propagate his like on the earth, his transmitting the same kind of nature with which he was formed, must be a necessary consequence of that propagation. He might, it is true, have cut off for ever, the offending pair; but this most evidently, did not comport with his creative designs. "But he might have rendered Adam incapable of sin." This does not appear. If he had been incapable of sinning, he would have been incapable of holiness; that is, he could not have been a free agent; or, in other words, he could not have been an intelligent or intellectual being; he must have been a mass of inert and unconscious matter. "But God might have cut them off and created a new race." He certainly might; and what would have been gained by this? Why, just nothing. The second creation, if of intelligent beings at all, must have been precisely similar to the first; and the circumstances in which these last were to be placed, must be exactly such as infinite wisdom saw to be the most proper for their predecessors; and consequently the most proper for them. They also must have been in a state of probation; they also must have been placed under a law; this law must be guarded by penal sanctions; the possibility of transgression must be the same in the second case as in the first; and the lapse as probable, because as possible to this second race of human beings, as it was to their predecessors. It was better, therefore, to let the same pair continue, to fulfil the great end of their creation, by propagating their like upon the earth; and to introduce an antidote to the poison, and by a dispensation as strongly expressive of wisdom as of goodness, to make the ills of life, which were the consequences of their transgression, the means of correcting the evil, and through the wondrous œconomy of grace, sanctifying even these to the eternal good of the soul.

6. Had not God provided a Redeemer, he, no doubt, would have terminated the whole mortal story, by cutting off the original transgressors; for it would have been unjust to permit them to propagate their like in such circumstances, that their offspring must be unavoidably and eternally wretched.

God has therefore provided such a Saviour, the merit of whose passion and death should apply to every human being, and should infinitely transcend the demerit of the original transgression, and put every soul that received that grace, (and ALL may) into a state of greater excellence and glory than that was, or could have been, from which Adam, by transgressing, fell.

7. The state of infants dying before they are capable of hearing the gospel; and the state of heathens who have no opportunity of knowing how to escape from their corruption and misery; have been urged as cases of peculiar hardship. But, first, there is no evidence in the whole book of God, that any child dies eternally for Adam's sin. Nothing of this kind is intimated in the Bible; and as Jesus took upon him human nature, and condescended to be born of a woman in a state of perfect helpless infancy, he has, consequently, sanctified this state, and has said, without limitation or exception, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God. We may justly, infer, and all the justice as well as the mercy of the Godhead supports the inference, that all human beings, dying in an infant state, are regenerated by that grace of God which bringeth salvation to all men; Titus ii. 11. and go infallibly to the kingdom of heaven. As to the Gentiles, their case is exceedingly clear. The apostle has determined this; see chap. ii. 14. and 15. and the notes there. He, who, in the course of his providence, has withheld from them the letter of his word, has not denied them the light and influence of his SPIRIT: and will judge them in the great day, only according to the grace and means of moral improvement with which they have been favoured. No man will be finally damned, because he was a Gentile, but because he has not made a proper use of the grace and advantages which God had given him. Thus we see that the Judge of all the earth has done right; and we may rest assured that he will eternally act in the same way.

8. The term FALL we use metaphorically, to signify degradation: literally, it signifies stumbling, so as to lose the centre of gravity, or the proper poise of our bodies, in consequence of which we are precipitated on the ground. The term seems to have been borrowed from the παραπτωμα of the apostle, chap. v. 15—18. which we translate offence, and which is more literally FALL, from παρα intensive, and πιπτω I fall, a grievous, dangerous, and ruinous fall, and is properly applied to transgression and sin in general; as every act is a degradation of the soul, accompanied with hurt, and tending to destruction. The term, in this sense, is still in common use; the degradation of a man in power, we term his fall; the impoverishment of a rich man we express in the same way; and when a man of piety and probity is overcome by any act of sin, we say he is fallen; he has descended from his spiritual eminence, is degraded from his spiritual excellence, is impure in his soul, and becomes again exposed to the displeasure of his God.

CHAPTER VI.

We must not abuse the boundless goodness of God by continuing in sin, under the wicked persuasion that the more we sin, the more the grace of God will abound, 1. For, having been baptized into Christ, we have professed thereby to be dead to sin, 2—4. And to be planted in the likeness of his resurrection, 5. For we profess to be crucified with him, to die and rise again from the dead, 6—11. We should not, therefore, let sin reign in our bodies, but live to the glory of God, 12—14. The gospel makes no provision for living in sin, any more than the law did; and those who commit sin, are the slaves of sin, 15—19. The degrading and afflictive service of sin, and its wages eternal death; the blessed effects of the grace of God in the heart; of which eternal life is the fruit, 20—23.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

The Apostle having proved that salvation both to Jew and Gentile, must come through the Messiah, and be received by faith only, proceeds in this chapter to show the obligations under which both were laid, to live a holy life; and the means and advantages they enjoyed for that purpose. This he does, not only as a thing highly and indispensably necessary in itself, for without holiness none can see the Lord; but to confute a calumny which appears to have been gaining considerable ground even at that time; viz. that the doctrine of justification by faith alone, through the grace of Christ Jesus, rendered obedience to the moral law useless; and that the more evil a man did, the more the grace of God would abound to him, in his redemption from that evil. That this calumny was then propagated, we learn from chap. iii. 8. and the Apostle defends himself against it in the 31st verse of the same, by asserting, that his doctrine, far from making void the law, served to establish it. But in this, and the two following chapters, he takes up the subject in a regular, formal manner; and shows both Jews and Gentiles, that the principles of the Christian religion absolutely required a holy heart and a holy life, and made the amplest provision for both.

Verse 1. Shall we continue in sin] It is very likely that these are the words of a believing Gentile; who, having as yet received but little instruction, for he is but just brought out of his heathen state to believe in Christ Jesus, might imagine, from the manner in which God had magnified his mercy in blotting out his sin, on his simply believing on Christ; that, suppose he even gave way to the evil propensities of his own heart, his transgressions could do him no hurt, now that he was in the favour of God. And we need not wonder that a Gentile, just emerging from the deepest darkness, might entertain such thoughts as these; when we find that eighteen centuries after this, persons have appeared in the most Christian countries of Europe, not merely asking such a question, but defending the doctrine with all their might; and asserting, in the most unqualified manner, "that believers were under no obligation to keep the moral law of God; that Christ had kept it for them: that his keeping it was imputed to them; and that God, who had exacted it from Him, who was their surety and representative, would not exact it from them; forasmuch as it would be injustice to require two payments for one debt." These are the Antinomians who once flourished in this land, and whose race is not yet utterly extinct.

Verse 2. God forbid!] Μη γενοιτο, let it not be, by no means; far from it; let not such a thing be mentioned!—Any of these is the meaning of the Greek phrase, which is a strong expression of surprise and disapprobation: and is not properly rendered by our God forbid; which, though it may express the same thing, yet it is not proper to make the sacred NAME so familiar on such occasions.

How shall we, that are dead to sin] The phraseology of this verse is common among Hebrews, Greeks, and Latins. To DIE to a thing, or person, is to have nothing to do with it or him; to be totally separated from them: and to live to a thing or person, is to be wholly given up to them; to have the most intimate connexion with them. So Plautus Clitell. iii. 1, 16, Nihil mecum tibi, MORTUUS TIBI SUM. I have nothing to do with thee; I am DEAD to thee. Persa. i. 1, 20, Mihi quidem tu jam MORTUUS ERAS, quia te non visitavi: Thou wert DEAD to me, because I have not visited thee

3 Know ye not, that [a] so many of us as [b] were baptized into Jesus Christ, [c] were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore, we are [d] buried with him by baptism into death: that [e] like as Christ was raised up from the dead by [f] the glory of the Father, [g] even so, we also should walk in newness of life.

See more examples in Wetstein and Rosenmuller.

Verse 3. Know ye not, &c.] Every man who believes the Christian religion, and receives baptism as the proof that he believes it, and has taken up the profession of it, is bound thereby to a life of righteousness. To be baptized into Christ, is to receive the doctrine of Christ crucified, and to receive baptism as a proof of the genuineness of that faith, and the obligation to live according to its precepts.

Baptized into his death?] That, as Jesus Christ, in his crucifixion, died completely, so that no spark of the natural or animal life remained in his body; so, those who profess his religion, should be so completely separated and saved from sin, that they have no more connexion with it, nor any more influence from it, than a dead man has with or from his departed spirit.

Verse 4. We are buried with him by baptism into death] It is probable that the Apostle here alludes to the mode of administering baptism by immersion, the whole body being put under the water, which seemed to say, the man is drowned, is dead; and, when he came up out of the water, he seemed to have a resurrection to life; the man is risen again; he is alive! He was, therefore, supposed to throw off his old Gentile state, as he threw off his clothes, and to assume a new character, as the baptized generally put on new or fresh garments. I say it is probable, that the Apostle alludes to this mode of immersion; but it is not absolutely certain that he does so, as some do imagine; for, in the next verse, our being incorporated into Christ by baptism is also denoted by our being planted, or rather, grafted together in the likeness of his death: and Noah's ark floating upon the water, and sprinkled by the rain from heaven, is a figure corresponding to baptism, 1 Pet. iii. 20, 21. but neither of these gives us the same idea of the outward form, as burying. We must be careful, therefore, not to lay too much stress on such circumstances. Drowning among the ancients was considered the most noble kind of death; some think that the Apostle may allude to this. The grand point is, that this baptism represents our death to sin, and our obligation to walk in newness of life: without which, of what use can it, or any other rite be?

Raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father] From this we learn that, as it required the glory of the Father, that is, his glorious energy, to raise up from the grave the dead body of Christ; so it requires the same glorious energy, to quicken the dead soul of a sinner, and enable him to walk in newness of life.

Verse 5. For if we have been planted together] Συμφυτοι γεγοναμεν; Dr. Taylor observes, that our translation does not completely express the Apostle's meaning. Τα συμφυτα, are such plants as grow, the one upon, and in the other, deriving sap and nourishment from it, as the misletoe upon the oak; or the scion upon the stock in which it is grafted. He would therefore translate the words, For if we have been growers together with Christ in the likeness of his death, (or in that which is like his death) we shall be also growers together with him in the likeness of his resurrection; or in that which is like his resurrection. He reckons it a beautiful metaphor, taken from grafting, or making the scion grow together with a new stock.

But, if we take the word planted in its usual sense, we shall find it to be a metaphor, as beautiful and as expressive as the former. When the seed, or plant, is inserted in the ground, it derives from that ground all its nourishment, and all those juices by which it becomes developed; by which it increases in size, grows firm, strong, vigorous; and puts forth its leaves, blossoms, and fruit. The death of Jesus Christ is represented as the cause whence his fruitfulness, as the author of eternal salvation to mankind, is derived; and genuine believers in him, are represented as being planted in this death, and growing out of it; deriving their growth, vigour, firmness, beauty, and fruitfulness, from it. In a word, it is by his death, that Jesus Christ redeems a lost world: and it is from that vicarious death, that believers derive that pardon and holiness which make them so happy in themselves, and so useful to others. This sacrificial death is the soil in which they are planted; and from which they derive their life, their fruitfulness, and their final glory.

Verse 6. Our old man is crucified with him] This seems with him, that [a] the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

7 For [b] he that is dead is [c] freed from sin.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

8 Now [d] if we be dead with Christ,

[a] Col. 2. 11.

to be a farther extension of the same metaphor. When a seed is planted in the earth, it appears as if the whole body of it perished. All seeds, as they are commonly termed, are composed of two parts; the germ, which contains the rudiments of the future plant; and the lobes, or body of the seed, which, by their decomposition in the ground, become the first nourishment to the extremely fine and delicate roots of the embryo plant; and support it till it is capable of deriving grosser nourishment from the common soil. The body dies, that the germ may live. Parables cannot go on all fours: and in metaphors, or figures, there is always some one, (or more) remarkable property by which the doctrine intended is illustrated. To apply this to the purpose in hand: how is the principle of life which Jesus Christ has implanted in us, to be brought into full effect, vigour, and usefulness? By the destruction of the body of sin, our old man, our wicked, corrupt, and fleshly self, is to be crucified; to be as truly slain as Christ was crucified: that our souls may as truly be raised from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness, as the body of Christ was raised from the grave, and afterwards ascended to the right hand of God. But, how does this part of the metaphor apply to Jesus Christ? Plainly and forcibly. Jesus Christ took on him a body; a body in the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom. viii. 3. and gave up that body to death; through which death alone, an atonement was made for sin; and the way laid open for the vivifying spirit to have the fullest access to, and the most powerful operation in, the human heart. Here, the body of Christ dies, that he may be a quickening Spirit to mankind. Our body of sin is destroyed by this quickening Spirit, that henceforth we should live unto Him who died and rose again. Thus the metaphor, in all its leading senses, is complete; and applies most forcibly to the subject in question. We find that παλαιος ανθρωπος the old man, used here and in Eph. iv. 22. and Coloss. iii. 9. is the same as the flesh with its affections and lusts, Galat. v. 24. and the body of the sins of the flesh, Coloss. ii. 11. And the very same which the Jewish writers term אדם הקדמוני Adam kakadamoni, the old Adam; and which they interpret by יצר הרע yetsar harâ, "evil concupiscence," the same which we mean by indwelling sin, or the infection of our nature, in consequence of the fall. From all which we may learn, that the design of God is to counter-work and destroy the very spirit and soul of sin, that we shall no longer serve it, δουλευειν, no longer be its slaves. Nor shall it any more be capable of performing its essential functions, than a dead body can perform the functions of natural life.

Verse 7. He that is dead is freed from sin] Δεδικαιωται literally, is justified from sin; or, is freed or delivered from it. Does not this simply mean, that the man who has received Christ Jesus by faith, and has been, through believing, made a partaker of the Holy Spirit, has had his old man, all his evil propensities destroyed; so that he is not only justified freely from all sin, but wholly sanctified unto God? The context shows that this is the meaning. Every instance of violence is done to the whole scope and design of the apostle, by the opinion, that "this text is a proof that believers are not fully saved from sin, in this life; because only he, that is dead, is freed from sin." Then death is his justifier and deliverer! Base and abominable insinuation, highly derogatory to the glory of Christ! Dr. Dodd, in his note on the preceding verse, after some inefficient criticism on the word καταργηθη destroyed, which, he thinks, should be rendered enervated, has the following most unevangelical sentiment—"The body of sin in believers is, indeed, an enfeebled, conquered, and deposed tyrant, and the stroke of death finishes its destruction." So then, the death of Christ, and the influences of the Holy Spirit were only sufficient to depose and enfeeble the tyrant sin; but OUR death must come in to effect his total destruction! Thus our death is at least partially our Saviour: and thus, that which was an effect of sin; (for sin entered into the world, and death by sin) becomes the means of finally destroying it! That is, the effect of a cause can become so powerful, as to re-act upon that cause, and produce its annihilation! The divinity and philosophy of this sentiment are equally absurd. It is the blood of Christ alone, that cleanses from all unrighteousness; and the sanctification of a believer, is no more dependent on death than his justification. If it be said, "that believers do not cease from sin till they die;" I have only to say, they are such believers as do not make a proper use of their faith: and what can be said more of the whole herd of transgressors and infidels? They cease to sin, when they cease to breathe. If the Christian religion bring no other privileges than this to its upright followers; well may we ask, wherein doth the wise man differ from the fool, for they have both one end? But the whole gospel teaches a contrary doctrine.

Verse 8. Now, if we be dead with Christ] According to what is stated in the preceding verses. See particularly on the 5th verse.

Verse 9. Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more] So we, believing in Christ Jesus, and having a death unto sin, and a life unto righteousness, should sin no more. If we be risen indeed with Christ, we should seek the things above; and set our affections on things above; and not on the earth. The man who walks in humble, loving obedience, to an indwelling Christ; sin has no more dominion over his soul, than death has over the immortal and glorified body of his Redeemer.

Verse 10. He died unto sin once] On this clause Rosenmüller speaks thus—"Τῃ αμαρτιᾳ απεθανεν εφαπαξ· propter peccatum mortuus est semel, et quidem miserâ morte. Τῃ αμαρτιᾳ, i. e. υπερ της αμαρτιας, ad expianda peccata; Res ipsa docet aliter homines, αποθνησκειν τῃ αμαρτιᾳ, aliter Christum: amat Paulus parallelismum, in quo interpretando multâ cautione opus est." "He died unto sin once: i. e. he died on account of sin, and truly a miserable death. Τῃ αμαρτια, is the same as υπερ της αμαρτιας, for the expiation of sin. Common sense teaches us that men die to sin in one sense; Christ in another: St. Paul loves parallelisms, in the interpretation of which, there is need of much caution." From the whole scope of the apostle's discourse, it is plain that he considers the death of Christ, as a death or sacrifice for sin; a sin offering: in this sense no man has ever died for sin, or ever can die.

Verse 11. Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead] Die as truly unto sin, as he died for sin. Live as truly unto God, as he lives with God. This seems to be the spirit of the apostle's meaning.

Verse 12. Let not sin therefore reign] This is a prosopopeia, or personification. Sin is represented as a king, ruler, or tyrant, who has the desires of the mind, and the members of the body under his control; so that by influencing the passions, he governs the body. Do not let sin reign; do not let him work; that is, let him have no place, no being in your souls; because, wherever he is, he governs, less or more: and indeed sin is not sin without this. How is sin known? By evil influences in the mind, and evil acts in the life. But do not these influences and these acts prove his dominion? Certainly, the very existence of an evil thought to which passion or appetite attaches itself, is a proof that there, sin has dominion; for without dominion such passions could not be excited. Wherever sin is felt, there sin has dominion; for sin is sin only as it works in action or passion against God. Sin cannot be a quiescent thing: if it do not work, it does not exist.

That ye should obey it in the lusts thereof] Αυτῃ εν ταις επιθυμιαις αυτου. This clause is wanting in the most ancient and reputable MSS. and in the principal Versions: Griesbach has left it out of his text: and professor White says, certissime delenda. "These words should certainly be expunged:" they are not necessary to the apostle's argument; it was enough to say, let not sin reign in your mortal bodies, that ye should obey it. If it be there, it will reign there; and its reign supposes, necessarily, the subjection of that in which it reigns. A king reigns when his laws are enforced; and the people obey them. When there is no executive government, there is no reign. There may be a royal shadow there, but there is no king.

Verse 13. Neither yield ye your members] Do not yield to temptation. It is no sin to be tempted; the sin lies in yielding. While the sin exists only in Satan's solicitation, it is the devil's sin, not ours: when we yield, we make the devil's sin our own: then we ENTER INTO temptation. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Satan himself cannot force you to sin: till he wins over your will, he cannot bring you into subjection. You may be tempted; but yield not to the temptation.

Yield yourselves unto God] Let God have your wills; keep them ever on his side; there, they are safe; and there, they will be active. Satan cannot force the will; and God will not. Indeed it would cease to be will, were it forced by either: it is essential to its being that it be free.

And your members as instruments, &c.] Let soul and body be employed in the service of your Maker: let him have your hearts; and with them, your heads, your hands, alive from the dead; and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For [a] sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then? shall we sin, [b] because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that [c] to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the [d] heart that form of [e] doctrine which was delivered you.

your feet. Think and devise what is pure: speak what is true, and to the use of edifying: work that which is just and good; and walk steadily in the way that leads to everlasting felicity. Be holy within, and holy without.

Verse 14. Sin shall not have dominion over you] God delivers you from it; and if you again become subject to it, it will be the effect of your own choice or negligence.

Ye are not under the law] That law which exacts obedience without giving power to obey: that condemns every transgression and every unholy thought, without providing for the extirpation of evil, or the pardon of sin.

But under grace] Ye are under the merciful and beneficent dispensation of the gospel: that, although it requires the strictest conformity to the will of God, affords sufficient power to be thus conformed; and, in the death of Christ, has provided pardon for all that is past, and grace to help in every time of need.

Verse 15. Shall we sin, because we are not under the law] Shall we abuse our high and holy calling, because we are not under that law that makes no provision for pardon; but are under that gospel which has opened the fountain to wash away all sin and defilement? Shall we sin because grace abounds? Shall we do evil that good may come of it? This be far from us!

Verse 16. To whom ye yield yourselves] Can ye suppose that you should continue to be the servants of Christ, if ye give way to sin? Is he not the master who exacts the service, and to whom the service is performed? Sin, is the service of Satan; righteousness, the service of Christ. If ye sin, ye are the servants of Satan, and not the servants of God.

The word δουλος, which we translate servant, properly signifies slave: and a slave among the Greeks and Romans was considered as his master's property; and he might dispose of him as he pleased. Under a bad master, the lot of the slave was most oppressive and dreadful; his ease and comfort were never consulted; he was treated worse than a beast; and, in many cases, his life hung on the mere caprice of the master. This state is the state of every poor, miserable sinner; he is the slave of Satan, and his own evil lusts and appetites, are his most cruel task-masters. The same word is applied to the servants of Christ, the more forcibly to show, that they are their Master's property; and that, as he is infinitely good and benevolent, therefore his service must be perfect freedom. Indeed, he exacts no obedience from them which he does not turn to their eternal advantage; for this master has no self-interest to secure. See on chap. i. 1.

Verse 17. But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin] This verse should be read thus: But thanks be to God that, although ye were the servants of sin, nevertheless ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine that was delivered unto you; or, that mould of teaching into which ye were cast. The apostle does not thank God that they were sinners; but that, although they were such, they had now received and obeyed the gospel.

That form of doctrine] Τυπον διδαχης; here Christianity is represented under the notion of a mould, or die, into which they were cast; and from which they took the impression of its excellence. The figure upon this die, is the image of God, righteousness and true holiness, which was stamped on their souls, in believing the gospel, and receiving the Holy Ghost. The words εις ον παρεδοθητε τυπον, refer to the melting of metal; which, when it is liquified, is cast into the mould, that it may receive the impression that is sunk, or cut in the mould; and therefore the words may be literally translated, into which mould of doctrine ye have been cast. They were melted down under the preaching of the word, and then were capable of receiving the stamp of its purity.

Verse 18. Being then made free from sin] Ελευθερωθεντες is a term that refers to the manumission of a slave. They were redeemed from the slavery of sin, and became the servants of righteousness. Here is another prosopopeia; both sin and righteousness are personified: sin can enjoin no good and profitable work. Righteousness can require none that is unjust or injurious.

Verse 19. I speak after the manner of men] This phrase is often used by the Greek writers, to signify what was easy to be comprehended; what was ad captum vulgi, level with common understandings; delivered in a popular style: what was different from the high flights of the poets, and the studied sublime obscurity of the philosophers.

Because of the infirmity of your flesh] As if he had said, I make use of metaphors and figures connected with well known natural things; with your trades and situation in life; because of your inexperience in heavenly things, of which ye are only just beginning to know the nature and the names.

Servants to uncleanness, &c.] These different expressions show how deeply immersed in, and enslaved by sin, these Gentiles were, before their conversion to Christianity. Several of the particulars are given in chapter the first of this Epistle.

Verse 20. Ye were free from righteousness] These two servitudes are incompatible; if we cannot serve God and Mammon; surely we cannot serve Christ and Satan. We must be either sinners or saints; God's servants or the devil's slaves. It cannot be as a good mistaken man has endeavoured to sing:

> "To good and evil, equal bent,
> "I'm both a devil and a saint."

I know not whether it be possible to paint the utter prevalence of sin in stronger colours than the Apostle does here, by saying they were FREE from righteousness. It seems tantamount to that expression in Genesis, chap. vi. ver. 5. where, speaking of the total degeneracy of the human race, the writer says, every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. They were all corrupt; they were altogether abominable; there was none that did good; no, not one.

Verse 21. What fruit had ye then in those things] God designs that every man shall reap benefit by his service. What benefit have ye derived from the service of sin?

Whereof ye are now ashamed] Ye blush to remember your former life. It was scandalous to yourselves, injurious to others, and highly provoking to God.

The end of those things is death] Whatever sin may promise of pleasure or advantage; the end to which it necessarily tends is the destruction of body and soul.

Verse 22. But now being made free from sin] As being free from righteousness is the finished character of a sinner; so being made free from sin, is the finished character of a genuine Christian.

And become servants to God] They were transferred from the service of one master to that of another: they were freed from the slavery of sin, and engaged in the service of God.

Fruit unto holiness] Holiness of heart was the principle; and righteousness of life the fruit.

Verse 23. For the wages of sin is death] The second death, everlasting perdition. Every sinner earns this, by long, sore, and painful service. Oh! what pains do men take to get to hell! Early and late they toil at sin; and would not divine justice be in their debt, if it did not pay them their due wages?

But the gift of God is eternal life] A man may MERIT hell, but he cannot MERIT heaven. The apostle does not say that the wages of righteousness is eternal life: no, but that this eternal life, even to the righteous, is το χαρισμα του Θεου, THE gracious GIFT of God: and even this gracious gift comes through Jesus Christ our Lord. He, alone, has procured it; and it is given to all those who find redemption in his blood. A sinner goes to hell, because he deserves it; a righteous man goes to heaven, because Christ has died for him; and communicated that grace by which his sin is pardoned, and his soul made holy. The word οψωνια, which we here render wages, signified the daily pay of a Roman soldier. So every sinner has a daily pay, and this pay is death; he has misery because he sins. Sin constitutes hell;

the sinner has a hell in his own bosom; all is confusion and disorder when God does not reign: every indulgence of sinful passions increases the disorder, and consequently the misery, of a sinner. If men were as much in earnest to get their souls saved, as they are to prepare them for perdition, heaven would be highly peopled; and devils would be their own companions. And will not the living lay this to heart?

1. In the preceding chapter we see the connexion that subsists between the doctrines of the gospel, and the practice of Christianity. A doctrine is a teaching, instruction, or information concerning some truth that is to be believed, as essential to our salvation. But all teaching that comes from God, necessarily leads to him. That Christ died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, is a glorious doctrine of the gospel. But this is of no use to him who does not die to sin, rise in the likeness of his resurrection; and walk in newness of life: this is the use that should be made of the doctrine. Every doctrine has its use; and the use of it consists in the practice founded on it. We hear there is a free pardon; we go to God and receive it: we hear that we may be made holy; we apply for the sanctifying Spirit: we hear there is a heaven of glory, into which the righteous alone shall enter; we watch and pray, believe, love, and obey, in order that, when he doth appear, we may be found of Him in peace without spot, and blameless. Those are the doctrines; these are the uses or practice founded on those doctrines.

2. It is strange that there should be found a person believing the whole gospel system; and yet living in sin! SALVATION FROM SIN is the long continued sound, as it is the spirit and design, of the gospel. Our Christian name, our baptismal covenant, our profession of faith in Christ, and avowed belief in his word, all call us to this: can it be said that we have any louder calls than these? Our self-interest, as it respects the happiness of a godly life, and the glories of eternal blessedness; the pains and wretchedness of a life of sin, leading to the worm that never dies, and the fire that is not quenched, seconds most powerfully the [illegible] calls. Reader, lay these things to heart; and answer this question to God: How shall I escape, if I neglect so [illegible] salvation? And then, as thy conscience shall answer, let thy mind and thy hand begin to act.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

The Apostle having, in the preceding chapter, shown the converted Gentiles the obligations they were under to live a holy life; addresses himself here to the Jews, who might hesitate to embrace the gospel; lest, by this means, they should renounce the law, which might appear to them as a renunciation of their allegiance to God. As they rested in the law, as sufficient for justification and sanctification; it was necessary to convince them of their mistake. That the law was insufficient for their justification, the apostle had proved, in chapters iii. iv. and v. that it is insufficient for their sanctification he shows in this chapter; and introduces his discourse by showing that a believing Jew is discharged from his obligations to the law; and is at liberty to come under another, and much happier constitution, viz. that of the Gospel of Christ, 1—4. In the 5th verse he gives a general description of the state of a Jew, in servitude to sin, considered as under mere law. In the 6th verse he gives a summary account of the state of a Christian, or believing Jew, and the advantages he enjoys under the gospel. Upon the 5th verse he comments, from ver. 7. to the end of the chap. and upon the 6th verse he comments, chap. viii. 1—14.

In explaining his position in the 5th verse, he shows—1. That the law reaches to all the branches and latent prin-husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So then [a] if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but, if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so, that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become [b] dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should [c] bring forth fruit unto God.

ciples of sin, ver. 7. 2. That it subjected the sinner to death, ver. 8. 12. without the expectation of pardon. 3. He shows the reason why the Jew was put under it, ver. 13. 4. He proves that the law, considered as a rule of action, though it was spiritual, just, holy, and good in itself, yet was insufficient for sanctification, or for freeing a man from the power of inbred sin. For, as the prevalency of sensual appetites cannot wholly extinguish the voice of reason and conscience; a man may acknowledge the law to be holy, just, and good, and yet his passions reign within him, keeping him in the most painful and degrading servitude, while the law supplied no power to deliver him from them, ver. 14—24. as that power can only be supplied by the grace of Jesus Christ, ver. 25. See Taylor.

Verse 1. For I speak to them that know the law] This is a proof that the apostle directs this part of his discourse to the Jews.

As long as he liveth] Or as long as IT liveth, law does not extend its influence to the dead; nor do abrogated laws bind. It is all the same whether we understand these words as speaking of a law abrogated, so that it cannot command; or of its objects, being dead, so that it has none to bind. In either case the law has no force.

Verse 2. For the woman which hath a husband] The apostle illustrates his meaning by a familiar instance. A married woman is bound to her husband while he lives; but when her husband is dead, she is discharged from the law, by which she was bound to him alone.

Verse 3. So then, if, while her husband liveth] The object of the apostle's similitude is to show, that each party is equally bound to the other; but that the death of either dissolves the engagement.

So—she is no adulteress, though she be married to another] And do not imagine that this change would argue any disloyalty in you to your Maker; for, as he has determined that this law of ordinances shall cease, you are no more bound to it than a woman is to a deceased husband; and are as free to receive the gospel of Christ, as a woman, in such circumstances, would be to re-marry.

Verse 4. Wherefore, my brethren] This is a parallel case. You were once under the law of Moses, and were bound by its injunctions; but now ye are become dead to that law; a modest inoffensive mode of speech, for the law, which was once your husband, is dead; God has determined that it shall be no longer in force; so that now, as a woman whose husband is dead, is freed from the law of that husband, or from her conjugal vow, and may legally be married to another: So God, who gave the law under which ye have hitherto lived, designed that it should be in force only till the advent of the Messiah; that advent has taken place, the law has, consequently, ceased, and now ye are called to take on you the yoke of the gospel, and lay down the yoke of the law; and this is the design of God, that you should do so.

That ye should be married to another—who is raised from the dead] As Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, the object of God in giving the law, was to unite you to Christ; and as he has died, he has not only abolished that law which condemns every transgressor to death, without any hope of a revival; but he has also made that atonement for sin by his own death, which is represented in the sacrifices prescribed by the law. And as Jesus Christ is risen again from the dead he has thereby given the fullest proof, that by his death he has procured the resurrection of mankind; and made that atonement required by the law. That we should bring forth fruit unto God; we, Jews, who believe in Christ, have, in consequence of our union with him, received the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit; so that we bring forth that fruit of holiness unto God, which, without this union, it would be impossible for us to produce. Here is a delicate allusion to the case of a promising and numerous progeny, from a legitimate and happy marriage.

Verse 5. For, when we were in the flesh] When we were without the gospel, in our carnal unregenerated state, though believing the law of Moses, and performing the rites and offices of our religion.

pensity does not excite to all kinds of sinful acts; hence the apostle uses the plural number, the PASSIONS or propensities of SINS; sins being not more various than their propensities in the unregenerate heart, which excite to them. These παθηματα, propensities, constitute the fallen nature; they are the disease of the heart; the pollution and corruption of the soul.

Did work in our members] The evil propensity acts, εν τοις μελεσιν in the whole nervous and muscular system; applying that stimulus to every part, which is necessary to excite them to action.

To bring forth fruit unto death] To produce those acts of transgression which subject the sinner to death temporal and eternal. When the apostle says the motions of sin which were by the law; he points out a most striking and invariable characteristic of sin; viz. its rebellious nature; it ever acts against law, and the most powerfully against known law. Because the law requires obedience; therefore, it will transgress. The law is equally against evil passions and evil actions; and both these exert themselves against it. So, these motions which were by the law, became roused into the most powerful activity, by the prohibitions of the law. They were comparatively dormant till the law said thou shalt NOT do this, thou shalt DO that; then, the rebellious principle in the evil propensity became roused, and acts of transgression and omissions of duty were the immediate consequences.

Verse 6. But now we are delivered from the law] We, who have believed in Christ Jesus, are delivered from that yoke by which we were bound, which sentenced every transgressor to perdition, but provided no pardon even for the penitent; and no sanctification for those who are weary of their inbred corruptions.

That being dead wherein we were held] To us believers in Christ, this commandment is abrogated; we are transferred to another constitution; that law which kills, ceases to bind us; it is dead to us who have believed in Christ Jesus, who is the end of the law for justification and salvation to every one that believes.

That we should serve in newness of spirit] We are now brought under a more spiritual dispensation; now we know the spiritual import of all the Mosaic precepts. We see that the law referred to the gospel, and can only be fulfilled by the gospel.

The oldness of the letter] The merely literal rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices are now done away: and the newness of the Spirit, the true intent and meaning of all are now fully disclosed; so that we are got from an imperfect state into a state of perfection and excellence. We sought justification and sanctification, pardon and holiness, by the law; and have found that the law could not give them: we have sought these in the gospel scheme, and we have found them. We serve God now, not according to the old literal sense, but in the true spiritual meaning.

Verse 7. Is the law sin?] The apostle had said, ver. 5, The motions of sin, which were by the law, did bring forth fruit unto death; and now he anticipates an objection, "is therefore the law sin?" to which he answers, as usual, μη γενοιτο, by no means. Law is only the means of disclosing this sinful propensity, not of producing it; as a bright beam of the sun introduced into a room, shows millions of motes which appear to be dancing in it in all directions; but these were not introduced by the light, they were there before; only there was not light enough to make them manifest: so the evil propensity was there before, but there was not light sufficient to discover it.

I had not known sin, but by the law] Mr. Locke and Dr. Taylor have properly remarked the skill used by St. Paul in dextrously avoiding, as much as possible, the giving offence to the Jews: and this is particularly evident in his use of the word I in this place. In the beginning of the chapter, where he mentions their knowledge of the law, he says YE. In the 4th verse he joins himself with them, and says we; but here, and so to the end of the chapter, where he represents the power of sin, and the inability of the law to subdue it, he appears to leave them out, and speaks altogether in the first person, though it is plain he means all those who were under the law. So chap. iii. 7. he uses the singular pronoun, why am I judged a sinner? when he evidently means the whole body of unbelieving Jews.

There is another circumstance in which his address is peculiarly evident; his demonstrating the insufficiency of the law under colour of vindicating it. He knew that the Jew would take fire at the least reflection on the law, which he held in the highest veneration; and therefore he very naturally introduces him catching at that expression, ver. 5, the motions of sins which were by the law; or, notwithstanding the law. "What!" says this Jew, "do you vilify the law, by charging it with favouring sin?" By no means, says the apostle, I am very far from charging the law with favouring sin. The law is holy, and the commandment is holy, just, and good, ver. 12. Thus he writes in vindication of the law; and yet at the same time shows, 1. That the law requires the most extensive obedience, discovering and condemning sin in all its most secret and remote branches, verse 7. 2. That it gives sin a deadly force, subjecting every transgression to the penalty of death, verse 8—14. And yet, 3. supplies neither help nor hope to the sinner, but leaves him under the power of sin, and the sentence of death, verse 14, &c. This, says Dr. Taylor, is the most ingenious turn of writing I ever met with. We have another instance of the same sort, chap. xiii. 1—7.

It is not likely that a dark, corrupt human heart, can discern the will of God. His law is his will: It recommends what is just, and right, and good; and forbids what is improper, unjust, and injurious. If God had not revealed himself by this law, we should have done precisely what many nations of the earth have done, who have not had this revelation; put darkness for light, and sin for acts of holiness. While the human heart is its own measure, it will rate its workings according to its own propensities; for, itself is its highest rule. But when God gives a true insight of his own perfections, to be applied as a rule, both of passion and practice, then sin is discovered; and discovered too, to be exceedingly sinful. So, strong propensities, because they appear to be inherent in our nature, would have passed for natural and necessary operations; and their sinfulness would not have been discovered, if the law had not said, Thou shalt not covet. And thus determined, that the propensity itself, as well as its outward operations, is sinful. The law is the straight edge which determines the quantum of obliquity in the crooked line to which it is applied.

It is natural for man to do what is unlawful, and to desire especially to do that which is forbidden. The heathens have remarked this propensity in man.

Thus LIVY, xxxiv. 4.

And again, Ib. lib. iii. E. iv. ver. 17.

Nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata.

"Vice is provoked by every strong restraint,
"Sick men long most to drink, who know they mayn't."

The same poet delivers the same sentiment in another place:

Et crescit rabies: remoraminaque ipsa nocebant.

METAM. lib. iii. ver. 566.

"Being admonished, he becomes the more obstinate; and his fierceness is irritated by restraints. Prohibitions become incentives to greater acts of vice."

But it is needless to multiply examples; this most wicked principle of a sinful, fallen nature, has been felt and acknowledged by ALL mankind.

Verse 8. Sin, taking occasion by the commandment] I think the pointing, both in this and in the 11th verse, to be wrong: the comma should be after occasion, and not after commandment. But sin taking occasion, wrought in me, by this commandment all manner of concupiscence. There are different opinions concerning the meaning of the word αφορμη, which we here translate occasion. Dr. Waterland translates the clause sin, taking ADVANTAGE. Dr. Taylor contends that all commentators have mistaken the meaning of it, and that it should be rendered having received FORCE. For this acceptation of the word, I can find no adequate authority, except in its etymology—απο from, and ορμη impetus. The word appears to signify, in general, whatsoever is necessary for the completion or accomplishment of any particular purpose. Xenophon uses αφορμαι εις τον βιον, to signify whatever is necessary for the support of life. There is a personification in the text: sin is represented as a murderer, watching for life, and snatching at every means, and embracing every opportunity, to carry his fell purpose into effect. The miserable sinner has a murderer, sin, within him; this murderer can only destroy life in certain circumstances; finding that the law condemns the object of his cruelty to death, he takes occasion from this, to work in the soul all manner of concupiscence, evil and irregular desires and appetites of every kind; and, by thus increasing the evil, exposes the soul to more condemnation, and thus it is represented as being slain, ver. 11. That is, the law, on the evidence of those sinful dispositions, and their corresponding practices, condemns the sinner to death: so that he is dead in law. Thus the very prohibition, as we have already seen in the preceding verse, becomes the instrument of exciting the evil propensity; for, although a sinner has the general propensity to do what is evil; yet he seems to feel most delight in transgressing known law: stat pro ratione voluntas; "I will do it, because I will."

For, without the law sin was dead] Where there is no law, there is no transgression; for sin is the transgression of the law; and no fault can be imputed unto death, where there is no statute, by which such a fault is made a capital offence.

Dr. Taylor thinks that χωρις νομου, without the law, means the time before the giving the law from Mount Sinai, which took in the space of 430 years, during which time the people were under the Abrahamic covenant of grace; and without the law that was given on Mount Sinai, the sting of death, which is sin, had not power to slay the sinner: for, from the time that Adam sinned, the law was not re-enacted till it was given by Moses, chap. v. 13. The Jew was then alive, because he was not under the law subjecting him to death for his transgressions; but when the commandment came, with the penalty of death annexed, sin revived, and the Jew died. Then the sting of death acquired life; and the Jew, upon the first transgression, was dead in law. Thus sin, the sting of death, received force or advantage to destroy by the commandment, ver. 8, 11.

All manner of concupiscence] It showed what was evil, and forbad it; and then the principle of rebellion, which seems essential to the very nature of sin, rose up against the prohibition; and he was the more strongly incited to disobey, in proportion as obedience was enjoined. Thus the apostle shows that the law had authority to prohibit, condemn, and destroy; but no power to pardon sin, root out enmity, nor save the soul.

The word επιθυμια, which we render concupiscence, signifies simply strong desire of any kind; but, in the New Testament, it is generally taken to signify irregular and unholy desires. Sin, in the mind, is the desire to do, or to be, what is contrary to the holiness and authority of GOD.

For, without the law, sin was dead] This means, according to Dr. Taylor's hypothesis, the time previous to the giving of the law.—See before. But it seems also consistent with the apostle's meaning, to interpret the place as implying the time in which Paul, in his unconverted Jewish state, had not the proper knowledge of the law; while he was unacquainted with its spirituality. He felt evil desire, but he did not know the evil of it; he did not consider that the law tried the heart and its workings; as well as outward actions. This is farther explained in the next verse.

Verse 9. I was alive without the law once] Dr. Whitby paraphrases the text thus: "For the seed of Abraham was alive without the law once, before the law was given, I being not obnoxious to death for that to which the law had not threatened death; but when the commandment came, forbiding it under that penalty, sin revived, and I died; i. e. it got strength to draw me to sin, and to condemn me to death. Sin is, in scripture, represented as an enemy that seeks our ruin and destruction; and takes all occasions to effect it. It is here said, to war against the mind, ver. 23. elsewhere, to war against the soul, 1 Pet. ii. 11. to surround and beset us, Heb. xii. 1. to bring us into bondage and subjection, and get the dominion over us, Rom. vi. 12. to entice us, and so to work our death, Jam, i. 15, 16. and to do all that Satan, the grand enemy of mankind, doth, by tempting us to the commission of it. Whence Chrysostom, upon those words, Heb. xii. 4, Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, προς την αμαρτιαν ανταγωνιζομενοι, striving against sin; represents sin as an armed and flagrant adversary. When, therefore, it finds a law which threatens death to the violator of it; it takes occasion thence, more earnestly, to tempt and allure to the violation of it; that so it may more effectually subject us to death and condemnation on that account; for the sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law, condemning us to death for transgressing it. Thus, when God had forbidden, on pain of death, the eating the fruit of the tree of knowledge; Satan thence took occasion to tempt our first Parents to transgress, and so slew them; or made them subject to death: εξηπατησε, he deceived them, Gen. iii. 13. 1 Tim. ii. 14. which is the word used ver. 11. The phrase, without the law, sin was dead, means that sin was then, (before the law was given) comparatively dead, as to its power of condemning to death; and this sense the antithesis requires, without the law; αμαρτια νεκρα, εγω δε εζων, sin was dead, but I was living; but when the commandment came, (i. e. the law) sin revived, and I died. How were men living before the law, but because then, no law condemned them? Sin, therefore, must be then dead, as to its condemning power. How did they die when the law came, but by the law condemning them to death? Sin, therefore, revived then, as to its power of condemning, which it received first from the sin of Adam, which brought death into the world; and next, from the law of Moses, which entered that the offence might abound, and reign more unto death, chap. v. 20, 21. For though sin was in the world from Adam to Moses; or, until the law was given; yet it was not imputed unto death, when there was no law that did threaten death; so that death reigned from that interval, by virtue of Adam's sin alone; even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression; i. e. against a positive law, forbidding it under the penalty of death; which law being delivered by Moses, sin revived; i. e. it had again its force to condemn men as before, to death, by virtue of a law which threatened death. And in this sense the apostle seems to say, Gal. iii. 19. the law was added because of transgressions, to convince us of the wrath and punishment due to them; and that the law, therefore, worketh wrath, because where no law is, there is no transgression, Rom. iv. 15. subjecting us to wrath; or, no such sense of the Divine wrath, as where a plain divine law, threatening death and condemnation, is violated." See Whitby, in loco.

Verse 10. And the commandment] Meaning the law in general; which was ordained to life; the rule of righteousness teaching those statutes which, if a man do, he shall live in them, Lev. xviii. 5. I found, by transgressing it, to be unto death; for it only presented the duty, and laid down the penalty, without affording any strength to resist sin, or subdue evil propensities.

Verse 11. Sin, taking occasion] Sin deriving strength from the law, threatening death to the transgressor, (see the note on ver. 8.) deceived me, drew me aside to disobedience, promising me gratification, honour, independence, &c. as it promised to Eve; for to her history the apostle evidently alludes, and uses the very same expression, deceived me, εξηπατησε με· See the preceding note; and see the Septuagint, Gen. iii. 13.

And by it slew me.] Subjected me to that death which the law denounced against transgressors; and rendered me miserable during the course of life itself. It is well known to scholars, that the verb αποκτειναι, signifies not only to slay or kill, but also to make wretched. Every sinner is not only exposed to death, because he has sinned, and must, sooner or later, die; but he is miserable in both body and mind, by the influence and the effects of sin. He lives a dying life, or a living death.

Verse 12. Wherefore the law is holy] As if he had said, to soothe his countrymen, to whom he had been showing the absolute insufficiency of the law, either to justify or save from sin: I do not intimate that there is any thing improper or imperfect in the law as a rule of life: it prescribes what is holy, just, and good; for it comes from a holy, just, and good God. The LAW which is to regulate the whole of the outward conduct is holy; and the COMMANDMENT, Thou shalt not covet, which is to regulate the heart, is not less so. All is excellent and pure; but it neither pardons sin, nor purifies the heart; and it is because it is holy, just, and good, that it condemns transgressors to death.

Verse 13. Was then that which is good, made death unto me?] This is the question of the Jew, with whom the apostle appears to be disputing. "Do you allow the law to be good, and yet say, it is the cause of our death?" The Apostle answers, God forbid! μη γενοιτο, by no means: it is not the law that is the cause of your death, but sin; it was sin which subjected us to death by the law, justly threatening sin with death. Which law was given, that sin might appear, might be set forth in its own colours; when we saw it subjected us to death by a law perfectly holy, just, and good; that sin, by the law, might be represented what it really is: καθ' υπερβολην αμαρτωλος, an EXCEEDING GREAT and deadly evil.

Thus it appears, that man cannot have a true notion of sin, but by means of the law of God. For this I have already given sufficient reasons in the preceding notes. And it was one design of the law to show the abominable and destructive nature of sin; as well as to be a rule of life. It would be almost impossible for a man to have that just notion of the demerit of sin, so as to produce repentance, or to see the nature and necessity of the death of Christ, if the law were not applied to his conscience by the light of the Holy Spirit; it is then alone, that he sees himself to be carnal, and sold under sin; and that the law and the commandment are holy, just, and good. And let it be observed, that the law did not answer this end merely among the Jews, in the days of the apostle; it is just as necessary to the Gentiles, to the present hour. Nor do we find that true repentance takes place where made death unto me? God forbid. But [a] sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

14 For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, [b] sold under sin.

the moral law is not preached and enforced. Those who preach only the gospel to sinners, at best, only heal the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly. The law, therefore, is the grand instrument in the hands of a faithful minister, to alarm and awaken sinners: and he may safely show, that every sinner is under the law, and consequently under the curse, who has not fled for refuge to the hope held out by the gospel: for, in this sense also Jesus Christ is the END of the LAW for justification to them that believe.

Verse 14. For, we know that the law is spiritual] This is a general proposition, and probably, in the apostle's autograph, concluded the above sentence. The law is not to be considered as a system of external rites and ceremonies; nor even as a rule of moral action: it is a spiritual system; it reaches to the most hidden purposes, thoughts, dispositions, and desires of the heart and soul; and it reproves and condemns every thing, without hope of reprieve or pardon, that is contrary to eternal truth and rectitude.

But I am carnal, sold under sin.] This was probably, in the apostle's letter, the beginning of a new paragraph. I believe it is agreed, on all hands, that the apostle is here demonstrating the insufficiency of the law, in opposition to the gospel. That by the former, is the knowledge; by the latter the cure of sin. Therefore, by I here he cannot mean himself, nor any Christian believer: if the contrary could be proved, the argument of the apostle would go to demonstrate the insufficiency of the gospel, as well as the law.

It is difficult to conceive how the opinion could have crept into the church, or prevailed there; that "the apostle speaks here of his regenerate state; and that what was, in such a state, true of himself, must be true of all others in the same state." This opinion has, most pitifully and most shamefully, not only lowered the standard of Christianity, but destroyed its influence, and disgraced its character. It requires but little knowledge of the spirit of the gospel, and of the scope of this Epistle, to see that the apostle is here either personating a Jew, under the law and without the gospel, or showing what his own state was, when he was deeply convinced that by the deeds of the law no man could be justified; and had not as yet heard those blessed words, Brother Saul, the Lord Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost, Acts ix. 17.

In this, and the following verses, he states the contrariety between himself or any Jew, while without Christ; and the law of God. Of the latter he says, it is spiritual; of the former, I am carnal, sold under sin. Of the carnal man, in opposition to the spiritual, never was a more complete or accurate description given. The expressions in the flesh, and after the flesh, in ver. 5. and in chap. viii. 5, 8, 9, &c. are of the same import with the word carnal, in this verse. To be in the flesh, or to be carnally minded, solely respect the unregenerate. While unregenerate, a man is in a state of death and enmity against God, chap. viii. 6—9. This is St. Paul's own account of a carnal man. The soul of such a man has no authority over the appetites of the body, and the lusts of the flesh: reason has not the government of passion. The work of such a person, is to make provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof, chap. xiii. 14. He minds the things of the flesh, chap. viii. 5. He is at enmity with God. In all these things the spiritual man is the reverse; he lives in a state of friendship with God in Christ, and the spirit of God dwells in him; his soul has dominion over the appetites of the body and the lusts of the flesh; his passions submit to the government of reason; and he, by the Spirit, mortifies the deeds of the flesh; he mindeth the things of the Spirit, chap. viii. 5. The scriptures, therefore, place these two characters in direct opposition to each other. Now, the apostle begins this passage by informing us that it is his carnal state that he is about to describe, in opposition to the spirituality of God's holy law, saying, But I am carnal.

Those who are of another opinion, maintain that, by the word carnal here, the apostle meant that corruption which dwelt in him after his conversion; but this opinion is founded on a very great mistake; for, although there may be after justification, the remains of the carnal mind, which will be less or more felt till the soul is completely sanctified; yet the man is never denominated from the inferior principle, which is under control; but from the superior principle which habitually prevails. Whatever epithets are given to corruption or sin in Scripture, opposite epithets are given to grace or holiness. By these different epithets are the unregenerate and regenerate denominated. From all this it follows, that the epithet carnal, which is the characteristic designation of an unregenerate man, cannot be applied to St. Paul, after his conversion; nor, indeed, to any Christian in that state.

But the word carnal, though used by the apostle to signify a state of death and enmity against God, is not sufficient to denote all the evil of the state which he is describing; hence he adds, sold under sin. This is one of the strongest expressions which the Spirit of God uses in Scripture, to describe the full depravity of fallen man. It implies a willing slavery: Ahab had sold himself to work evil, 1 Kings xxi. 20. And of the Jews it is said, in their utmost depravity, Behold, for your iniquities, ye have sold yourselves, Isai. l. 1. They forsook the holy covenant, and joined themselves to the heathen, and WERE SOLD to do mischief, 1 Maccab. i. 15. Now, if the word carnal, in its strongest sense, had been sufficiently significant of all he meant, why add to this charge, another expression still stronger? We must therefore understand the phrase sold under sin, as implying, that the soul was employed in the drudgery of sin; that it was sold over to this service, and had no power to disobey this tyrant, until it was redeemed by another. And if a man be actually sold to another, and he acquiesce in the deed; then he becomes the legal property of that other person. This state of bondage was well known to the Romans. The sale of slaves they saw daily, and could not misunderstand the emphatical sense of this expression. Sin is here represented as a person; and the apostle compares the dominion which sin has over the man in question, to that of a master over his legal slave. Universally through the Scriptures, man is said to be in a state of bondage to sin, until the Son of God make him free: but in no part of the sacred writings is it ever said that the children of God are sold under sin. Christ came to deliver the lawful captive, and take away the prey from the mighty. Whom the Son maketh free, they are free indeed. Then, they yield not up their members as instruments of unrighteousness unto sin; for sin shall not have the dominion over them, because the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, has made them free from the law of sin and death, chap. vi. 13, 14. and viii. 2. Anciently, when regular cartels were not known, the captives became the slaves of their victors, and by them were sold to any purchaser; their slavery was as complete and perpetual, as if the slave had resigned his own liberty, and sold himself: the laws of the land secured him to his master; he could not redeem himself, because he had nothing that was his own, and nothing could rescue him from that state, but a stipulated redemption. The apostle speaks here, not of the manner in which the person in question became a slave; he only asserts the fact, that sin had a full and permanent dominion over him. Smith, on the carnal man's character.

I am carnal, sold under sin.] I have been the more particular in ascertaining the genuine sense of this verse, because it determines the general scope of the whole passage.

Verse 15. For, that which I do, I allow not, &c.] The first clause of this verse is a general assertion concerning the employment of the person in question, in the state which the apostle calls carnal, and sold under sin. The Greek word κατεργαζομαι, which is here translated I do, means a work which the agent continues to perform, till it is finished, and is used by the apostle, Phil. ii. 12. to denote the continued employment of God's saints in his service to the end of their lives. WORK OUT your own salvation: the word here denotes an employment of a different kind; and therefore the man who now feels the galling dominion of sin, says, what I am continually labouring at, I allow not; ου γινωσκω, I do not acknowledge to be right, just, holy, or profitable.

But what I hate, that do I.] I am a slave, and under the absolute control of my tyrannical master: I hate his service, but am obliged to work his will. Who, without blaspheming, can assert that the apostle is speaking this of a man in whom the Spirit of the Lord dwells? From ver. 7. to this one, the apostle, says Dr. Taylor, denotes the Jew in the flesh, by a single I; here, he divides that I into two I's, or figurative persons; representing two different and opposite principles which were in him. The one I, or principle, assents to the law that it is good; and wills and chooses what the other does not practise, ver. 16. This principle he expressly tells us, ver. 22, is the inward man; the law of the mind, ver. 23. the mind, or rational faculty, ver. 25. for he could find no other inward man, or law of the mind, but the rational faculty, in a person who was carnal, and sold under sin. The other I, or principle, transgresses the law, ver. 23. and does those things which the former principle allows not. This principle he expressly tells us, ver. 18. is the flesh, the law in the members, or sensual appetite, ver. 23. and he concludes in the last verse, that these two principles were opposite to each other; therefore, it is evident, that those two principles, residing and counteracting each other in the same person, are reason and lust; or sin that dwells in us. And it is very easy to distinguish these two I's, or principles, in every part of this elegant description of iniquity.

domineering over the light and remonstrances of reason. For instance, ver. 17. Now then, it is no more I that do it, but SIN that dwelleth in me. The I, he speaks of here, is opposed to in-dwelling or governing sin; and therefore plainly denotes the principle of reason, the inward man, or law of the mind: in which, I add, a measure of the light of the Spirit of God shines; in order to show the sinfulness of sin. These two different principles he calls, one flesh, and the other spirit; Gal. v. 17. where he speaks of their contrariety in the same manner that he does here.

And we may give a probable reason why the apostle dwells so long upon the struggle and opposition between these two principles; it appears intended to answer a tacit but very obvious objection. The Jew might allege, "But the law is holy and spiritual; and I assent to it as good, as a right rule of action, which ought to be observed; yea, I esteem it highly, I glory and rest in it, convinced of its truth and excellency. And, is not this enough to constitute the law a sufficient principle of sanctification?" The apostle answers, "No; wickedness is consistent with a sense of truth. A man may assent to the best rule of action, and yet still be under the dominion of lust and sin; from which nothing can deliver him but a principle and power proceeding from the fountain of life."

The sentiment in this verse may be illustrated by quotations from the ancient heathens; many of whom felt themselves in precisely the same state, (and expressed it in nearly the same language) which some most monstrously tell us, was the state of this heavenly apostle, when vindicating the claims of the gospel against those of the Jewish ritual! Thus OVID describes the conduct of a depraved man:—

Sed trahit invitam nova vis, aliudque cupido;
Mens aliud suadet. Video meliora, proboque;
Deteriora sequor. OVID, Met. lib. vii. ver. 19.

My reason this, my passion that persuades;
I see the right, and I approve it too;
Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue.

——— indignum facinus! nunc ego et

TERENT. Eun. ver. 70.

——— But I am overcome by sin,
And I well understand the evil which I presume to commit.
Passion, however, is more powerful than my reason;
Which is the cause of the greatest evils to mortal men.

Thus we find that enlightened heathens, both among the Greeks and Romans, had that same kind of religious experience; which some suppose to be, not only the experience of St. Paul in his best state; but to be even the standard of Christian attainments! See more examples in Wetstein.

The whole spirit of the sentiment is well summed up and expressed by St. Chrysostom: οταν τινος επιθυμωμεν, ειτε κωλυωμεθα, αιρεται μαλλον της επιθυμιας η φλοξ· If we lust after any thing, which is afterwards prohibited, the flame of this desire burns the more fiercely.

Verse 16. If then I do that which I would not, &c.] Knowing that the law condemns it, and that, therefore, it must be evil. I consent unto the law; I show by this circumstance, that I acknowledge the law to be good.

Verse 17. Now then it is no more I] It is not that I, which constitutes reason and conscience; but sin, corrupt and sensual inclinations, that dwelleth in me; that have the entire domination over my reason, darkening my understanding, and perverting my judgment; for which there is condemnation in the law, but no cure. So we find here that there is a principle, in the unregenerate man, stronger than reason itself: a principle which is, properly speaking, not of the essence of the soul, but acts in it, as its Lord; or as a tyrant. This is in-bred, and in-dwelling sin, the seed of the serpent; by which the whole soul is darkened, confused, perverted, and excited to rebellion against God.

Verse 18. For I know that in me, &c.] I have learned, by experience, that in an unregenerate man, there is no good. There is no principle by which the soul can be brought into the light; no principle by which it can be restored to purity: fleshly appetites alone prevail; and the brute runs away with the man.

For to will is present with me] Though the whole soul has suffered indescribably by the FALL, yet there are some faculties that appear to have suffered less than others; or rather have received larger measures of the supernatural light, because their concurrence with the Divine principle is so necessary to the salvation of the soul. Even the most unconcerned about spiritual things, have understanding, judgment, reason, and will. And by means of these, we have seen even scoffers at Divine revelation, become very eminent in arts and sciences; some of our best metaphysicians, physicians, mathematicians, astronomers, chymists, &c. have been known, to their reproach be it spoken and published, to be without religion; nay, some of them have blasphemed it, by leaving God out of his own work, and ascribing to an idol of their own, whom they call nature, the operations of the wisdom, power, and goodness, of the Most High. It is true that many of the most eminent in all the above branches of knowledge, have been conscientious believers in Divine revelation: but the case of the others proves, that fallen as man is, he yet possesses extraordinary powers; which are capable of very high cultivation and improvement. In short, the soul seems capable of any thing, but knowing, fearing, loving, and serving God. And it is not only incapable of itself, for any truly religious acts; but what shows its fall in the most indisputable manner, is, its enmity to sacred things. Let an unregenerate man pretend what he pleases, his conscience knows that he hates religion; his soul revolts against it; his carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be. There is no reducing this fell principle to subjection; it is SIN, and sin is rebellion against God; therefore sin must be destroyed, not subjected; if subjected, it would cease to be sin; because sin is in opposition to God; hence the apostle says, most conclusively, it cannot be subjected; i. e. it must be destroyed, or it will destroy the soul for ever. When the apostle says, to will is present with me, he shows that the will is on the side of God and truth; so far, that it consents to the propriety and necessity of obedience. There has been a strange clamour raised up against this faculty of the soul, as if the very essence of evil dwelt in it; whereas, the apostle shows, throughout this chapter, that the will was regularly on God's side, while every other faculty appears to have been in hostility to him. The truth is, men have confounded the will with the passions; and laid to the charge of the former what properly belongs to the latter. The will is right, but the passions are wrong. It discerns and approves, but is without ability to perform: it has no power over sensual appetites; in these the principle of rebellion dwells; it nills evil, it wills good, but can only command through the power of Divine grace: but this, the person in question, the unregenerate man, has not received.

Verse 19. For the good that I would I do not] Here again is the most decisive proof that the will is on the side of God and truth.

But the evil which I would not] And here is equally decisive proof that the will is against, or opposed to evil. There is not a man in ten millions who will carefully watch the operations of this faculty, that will find it opposed to good, and obstinately attached to evil, as is generally supposed. Nay, it is found almost uniformly on God's side, while the whole sensual system is against him. It is not the WILL that leads men astray; but the corrupt PASSIONS which oppose and oppress the will. It is truly astonishing into what endless mistakes men have fallen on this point, and what systems of divinity have been builded on these mistakes. The will, this almost only friend to God in the human soul, has been slandered as God's worst enemy: and even by those who had the seventh chapter to the Romans before their eyes! Nay, it has been considered so fell a foe to God and goodness, that it is bound in the adamantine chains of a dire necessity, to do evil only; and the doctrine of will, (absurdly called free will, as if will did not essentially imply what is free) has been considered one of the most destructive heresies. Let such persons put themselves to school to their Bibles, and to common sense.

The plain state of the case is this; the soul is so complete-is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

ly fallen, so, that it has no power to do good, till it receive that power from on high. But it has power to see good, to distinguish between that and evil; to acknowledge the excellence of this good, and to will it, from a conviction of that excellence; but farther it cannot go. Yet, in various cases, it is solicited, and consents to sin; and because it is will, that is, because it is a free principle, it must necessarily possess this power; and although it can do no good, unless it receive grace from God; yet it is impossible to force it to sin. Even Satan himself cannot do this; and before he can get it to sin, he must gain its consent. Thus, God in his endless mercy, has endued this faculty with a power in which, humanly speaking, resides the salvability of the soul; and without this, the soul must have eternally continued under the power of sin, or been saved as an inert, absolutely passive machine; which supposition would go as nearly to prove that it was as incapable of vice, as it were of virtue.

"But does not this arguing destroy the doctrine of free grace?" No! it establishes that doctrine. 1. It is through the grace, the unmerited kindness of God, that the soul has such a faculty, and that it has not been extinguished by sin. 2. This will, though a free principle, as it respects its willing of evil, and choosing good; yet, properly speaking, has no power by which it can subjugate the evil, or perform the good. We know that the eye has a power to discern objects, but without light, this power is perfectly useless; and no object can be discerned by it. So, of the person represented here by the apostle, it is said, to will is present with me, το γαρ θελειν παρακειται μοι. To will is ever in readiness, it is ever at hand, it lies constantly before me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not; that is, the man is unregenerate; and he is seeking justification and holiness from the law. The law was never designed to give these; it gives the knowledge, not the cure, of sin; therefore, though he nills evil, and wills good; yet he can neither conquer the one, nor perform the other, till he receives the grace of Christ; till he seeks and finds redemption in his blood. Here then, the free agency of man is preserved, without which he could not be in a salvable state; and the honour of the grace of Christ is maintained, without which, there can be no actual salvation. There is a good sentiment on this subject in the following words of an eminent poet.

Thou great first CAUSE, least understood;
Who all my sense confined
To know but this, that thou art good;
And that myself am blind.
Yet gave me in this dark estate
To see the good from ill;
And binding nature fast in fate,
Left free the human will.

POPE'S Universal Prayer.

Verse 20. It is no more I] My will is against it; my reason and conscience condemn it. But sin that dwelleth in me—The principle of sin, which has possessed itself of all my carnal appetites and passions, and thus subjects my reason and domineers over my soul. Thus, I am in perpetual contradiction to myself. Two principles are continually contending in me for the mastery; my reason, on which the light of God shines, to show what is evil; and my passions, in which the principle of sin works, to bring forth fruit unto death.

This strange self-contradictory propensity led some of the ancient philosophers to imagine, that man has two souls, a good and a bad one; and it is on this principle, that Xenophon, in his life of Cyrus, causes Arases, a Persian nobleman, to account for some misconduct of his, relative to Panthea, a beautiful female captive, whom Cyrus had entrusted to his care. "O Cyrus, I am convinced that I have two souls; if I had but one soul, it could not, at the same time, pant after vice and virtue; wish and abhor the same thing. It is certain therefore, that we have two souls; when the good soul rules, I undertake noble and virtuous actions; but when the bad soul predominates, I am constrained to do evil. All I can say at present is, that I find my good soul, encouraged by thy presence, has got the better of my bad soul." See Spectator, Vol. VIII. No. 564. Thus, not only the ancients, but also many moderns have trifled and all will continue to do so, who do not acknowledge the scriptural account of the fall of man, and the lively comment upon that doctrine, contained in the seventh chapter of the Epistle to the Romans.

Verse 21. I find then a law] I am in such a condition and state of soul; under the power of such habits and sinful propensities, that when I would do good; when my will and reason are strongly bent on obedience to the law of God, and opposition to the principle of sin; evil is present with me, κακον παρακειται, evil is at hand, it lies constantly before me. That, as the will to do good is constantly at hand, ver. 18. so the principle of rebellion exciting me to sin, is equally present; but as the one is only will, wish, and desire, without power to do what is willed, to obtain what is wished, or to perform what is desired, sin continually prevails.

The word νομος, law, in this verse, must be taken as implying any strong or confirmed habit, συνηθειαν, as Hesychius renders it, under the influence of which the man generally acts; and in this sense, the apostle most evidently uses it in ver. 23.

Verse 22. I delight in the law of God after the inward man] Every Jew, and every unregenerate man, who receives the Old Testament as a revelation from God, must acknowledge the great purity, excellence, and utility of its maxims, &c. though he will ever find, that without the grace of our Lord Jesus, he can never act according to those heavenly maxims; and without the mercy of God, can never be redeemed from the curse entailed upon him for his past transgressions. To say that the inward man means the regenerate part of the soul, is supportable by no argument. Ο εσω ανθρωπος, and ὁ εντος ανθρωπος, especially the latter, are expressions frequently in use among the purest Greek ethic writers, to signify the soul or rational part of man, in opposition to the body of flesh; see the quotations in Wetstein from Plato and Plotinus. The Jews have the same form of expression; so in Yalcut Rubeni, fol. 10. 3. it is said, The flesh is the inward garment of the man; but the SPIRIT is the INWARD man, the garment of which is the body; and St. Paul uses the phrase in precisely the same sense, in 2 Cor. iv. 16. and in Eph. iii. 16. If it be said, that it is impossible for an unregenerate man to delight in the law of God, the experience of millions contradicts the assertion. Every true penitent admires the moral law; longs most earnestly for a conformity to it; and feels that he can never be satisfied till he awakes up after this divine likeness; and he hates himself, because he feels that he has broken it, and that his evil passions are still in a state of hostility to it.

The following observations of a pious, and sensible writer on this subject, cannot be unacceptable. "The inward man always signifies the mind; which either may, or may not, be the subject of grace. That which is asserted of either the inward or outward man, is often performed by one member or power, and not with the whole. If any member of the body perform an action, we are said to do it with the body, although the other members be not employed. In like manner, if any power or faculty of the mind be employed about any action, the soul is said to act. This expression, therefore, I delight in the law of God, after the inward man, can mean no more than this, that there are some inward faculties in the soul, which delight in the law of God. This expression is particularly adapted to the principles of the Pharisees, of whom St. Paul was one before his conversion. They received the law as the oracles of God, and confessed that it deserved the most serious regard. Their veneration was inspired by a sense of its original, and a full conviction that it was true. To some parts of it they paid the most superstitious regard. They had it written upon their phylacteries, which they carried about with them at all times. It was often read and expounded in their synagogues: and they took delight in studying its precepts. On that account, both the prophets and our Lord agree in saying, that they delighted in the law of God, though they regarded not its chief and most essential precepts." See farther observations on this point at the end of the chapter.

So far, then, is it from being true, that none but a REGENERATE man can delight in the law of God, we find that even a proud, unhumbled PHARISEE can do it; and much more a poor sinner, who is humbled under a sense of his sin, and sees, in the light of God, not only the spirituality, but the excellence of the divine law.

Verse 23. But I see another law in my members] Though the person in question is less or more under the continual influence of reason and conscience, which offer constant testimony against sin; yet, as long as help is sought only from the law, and the grace of Christ in the gospel is not received, the remonstrances of reason and conscience are rendered of no effect, by the prevalence of sinful passions; which, from repeated gratifications, have acquired all the force of habit; and now give law to the whole carnal man.

Warring against the law of my mind] There is an allusion here to the case of a city besieged, at last taken by storm, and the inhabitants carried away into captivity; αντιστρατευομενον, carrying on a system of warfare; laying continual siege to the soul; repeating incessantly its attacks; harassing, battering, and storming the spirit; and, by all these assaults, reducing the man to extreme misery. Never was a picture more impressively drawn, and more effectually finished; for the next sentence shows, that this spiritual city was at last taken by storm, and the inhabitants who survived the sackage, led into the most shameful, painful, and oppressive captivity.

Bringing me into captivity to the law of sin] He does not here speak of an occasional advantage gained by sin, it was a complete and final victory gained by corruption; which, having stormed and reduced the city, carried away the inhabitants with irresistible force, into captivity. This is the consequence of being overcome; he was now in the hands of the foe, as the victor's lawful captive; and this is the import of the original word, αιχμαλωτιζοντα; and is the very term used by our Lord when speaking of the final ruin, dispersion, and captivity of the Jews, he says, αιχμαλωτισθησονται, they shall be led away captives into all the nations, Luke xxi. 24. When all this is considered, who, in his right mind, can apply it to the holy soul of the apostle of the Gentiles? Is there any thing in it that can belong to his gracious state? Surely, nothing. The basest slave of sin, who has any remaining checks of conscience, cannot be brought into a worse state than that described here by the apostle. Sin and corruption have a final triumph; and conscience and reason taken prisoners, laid in fetters, and sold for slaves. Can this ever be said of a man, in whom the Spirit of God dwells; and whom the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus, has made free from the law of sin and death? See chap. viii. 2.

Verse 24. O wretched man that I am, &c.] This affecting account is finished more impressively by the groans of the wounded captive. Having long maintained a useless conflict against innumerable hosts and irresistible might, he is at last wounded and taken prisoner; and, to render his state more miserable, is not only encompassed by the slaughtered, but chained to a dead body; for there seems to be here an allusion to an ancient custom of certain tyrants, who bound a dead body to a living man, and obliged him to carry it about, till the contagion from the putrid mass took away his life! Virgil paints this in all its horrors, in the account he gives of the tyrant Mezentius. Æneid, lib. viii. ver. 485

Quid memorem infandas cædes, quid facta tyranni—
MORTUA quin etiam jungebat corpora VIVIS,
Componens manibusque manus, atque oribus ora;
Tormenti genus! et sanie taboque fluentis
Complexu in misero, longâ, sic morte necabat,

What tongue can such barbarities record,
Or count the slaughters of his ruthless sword?
'Twas not enough the good, the guiltless bled,
Still worse, he bound the living to the dead:
These, limb to limb, and face to face, he joined;
Oh! monstrous crime, of unexampled kind!
Till choke'd with stench, the lingering wretches lay,
And, in the loath'd embraces, dyed away! Pitt.

Servius remarks, in his comment on this passage, that Sanies, mortui est; tabo viventis scilicet sanguis: "the sanies, or putrid ichor, from the dead body, produced the tabes in the blood of the living." Roasting, burning, racking, crucifying, &c. were nothing, when compared to this diabolically invented punishment.

We may naturally suppose, that the cry of such a person would be, Wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from this dead body? And how well does this apply to the case of the person to whom the apostle refers? A body, a whole mass of sin and corruption was bound to his soul, with chains which he could not break; and the mortal contagion transfused through his whole nature, was pressing him down to the bitter pains of an eternal death. He now finds that the law can afford him no deliverance; and he despairs of help from any human being; but while he is emitting his last, or almost expiring groan, the redemption by Christ Jesus is proclaimed to him; and, if the apostle refers to his own case, Ananias unexpectedly accosts him with, Brother Saul! the Lord Jesus, who hath appeared unto thee in the way, hath sent me unto thee, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. He sees then an open door of hope, and he immediately, though but in the prospect of this deliverance, returns God thanks for the well-grounded hope which he has of salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Verse 25. I thank God through Jesus Christ] Instead of ευχαριστω τω Θεω, I thank God; several excellent MSS. with the Vulgate, some copies of the Itala, and several of the Fathers, read η χαρις του Θεου, or του Κυριου, the grace of God, or the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; this is an answer to the almost despairing question in the preceding verse. The whole, therefore, may be read thus: O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? ANSWER—The grace of God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Thus we find, that a case of the kind described by the apostle in the preceding verses, whether it were his own, before he was brought to the knowledge of Christ, particularly during the three days that he was at Damascus, without being able to eat or drink, in deep penitential sorrow; or whether he personates a Pharisaic, yet conscientious Jew, deeply concerned for his salvation; I say, we find that such a case can be relieved by the gospel of Christ only: or, in other words, that no scheme of redemption can be effectual to the salvation of any soul, whether Jew or Gentile, but that laid down in the gospel of Christ.

Let any, or all means be used, which human wisdom can devise, guilt will still continue uncancelled; and inbred sin will laugh them all to scorn, prevail over them, and finally triumph. And this is the very conclusion to which the apostle brings his argument in the following clause; which, like the rest of the chapter, has been most awfully abused, to favour anti-evangelical purposes.

So then, with the mind I myself serve the law of God] That this clause contains the inference from the preceding train of argumentation, appears evident from the αρα ουν, therefore, with which the apostle introduces it. As if he had said—" To conclude, the sum of what I have advanced, concerning the power of sin in the carnal man, and the utter insufficiency of all human means, and legal observances to pardon sin, and expel the corruption of the heart, is this, that the very same person, the αυτος εγω, the same I, while without the gospel, under the killing power of the law, will find in himself two opposite principles, the one subscribing to, and approving the law of God; and the other notwithstanding, bringing him into captivity to sin: his inward man, his rational powers and conscience, will assent to the justice and propriety of the requisitions of the law; and yet, notwithstanding this, his fleshly appetites, the law in his members, will war against the law of his mind, and continue, till he receives the gospel of Christ, to keep him in the galling captivity of sin and death."

1. The strong expressions in this clause have led many to conclude, that the apostle himself, in his regenerated state, is indisputably the person intended. That all that is said in this chapter, of the carnal man, sold under sin, did apply to Saul of Tarsus, no man can doubt: that what is here said can ever be with propriety, applied to Paul the Apostle, who can believe? Of the former, all is natural; of the latter, all here said would be monstrous, and absurd, if not blasphemous.

2. But it is supposed that the words must be understood as implying a regenerate man, because the apostle says, ver. 22, I delight in the law of God; and in this verse, I myself, with the mind, serve the law of God. These things, say the objectors, cannot be spoken of a wicked Jew, but of a regenerate man, such as the apostle then was. But when we find that the former verse speaks of a man who is brought into captivity to the law of sin and death; surely there is no part of the regenerate state of the apostle, to which the words can possibly apply. Had he been in captivity to the law of sin and death, after his conversion to Christianity; what did he gain by that conversion? Nothing for his personal holiness. He had found no salvation under an inefficient law; and he was left in thraldom under an equally inefficient gospel. The very genius of Christianity demonstrates that nothing like this can, with any propriety, be spoken of a genuine Christian.

3. But, it is farther supposed, that these things cannot be spoken of a proud or wicked Jew; yet we learn the contrary from the infallible testimony of the word of God. Of this people, in their fallen and iniquitous state, God says by his prophet, They SEEK me DAILY, and DELIGHT to know my ways, as a nation that did RIGHTEOUSNESS, and FORSOOK not the ORDINANCES of their God: they ask me of the ordinances of JUSTICE, and TAKE DELIGHT in approaching to God, Isai. lviii. 2. Can any thing be stronger than this; And yet, at that time, they were most dreadfully carnal, and sold under sin, as the rest of that chapter proves. It is a most notorious fact, that how little soever the life of a Jew was conformed to the law of his God, he notwithstanding professed the highest esteem for it, and gloried in it: and the apostle says nothing stronger of them in this chapter, than their conduct and profession verify to the present day. They are still delighting in the law of God, after the inward man; with their mind, serving the law of God; asking for the ordinances of justice, seeking God daily, and taking delight in approaching to God; they even glory, and greatly exult and glory, in the Divine original and excellency of their LAW; and all this while they are most abominably carnal, sold under sin, and brought into the most degrading captivity, to the law of sin and death. If then, all that the apostle states of the person in question, be true of the Jews, through the whole period of their history, even to the present time:—If they do, in all their professions, and their religious services, which they zealously maintain, confess, and conscientiously too, that the law is holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good; and yet, with their flesh, serve the law of sin; the same certainly may be said with equal propriety of a Jewish penitent, deeply convinced of his lost estate, and the total insufficiency of his legal observances to deliver him from his body of sin and death. And consequently, all this may be said of Paul the JEW, while going about to establish his own righteousness, his own plan of justification; he had not as yet submitted to the righteousness of God, the divine plan of redemption by Jesus Christ.

4. It must be allowed that, whatever was the experience of so eminent a man, Christian, and Apostle, as St. Paul, it must be a very proper standard of Christianity. And if we are to take what is here said, as his experience as a Christian, it would be presumption in us to expect to go higher; for, he certainly had pushed the principles of his religion to their utmost consequences. But his whole life, and the account which he immediately gives of himself in the succeeding chapter prove, that he, as a Christian and an Apostle, had a widely different experience; an experience which amply justifies that superiority, which he attributes to the Christian religion over the Jewish; and demonstrates that it not only is well calculated to perfect all preceding dispensations; but that it affords salvation to the uttermost, to all those who flee for refuge to the hope that it sets before them. Besides, there is nothing spoken here of the state of a conscientious Jew, or of St. Paul in his Jewish state, that is not true of every genuine penitent; even before, and it may be, long before, he has believed in Christ, to the saving of his soul. The assertion, that "every Christian, howsoever advanced in the Divine life, will, and must feel all this inward conflict, &c." is as untrue as it is dangerous. That many, called Christians, and probably sincere, do feel all this, may be readily granted; and such we must consider to be in the same state with Saul of Tarsus, previously to his conversion; but that they must continue thus, is no where intimated in the gospel of Christ. We must take heed how we make our experience, which is the result of our unbelief and unfaithfulness, the standard for the people of God; and lower down Christianity to OUR most reprehensible and dwarfish state: at the same time, we should not be discouraged at what we thus feel, but apply to God, through Christ, as Paul did; and then we shall soon be able, with him, to declare to the eternal glory of God's grace, that the law of the Spirit of life, in Christ Jesus, has made us free from the law of sin and death. This is the inheritance of God's children; and their salvation is of me, saith the Lord.

I cannot conclude these observations, without recommending to the notice of my Readers, a learned and excellent discourse on the latter part of this chapter, preached by the Rev. James Smith, minister of the gospel in Dumfermline, Scotland; a work to which I am indebted for some useful observations, and from which I should have been glad to have copied much, had my limits permitted. Reader, do not plead for Baal; try, fully try, the efficiency of the blood of the covenant; and be not content with less salvation than God has provided for thee. Thou art not straightened in God, be not straightened in thy own bowels.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. There is, therefore, now no condemnation] To do justice to St. Paul's reasoning, this chapter must be read in the closest connexion with the preceding. There we have seen the unavailing struggles of an awakened Jew, who sought pardon and holiness from that law which he was conscious he had broken, and in which he could find no provision for pardon; and no power to sanctify. This conviction having brought him to the very brink of despair; and being on the point of giving up all hope, he hears of redemption by Jesus Christ, thanks God for the prospect he has of salvation, applies for, and receives it; and now magnifies God for the unspeakable gift of which he has been made a partaker.

Those who restrain the word now, so as to indicate by it the gospel dispensation only, do not take in the whole of the apostle's meaning. The apostle has not been dealing in general matters only, but also in those which are particular:

me free from [a] the law of sin and death.

3 For, [b] what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, [c] God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and [d] for sin, condemned sin in the flesh:

4 That the righteousness of the law might be

[c] Gal. 3. 13. 2 Cor. 5. 21.——[d] Or, by a sacrifice for sin.

He has not been pointing out merely the difference between the two dispensations, the Mosaic and the Christian; but he marks out the state of a penitent under the former, and that of a believer under the latter. The last chapter closed with an account of the deep distress of the penitent; this one opens with an account of his salvation. The now, therefore, in the text, must refer more to the happy transition from darkness to light, from condemnation to pardon, which this believer now enjoys: than to the Christian dispensation taking the place of the Jewish œconomy.

Who walk not after the flesh, &c.] In this one verse we find the power and virtue of the gospel scheme: it pardons and sanctifies; the Jewish law could do neither. By faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, the penitent, condemned by the law, is pardoned; the carnal man, labouring under the overpowering influence of the sin of his nature, is sanctified. He is first freely justified; he feels no condemnation: he is fully sanctified, he walks not after the FLESH, but after the SPIRIT.

This last clause is wanting in the principal MSS. Versions and Fathers. Griesbach has excluded it from the text, and Dr. White says, certissimè delenda; it should most undoubtedly be expunged. Without it, the passage reads thus: There is, therefore, no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus; for the law of the spirit of life, &c. It is a fairly assumed point, that those which are in Christ Jesus, who believe in his name, have redemption in his blood; are made partakers of his Spirit, and have the mind in them that was in him; will not walk after the flesh, but after the Spirit: therefore, the thing itself is included in the being in Christ, whether it be expressed or not: and it was probably to make the thing more obvious, that this explanatory clause was added by some copyist; for it does not appear to have made an original part of the text: and it is most likely that it was inserted here from the fourth verse.

Verse 2. For the law of the Spirit of life] The gospel of the grace of Christ, which is not only a law or rule of life, but affords that sovereign energy by which guilt is removed from the conscience, the power of sin broken, and its polluting influence removed from the heart. The law was a spirit of death, by which those who were under it were bound down, because of their sin, to condemnation and death. The gospel proclaims Jesus the Saviour; and what the law bound unto death, IT looses unto life eternal. And thus the apostle says, whether of himself or the man whom he is still personating, the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. Most people allow, that St. Paul is here speaking of his own state; and this state is so totally different from that described in the preceding chapter, that it is absolutely impossible that they should have been the state of the same being, at one and the same time. No creature could possibly be carnal, sold under sin, brought into captivity to the law of sin and death; and at the same time be made free from that law of sin and death, by the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus! Until the most palpable absurdities and contradictions can be reconciled; these two opposite states can never exist in the same person at the same time.

Verse 3. For what the law could not do] The law could not pardon; the law could not sanctify; the law could not dispense with its own requisitions; it is the rule of righteousness, and therefore must condemn unrighteousness. This is its unalterable nature. Had there been perfect obedience to its dictates; instead of condemning, it would have applauded and rewarded; but, as the flesh, the carnal and rebellious principle had prevailed, and transgression had taken place; it was rendered weak, inefficient to undo this work of the flesh, and bring the sinner into a state of pardon and acceptance with God.

God sending his own Son, in the likeness of sinful flesh] Did that which the law could not do; i. e. purchased pardon for the sinner, and brought every believer into the favour of God. And this is effected by the incarnation of Christ: He in whom dwelt the fulness of the Godhead bodily, took upon him the likeness of sinful flesh, that is, a human body like ours; but not sinful as ours: and for sin, και περι αμαρτιας, and as a SACRIFICE FOR SIN, (this is the sense of the word in a multitude of places,) condemned sin in the flesh; condemned that to death and destruction, which had condemned us to both: and this he did,

Verse 4. That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us] That the guilt might be pardoned through the merit of that sacrifice; and that we might be enabled, by the power of his own grace and Spirit, to walk in newness of life: loving God with all our heart, soul, mind, and strength; and our neighbour as ourselves: and thus the righteousness, the spirit, design, and purpose of the law is fulfilled in us, through the strength of the Spirit of Christ, which is here fulfilled in us, [a] who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

5 For [b] they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit [c] the things of the Spirit.

6 For [d] to [e] be carnally minded is death; but [f] to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

7 Because [g] the [h] carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, [i] neither indeed can be.

8 So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, put in opposition to the weakness of the law through the flesh.

It is very likely that the concluding clause of this verse, which is the very same as that found in the common text of the first verse, has been transferred to that verse, from this place.

Condemned sin in the flesh] The design and object of the incarnation and sacrifice of Christ were to condemn sin, to have it executed and destroyed; not to tolerate it as some think; or to render it subservient to the purposes of his grace, as others; but to annihilate its power, guilt, and being, in the soul of a believer.

Verse 5. For they that are after the flesh] And here is the great distinction between Jews and genuine Christians: the former are after the flesh; are under the power of the carnal, rebellious principle; and consequently mind, φρονουσιν, relish the things of the flesh; the things which appertain merely to the present life; having no relish for spiritual and eternal things.

But they that are after the Spirit] They who are regenerated, who are born of the Spirit, being redeemed from the influence and law of the carnal mind; these relish the things of the Spirit; they are spiritually minded, and pass through things temporal, so as not to lose the things which are eternal. And this, which in these apostolic times distinguished between the carnal Jew, and the spiritual believer in Christ, is the grand mark of distinction between the nominal and the real Christian now. The former are earthly minded, and live for this world; the latter are spiritually minded, and live for the world to come.

Verse 6. For, to be carnally minded is death] To live under the influence of the carnal mind, is to live in the state of condemnation; and consequently, liable to death eternal: whereas, on the contrary, he who is spiritually minded, has the life and peace of God in his soul; and is in full prospect of life eternal.

Verse 7. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God] Because it is a carnal mind, and relishes earthly and sinful things; and lives in opposition to the pure and holy law of God: therefore, it is enmity against God, it is irreconcileable and implacable hatred.

It is not subject to the law of God] It will come under no obedience; for it is sin, and the very principle of rebellion; and therefore it cannot be subject, nor subjected; for it is essential to sin to show itself in rebellion; and when it ceases to rebel, it ceases to be sin.

From this we learn, that the design of God, in the œconomy of the gospel, is not to weaken, curtail, or lay the carnal principle in bonds, but to destroy it. As it is not subject, and cannot be subject to the law of God, it must be destroyed; else it will continue to rebel against God. It cannot be mended, or rendered less offensive in its nature, even by the operations of God; it is ever sin, and sin is ever enmity; and enmity, wherever it has power, will invariably show itself in acts of hostility and rebellion.

Verse 8. So then] Because this carnal mind is enmity against God; they that are in the flesh, who are under the power of the workings of this carnal mind, (which every soul is, that has not received redemption in the blood of the Lamb,)

Cannot please God.] Because of the rebellious workings of this principle of rebellion and hatred. And, if they cannot please God, they must be displeasing to him; and consequently in the broad road to final perdition.

Verse 9. But ye are not in the flesh] Ye Christians who have believed in Christ Jesus, as the sin-offering which has condemned sin in the flesh; and having been justified by faith, and made partakers of the Holy Spirit, are enabled to walk in newness of life.

If so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you] Or seeing that, ειπερ, the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. The flesh, the sinful principle, dwelt in them before; and its motions were the proofs of its indwelling: but now the Spirit dwells in them; and its testimony in their conscience, and its powerful operations in their hearts, are the proofs of its indwelling. God made man in union with himself, and his heart was his temple. Sin being committed, the temple was defiled, and God abandoned it. Jesus Christ is come by his sacrifice and Spirit to cleanse the temple, and make man again a habitation of God through the Spirit. And when this Almighty Spirit again makes the heart his residence; then the soul is delivered from the moral effects of the fall. And, that this is absolutely necessary to our present peace, and if so be that [a] the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not [b] the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness.

11 But, if the Spirit of [c] him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, [d] he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies [e] by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12 [f] Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

13 For [g] if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do [h] mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

final salvation, is proved from this: that if any man have not the Spirit of Christ; the mind that was in him, produced there, by the power of the Holy Ghost; he is none of his, he does not belong to the kingdom, flock, or family of God. This is an awful conclusion! Reader, lay it to heart.

Verse 10. And if Christ be in you, &c.] This is the criterion, by which you may judge of the state of grace in which ye stand. If Christ dwell in your hearts by faith, the body is dead because of sin; δι' αμαρτιαν, in reference to sin; the members of your body no more perform the work of sin, than the body of a dead man does the functions of natural life. Or the apostle may mean, that although, because of sin, the life of man is forfeited; and the sentence, dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return, must be fulfilled on every human being, till the judgment of the great day; yet, their souls being quickened by the indwelling Spirit of Christ, which enables them to live a life of righteousness, and gives them a full assurance that their bodies, which are now condemned to death because of sin, shall be raised again to a life of immortal glory.

Verse 11. But, if the Spirit, &c.] This verse confirms the sense given to the preceding. He, who here receives the grace and Spirit of Christ, and continues to live under its influence a life of obedience to the Divine will; shall have a resurrection to eternal life: and the resurrection of Christ shall be the pattern, after which they shall be raised.

By his Spirit that dwelleth in you.] Instead of δια του ενοικουντος αυτου πνευματος, because of the Spirit of him who dwelleth in you, DEFG, a great many others, with the Vulgate, Itala, and several of the Fathers, have δια το ενοικουν αυτου πνευμα, which gives almost no variety of meaning. The latter may be neater Greek, but it is not better sense than the preceding.

Verse 12. Therefore, brethren, &c.] Dr. Taylor is of opinion that the apostle, having spoken separately both to Jews and Gentiles, concerning holiness, and the obligations to it, now addresses himself to both conjointly, and,

I. Draws the general conclusion from all his arguments upon this subject, ver. 12.

II. Proves the validity of their claims to eternal life, ver. 14—17.

III. And as the affair of suffering persecution was a great stumbling-block to the Jews, and might very much discourage the Gentiles; he introduces it to the best advantage, ver. 17. and advances several arguments to fortify their minds under all trials: as—(1.) That they suffered with Christ—(2.) In order to be glorified with him in a manner which will infinitely compensate all sufferings, ver. 17, 18.—(3.) All mankind are under various pressures, longing for a better state, ver. 19—22.—(4.) Many of the most eminent Christians are in the same distressed condition, ver. 23.—(5.) According to the plan of the gospel, we are to be brought to glory after a course of patience, exercised in a variety of trials, ver. 24, 25.—(6.) The Spirit of God will supply patience to every upright soul under persecution and suffering, 26, 27.—(7.) All things, even the severest trials, shall work together for their good, ver. 28. And this he proves, by giving us a view of the several steps which the wisdom and goodness of God have settled, in order to our complete salvation, ver. 29, 30. Thence he passes to the affair of our perseverance; concerning which he concludes, from the whole of his preceding arguments, that as we are brought into a state of pardon by the free grace of God, through the death of Christ, who is now our mediator in heaven; no possible cause, providing we continue to love and serve God, shall be able to pervert our minds, or separate us from his love in Christ Jesus, ver. 31—39. Therefore, αρα ουν, is the grand inference, from all that he has been arguing in relation to sanctity of life, both to the Gentiles, chap. vi. and to the Jews, chap. vii. and viii. to this verse, where I suppose he begins to address himself to both, in a body, to the end of the chapter. Taylor, pag. 317.

exclusively of an eternal death; for both, and especially the latter, are necessarily implied.

But if ye, through the Spirit] If ye seek that grace and spiritual help which the gospel of Christ furnishes; resist, and by resisting, mortify the deeds of the flesh, against which the law gave you no assistance; ye shall live a life of faith, love, and holy obedience here; and a life of glory hereafter.

Verse 14. For, as many as are led by the Spirit, &c.] No man who has not divine assistance can either find the way to heaven, or walk in it when found. As Christ, by his sacrificial offering, has opened the kingdom of God to all believers; and as a mediator, transacts the concerns of their kingdom before the throne: so the Spirit of God is the great agent here below, to enlighten, quicken, strengthen, and guide the true disciples of Christ; and all that are born of this Spirit are led and guided by it; and none can pretend to be the children of God, who are not thus guided.

Verse 15. Ye have not received the spirit of bondage] All that were under the law were under bondage to its rites and ceremonies; and as, through the prevalence of that corrupt nature with which every human being is polluted, and to remove which the law gave no assistance, they were often transgressing; consequently they had forfeited their lives, and were continually, through fear of death, subject to bondage, Heb. ii. 15. The believers in Christ Jesus were brought from under that law, and from under its condemnation; and, consequently, were freed from its bondage. The Gentiles were also in a state of bondage as well as the Jews; they had also a multitude of burdensome rites and ceremonies, and a multitude of deities to worship; nor could they believe themselves secure of protection while one of their almost endless host of gods, celestial, terrestrial, or infernal, was left unpropitiated.

But ye have received the Spirit of adoption] Ye are brought into the family of God by adoption; and the agent that brought you into this family, is the Holy Spirit; and this very Spirit continues to witness to you the grace in which ye stand, by enabling you to call God your Father, with the utmost filial confidence and affection.

The Spirit of adoption] Adoption was an act frequent among the ancient Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans; by which a person was taken out of one family, and incorporated with another. Persons of property, who had no children of their own, adopted those of another family. The child thus adopted, ceased to belong to his own family, and was, in every respect, bound to the person who had adopted him, as if he were his own child; and in consequence of the death of his adopting father, he possessed his estates. If a person, after he had adopted a child, happened to have children of his own; then the estate was equally divided between the adopted and real children. The Romans had regular forms of law, by which all these matters were settled.

Whereby we cry Abba, Father.] The reason why the Syriac and Greek words are here conjoined, may be seen in the note on Mark xiv. 36. to which the reader is referred. The introduction of the words here, shows that the persons in question had the strongest evidence of the excellence of the state in which they stood; they knew that they were thus adopted; and they knew this by the Spirit of God which was given them on their adoption: and let me say, they could know it by no other means. The Father who had adopted them, could be seen by no mortal eye; and the transaction being purely of a spiritual nature, and transacted in heaven, can be known only by God's supernatural testimony of it upon earth. It is a matter of such solemn importance to every Christian soul, that God in his mercy has been pleased not to leave it to conjecture, assumption, or inductive reasoning; but attests it by his own Spirit in the soul of the person whom he adopts through Christ Jesus. It is the grand and most observable case, in which the intercourse is kept up between heaven and earth; and the genuine believer in Christ Jesus, not left to the quibbles or casuistry of polemic divines or critics, but receives the thing, and the testimony of it, immediately from God himself. And were not the testimony of the state thus given, no man could possibly have any assurance of his salvation which would beget confidence and love. If, to any man, his acceptance with God be hypothetical, then, his confidence must be so too. His love to God must be hypothetical, his gratitude hypothetical, and his obedience also. IF, God have forgiven me my sins, then I should love him, and I should be grateful, and I should testify this gratitude by obedience. But who does not see that these must necessarily depend on the IF in the first case. All this uncertainty, and the perplexities necessarily resulting from it; God has precluded by sending the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, by which we cry Abba, Father: and thus our adoption into the heavenly family is testified and ascertained to us in the only way in which it can possibly be done, by the direct influence of the Spirit of God. Remove this from Christianity, and it is a dead letter.

It has been remarked that slaves were not permitted to use the term Abba, father, or Imma, mother, in accosting their masters and mistresses. The Hebrew canon, relative to this, is extant in the tract Berachoth, fol. 16. 2. העכרים והשפחות אין קורין אותם לא אבא פלוני ולא אימא פלונית ha âbadim ve hashephachoth ein korin otham, lo Abba N, velo Imma N. Men-servants and maid-servants do not call to their master Abba, (father,) N. nor to their mistress Imma, (mother,) N. And from this, some suppose that the apostle intimates, that being now brought from under the spirit of bondage in which they durst not call God their Father; they are now not only brought into a new state, but have got that language which is peculiar to that state. It is certain that no man who has not redemption in the blood of the cross, has any right to call God Father, but merely as he may be considered the Father of the spirits of all flesh.

Some have supposed that the apostle, by using the Syriac and Greek words which express Father, shows the union of Jewish and Gentile believers in those devotions which were dictated by a filial spirit. Others have thought, that these were the first words which those generally uttered, who were made partakers of the Holy Spirit. It is enough to know that it was the language of their sonship; and that it expressed the clear assurance they had of being received into the Divine favour, the affection and gratitude they felt for this extraordinary blessing, and their complete readiness to come under the laws and regulations of the family, and to live in the spirit of obedience.

Verse 16. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit] Αυτο το πνευμα· that same Spirit, the Spirit of adoption; that is, the Spirit who witnesses this adoption, which can be no other than the Holy Ghost himself, and certainly cannot mean any disposition or affection of mind which the adopted person may feel; for such a disposition must arise from a knowledge of this adoption; and the knowledge of this adoption cannot be given by any human or earthly means; it must come from God himself: therefore, the αυτο το πνευμα must have reference to that Spirit, by whom alone the knowledge of the adoption is witnessed to the soul of the believer.

With our spirit—In our understanding, the place or recipient of light and information; and the place or faculty to which such information can properly be brought. This is done that we may have the highest possible evidence of the work which God has wrought. As the window is the proper medium to let the light of the sun into our apartments; so the understanding is the proper medium of conveying the Spirit's influence to the soul. We, therefore, have the utmost evidence of the fact of our adoption, which we can possibly have: we have the word and Spirit of God; and the word sealed on our spirit by the Spirit of God. And this is not a momentary influx: if we take care to walk with God, and not grieve the Holy Spirit, we shall have an abiding testimony; and while we continue faithful to our adopting Father, the Spirit that witnesses that adoption will continue to witnesss it; and hereby we shall know that we are of God by the Spirit which he giveth us.

Verse 17. And if children, then heirs] For the legitimate children can alone inherit the estate. This is not an estate to which they succeed in consequence of the death of a former possessor; it is like the promised land, given by God himself, and divided among the children of the family.

Heirs of God] It is neither an earthly portion nor a heavenly portion; but God himself, who is to be their portion. It is not heaven they are to inherit: it is God, who is infinitely greater and more glorious than heaven itself. With such powers has God created the soul of man, that nothing less than himself can be a sufficient and satisfactory portion for the mind of this most astonishing creature.

Joint heirs with Christ] Partaking of the same eternal glory with the glorified human nature of Christ.

If so be, that we suffer with him] Observe, says Dr. Taylor, how prudently the apostle advances to the harsh affair of suffering. He does not mention it, till he had raised up their thoughts to the highest object of joy and pleasure, the happiness and glory of a joint inheritance with the ever-blessed Son of God.

We are heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him—This, with the additional consideration, that we suffer with Christ; or, as he himself suffered, would greatly qualify the transitory afflictions of this world, and dispose them to attend to the other arguments he had to offer.

Verse 18. For I reckon that the sufferings, &c.] If the glory that is to be revealed be the enjoyment of God himself, (see above,) then the sufferings of this life, which, when compared with eternity, are but as for a moment; are not worthy to be put in competition with this glory which shall be revealed in us. This case is perfectly clear.

Verse 19. For, the earnest expectation of the creature] There is considerable difficulty in this and the four following verses: and the difficulty lies chiefly in the meaning of the word ἡ κτισις, which we translate the creature, and creation. Some think, that by it the brute creation is meant; others apply it to the Jewish people, others to the godly, others to the Gentiles, others to the good angels, and others to the fallen spirits, both angelic and human. Dissertations without end, have been written on it; and it does not appear that the Christian world are come to any general agreement on the subject. Dr. Lightfoot's mode of explanation appears to me to be the best, on the whole. "There is," says he, "a twofold key hanging at this place, which may unlock the whole, and make the sense plain and easy.

1. The first is the phrase πασα κτισις, which we render the whole creation, ver. 22. and with which we meet twice elsewhere in the New Testament. Mark xvi. 15, Preach the gospel, πασῃ τῃ κτισει, to every creature; and Col. i. 23, the gospel was preached, εν πασῃ τῃ κτισει, to every creature. Now it is sufficiently apparent what is meant by πασα κτισις in both these places, viz. all nations, or the heathen world. For that which, in St. Mark is, preach the gospel to every creature; is, in St. Matthew, go and teach, παντα τα εθνη, all nations. And this very phrase in this place, lays claim to that very interpretation. And the Hebrew כל הבריות col haberioth, which answers to the Greek πασα κτισις, every creature, is applied by the Jews to the Gentiles, and that, by way of opposition to Israel.

2. The second key is the word ματαιοτητι, ver. 20. which is not unfitly rendered vanity; but then this vanity is improperly applied to the vanishing, dying, changing state of the creation. For ματαιοτης, vanity, does not so much denote the vanishing condition of the outward state; as it does the inward vanity or emptiness of the mind. So the Apostle, speaking of the Gentiles concerning whom he speaks here, tells us εματαιωθησαν, They became vain in their imaginations, Rom. i. 21. and again, The Gentiles walk, εν ματαιοτητι, in the vanity of their mind, Eph. iv. 17. So also, The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, οτι ματαιοι εισι, that they are vain. 1 Cor. iii. 20. To all which let me add this farther observation, that throughout this whole place, the apostle seems to allude to the bondage of the Israelites in Egypt, and their deliverance from it; with a comparison made betwixt the Jewish and the Gentile church. When God would deliver Israel from his bondage, he challenges him for his Son, and his first-born, Exod. iv. 22. And in like manner the Gentiles earnestly expect and wait for such a kind of manifestation of the sons of God, within, and among themselves. The Romans, to whom the apostle writes, knew well how many predictions and promises it had pleased God to publish by his prophets, concerning gathering together and adopting sons to himself among the Gentiles; the manifestation of which sons the whole Gentile world, with a neck as it were stretched out, as the word αποκαραδοκια implies, (απο from, and καρα the head, and δοκαω to expect,) doth now wait for." See the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 20. For the creature was made subject to vanity] The Gentile world were subject to vanity of mind; but how? not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same. May we not say, it became vain willingly? but was made subject to vanity unwillingly. For, let us recur to the origin of Gentilism, the confusion of languages, by reason of the attempt to build the tower of Babel; and though there are some passages in the gloss of the Targumists upon this matter, that are sufficiently ridiculous; yet as to their scope and design they are worthy of notice. "They said, go to, let us build us a city and a tower, and let its head reach unto the top of heaven; and let us make a house of worship in the top of it; and let us put a sword in his hand that he may wage war for us against our enemies, before we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." It is an ancient tradition among the Jews, that this tower was built on an idolatrous account. The confusion of tongues, by which true religion was lost in the world, is a proof that the builders of this tower sinned against God in the highest degree. They were inclined to vanity, i. e. idolatry, WILLINGLY; but they were subjected to vanity UNWILLINGLY; for this proceeded from the just indignation and vengeance of God. From this time, the world lay under heathenism, till the bringing in of the gospel upwards of 2000 years after. See Lightfoot.

Verse 21. Because the creature] This, and the preceding

verse should be thus connected; in hope THAT (ὅτι) the creature itself also shall be delivered. The word φθορα denotes, very frequently, sinful corruption. So 2 Pet. i. 4. Corruption through lust, φθορα εν επιθυμια. 2 Cor. xi. 3. lest your minds should be corrupted. 1 Cor. xv. 33. Evil communication corrupts good manners. The sense, therefore, of the apostle in this place, seems to be; the Gentile world shall, in time, be delivered from the bondage of their sinful corruption; i. e. the bondage of their lusts and vile affections; and be brought into such a noble liberty as the sons of God enjoy.

Verse 22. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth] If it be inquired how the Gentile world groaned and travailed in pain; let them who explain this of the fabric of the material world, tell us how that groans and travails? They must needs own it to be a borrowed and allusive phrase: but, in the sense above given, the very literal construction may be admitted.

Verse 23. And not only they, but ourselves also] Neither the Gentiles only, but we Jews also, (however we belong to a nation envious of the heathen,) to whom God hath granted the first fruits of the Spirit; we sigh among ourselves for their sakes, waiting for the adoption; that is, the redemption of our mystical body, whereof the Gentiles make a very great part. Lightfoot's works, vol. ii. pag. 359 and 707.

The scope and design of Saint Paul in these verses, may be thus summed up:—The apostle shows, that the whole creation is in a suffering state, into which it has been brought by the disobedience of one man, Adam; therefore, it was made subject to vanity; pain, sickness, and death; not willingly, for mankind had no part in that transgression, which "brought death into the world, and all our wo;" but God subjected the whole, purposing to afford them a deliverance, and infusing into every heart a hope that a more auspicious æra should take place; and it is through the influence of this hope, which every man possesses, that the present ills are so patiently borne, because all are expecting better days. The great deliverer is the Messiah, and the gospel days the auspicious æra which God intended to bring forward. They who believe in Christ, with a heart unto righteousness, are freed from the bondage of their sinful corruption, and brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God; and they look forward with joyous expectation, waiting for the general resurrection, when their bodies also shall be redeemed from corruption, and the whole man, body and soul, be adopted into the family of Heaven ABOVE; as their souls had been previously adopted into the family of faith BELOW. And although it may be said that the redemption provided by the gospel, cannot be an object of hope to those who have never heard of it; yet, as every man has hope, and this hope is inspired by God for this very purpose, that it may be the means of supporting them in the ills of life; and God, in inspiring it, had respect to the glorious state of Christianity; therefore, it is this state, in effect, that the whole creation are longing for. So Jesus Christ is said, by the prophet Haggai, ii. 7. to be the desire of all nations; and yet not one of the nations of the earth had, at that time, heard of him. And thus, as Dr. Whitby has very properly remarked, "desire and expectation are ascribed to creatures, in reference to things they want, and which tend to their advantage; notwithstanding they explicitly know nothing of them."

Verse 24. For we are saved by hope] We are supported, and are comfortable in the expectation we have of receiving, from the hand of our God all the good we need, in the troubles and adversities of this life; and in having our bodies raised from corruption and death, at the general resurrection.

Hope that is seen, is not hope.] As hope signifies the expectation of future good; so, it necessarily supposes that the object of it is not seen, i. e. not enjoyed; for to see, in scripture language, sometimes signifies to enjoy, as in Job vii. 7. Mine eyes shall no more SEE, (margin,) ENJOY good, Job ix. 25, My days flee away, and SEE no good; i. e. enjoy no prosperity. Psal. l. 23, I will SHOW the salvation of God: I will give that man to enjoy my salvation who walks uprightly. Matt. v. 8, Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall SEE God: that is, they shall enjoy his favour and blessing. See also, John iii. 36. Heb. xii. 14. and 1 John iii. 2. The hope that is seen, that is enjoyed, is no longer hope; it is fruition: and a man cannot hope for that which he has in his possession.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for, [a] we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but [b] the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

Verse 25. But if we hope for that we see not] If we have a well-grounded expectation of our resurrection, and final glorification, knowing that such things are necessarily future, and must, for a certain time, be delayed; then do we patiently wait for them, continue patiently to endure the common ills of life, and whatever tribulations we may be exposed to in consequence of our Christian profession; for we know, FAITHFUL is he who has promised. Hope is a sort of universal blessing; and one of the greatest which God has granted to man. To mankind, in general, life would be intolerable without it: and it is as necessary as faith is, even to the followers of God.

The ancients have a very instructive and elegant fable concerning it. "Prometheus having made a human body, went up to heaven, and stole some celestial fire to animate it: Jupiter, incensed at the theft, sent down Pandora, with a box full of diseases and plagues of every kind, as an ensnaring present to Prometheus; but he refused to accept it. Epimetheus took and opened it, and instantly all those diseases, &c. by which mankind have been made miserable, flew out, and spread themselves over the whole earth; and only HOPE remained at the bottom of the box." This fable explains itself, as to its main design. Men find life, with its various and unavoidable ills, only supportable by the hope they have of not only getting safely through them, but of enjoying a state of blessedness in the end. Hope is still at the bottom; and therefore man is encouraged to bear up in all the pressures of life. Take away hope, and then black despair, and indescribable wretchedness, would be the instant result. Hope stands justly among the highest mercies of God.

Verse 26. The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities] The same Spirit, το πνευμα, mentioned before, as bearing witness with ours, that we are the children of God; and consequently, it is not a disposition, or frame of mind, for the disposition of our mind surely cannot help the infirmities of our minds.

The word συναντιλαμβανεται is very inadequately expressed by helpeth. It is compounded of συν together, αντι against, and λαμβανομαι, to support, or help; and signifies such assistance as is afforded by any two persons to each other, who mutually bear the same load; or carry it between them. He who prays, receives help from the Spirit of God; but he who prays not, receives no such help. Whatever our strength may be, we must put it forth, even while most implicitly depending on the strength of God himself.

For, we know not what we should pray for as we ought] And should, therefore, be liable to endless mistakes in our prayers, if suitable desires were not excited by the Holy Spirit; and power received, to bring these desires, by prayer, before the throne of grace.

But the Spirit itself] Αυτο το πνευμα, the same Spirit, viz. the Spirit that witnesses of our adoption and sonship, ver. 15, 16. makes intercession for us; surely if the apostle had designed to teach us, that he meant our own sense and understanding by the Spirit, he never could have spoken in a manner in which plain common sense was never likely to comprehend his meaning. Besides, how can it be said that our own spirit, our filial disposition, bears witness with our own spirit; that our own spirit helps the infirmities of our own spirit; that our own spirit teaches our own spirit that of which it is ignorant; and that our own spirit maketh intercession for our own spirit, with groanings unutterable? This would have been both incongruous and absurd. We must therefore understand these places of that help and influence which the followers of God receive from the Holy Ghost; and consequently, of the fulfilment of the various promises, relative to this point which our Lord made to his disciples, particularly in John, xiv. 16, 17. and 26. xv. 26, 27. xvi. 7. and particularly ver. 13. and 14. Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.

Verse 27. He maketh intercession for the saints] The word εντυγχανω, signifies to apply onesself to a person in behalf of another: to intercede, or negotiate for. vation. And the Spirit of God makes intercession for the saints; not by supplication to God on their behalf, but by directing and qualifying their supplications in a proper manner, by his agency and influence upon their hearts; which, according to the gospel scheme, is the peculiar work and office of the Holy Spirit. See Taylor.

According to the will of God.] Κατα Θεον· According to the mind, intention, or design of God. And thus the prayers which we offer up, and the desires which subsist in the unutterable groanings, are all such as are pleasing in the sight of God. So that God, whose is the Spirit, and who is acquainted with the mind of the Spirit, knows what he means when he leads the saints to express themselves in words, desires, groans, sighs, or tears; in each, God reads the language of the Holy Ghost; and prepares the answer according to the request.

From all this we learn, that a fluency in prayer is not essential to praying: a man may pray most powerfully in the estimation of God, who is not able to utter even one word. The unutterable groan is big with meaning, and God understands it, because it contains the language of his own Spirit. Some desires are too mighty to be expressed; there is no language expressive enough to give them proper form, and distinct vocal sound. Such desires show that they came from God; and as they came from him, so they express what God is disposed to do; and what he has purposed to do. This is a matter of great encouragement to all those, who are agonizing to enter in at the strait gate.

Verse 28. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God] To understand this verse aright let us observe—1. That the persons in whose behalf all things work for good, are they who love God; and consequently, who live in the spirit of obedience.—2. It is not said that all things shall work for good; but that συνεργει they work now in the behalf of him who loveth now, αγαπωσι; for both verbs are in the present tense.—3. All these things work together; while they are working, God's providence is working, his Spirit is working, and they are working TOGETHER with him. And whatever troubles, or afflictions, or persecutions may arise, God presses them into their service; and they make a part of the general working, and are caused to contribute to the general good of this person who now loves God, and who is working by faith and love under the influence and operation of the Holy Ghost. They who say sin works for good to them that love God, speak blasphemous nonsense. A man who now loves God, is not now sinning against God; and the promise belongs only to the present time: and as love is the true incentive to obedience, the man who is entitled to the promise, can never, while thus entitled, (loving God,) be found in the commission of sin. But though this be a good general sense for those words, yet the all things mentioned here by the apostle, seem more particularly to mean those things mentioned in the 28th, 29th, and 30th verses.

To them who are the called according to his purpose.] Dr. Taylor translates τοις κλητοις, the invited; and observes, that it is a metaphor taken from inviting guests, or making them welcome to a feast. As if he had said, certainly all things work together for their good; for this reason, because they are called, invited, or made welcome to the blessings of the covenant, (which is ratified in eating of the covenant sacrifice,) according to God's original purpose first declared to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 4. Thou shalt be a father of many nations—and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him, xviii. 18. Thus this clause is to be understood; and thus it is an argument to prove, that all things, how afflictive soever, shall work for our good, while we continue to love God. Our being called or invited, according to God's purpose, proves that all things work for our good, on the supposition that we love God, and not otherwise. For our loving God, or making a due improvement of our calling, is evidently inserted by the apostle to make good his argument. He does not pretend to prove that all things shall concur to the everlasting happiness of all that are called; but only to those of the called, who love God. Our calling, thus qualified, is the ground of his argument, which he prosecutes and completes in the two next verses. Our calling he takes for granted, as a thing evident and unquestionable among all Christians. But you will say, how is it evident and unquestionable that we are called? I answer, from our being in the visible church, and professing the faith of the gospel. For always, in the apostolic writings, all that are in the visible church, and profess the faith of the gospel, are numbered among the called or invited: i. e. among the persons who are invited to feast on the covenant sacrifice; and who thus, in reference to themselves, confirm and ratify the covenant. As for what is termed effectual calling, as distinguished from the general invitations of the gospel, it is a distinction which divines have invented without any warrant from the Sacred Writings. Our calling, therefore, is considered by the apostle, in the nature of a self-evident proposition, which nobody doubts or denies; or which, indeed, no Christian ought to doubt, or can call in question. Taylor's Notes.

Verse 29. For whom he did foreknow, &c. "In this, and the following verse, the apostle shows how our calling is an argument that all things work together to advance our eternal happiness; by showing the several steps which the wisdom and goodness of God have settled, in order to complete our salvation. In order to this, he first gives us, in this verse, the foundation and finishing; or the beginning and end of the scheme of our redemption: For whom God did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son. To foreknow, here, signifies to design before, or at the first forming of the scheme: to bestow the favour and privilege of being God's people upon any set of men, as Rom. xi. 2. This is the foundation, or first step of our salvation; namely, the purpose and grace of God, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began, 2 Tim. i. 9. Then, he knew or favoured us, for in this sense the word to know, is taken in a great variety of places, both in the Old and New Testaments. And as he knew the GENTILES then, when the scheme was laid, and before any part of it was executed; consequently, in reference to the execution of this scheme, he foreknew us. This is the first step of our salvation; and the end or finishing of it, is our conformity to the Son of God in eternal glory, ver. 17. which includes and supposes our moral conformity to him. When God knew us at the forming of the gospel scheme, or when he intended to bestow on us the privilege of being his people; he then destinated, or designed us to be conformed to the image of his Son: and as he destinated or determined us then to this very high honour and happiness; he pre-destinated, fore-ordained, or pre-determined us to it. Thus we are to understand the foundation and finishing of the scheme of our salvation. The foundation is the fore-knowledge, or gracious purpose of God; the finishing is our being joint heirs with Christ. Now our calling, or invitation, (see on ver. 28.) stands in connexion with both these—1. It stands in connexion with God's fore-knowledge; and so it is a true and valid calling: for we are called, invited, or chosen according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, who may bestow his blessings upon any people, as may seem good in his sight, 1 Pet. i. 2. Consequently, we have a good title to the blessings of the gospel to which we are called or invited. And this was to be proved, that the Jew, to whom the apostle particularly wrote, might see that the Gentiles, being now called into the church of God, was not an accidental thing, but a matter which God had determined when he conceived the gospel scheme. Thus our calling is connected with God's fore-knowledge.—2. It stands also in connexion with our being conformed to the image of his Son; for we are invited by the gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ, 2 Thess. ii. 14. And therefore, supposing what the apostle supposes, that we love God, it is certain from our being called, that we shall be glorified with the sons of God; and so our calling proves the point, that all things should work together for our good, in our present state; because it proves that we are intended for eternal glory, as he shows in the next verse. For we must understand his fore-knowing, predestinating, calling, and justifying, in relation to his glorifying: and that none are finally glorified, but those, who, according to his purpose, are conformed to the image of his Son." Taylor.

The first-born among many brethren.] That he might be the chief, or head of all the redeemed: for HIS human nature is the first fruits of the resurrection from the dead; and He is the first human being, that, after having passed through death, was raised to eternal glory. See Dr. Taylor.

Verse 30. Whom he did predestinate, &c.] The Gentiles, whom He determined to call into his church with the Jewish people; He called, He invited by the preaching of the gospel, to believe on his Son Jesus Christ. It is worthy of note, that all that is spoken here, refers to what had already taken place; for the calling, justifying, and glorifying, are here represented as having already taken place, as well as the fore-knowing and the predestinating. It is therefore reasonable to suppose, that the apostle refers to what God had already done among the Jews and Gentiles: though he may also speak of the things that were not, as though they were.

He also justified] Pardoned the sins of all those who, with hearty repentance, and true faith, turned unto him.

He also glorified.] He has honoured and dignified the Gentiles with the highest privileges; and he has already taken many of them to the kingdom of glory; and many more are on their way thither; and all who love him, and continue faithful unto death, shall inherit that glory eternally. Hence it is added, them he also glorified; for all the honours which he confers on them have respect to, and are intended to promote their endless felicity: and though the terms are here used in a more general sense, yet if we take whom he called, them he also [a]justified: and whom he justified, them he also [b]glorified.

31 What shall we then say to these things? [c]If God be for us, who can be against us?

them more restrictedly, we must consider that, in the work of justification, sanctification is implied; justification being the foundation and beginning of that work. From all this we learn, that none will be glorified who have not been sanctified and justified: that the justified are those who have been called or invited by the gospel of Christ. That those who have had this calling, are they to whom God determined to grant this privilege: they did not choose this salvation first; but God sent it to them, when they knew him not: and therefore the salvation of the Gentile world, as well as that of the Jews, comes through the gratuitous mercy of God himself, was the result of infinite designs; and stands on the same ground as the calling, &c. of the Jewish people. The word Δοξα, which we render glory, and δοξαζω, to glorify, both mean to render illustrious, eminent, &c. &c. in various parts of the New Testament; and in this sense the verb is used, John xi. 4. xii. 23, 28. xiii. 31, 32. xiv. 13. xv. 8. xxi. 19. Acts iii. 13. and in Rom. xi. 13. in none of which places eternal beatification can be intended. Here it seems to mean, that those whom God had called into a state of justification, he had rendered illustrious by innumerable gifts, graces and privileges; in the same manner as he had done to the Israelites of old.

The whole of the preceding discourse will show that every thing here is conditional, as far as it relates to the ultimate salvation of any person professing the gospel of Christ; for the promises are made to character; and not to persons, as some have most injudiciously affirmed. The apostle insists upon a character, all along from the beginning of the chapter: ver. 1. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Ver. 13, If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die, &c. The absolute necessity of holiness to salvation, is the very subject of his discourse; this necessity he positively affirms, and establishes by the most solid arguments. At the very entrance of his argument here, he takes care to settle the connexion between our calling, and our love and obedience to God, on purpose to prevent that mistake into which so many have fallen, through their great inattention to the scope of his reasoning. Ver. 28. All things shall work together for good—To whom? To THEM that LOVE GOD: to them that are the called according to his purpose. To them that love God, because they are called according to his purpose; for those only who love God, can reap any benefit by this predestination, vocation, or any other instance of God's favour. See the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 31. What shall we then say to these things?] What conclusions should we draw from the above premises? From all that was already laid down in the preceding chapters, but especially in the preceding verses, from ver. 28—30. inclusive. As if he had said—What comfort may we derive from these doctrines? God has called us all to holiness; and to love to him, which is the principle of holiness. We are persecuted and despised, it is true, and we may be more so; but, as God has called us to love him, and all things work together for good to them that love him: and as his covenant with Abraham, while he was in his Gentile state, shows his gracious purpose towards us Gentiles, whom he has foreknown, who have been objects of his gracious fore-knowledge, as well as the Jews; and who have now the fullest proof that we were so, by his sending us the gospel; and showing us in it, that if the Israelites were to be a holy priesthood, a royal nation, we are no less favoured, as he has predestinated, from the beginning determined, that we should be conformed to the image of his Son, who is to be the first-born among many brethren, the head and chief of all converted Jews and Gentiles; and, in order to our final salvation, has called, invited us to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; has justified those who do believe, and has glorified, highly honoured, and adorned them with innumerable gifts and graces; and if they continue to possess that faith which worketh by love, will bring them, both body and soul, to his eternal glory; their bodies being made like unto his glorious body. Seeing, therefore, all these things are so, what comfort in our tribulations shall we derive from them?—Why this: If God be for us, who can be against us? He, who is infinitely wise, has undertaken to direct us: He who is infinitely powerful, has undertaken to protect us: He who is infinitely good, has undertaken to save us. What cunning, strength, or malice, can prevail against his wisdom, power, and goodness? None! Therefore, we are safe who love God: and not only shall sustain no essential damage by the persecutions of ungodly men; but even these things work together for our good.

Verse 32. He that spared not his own Son] And can we, his sincere followers, doubt of the safety of our state, or the certainty of his protection? No—for if he loved us, Gentiles and Jews, so intensely, as to deliver up to death his he not with him also freely give us all things?

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? [a] It is God that justifieth, own Son for us all, can he withhold from us any minor blessing? Nay, will he not, on the contrary, freely give us all things? For if he told Abraham, who is the father of the faithful, and representative of us all; and with whom the covenant was made, that, because he had not withheld from him his only son Isaac, but delivered him up to that death which he thought his God had required; in blessing, he would bless him; and in multiplying, he would multiply him; that his seed should possess the gate of his enemies; and that in it, all the nations of the earth should be blessed, Gen. xxii. 16—19. Will HE not give us all that was spiritually intended by these promises, whose only begotten Son was not sacrificed in a figure, but really; in order to purchase every blessing that the soul of man can need; and that the hand of God can dispense.

Verse 33. This, and the two following verses, contain a string of questions most appropriately introduced, and most powerfully urged; tending to show the safety of the state of those who have believed the gospel of the grace of God. I shall lay these verses down as they are pointed by the best Greek critics:—

"Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect?—God who justifieth? Who is he that condemneth?—Christ who died? Or rather who is risen again? He, who is at the right hand of God? He, who maketh intercession for us? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?—Tribulation? or distress? or persecution? or famine? or nakedness? or peril? or sword?"—In all these questions the apostle intimates that, if neither GOD nor CHRIST would bring any charge against them who love him, none else could. And as God justifies, through Christ who died; consequently no charge can lie against these persons, as God alone could produce any; and He, so far from doing this, has justified, freely forgiven them their trespasses.

For the proper meaning and sense of the terms chosen, elect, called, &c. &c. see the discourse prefixed to this Epistle: and especially sect. vi. p. xxii. &c. and sect. vii. p. xxvii. &c.

Verse 34. Who is even at the right hand of God] To which he has exalted our human nature, which he took in conjunction with his divinity; and there, he maketh intercession for us: manages all the concerns of his own kingdom in general; and of every member of his church in particular.

Verse 35. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?] I do think, that this question has been generally misunderstood. The apostle is referring to the persecutions and tribulations to which genuine Christians were exposed through their attachment to Christ: and the gracious provision God had made for their support and final salvation. As in this provision, God had shown his infinite love to them in providing Jesus Christ as their sin-offering; and Jesus Christ had shown his love, in suffering death upon the cross for them; so, here, he speaks of the love of the followers of God, to that Christ who had first loved them. Therefore, the question is not, Who shall separate the love of Christ from us? or prevent Christ from loving us? But, who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Who or what shall be able to remove our affection from him? And the questions that immediately follow, show that this is the sense of the passage; for the tribulation, distress, &c. which he enumerates, are things by which they might be affected; but by which Christ could not be affected; and, consequently, the question most evidently refers to their love to him who had first loved them: and while it affords a strong presumption of their perseverance; furnishes a most powerful argument against apostacy.

Shall tribulation?] Θλιψις, grievous affliction, or distress of any kind: from θλιβω to compress, oppress, straiten, &c. any thing by which a man is rendered miserable.

Or distress?] Στενοχωρια, a word of nearly the same import with the former; but more intense in its signification. It signifies straitness, being hemmed in on every side, without the possibility of getting out, or escaping: from στενος strait, or narrow; and χωρος a place.

Or persecution?] Διωγμος from διωκω, to pursue, press upon, prosecute: signifies such pursuing as an enemy uses, in order to overtake the object of his malice, that he may destroy him.

Or nakedness?] Γυμνοτης, being absolutely without clothing; forcibly expressed by the derivation of the word γυια μονα εχων, having one's limbs only, being totally unclothed.

Or peril?] Κινδυνος, a state of extreme and continued danger, perplexing and distressing with grievous forebodings and alarms; derived from κινει τας οδυνας, it excites anguish; because much evil is felt, and much more feared.

Or sword?] Μαχαιρα, slaughter; the total destruction of life; and especially beheading, and such like, done by order of the civil magistrate; for the word is used in this Epistle, chap. xiii. 14. to signify the authority and power which he has of judicially terminating life; i. e. of inflicting capital punishment.

Verse 36. As it is written] And these are no more than we may naturally expect from the present constitution of the world; and the positive predictions of the prophet, Psal. xliv. 22. who foresaw that a wicked world would always persecute and oppress the true followers of God.

Verse 37. Nay] As the prophet adds, in the same place, all this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, nor dealt falsely in thy covenant, verse 17, 18. so all these things may happen unto US: but in all these things we are more than conquerors; WE abide faithful in the new covenant of our God; and HE is faithful who has promised to support and make us more than conquerors; i. e. to give us a complete triumph over sin, and death, and hell; not leaving one enemy unsubdued.

Verse 38. For, I am persuaded] After the blessed experience we have had of support, by the grace and Spirit of him that loved us; that neither fear of death, nor hope of life, nor evil angels, nor principalities, nor powers, persecuting us for Christ's sake; nor the things we endure at present, nor the things to come, whatever tribulation we may be called to suffer in future.

Verse 39. Nor height of honour; nor depth of ignominy; nor any other creature, ουτε τις κτισις ετερα, (nor any other thing whatever,) shall be able to separate us, who love God, from the love of God, which he has vouchsafed to us, in Christ Jesus. See Whitby. And for further observations on the subject of the 29th and 30th verses, see at the end of the epistle.

1. The confidence expressed by the apostle, at the end of this chapter, is as rational as it is bold. On the premises laid down by him, in reference to which he has most logically conducted his whole argument, the conclusion to which he arrives, is as natural and forcible as it is legitimate. The permanency of the Christian church, in all the tribulations it has endured from Pagans and Papists, is a full proof of the correctness of the apostle's reasoning. The true followers of Christ can never be forsaken by him. And his church, which is founded on the rock, can never be shaken down by the tempests of persecution. And what God does for his church in general, (the collective body of those who believe in the Lord Jesus, love and obey him,) he does for every individual in that body; no man that trusts in him can be confounded. While the love of God is in his heart, and the work of God in his hand, he may be as fully persuaded as he is of his own being; that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other thing whatsoever, shall be able to separate him from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. The Reader, who has any knowledge of what is great, commanding, and sublime in composition, will not hesitate to add here, with Dr. Taylor, "The conclusion of this chapter is the most elegant and sublime piece of writing I remember ever to have read. It is founded on the grand and solid principles of the gospel; it breathes the true Spirit of Christian magnanimity; raises our minds far above all things created; and shows, in a bright and heavenly view, the greatness of soul, and the strong consolation which the gospel inspires. God grant, that it may stand clear before our understandings, and be transcribed into all our hearts! They who despise the gospel, despise all that is great, and happy, and glorious!"

2. The doctrine of the necessity of personal holiness, so clearly and strongly laid down in the former part of this chapter, should be deeply considered by every person professing godliness: and while, from the viith chapter, they learn that they have an infected and morally diseased nature, they should learn from the viiith that, to destroy the work of the devil was Jesus Christ manifested; and that no soul can be said to be saved by Jesus Christ, who is not saved from its sins. What a full proof is it of the fallen state of man, that there should be found persons, professing Christianity, more fervent in their pleadings for the necessary continuance of indwelling sin, than they are for the mind that was in Christ. The seventh chapter, because there are some expressions, which being misunderstood, seem to favour this doctrine, is read and incessantly quoted: the viiith chapter, though given by the same inspiration, yet, because it so strongly shows the necessity of being saved from all sin, is seldom read, and scarcely ever quoted!

3. The restoration of the brute creation, to a state of happiness, has been thought by several, to be the doctrine of verses 19—25. In the notes on those verses, I have given reasons against this opinion; and have proved that the Gentiles, and not the irrational part of the creation, are the persons of whom the apostle speaks; nor can any consistent interpretation be given of the place, if it be applied to the brute creation. But although this doctrine is not contained in the above verses, it does not follow that the doctrine itself is not true. Indeed there are several reasons which render the supposition very probable. 1. The brute creation never sinned against God; nor are they capable of it; and, consequently, cannot be justly liable to punishment. 2. But the whole brute creation is in a state of suffering; and partake of the common infirmities and privations of life, as well as mankind: they suffer, but who can say that they suffer justly? 3. As they appear to be necessarily involved in the sufferings of sinful man; and yet neither through their fault nor their folly; it is natural to suppose that the Judge of all the earth, who ever does right, will find some means by which these innocent creatures shall be compensated for their sufferings. 4. That they have no compensation here, their afflictions, labours, and death, prove; and if they are to have any compensation, they must have it in another state. 5. God, the fountain of all goodness, must have originally designed them for that measure of happiness which is suited to the powers with which he had endowed them. But, since the fall of man, they never had that happiness; and, in their present circumstances, never can. 6. In reference to intelligent beings, God has formed his purposes in reference to their happiness, on the ground of their rational natures. He has decreed, that they shall be happy if they will, all the means of it being placed within their power; and, if they be ultimately miserable, it is the effect of their own unconstrained choice. Therefore, his purpose is fulfilled, either in their happiness or misery; because he has purposed that they shall be happy if they please; and that misery shall be the result of their refusal. 7. But it does not appear that the brute creation are capable of this choice; and it is evident that they are not placed in their present misery, through either their choice or their sin: and if no purpose of God can be ultimately frustrated, these creatures must be restored to that state of happiness for which they have been made and of which they have been deprived through the transgression of man. 8. To say, that the enjoyments which they have in this life, are a sufficient compensation, is most evidently false; for, had not sin entered into the world, they would have had much greater enjoyments, without pain, excessive labour and toil, and without death; and all those sufferings which arise from its pre-disposing causes. Nor does it appear that they have much happiness from eating, drinking, and rest, as they have these only in the proportion in which they are necessary to their existence, as the slaves of men. Therefore, allowing that they have even gratification and enjoyment in life, they have much less than they would have had, had not sin entered into the world; and, consequently, they have been deprived of the greater portion of the happiness designed for them by their bountiful Creator. 9. It is therefore obvious that the gracious purpose of God has not been fulfilled in them; and that, as they have not lost their happiness through their own fault, both the beneficence and justice of God are bound to make them a reparation. 10. Hence it is reasonable to conclude, that, as from the present constitution of things, they cannot have the happiness designed for them in this state, they must have it in another.

4. On the subject of the foreknowledge of God, some observations have been made at the conclusion of the notes on the 2d chapter of Acts. On the subject of the prescience and predestination mentioned here, verses 29 and 30, vast volumes have been written, and the Christian world greatly agitated and perplexed. These doctrines of men, have very little place in the texts in question. After a long and serious investigation of this business, I am led to conclude that, whether the doctrine of the decrees be true or false, it does not exist in these verses.

No portion of the word of God has been more unhappily misunderstood, than several parts of the Epistle to the Romans; because men have applied to individuals, what belongs to nations; and referred to eternity, transactions which have taken place in time.

We have already seen that one grand aim of the apostle in writing this Epistle, was—1. To prove, to both Jews and Gentiles, that they were all under sin, and that neither of them had any claim either on the justice or beneficence of God: yet he, of his own free mercy, had revealed himself to the Jews, and crowned them with innumerable privileges: and, 2. That as he was no respecter of persons, his mercy was as free to the Gentiles as to them, being equally their God as he was the God of the Jews; and therefore had, by the gospel, called them to a state of salvation; and to this display of his mercy, the two verses in question seem particularly to refer; and show us not what God will do for some selected individuals, but what he has already done for nations.

After having shown that the whole Gentile world was groaning and travailing in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God; he shows that it was, according to the affectionate purpose, προθεσις of God, that the Gentiles should be also called into the glorious liberty of the sons of God; into equal privileges with the Jews. He therefore represents them as objects of God's gracious foreknowledge. That the word προγινωσκω, which literally signifies to know, or discern beforehand; and to know so as to determine, signifies also to approve, or love before, to be well affected to, is not only evident from יָדַע yadâ, in Hebrew, but also from the simple verb γινωσκω, in Greek, by which it is translated; and to which the compound verb repeatedly answers, without any extension of meaning by means of the preposition, as its use, among the best Greek writers, proves: and it is evident that the apostle uses the word in the sense of loving, being graciously affected to, in chap. xi. 2. I say then, hath God cast away his people, which he FOREKNEW, ὃν προεγνω; to whom he has been so long, graciously affected? By no means. As, therefore, he had been so long graciously affected towards the Jews, so has he towards the Gentiles. His call of Abraham, and the promises made to him, are the proofs of it. The Jews, thus foreknown, were called into a glorious state of salvation, and endowed with privileges the most extraordinary ever bestowed on any people; as their whole history testifies. But is God the God of the Jews only? Is he not also the God of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also, chap. iii. 29. and to prove this, is the main subject of the ninth chapter. Now, as he is the God of the Gentiles, he foreknew, had from the beginning a gracious purpose to them as well as to the Jews: and being thus graciously disposed towards them, he determined προωρισε, from προ, before, and οριζω, to bound, define, &c. he defined, circumscribed, and determined the boundaries of this important business, from the beginning, that they also should be taken into his church, and conformed to the image of his Son: and as Jesus Christ was to be their pattern, it must be by his gospel that they should be brought into the church; and consequently, that bringing in, could not take place before the revelation of Christ. Having, therefore, thus foreknown, and thus predestinated them ALSO, he called them ALSO by the gospel; he justified them ALSO, on their believing; and he glorified them ALSO, dignified them also with the same privileges, blessings, honours, and divine gifts: so that they were now, what the Jews had been before, the peculiar people of God. The apostle, therefore, speaks here not of what they should be, or of what they might be, but of what they then were; the called, the justified, the highly honoured of God. See the note on ver. 30.

It is strange that so obvious a meaning of the passage should not have been noticed; but the word δοξαζω, which we render to glorify, and by which we understand eternal beatification, which it is very seldom used to express, being taken in this sense, in the passage in question, fixed the meaning of the preceding terms; and thus the whole passage was applied to things eternal, which had reference only to things in time. This seems to me to be the true key of the passage; and the whole scope of the Epistle, and especially of the context, which shows, that this is the sense in which it should be understood. The passages understood in this way, illustrate the infinite mercy and wisdom of God; they show that whatever appearances his providential dealings may assume of partiality towards any particular people, yet he is equally the Father of the spirits of all flesh; hateth nothing that he hath made; is loving to all; that his tender mercies are over all his works; and that he is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come unto the knowledge of the truth, and be saved. Hence, whatever he did for the Jews, he purposed to do for the Gentiles: if he foreknew, predestinated, called, justified, and glorified the former; he ALSO foreknew, predestinated, called, justified, and glorified the latter; having brought them into the same state of salvation, with a vast extension of blessings and higher degrees of honour. As the Jews forfeited their privileges, and now, instead of being glorified, instead of being highly honoured, and rendered illustrious, they are degraded, brought down, and rendered contemptible; because they have not made a proper use of their election, they are now reprobated: so a similar reverse awaits the Gentiles, if they sin after the similitude of their transgression: and, it is against this, that the apostle so solemnly warns them, chap. xi. 17—22. Because of unbelief they, (the Jews,) were broken off—thou (the Gentiles,) standest by faith.—If God spared not the NATURAL BRANCHES, take heed lest he also spare not THEE. Behold the goodness and severity of God! on them which FELL, severity; but towards THEE, goodness, IF THOU CONTINUE in his goodness; otherwise, THOU ALSO shalt be CUT OFF.

5. This is also a lesson of solemn instruction to Christians in general: God has called them into a glorious state of salvation; and has furnished them with every requisite help to enable them to work out that salvation with fear and trembling. As it is an awful thing to receive the grace of God in vain, (whether that grace imply the common benefits of the gospel, or those especial blessings received by believing souls;) so every person professing godliness, should be jealous over himself lest he should trifle with matters of eternal moment: for, should he even neglect so great a salvation, his escape would be impossible; Heb. ii. 3. and if so, to what severe punishment must they be exposed, who despise and reject it?

CHAPTER IX.

Paul expresses his great sorrow for the unbelief and obstinacy of the Jews, 1—3. Whose high privileges he enumerates, 4, 5. Points out the manner in which God has chosen to communicate the knowledge of his name, to both Jews and Gentiles; and how he deals, whether in judgment or mercy, with individuals; and produces the cases of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Esau, and Pharaoh, 6—17. God shows mercy and judgment as he thinks proper, and none has a right to find fault with his proceedings, 18—20. He has the same power over the human race, as the potter has over the clay, 21—23. The prophets predicted the calling of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews, 24—29. The Gentiles have attained to the knowledge of God's method of saving sinners; while the Jews have not attained this knowledge, 30, 31. The reason why the Jews have not attained the salvation provided for them in the gospel, 32, 33.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

To this, and the tenth chapter, Dr. Taylor has prefixed the following judicious summary:—

The apostle having largely proved, in the preceding chapters, that the grace of God extends to the Gentiles, as well as to the Jews; and that the dispensation of God's mercy was absolutely, and in itself, free to all who believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, in opposition to the merit of any works, or of conformity to any law whatever; and that the Gentiles have, by faith, a good title to the blessings of God's covenant; to which blessings the Jews cannot have a title any other way. Hitherto, the apostle has not considered the Jews as rejected, except in an indirect way; but that they had the possibility of continuing in the church, from entering into which they should not attempt to prevent the Gentiles, but allow them to be sharers in the mercies of God: and hence his language is in sum this: Why may not believing Gentiles be admitted, pardoned, and saved, as well as you?

But in this chapter, and the two following, the apostle considers the reception of the Gentiles into the kingdom and covenant of God, under the notion of calling or invitation, and of election or choice: which shows that he views the two parties in a light different to that in which he had before placed them. The Gentiles he considers as invited into the kingdom of God, and as chosen to be his people; and the Jews, he considers as left out and rejected; for, as the main body of them had now rejected the gospel of Christ, he saw that God was about to unchurch them, overturn their polity, destroy their temple, and disperse them over the face of the earth. Thus, he knew they would be accursed, or anathematized from Christ, and reduced to a level with the heathen nations of the world. And the event has proved that his declarations were dictated by the Spirit of truth.

It is observable, that agreeably to his delicate manner of writing, and his nice and tender treatment of his countrymen, he never mentions their rejection, a subject extremely painful to his thoughts, otherwise than in a wish, that he himself were accursed from Christ for them, or to prevent them from being accursed from Christ; (ix. 3.) till he comes to chap. xi. where he has much to say in their favour, even considered, as at present, rejected. But it is very evident that his arguments, in this chapter, rest on the supposition that the main body of the Jewish nation would be cast out of the visible kingdom of God; and it is for this reason, that in this, and the two following chapters, he considers the reception of any people into the kingdom and covenant of God under the relative notion of inviting and choosing; or of calling and election. The Jews were rejected and reprobated: the Gentiles were chosen and called, or elected. As this is most obviously the apostle's meaning, it is strange that any should apply his doctrine to the particular and unconditional reprobation and election of individuals.

It is upon this rejection of the Jews, that the calling and election of the Gentiles rest. If the Jews be not rejected, but are still the visible church and kingdom of God; then, the Gentiles, according to the most proper inference from the apostle's doctrine, have no right to the blessings of the kingdom. Instead of being invited or called, they are intruders at the heavenly feast; and this, the unbelieving Jews laboured to prove, and thus unhinge the believing Gentiles by persuading them that they were not duly taken into the church of God; that the Jews were, and ever must continue to be the only church and kingdom of God; and that they could not be cast off, so long as God was faithful to his promise to Abraham; and that the Gentiles were most miserably deceived, when they supposed they were brought into that kingdom by faith in Christ; whereas, there was no way of entering it, or of being entitled to its privileges, but by submitting to the law of Moses. This being the fixed opinion of the Jews, and the ground on which they opposed the Gentiles, and endeavoured to sap the foundation of their hope of salvation from the gospel of Christ; it was therefore a matter of the utmost importance to be able to prove, that the Jews, by rejecting Christ and his gospel, were themselves cast out of the church; and this, in a way perfectly consistent with the truth of the promise made to Abraham. He had slightly touched on this subject at the beginning of the 3d chapter; but it would have broken in too much on the thread of his discourse, to have pursued the argument there, for which reason he appears to have reserved it to this place; where he (1) solemnly declares his tenderest affection for his countrymen, and his real grief of heart for their infidelity, and consequent rejection, ver. 1—5. (2) answers objections against this rejection, ver. 6—23. (3) Proves the calling of the Gentiles, from their own scriptures, ver. 24—30. (4) Gives the true state and reasons of the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, ver. 30. to ver. 14. of chap. x. (5) Proves the necessity of the apostolic mission to the Gentiles, in order to their salvation, chap. x. 14. to the end.

And all this was intended, at once, to vindicate the divine dispensations, to convince the infidel Jew, to satisfy the believing Gentile that his calling or invitation into the church of God was valid; to arm him against the cavils and objections of the unbelieving Jews, and to dispose the Christian Jew to receive and own the believing Gentile as a member of the family and kingdom of God, by a divine right, equal to any, to which he himself could pretend. See Taylor's notes, p. 321, &c.

Verse 1. I say the truth in Christ, I lie not] This is one of the most solemn oaths any man can possibly take. He appeals to Christ as the searcher of hearts, that he tells the truth; asserts that his conscience was free from all guile in this matter, and that the Holy Ghost bore him testimony that what he said was true. Hence, we find that the testimony of a man's own conscience, and the testimony of the Holy Ghost, are two distinct things, and, that the apostle had both, at the same time.

As the apostle had still remaining a very awful part of his commission to execute, namely, to declare to the Jews not only that God had chosen the Gentiles, but had rejected them because they had rejected Christ and his gospel; it was necessary that he should assure them, that however he had been persecuted by them, because he had embraced the gospel, yet, it was so far from being a gratification to him that they had now fallen under the displeasure of God, that it was a subject of continual distress to his mind; and that it produced in him great heaviness and continual sorrow.

Verse 3. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ] This, and the two preceding verses are thus paraphrased by Dr. Taylor. I am so far from insisting on the doctrine (of the rejection of the Jews) out of any ill-will to my countrymen, that I solemnly declare in the sincerity of my heart, without the least fiction or dissimulation, and herein I have the testimony of my own conscience, enlightened and directed by the Spirit of God, that I am so far from taking pleasure in the rejection of the Jewish nation, that contrariwise, it gives me continual pain and uneasiness, insomuch that as Moses formerly, when God proposed to cut them off, and in their stead to make him a great nation, Exod. xxxii. 10. begged that he himself should rather die than that the children of Israel should be destroyed, ver. 32. So, I could even wish that the exclusion from the visible church, which will happen to the Jewish nation, might fall to my own share; if hereby they might be kept in it. And to this I am inclined by natural affection, for the Jews are my dear brethren and kindred.

Very few passages in the New Testament have puzzled critics and commentators more than this. Every person saw the perfect absurdity of understanding it in a literal sense; as no man in his right mind could wish himself eternally damned in order to save another; or to save even the whole world. And the supposition that such an effect could be produced by such a sacrifice, was equally absurd and monstrous. Therefore various translations have been made of the place, and different solutions offered. Mr. Wakefield says, I see no method of solving the difficulty in this verse, which has so exercised the learning and ingenuity of commentators, but by the ευχομαι ειναι of Homer, I profess myself to be; and he translates the passage in a parenthesis, thus, (for I also was once an alien from Christ) on account of my brethren, &c. But how it does appear that Saul of Tarsus was ever an alien from Christ on account of his kinsmen, is to me perfectly indiscernible. Let us examine the Greek text. Ηυχομην γαρ αυτος εγω αναθεμα ειναι απο του Χριστου υπερ των αδελφων μου, "For I did wish myself to be anathema FROM (υπο BY Christ, as some ancient MSS. read,) for my brethren." As ηυχομην is the 1st per. sing. of the imperfect tense, some have been led to think that St. Paul is here mentioning what had passed through his own mind, when, filled with the love of God, he learned the rejection of the Jews; and that he only mentions it here as a thing which, in the effusions of his loving zeal, had been felt by him, inconsiderately, and without any divine afflatus leading him to it; but that he does not intimate that now, he felt any such unreasonable and preposterous wish." I am afraid this is but ill calculated to solve the difficulty.

The Greek word αναθεμα, anathema, properly signifies any thing devoted to God, so as to be destroyed; it answers to the Hebrew חרם cherem, by which the Septuagint translate it; and means either a thing or person separated from its former state or condition, and devoted to destruction. In this sense it is used Deut. vii. 25, 26. Josh. vi. 17, 18; vii. 12.

It is certain that the word, both among the Hebrews and Greeks, was used to express a person devoted to destruction for the public safety. In Midrash hanneelam, in Sohar Chadash, fol. 15. Rabbi Chaijah the elder said, "There is no shepherd found like unto Moses, who was willing to lay down his life for the sheep; for Moses said, Exod. xxxii. 32. if thou wilt not pardon their sin, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written." Such anathemas, or persons devoted to destruction for the public good, were common among all ancient nations. See the case of M. Curtius and Decius among the Romans. When a plague took place, or any public calamity, it was customary to take one of the lowest or most execrable of the people, and devote him to the Dii Manes or infernal gods. See proofs in Schleusner, and see the observations at the end of the chapter. This one circumstance is sufficient to explain the word in this place. Paul desired to be devoted to destruction, as the Jews then were, in order to redeem his countrymen from this most terrible excision. He was willing to become a sacrifice for the public safety, and to give his life to redeem theirs. And as Christ may be considered as devoting them to destruction, see Matt. xxiv. Paul is willing that in their place, Christ should devote him, for I could wish myself, αναθεμα ειναι απο, (or, as some excellent MSS. have it, υπο,) του Χριστου, to be devoted BY Christ, to that temporal destruction to which he has adjudged the disobedient Jews, if, by doing so, I might redeem them. This, and this alone, seems to be the meaning of the apostle's wish.

Verse 4. Who are Israelites] Descendants of Jacob, a man so highly favoured of God, and from whom he received his name Israel, a prince of God, Gen. xxxii. 28. from which name his descendants were called Israelites, and separated unto God for his glory and praise. Their very name of Israelites implied their very high dignity; they were a royal nation; princes of the most high God.

The adoption] The Israelites were all taken into the family of God, and were called his sons and first-born, Exod. iv. 22. Deut. xiv. 1. Jer. xxxi. 9. Hos. xi. 1. And this adoption took place when God made the covenant with them at Horeb.

The glory] The manifestation of God among them; principally by the cloud and pillar, and the Shekinah, or divine presence, appearing between the Cherubim over the mercy-seat. These were peculiar to the Jews; no other nation was ever thus favoured.

The covenants] The covenants made with Abraham, both that which relates to the spiritual seed, and that which was peculiar to his natural descendants, Gal. iii. 16, 17. which covenants were afterwards renewed by Moses, Deut. xxix. 1. Some suppose that the singular is here put for the plural, and that by covenants we are to understand the decalogue which is termed ברית berith, or covenant, Deut. iv. 13. But it is more likely that the apostle alludes to the great covenant made with Abraham, and to its various renewals and extensions at different times afterwards; as well as to its twofold design, the grant of the Land of Canaan, and the rest that remains for the people of God.

The giving of the law] The revelation of God, by God himself; containing a system of moral and political precepts. This was also peculiar to the Jews; for to no other nation had he ever given a revelation of his will.

The service] Λατρεια. The particular ordinances, rites, and ceremonies of their religious worship; and especially the sacrificial system, so expressive of the sinfulness of sin, and the holiness of God.

The promises] The land of Canaan, and the blessings of the Messiah and his kingdom; which promises had been made and often repeated to the patriarchs and to the prophets.

Verse 5. Whose are the fathers] Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, the twelve patriarchs, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, &c. &c. without controversy, the greatest and most eminent men that ever flourished under heaven. From these, in an uninterrupted and unpolluted line, the Jewish people had descended; and it was no small glory to be able to reckon, in their genealogy, persons of such incomparable merit and excellency.

And of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came] These ancestors were the more renowned, as being the progenitors of the human nature of the MESSIAH. Christ, the Messiah, κατα σαρκα, according to the flesh, sprang from them. But this Messiah was more than man, he is God over all; the very Being who gave them being, though he appeared to receive a being from them.

Here the apostle most distinctly points out the twofold nature of our Lord, his eternal Godhead, and his humanity; and all the transpositions of particles, and alterations of points in the universe, will not explain away this doctrine. As this verse contains such an eminent proof of the deity of Christ, no wonder that the opposers of his divinity should strive with their utmost skill and cunning to destroy its force. And it must be truly painful to a mind that has nothing in view but truth, to see the mean and hypercritical methods used to elude the force of this text. Few have met it in that honest and manly way in which Dr. Taylor, who was a conscientious Arian, has considered the subject. "Christ," says he, "is God over all, as he is by the Father appointed Lord, king, and governor of all. The Father hath committed all judgment to the Son, Joh. v. 22. has given all things into his hands, Matt. xxviii. 18. He is Lord of all, Acts x. 36. God has given him a name above every name, Phil. ii. 9. Above every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come; and has put all things, (himself excepted, 1 Cor. xv. 27.) under his feet, and given him to be head over all things, Eph. i. 21, 22. This is our Lord's supreme Godhead. And that he is ευλογητος, blessed for ever, or the object of everlasting blessing, is evident from Rev. v. 12, 13. Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power—and blessing and honour be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever. Thus it appears, the words may be justly applied to our blessed Lord." Notes p. 329. Yes, and when we take other scriptures into the account, where his essential Godhead is particularly expressed, such as Colos. i. 16, 17, For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created BY him, and FOR him; and he is BEFORE all things, and BY him do all things consist; we shall find that he is not God by investiture or office, but properly and essentially such; for, it is impossible to convey in human language, to human apprehension, a more complete and finished display of what is essential to Godhead, indivisible from it, and incommunicable to any created nature, than what is contained in the above verses. And while these words are allowed to make a part of divine revelation, the essential Godhead of Jesus Christ, will continue to be a doctrine of that revelation.

I pass by the groundless and endless conjectures about reversing some of the particles and placing points in different positions, as they have been all invented to get rid of the doctrine of Christ's divinity, which is so obviously acknowledged by the simple text; it is enough to state that there is no omission of these important words in any MS. or Version yet discovered.

Verse 6. Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect] A Jew might have objected, as in chap. iii. 3. "Is not God bound by his faithfulness to continue the Jews as his peculiar church and people, notwithstanding the infidelity of the major part of them? If they are brought to a level with the Gentiles, will it not follow that God hath failed in the performance of his promise to Abraham? Gen xvii. 7, 8, I will establish my covenant between me and thee, for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and thy seed after thee." To which it may be answered, this awful dispensation of God towards the Jews, is not inconsistent with the veracity of the divine promise; for, even the whole body of natural-born Jews, are not the whole of the Israelites comprehended in the promise. Abraham is the father of many nations; and his seed is not only that which is of the law, but that also which is of the faith of Abraham, chap. iv. 16, 17. The Gentiles were included in the Abrahamic covenant as well as the Jews; and, therefore, have no exclusive right to the blessings of God's kingdom.

Verse 7. Neither because they are the seed of Abraham, &c.] Nor can they conclude, because they are the natural descendants of Abraham, that, therefore, they are, all of seed of Abraham, are they all children; but, in [a] Isaac shall thy seed be called.

8 That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but [b] the children of the promise are counted for the seed.

9 For, this is the word of promise, [c] At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son.

10 And not only this; but when [d] Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac; them, without exception, the children, in whom the promise is to be fulfilled.

But, in Isaac shall thy seed be called.] The promise is not confined to immediate natural descent, but may be accomplished in any part of Abraham's posterity. For, Abraham had several sons besides Isaac, Gen. xxv. 1, 2. particularly Ishmael, who was circumcised before Isaac was born; and in whom Abraham was desirous that the promise should be fulfilled, Gen. xvii. 18. and in him God might have fulfilled the promise, had he so pleased; and yet he said to Abraham, Gen. xxi. 12. not in Ishmael, but in Isaac shall thy seed be called.

Verse 8. That is, they which are the children of the flesh] Whence it appears that not the children who descend from Abraham's loins, nor those who were circumcised as he was, nor even those whom he might expect and desire, are therefore the church and people of God; but those who are made children by the good pleasure and promise of God, as Isaac was, are alone to be accounted for the seed with whom the covenant was established.

Verse 9. For this is the word of promise, &c.] That is, this is evidently implied in the promise recorded Gen. xviii. 10, at this time I will come, saith God, and exert my divine power, and Sarah, though fourscore and ten years old, shall have a son; which shows that it is the sovereign will and act of God alone, which singles out and constitutes the peculiar seed that was to inherit the promise made to Abraham.

It should be considered, that the apostle, in this and the following quotations, does not give us the whole of the text, which he intends should be taken into his argument, but only a hint or reference to the passages to which they belong; directing us to recollect or peruse the whole passage, and there view and judge of the argument.

That he is so to be understood, appears from the conclusion he draws, ver. 16. So then, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy. In his arguments, ver. 7 and 8, &c. he says not one word of Abraham's willing Ishmael to be the seed in whom the promise might be fulfilled; nor of Isaac's willing Esau; nor of Moses willing and interceding that the Israelites might be spared; nor of Esau's running for venison; but by introducing these particulars into his conclusion, he gives us to understand that his quotations are to be taken in connexion with the whole story of which they are a part; and without this, the Apostle's meaning cannot be apprehended.

The same may be said of his conclusion, ver. 18, whom he will he hardeneth; hardeneth is not in his argument, but it is in the conclusion. Therefore hardening is understood in the argument, and he evidently refers to the case of Pharaoh. The generality of Jews were well acquainted with the scripture, and a hint was sufficient to revive the memory of a whole passage. Taylor, p. 330.

Verse 10. And not only this] A Jew might object, "Ishmael was rejected, not by the sovereign will of God, but because he was the son of the handmaid or bond-woman, and therefore unworthy to be the peculiar seed; but observe, this was not the only limitation of the seed of Abraham with regard to inheriting the promise; for, when Rebecca was with child by that one person of Abraham's issue, to whom the promise was made, namely, our father Isaac; she went to inquire of the Lord, Gen. xxv. 22, 23. And the Lord said unto her, Two nations are in thy womb; and two manner of PEOPLE shall be separated from thy bowels; and one PEOPLE shall be stronger than the other PEOPLE; and the elder shall serve the younger. That is, the posterity of the younger shall be a nation much more prosperous and happy than the posterity of the elder.

Verse 11. For, the children being not yet born] As the word children is not in the text, the word nations would be more proper; for it is of nations that the apostle speaks, as the following verses show, as well as the history to which he refers.

Neither having done any good] To merit the distinction of being made the peculiar people of God,—nor evil, to deserve to be left out of this covenant, and the distinguishing national blessings which it conferred; that the purpose of God according to election might stand, that such distinctions might appear to depend on nothing but God's free choice, not of works, or any desert in the peoples or nations thus chosen; but of the mere purpose of him who calleth any people he pleases, to make them the depositories of his especial blessings, and thus to distinguish them from all others.

Verse 12. The elder shall serve the younger.] These words, with those of Malachi, Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated, are cited by the apostle to prove, according to their typical signification, that the purpose of God, according to election, does, and will stand, not of works, but of him that calleth; that is, that the purpose of God, which is the ground of that Election which he makes among men, unto the honour of being Abraham's seed, might appear to remain unchangeable in him; and to be even the same which he had declared unto Abraham. That these words are used, in a national, and not in a personal sense, is evident from this, that, taken in the latter sense, they are not true, for Jacob never did exercise any power over Esau; nor was Esau ever subject to him. Jacob, on the contrary, was, rather, subject to Esau, and was sorely afraid of him; and, first by his messengers, and afterwards, personally, acknowledged his brother to be his lord, and himself to be his servant, see Gen. xxxii. 4. xxxiii. 8, 13. And hence it appears, that neither Esau, nor Jacob, nor even their posterities, are brought here by the apostle as instances of any personal reprobation from eternity. For, it is very certain that very many, if not far the greatest part of Jacob's posterity were wicked, and rejected by God; and it is not less certain, that some of Esau's posterity were partakers of the faith of their father Abraham.

From these premises, the true sense of the words immediately following, Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated, Malachi i. 2, 3, fully appears; that is, that what he had already cited from Moses concerning the two nations, styled by the names of their respective heads, Jacob and Esau; was but the same in substance with what was spoken many years after by the prophet Malachi. The unthankful Jews had, in Malachi's time, either in words or in their heart, expostulated with God, and demanded of him wherein he had loved them? I have loved you, saith the Lord, yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us? Mal. i. 2, 3, 4. To this the Lord answers, Was not Esau Jacob's brother? Yet I loved Jacob, and hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness. Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of Hosts, They shall build, but I will throw down, and they shall call them The border of wickedness, and The people, against whom the Lord hath indignation for ever. And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, The Lord will be magnified from the border of Israel.

1. It incontestably appears from these passages, that the prophet does not speak at all of the person of Jacob or Esau, but of their respective posterities. For it was not Esau in person that said, We are impoverished, neither were his mountains nor heritage laid waste. Now, if the prophet speaks neither of the person of the one, nor of the person of the other, but of their posterity only, then it is evident that the apostle speaks of them in the same way.

2. If neither the prophet nor the apostle speaks of the persons of Jacob or Esau, but of their posterity, then it is evident that neither the love of God to Jacob, nor the hatred of God to Esau, were such, according to which the eternal states of men, either in happiness or misery, are to be determined; nor is there here, any scriptural or rational ground for the decree of unconditional personal election and reprobation, which, comparatively, modern times have endeavoured to build on these scriptures. For—1. It is here proved that Esau is not mentioned under any personal consideration, but only as the head of his posterity. 2. The testimony of scripture amply proves, that all Esau's posterity were not, even in this sense, reprobated; nor all Jacob's posterity elected. 3. Neither does that service, or subjugation to Jacob, which the Divine Oracle imposed on Esau, import any such reprobation as some contend for; as the servant may be elected, while the master himself is in a state of reprobation. 4. Were it even granted that servitude did import such a reprobation, yet it is certain that Esau, in person, never did serve Jacob. 5. Nor does the hatred of God against Esau import any such reprobation of the person of Esau, because it is demonstrable, that it related not to Esau personally, but to his posterity. 6. The scope of the apostle's reasoning is to show that God is the sovereign of his own ways, has a right to dispense his blessings as he chooses; and to give salvation to mankind, not in the ways of their devising, but in that way that is most suitable to his infinite wisdom and goodness.

Therefore—1. He chose the Jewish people from all others, and revealed himself to them. Thus they were the elect, and all the nations of mankind reprobate. 2. When the fulness of the time came, he revealed himself also to the Gentiles, who gladly received the gospel; and the Jews rejecting it, were cast off. Thus the elect became reprobate; and the reprobate, elect. 3. He published to all mankind, that the pardon of sin could and should be obtained ONLY by faith in his Son Jesus; and not by any obedience to any law. And the Jews, the descendants of Jacob, who rejected this way of salvation, became precisely like the Edomites, the descendants of Esau; they builded, but God pulled down; their mountains and heritage are NOW laid waste for the dragons of the wilderness; and they properly may now be called the border of wickedness; a people against whom the Lord hath indignation for ever: they have rejected the Lord that bought them; and so have brought upon themselves swift destruction. 7. That no personal, absolute, eternal reprobation of Esau can have been intended, we learn from this; that he was most amply reconciled to his brother, who had so deeply wronged and offended him, by depriving him of his birthright and his blessing; and his having forgiven his brother his trespasses, was no mean proof that God had forgiven him. See our Lord's words, Matt. vi. 14. Therefore, there can be assigned no competent ground of his damnation, much less of his personal reprobation from all eternity. 8. And were such a personal reprobation intended, is it not shocking to suppose, that the God of endless mercy, in whose sight his pious parents had found favour, should inform them, even before their child was born, that he had absolutely consigned him, by an irrevocable decree, to eternal damnation? A message of such horrid import, coming immediately from the mouth of God, to a tender, weak, and delicate woman, whose hour of travail with two children was just at hand, could not have failed to produce abortion, and destroy her life. But the parents perfectly understood their God, and saw no decree of reprobation in his message; two manner of nations are in thy womb—and the elder shall serve the younger. 9. There is no reason worthy the most wise and gracious God, why he should make known to the world such a thing concerning Esau, who was yet unborn, that he had reprobated him from all eternity. Such a revelation could be of no spiritual advantage, or of edification to mankind, but rather of a malignant influence, as directly occasioning men to judge hardly of their Maker, and to conceive of him as no faithful Creator; as having no care, no love, no bowels of compassion towards the workmanship of his own hands. See Goodwin's Exposition: and see my Notes on Gen. xxvii.

Verse 14. What shall we say then?] To what conclusion shall we come on the facts before us? Shall we suggest that God's bestowing peculiar privileges in this unequal manner, on those who otherwise are in equal circumstances, is inconsistent with justice and equity? By no means. Whatever God does is right, and he may dispense his blessings to whom, and on what terms he pleases.

Verse 15. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy, &c.] The words of God to Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 19. show, that God has a right to dispense his blessings as he pleases; for, after he had declared that he would spare the Jews of old, and continue them in the relation of his peculiar people, when they had deserved to have been cut off for their idolatry; he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee; and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy; and I will have compassion, on whom I will have compassion. As if he had said, I will make such a display of my perfections as shall convince you that my nature is kind and beneficent: but know, that I am a debtor to none of my creatures. My benefits and blessings are merely from my own good will: nor can any people, much less a rebellious people, challenge them as their due in justice or equity. And therefore, I now spare the Jews; not because either you, who intercede for them, or they themselves, have any claim upon my favour; but, of my own free and sovereign grace, I choose to show them mercy and compassion. I will give my salvation in my own way, and on my own terms. He that believeth on my son Jesus, shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. This is God's ultimate design; this purpose he will never change; and this he has fully declared in the everlasting gospel.

Verse 16. So then, it is not of him that willeth, &c.] I conclude, therefore, from these several instances, that the making or continuing any body of men, the peculiar people of God, is righteously determined; not by the judgment, hopes, or wishes of men; but by the will and wisdom of God alone. For, Abraham judged that the blessing ought, and he willed, desired, that it might be given to Ishmael; and Isaac also willed, designed it for his first-born Esau: and Esau wishing and hoping that it might be his, readily went, ran a hunting for venison, that he might have it regularly conveyed to him: but they were all disappointed; Abraham and Isaac, who willed, and Esau who ran: for God had originally intended that the blessing of being a great nation, and distinguished people, should, of his mere good pleasure, be given to Isaac and Jacob, and be confirmed in their posterity; and to them it was given. And when, by their apostacy, they had forfeited this privilege, it was not Moses's willing, nor any prior obligation God was under, but his own sovereign mercy, which continued it to them.

Verse 17. For the Scripture saith unto Pharaoh] Instead of showing the Israelites mercy, he might justly have suffered them to have gone on in sin, till he should have signalized his wisdom and justice in their destruction; as appears from what God in his word declares concerning his dealings with Pharaoh and the Egyptians, Exod. ix. 15, 16. For now, saith the Lord, I had stretched forth my hand, (in the plague of boils and blains) and I had smitten thee and thy people with the pestilence; and thou hadst, (by this plague) been cut off from the earth, (as thy cattle were by the murrain) but in very deed, for this cause have I raised thee up. I have restored thee to health, by removing the boils and blains, and by respiting thy deserved destruction to a longer day, that I may, in thy instance, give such a demonstration of my power, in thy final overthrow, that all mankind may learn that I am God, the righteous Judge of all the earth, the avenger of wickedness. See this translation of the original vindicated in my notes on Exod. ix. 15, 16. And about the hardening of Pharaoh, see the notes on those places where the words occur in the same book.

Verse 18. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will] This is the apostle's conclusion from the facts already laid down: that God, according to his own will and wisdom, in perfect righteousness bestows mercy; that is to say, his blessings upon one part of mankind, (the Jews of old, and the Gentiles of the present time;) while he suffers another part, (the Egyptians of old, and the Jews of the present day,) to go on in the abuse of his goodness and forbearance, hardening themselves in sin, till he brings upon them a most just and exemplary punishment.

Verse 19. Why doth he yet find fault?] The apostle here introduces the Jew making an objection similar to that in chap. iii. 7. If the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, that is, if God's faithfulness is glorified by my wickedness, why yet am I also judged as a sinner? Why am I condemned for that which brings so much glory to him? The question here is, if God's glory be so highly promoted and manifested by our obstinacy, and he suffers us to proceed in our hardness and infidelity, why does he find fault with us? or punish us for that which is according to his good pleasure?

Verse 20. Nay but, O man, who art thou] As if he had said—weak, ignorant man, darest thou retort on the infinitely good and righteous GOD? Reflect on thyself; and tell me, after thou hast abused the grace of God, and transgressed his laws, wilt thou cavil at his dispensations? God hath made, created, formed the Jewish nation: and shall the thing formed, when it hath corrupted itself, pretend to correct the wise and gracious Author of its being; and say, Why hast thou made me thus? Why hast thou constituted me in this manner? Thou hast done me wrong in giving me my being under such and such conditions.

Old John Goodwin's note on this passage is at least curious: "I scarce, (says he) know any passage of the Scripture more frequently abused than this. When men, in the great questions of predestination and reprobation, bring forth any text of scripture, which they conceive makes for their notion; though the sense which they put upon it be ever so uncouth and dissonant from the true meaning of the Holy Ghost; yet, if any man contradict, they frequently fall upon him with Nay but, O man, who art thou? As if St. Paul had left them his heirs and successors in the infallibility of his Spirit! But when men shall call a solid answer to their groundless conceits, about the meaning of the Scriptures, a replying against God; it savours more of the spirit who was seen falling like lightning from heaven, than of His, who saw him in this his fall."

apostle continues his answer to the Jew—Hath not God shown, by the parable of the potter, Jer em. xviii. 1, &c. that he may justly dispose of nations, and of the Jews in particular; according as he, in his infinite wisdom, may judge most right and fitting; even as the potter has a right, out of the same lump of clay, to make one vessel to a more honourable, and another to a less honourable use; as his own judgment and skill may direct: for no potter will take pains to make a vessel merely that he may show that he has power to dash it to pieces. For the word came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Arise, go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words. Then I went down to the potter's house, and behold, he wrought a work upon the wheels. And the vessel that he made of clay, was marred in the hands of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it. It was not fit for the more honourable place in the mansion; and, therefore, he made it for a less honourable place: but as necessary for the master's use there, as it could have been in a more honourable situation. Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying, O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in my hand, O house of Israel. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And, at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation—to build and to plant it, if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then will I repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them. The reference to this parable shows, most positively, that the apostle is speaking of men not individually, but nationally; and it is strange that men should have given his words any other application, with this Scripture before their eyes.

Verse 22. What, if God willing to show his wrath] The apostle refers here to the case of Pharaoh and the Egyptians; and to which he applies Jeremiah's parable of the potter: and, from them, to the then state of the Jews. Pharaoh and the Egyptians were vessels of wrath, persons deeply guilty before God; and, by their obstinate refusal of his grace, and abuse of his goodness, they had fitted themselves for that destruction which the wrath, the vindictive justice of God inflicted; after he had endured their obstinate rebellion, with much long-suffering: which is a most absolute proof, that the hardening of their hearts, and their ultimate punishment, were the consequences of their obstinate refusal of his grace, and abuse of his goodness; as the history in Exodus sufficiently shows. As the Jews of the apostle's time had sinned, after the similitude of the Egyptians, hardening their hearts and abusing his goodness, after every display of his long-suffering kindness, being now fitted for destruction, they were ripe for punishment; and that power, which God was making known for their salvation, having been so long and so much abused and provoked, was now about to show itself in their destruction as a nation. But, even in this case, there is not a word of their final damnation; much less that either they, or any others, were, by a sovereign decree, reprobated from all eternity; and that their very sins, the proximate cause of their punishment, were the necessary effect of that decree, which had, from all eternity, doomed them to endless torments. As such a doctrine could never come from God, so it never can be found in the words of his apostle.

Verse 23. And that he might make known] God endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath; 1. To show his wrath, and to make his power known: And also, 2. That he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy.

Which he had afore prepared unto glory] The Jews were fitted for destruction long before; but the fittest time to destroy them was after he had prepared the believing Gentiles unto glory. For, the Rod of the Messiah's strength was to be sent out of Zion, Psal. cx. 2. The Jewish nation was to supply the first preachers of the gospel; and from Jerusalem their sound was to go forth into all the earth. Therefore, the Jewish state, notwithstanding its corruptions, was to be preserved till the Messiah came; and even till the gospel preached by the apostles, had taken deep root in the Gentile world. Another thing which rendered the time, when the Jewish polity was overthrown, the most proper, was this, because then, the immediate occasion of it was the extensiveness of the divine grace. They would not have the Gentiles admitted into the church of God; but contradicted and blasphemed, and rejected the Lord that bought them: thus then, the extensiveness of the divine grace occasioned their infidelity, ver. 33. chap. x. 3. xii. 11, 12, 15, 28, 30. Thus the Jews were diminished, by that abundance of grace which has enriched the Gentiles. And so the grace of God was illustrated; or, so God made known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy—the apostles and primitive believers among the Jews, and the Gentile world, which received the gospel by the preaching of the apostles and their successors.

Verse 24. Even us, whom he hath called] All the Jews and Gentiles who have been invited by the preaching of the gospel to receive justification by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; and have come to the gospel feast on this invitation.

Verse 25. As he saith also in Osee] It is a cause of not a little confusion, that a uniformity in the orthography of the proper names of the Old and New Testaments has not been preserved. What stranger to our sacred books would suppose that the Osee above, meant the prophet Hosea? from whom, chap. ii. ver. 23. this quotation is taken; I will have mercy on her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people. The apostle shows that this calling of the Gentiles was no fortuitous thing, but a firm purpose in the Divine mind, which he had largely revealed to the prophets: and by opposing the calling of the Gentiles, the Jews, in effect, renounced their prophets, and fought against God.

Verse 26. And it shall come to pass, &c.] These quotations are taken out of Hosea, chap. i. 10. where (immediately after God had rejected the ten tribes, or kingdom of Israel, chap. i. 9. then saith God, call his name Lo-ammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God:) he adds, yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea which cannot be measured nor numbered: and it shall come to pass, that in the place in which it was said unto them, ye are not my people; there, it shall be said unto them, ye are the sons of the living God. As if he had said, The decrease of numbers in the church, by God's utterly taking away the ten tribes, (ver. 6.) shall be well supplied by what shall afterwards come to pass, by calling the Gentiles into it. They, the rejected Jews, which had been the people of God, should become a Lo-ammi, not my people. On the contrary they, the Gentiles, who had been a Lo-ammi, not my people, should become the children of the living God. Again, chap. ii 23. I will sow her (the Jewish church) unto me in the earth, (alluding probably to the dispersion of the Jews over all the Roman empire, which proved a fruitful cause of preparing the Gentiles for the reception of the gospel,) and, or moreover, I will have mercy upon her, the body of the believing Gentiles, that had not obtained mercy. See Taylor.

Verse 27. Esaias also crieth] The apostle pursues his argument, which had for its object the proof that God, for their infidelity, had rejected the great body of the Jews; and that but a few of them would embrace the gospel, and be saved from that besom of destruction which was now coming to sweep them and their state away. Dr. Taylor paraphrases this and the following verses thus: And, that but a small remnant of the Jews shall now be taken into the church, is agreeable to former dispensations: for the prophet Isaiah expressly declares concerning the Israelites, chap. x. 22, 23. Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, (for the promise to Abraham has been amply fulfilled,) only a remnant shall be saved: the consumption decreed shall overflow in righteousness. For the Lord God of Hosts shall make a consumption, even determined in the midst of all the land.

Verse 28. For he will finish the work, and cut it short, &c.] These appear to be forensic terms, and refer to the conclusion of a judicial proceeding;—the Lord has tried and found them guilty; and will immediately execute upon them the punishment due to their transgressions.

Verse 29. And as Esaias said before] What God designs to do with the Jews at present, because of their obstinacy and rebellion, is similar to what he has done before, to which the same prophet refers, chap. i. 9. Except the Lord of Hosts had left us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah: i. e. had not God, who commands and overrules all the powers in heaven and earth, in mercy preserved a very small remnant, to keep up the name and being of the nation, it had been quite cut off and extinct, as Sodom and Gomorrah were. Thus we learn, that it is no new thing with God to abandon the greatest part of the Jewish nation when corrupt: and to confine his favour and blessing to a righteous believing few.

Instead of remnant, שריד sarid, both the Septuagint and the apostle have σπερμα a seed, intimating that there were left just enow of the righteous, to be a seed for a future harvest of true believers. So, the godly were not destroyed from the land; some remained, and the harvest was in the days of the apostles.

Verse 30. What shall we say then?] What is the final conclusion to be drawn from all these prophecies, facts, and reasonings? This, that the Gentiles which followed not after righteousness, &c. This, with the succeeding verses, together with what belongs to the same subject, in the beginning of the following chapter, I have explained at large in the notes on chap. i. 17. to which I must refer the Reader; and shall content myself in this place, with Dr. Taylor's general paraphrase. We may suppose the apostle to express himself to the following effect. Thus I have vindicated the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles, with regard to the divine veracity and justice. Now let us turn our thoughts to the true reason and state of the affair considered in itself. And in the first place; What just notion ought we to have of the calling of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews? I answer, the true notion of the calling or inviting of the Gentiles, is this: whereas they had no apprehension of being reinstated in the privileges of God's peculiar kingdom, and consequently used no endeavours to obtain that blessing; yet notwithstanding, they have attained to justification, to the remission of sins, and the privileges of God's people:—not on account of their prior worthiness and obedience, but purely by the grace and mercy of God, received by faith on their part. And so by embracing the scheme of life, published by the gospel, they are adopted into the family and church of God. Thus the Gentiles are called or invited.

Verse 31. But Israel, which followed after] But the Jews who have hitherto been the people of God, though they have been industrious in observing a rule by which they supposed they could secure the blessings of God's peculiar kingdom; yet have not come up to the true and only rule, by which those blessings can be secured.

Verse 32. Wherefore?] And where lies their mistake? Being ignorant of God's righteousness—of his method of saving sinners by faith in Christ; they went about to establish their own righteousness, their own method of obtaining everlasting salvation. They attend not to the Abrahamic covenant, which stands on the extensive principles of grace and faith; but they turn all their regards to the law of Moses. They imagine that their obedience to that law, gives them a right to the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom. But finding that the gospel sets our special interest in God, and the privileges of his church, on a different footing, they are offended, and refuse to come into it.

Verse 33. As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion] Christ the Messiah is become a stone of stumbling to them: and thus what is written in the prophecy of Isaiah, is verified in their case, Isai. viii. 14. xxviii. 16. Behold, I lay in Zion, i. e. I shall bring in my Messiah, but he shall be a widely different person from him whom the Jews expect; for whereas they expect the Messiah to be a mighty secular prince, and to set up a secular kingdom, he shall appear a man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs; and redeem mankind, not by his sword or secular power, but by his humiliation, passion, and death. Therefore they will be offended at him, and reject him; and think it would be reproachful to trust in such a person for salvation.

And whosoever believeth on him] But so far shall any be from confusion or disappointment who believes in Christ; that on the contrary, every genuine believer shall find salvation: the remission of sins here, and eternal glory hereafter. See the

1. On the subject of vicarious punishment, or rather the case of one becoming an anathema or sacrifice for the public good, in illustration of chap. ix. 3. I shall make no apology for the following extracts, taken from an author whose learning is vast, and whose piety is unblemished.

"When mankind lost sight of a beneficent Creator, the God of purity, and consecrated altars to the sun, the moon, the stars, to dæmons, and to hero gods, under the names of Moloch, Ashtaroth, and Baalim; these objects of their worship led them to the most horrid acts of cruelty, and to every species of obscenity; even their sons and their daughters they burnt in the fire to their gods, more especially in seasons of distress. Such was the conduct of the king of Moab; for when he was besieged in his capital, and expected he should fall into the hands of his enemies, he took his eldest son, who should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt offering on the wall.

With these facts, thus related from the scriptures, all accounts, ancient and modern, exactly correspond. Homer, who, it must be recollected, wrote more than nine hundred years before the Christian æra, although he describes chiefly the common sacrifice of quadrupeds, yet gives one account of human victims. But, in succeeding generations, when it was conceived that one great and most malignant spirit was the proper object of their fear, or that subordinate provincial gods, equally malignant, nesciaque humanis precibus mansuescere corda, disposed of all things in our world; men bound their own species to the altar, and in circumstances of national distress presented such as they valued most, either their children or themselves. Herodotus informs us, that when the army of Xerxes came to the Strymon, the Magi offered a sacrifice of white horses to that river. On his arrival at the Scamander, the king ascended the citadel of Priam; and having surveyed it, he ordered a thousand oxen to be sacrificed to the Trojan Minerva. But on other occasions he chose human victims; for we are informed that, when, having passed the Strymon, he reached the nine ways, he buried alive nine young men, and as many virgins, natives of the country. In this he followed the example of his wife, for she commanded fourteen Persian children, of illustrious birth, to be offered in that manner to the deity who reigns beneath the earth. Thus in the infancy of Rome, we see Curtius, for the salvation of his country, devoting himself to the infernal gods, when, as it appears, an earthquake had occasioned a deep and extensive chasm in the forum; and the augurs had declared, that the portentous opening would never close, till what contributed most to the strength and power of the Romans should be cast into it; but that by such a sacrifice they would obtain immortality for their republic. When all men were at a loss how to understand this oracle, M. Curtius, armed as for battle, presented himself in the forum, and explained it thus;—'What is more valuable to Rome than her courage and her arms?' So saying, he urged forward his impetuous steed, and buried himself in the abyss. His grateful countrymen admired his fortitude, and attributed the increasing splendour of their state to the sacrifice he made. Animated by this example, Decius, in the war between Rome and Latium, having solemnly offered himself as an expiatory sacrifice, rushed single into the thickest ranks of the astonished Latins, that by his death he might appease the anger of the gods, transfer their indignation to the enemy, and secure the victory to Rome. Conspectus ab utroque acie aliquanto, augustior humano visu, sicut Cœlo missus piaculum omnis deorum iræ, qui pestem ab suis aversam in hostes ferret.

Here we see distinctly marked the notion of vicarious suffering, and the opinion, that the punishment of guilt may be transferred from the guilty to the innocent. The gods call for sacrifice: the victim bleeds: atonement is made: and the wrath of the infernal powers falls in its full force upon the enemy. Thus while Themistocles at Salamine was offering sacrifice, three captives, the sons of Sandance, and nephews to Xerxes, all distinguished for their beauty, elegantly dressed and decked, as became their birth, with ornaments of gold, being brought on board his galley, the augur Euphrantides observing at the very instant a bright flame ascending from the altar, whilst one was sneezing on the right, which he regarded as a propitious omen, he seized the hand of Themistocles, and commanded that they should all be sacrificed to Bacchus, (ωμηστὴ Διονυσῳ—cruel and relentless Bacchus! Homer has the same expression) predicting, on this condition, safety and conquest to the Greeks. Immediately the multitude with united voices called on the god, and led the captive princes to the altar, and compelled Themistocles to sacrifice them.

So when Æneas was to perform the last kind office for his friend Pallas, he sacrificed, (besides numerous oxen, sheep, and swine,) eight captives to the infernal gods. In this he followed the example of Achilles, who had caused twelve Trojans, of high birth, to bleed by the sacerdotal knife, over the ashes of his friend Patroclus.

A hundred feet in length, a hundred wide,
The glowing structure spreads on every side;
High on the top, the manly corse they lay,
And well-fed sheep, and sable oxen slay;
Achilles covered with their fat the dead,
And the piled victims round the body spread:
Then jars of honey, and of fragrant oil,
Suspends around, low bending o'er the pile.
Four sprightly coursers, with a deadly groan
Pour forth their lives, and on the pyre are thrown.
Of nine large dogs, domestic at his board,
Fell two, selected to attend their lord:
The last of all, and horrible to tell,
Sad sacrifice! twelve Trojan captives fell;

On these the rage of fire victorious preys,
Involves and joins them in one common blaze.
Smeared with the bloody rites, he stands on high,
And calls the spirit with a cheerful cry,
All hail, Patroclus! let thy vengeful ghost
Hear and exult on Pluto's dreary coast.

POPE'S Homer, IL. xxiii. ver. 203.

How much was it to be lamented, that even civilized nations should forget the intention for which sacrifices were originally instituted! The bad effects, however, would not have been either so extensive or so great, had they not wholly lost the knowledge of Jehovah; and taken, as the object of their fear, that evil and apostate spirit, whose name, with the utmost propriety, is called Apollyon, or the destroyer; and whose worship has been universally diffused at different periods among all the nations of the earth.

The practice of shedding human blood, before the altars of their gods, was not peculiar to the Trojans and the Greeks; the Romans followed their example. In the first ages of their republic, they sacrificed children to the goddess Mania; in later periods, numerous gladiators bled at the tombs of the Patricians, to appease the manes of the deceased. And it is particularly noticed of Augustus, that, after the taking of Perusia, he sacrificed, on the ides of March, three hundred senators and knights to the divinity of Julius Cæsar.

The Carthaginians, as Diodorus Siculus informs us, bound themselves, by a solemn vow to Chronus, that they would sacrifice to him children selected from the offspring of their nobles; but in process of time they substituted for these the children of their slaves, which practice they continued, till, being defeated by Agathocles, tyrant of Sicily; and, attributing their disgrace to the anger of the god, they offered two hundred children, taken from the most distinguished families in Carthage; besides which, three hundred citizens presented themselves, that, by their voluntary death, they might render the deity propitious to their country. The mode of sacrificing these children was horrid in the extreme; for they were cast into the arms of a brazen statue, and from thence dropped into a furnace, as was practised amongst the first inhabitants of Latium. It was probably in this manner the Ammonites offered up their children to Moloch. The Pelasgi at one time sacrificed a tenth part of all their children, in obedience to an oracle.

The Egyptians, in Heliopolis, sacrificed three men every day to Juno. The Spartans and Arcadians scourged to death young women; the latter to appease the wrath of Bacchus; the former to gratify Diana. The Sabian idolaters in Persia offered human victims to Mithras; the Cretans, to Jupiter; the Lacedemonians and Lusitanians, to Mars; the Lesbians, to Bacchus; the Phocians, to Diana; the Thessalians, to Chiron.

The Gauls, equally cruel in their worship, sacrificed men, originally, to Eso and Teutate; but latterly to Mercury, Apollo, Mars, Jupiter, and Minerva. Cæsar informs us, that whenever they thought themselves in danger, whether from sickness, or after any considerable defeat in war, being persuaded that, unless life be given for life, the anger of the gods can never be appeased; they constructed wicker images of enormous bulk, which they filled with men, who were first suffocated with smoke, and then consumed by fire. For this purpose they preferred criminals; but when a sufficient number of these could not be found, they supplied the deficiency from the community at large.

The Germans are said to have differed from the Gauls, in having no Druids, and in being little addicted to the service of the altar. Their only gods were the Sun, Vulcan, and the Moon; yet, among the objects of their worship, was Tuisco their progenitor, and Woden the hero of the north. It is true, that neither Cæsar nor Tacitus say any thing of their shedding blood in sacrifice; yet the probability is, that, like the Saxons, and other northern nations, they not only offered blood, but took their choicest victims from the human race.

In Sweden, the altars of Woden smoked incessantly with blood: this flowed most abundantly at the solemn festivals celebrated every ninth year at Upsal. Then the king, attended by the senate, and by all the great officers about his court, entered the temple, which glittered on all sides with gold, and conducted to the altar nine slaves, or in time of war nine captives. These met the caresses of the multitude, as being about to avert from them the displeasure of the gods, and then submitted to their fate: but in times of distress, more noble victims bled; and it stands upon record, that when Aune their king was ill, he offered up to Woden his nine sons, to obtain the prolongation of his life.

The Danes had precisely the same abominable customs. Every ninth year, in the month of January, they sacrificed ninety-nine men, with as many horses, dogs, and cocks: and Hacon, king of Norway, offered his own son to obtain from Woden the victory over Harold; with whom he was at war.

In Russia, the Slavi worshipped a multitude of gods, and erected to them innumerable altars. Of these deities Peroun, that is, the Thunderer, was the supreme; and before his image many of their prisoners bled. Their god of physic, who also presided over the sacred fires, shared with him; and the great rivers, considered as gods, had their portion of human victims, whom they covered with their inexorable waves. But Suetovid, the god of war, was the god in whom they most delighted: to him they presented annually, as a burnt offering, three hundred prisoners, each on his horse; and, when the whole was consumed by fire, the priests and people sat down to eat and drink, till they were drunk. It is worthy of remark, that the residence of Suetovid was supposed to be in the sun.

To this luminary the Peruvians, before they were restrained by their Incas, sacrificed their children.

Among the sacred books of the Hindoos, the Ramayuna demands particular attention, because of its antiquity, the extent of country through which it revered, and the view which it exhibits of the religion, doctrine, mythology, customs, and manners of their remote progenitors.

In this we have a golden age of short duration, succeeded by a state of universal wickedness and violence, which continued till the Deity, incarnate, slew the oppressors of the human race, and thus restored the reign of piety and virtue.

This poem contains a description of the Ushwamedha, or most solemn sacrifice of the white horse, instituted by Swuymbhoo, that is, by the Self-existent. At the celebration of this festival, the monarch, as the representative of the whole nation, acknowledged his transgressions; and when the offerings were consumed by the sacrificial fire, he was considered as perfectly absolved from his offences. Then follows a particular account of a human sacrifice, in which the victim, distinguished for filial piety, for resignation to his father's will, and for purity of heart, was bound by the king himself, and delivered to the priest; but, at the very instant when his blood was to have been shed, this illustrious youth was, by miracle, delivered; and the monarch, as the reward of his intended sacrifice, received virtue, prosperity and fame.

It is well known that the Brahmins have, in all ages, had their human victims, and that, even in our days, thousands have voluntarily perished under the wheels of their god Jaghernaut." Townsend's Character of Moses, p. 76.

Though in the preceding Notes I have endeavoured to make every point as clear and plain as possible; yet it may be necessary, in order to see the scope of the apostle's design, more distinctly, to take a general survey of the whole. No man has written with more judgment on this Epistle than Dr. Taylor; and, from his notes, I borrow the principal part of the following observations.

The principal thing that requires to be settled in this chapter is, what kind of election and reprobation the apostle is arguing about: whether election, by the absolute decree and purpose of God, to eternal life; and reprobation, by a like absolute decree, to eternal misery; or only election to the present privileges and external advantages of the kingdom of God in this world: and reprobation, or rejection, as it signifies the not being favoured with those privileges and advantages. I think it demonstrably clear that it is the latter election and rejection the apostle is discoursing on, and not the former, as the following considerations appear to me to demonstrate.

I. The subject of the apostle's argument is manifestly such privileges as are enumerated, verses 4, 5. who are Israelites, to whom pertains the adoption, &c. From these privileges, he supposes the Jews had fallen, or would fall; or, that for a long time, they would be deprived of the benefit of them. For it is with regard to the loss of those privileges that he was so much concerned for his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh, ver. 2, 3. And it is with reference to their being stripped of these privileges, that he vindicates the word and righteousness of God, ver. 24. Not as though the word of God had taken no effect, or failed, &c. proving that God, according to his purpose of election, was free to confer them upon any branch of Abraham's family. Consequently, those privileges were the singular blessings which, by the purpose of God, according to election, not of works, but of him that calleth, were conferred upon Jacob's posterity. But those privileges were only such as the whole body of the Israelites enjoyed in this world, while they were the church and people of God: and such privileges as they might afterwards lose; or of which they might be deprived. Therefore, the election of Jacob's posterity to those privileges was not an absolute election to eternal life.

II. Agreeably to the purpose of God according to election, it was said unto Rebecca, the elder shall serve the younger, meaning the posterity of the elder and the younger: for Gen. xxv. 23. The Lord said unto her, two NATIONS are in thy womb, and two manner of PEOPLE shall be separated from thy bowels, and the one PEOPLE shall be stronger than the other PEOPLE; and the elder shall serve the younger. These are the words which signify the purpose of God according to election. Therefore the election refers to Jacob's posterity, or the whole nation of Israel. But all the nation of Israel were not absolutely elected to eternal life. Therefore, the purpose of God according to election, referred to temporal, and not to eternal blessings; and was a privilege of which they might be deprived.

III. Agreeably to the purpose of God according to election, it was said to Rebecca, the elder shall serve the younger: but to serve, in Scripture, never meant to be eternally damned in the world to come. Consequently the opposite blessing bestowed upon the posterity of the younger, could not be eternal salvation; but certain privileges in this life. Therefore the purpose according to election, refers to those privileges; and the servitude does not imply everlasting perdition.

IV. The election the apostle speaks of, is not of works, ver. 11. but of the mere will of God, who calls and invites; and refers to no qualifications in the persons thus elected and called: but in no part of the Sacred Writings is final salvation said to be given to any who are not qualified by holiness to receive and enjoy it. Therefore, election to eternal glory cannot be what the apostle speaks of in this Epistle.

V. The election, of which the apostle speaks, took place first in Abraham and his seed, before his seed was born: and then (secluding Ishmael and all his posterity,) in Isaac and his seed before they were born. And then secluding Esau and all his posterity, in Jacob and his seed before they were born. But the scripture no where represents eternal life as bestowed upon any family or race of men in this manner. Therefore, this election mentioned by the apostle, cannot be an election unto eternal life.

VI. Vessels of mercy, ver. 23. are manifestly opposed to vessels of wrath, ver. 22. The vessels of mercy are the whole body of the Jews and Gentiles, who were called or invited into the kingdom of God, under the gospel, ver. 24. consequently the vessels of wrath, are the whole body of the unbelieving Jews. So in ver. 30, 31. the whole body of believing Gentiles, who, according to God's purpose of election, had attained justification, are opposed to the whole body of the Israelites, who came short of it. But men shall not be received into eternal life, or subjected to eternal damnation, at the last day, in collective bodies; but according as particular persons, in those bodies, have acted well or ill. Therefore, this election is not of these particular bodies unto eternal life, &c.

VII. Whoever carefully peruses the ixth, xth, and xith chapters, will find, that those who have not believed, chap. xi. 31. are the present rejected Jews; or that Israel to whom blindness hath happened in part, ver. 25. the same who fell, and on whom God hath shown severity; ver. 22. the same with the natural branches whom God spared not; ver. 21. who were broken off from the olive tree; verses 20. 19. and 17. who were cast away; ver. 15. who were diminished and fallen; ver. 12. who had stumbled; ver. 11. who were a disobedient and gainsaying people; chap. x. 21, who being ignorant of God's righteousness, went about to establish their own; Ver. 3. because they sought righteousness not by faith, but as it were, by the works of the law; chap. ix. 32. and therefore, had not attained to the law of righteousness; ver. 31. the same people spoken of in all these places, are the vessels of wrath fitted for destruction; ver. 22. and the same, for whom Paul had great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart; ver. 2, 3. in short, they are the unbelieving nation, or people of Israel; and it is with regard to the reprobation or rejection of this people that he is arguing, and vindicating the truth, justice, and wisdom of God in this ninth chapter.

Now, if we turn back and review those three chapters, we shall find that the apostle, chap. xi. 1. heartily desired and prayed that those same reprobated and rejected people of Israel might be saved; he affirms that they had not stumbled so as to fall finally and irrecoverably; chap. xi. 11. that they should have again a fulness; ver. 12. that they should be received again into the church; ver. 15. that a holiness still belonged to them; ver. 16. that if they did not still abide in unbelief, they should be grafted into their own olive tree again; ver. 23, 24. that blindness had happened unto them only for a time, till the fulness of the Gentiles be come in; ver. 25. and then he proves, from scripture, that all Israel, all those nations at present under blindness, shall be saved; ver. 26, 27. that as touching the (original) election, they were still beloved for the fathers', the patriarchs' sake; ver. 28. that, in their case, the gifts and calling of God were without repentance; ver. 29. that through our (the believing Gentiles,) mercy, they shall at length, obtain mercy, ver. 31. All these several things are spoken of that Israel, or the body of people concerning whose rejection the apostle argues in the ninth chapter. And therefore, the rejection which he there argues about, cannot be absolute reprobation to eternal damnation; but to their being, as a nation, stripped of those honours and privileges of God's peculiar church and kingdom in this world, to which, at a certain future period, they shall again be restored.

VIII. Once more: whoever carefully peruses those three chapters will find, that the people who in times past believed not God, but have NOW obtained mercy through the unbelief of the Jews, chap. xi. 30. are the whole body of the believing Gentiles: the same who were cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature; and were grafted, contrary to nature, into the good olive tree, ver. 24. 17. the same to whom God hath shown goodness, ver. 22. the WORLD that was reconciled, ver. 15. the GENTILES who were enriched, by the diminishing of the Jews, ver. 12. to whom salvation came through their fall, ver. 11. the Gentiles who had attained to righteousness, (justification,) chap. ix. 30. who had not been God's people, nor believed; but now were his people, beloved, and children of the living God, ver. 25, 26. even US whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, ver. 24. who are the vessels of mercy, on whom God has made known the riches of his glory, ver. 23. the vessels made unto honour, ver. 21. He speaks of the same body of men in all these places; namely, of the believing Gentiles principally, but not excluding the small remnant of the believing Jews, who were incorporated with them. And, it is this body of men, whose calling and election he is proving, in whose case the purpose of God according to election stands good, chap. ix. 11. And, who are the children of the promise that are counted for the seed, ver 8. these are the election, or the elect.

Now, concerning this called or elect body of people, or any particular person belonging to this body, the apostle writes thus, chap. xi. 20—22. well, because of unbelief, they (the Jews) were broken off, (reprobated, rejected,) and thou standest, (in the church among God's called and elect,) by faith; be not high-minded, but fear. For if God spared not the natural branches, (the Jews) take heed lest he also spare not thee, (the Gentiles.) Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them (the Jews) which fell, severity; but towards thee (believing Gentiles) goodness; if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise, thou also shalt be cut off, rejected, reprobated. This proves, that the calling and election, for which the apostle is arguing in the ninth chapter, is not absolute election unto eternal life, but to the present privileges of the church; the honours and advantages of God's peculiar people; which election, through unbelief and misimprovement, may be rendered void, and come to nothing. See Dr. Taylor, p. 330, &c.

From thus carefully considering the apostle's discourse, and taking in his scope and design, and weighing the different expressions he uses, in connexion with the scripture facts and scripture phrases employed in describing those facts; we must be fully convinced, that the doctrines of eternal, absolute, unconditional election and reprobation, have no place here; and that nothing but a pre-established creed, and a total inattention to the apostle's scope and design, could ever have induced men to bend these scriptures to the above purpose; and thus to endeavour to establish, as articles of faith, doctrines which, far from producing glory to God in the highest, and peace and good will among men, have filled the church of God with contention, set every man's sword against his brother, and thus done the work of Apollyon in the name of Christ. If men will maintain these, and such like, for scriptural doctrines, it is but reasonable to request that it be done in the spirit of the gospel.

CHAPTER X.

The Apostle expresses his earnest desire for the salvation of the Jews, 1. Having a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, they sought salvation by works, and not by faith in Christ, 2—4. The righteousness which is of the law, described, 5. That which is by faith described also, 6—10. He that believes and calls on the name of the Lord shall be saved, 11—13. What is necessary to salvation,—believing, hearing, preaching, a divine mission, the gospel, and obedience to its precepts, 14—16. Faith comes by hearing, 17. The universal spread of the gospel predicted by the Prophets, 18—20. The ingratitude and disobedience of the Israelites, 21.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. My heart's desire, &c.] Though the apostle knew that the Jews were now in a state of rejection, yet he knew also, that they were in this state through their own obstinacy; and that God was still waiting to be gracious; and consequently, that they might still repent and turn to him. Of his concern for their salvation, he had already given ample proof, when he was willing to become a sacrifice for their welfare, see chap. ix. 3.

Verse 2. They have a zeal of God] They believe their law to have come immediately from God himself; and are jealous of its glory and excellence; they conscientiously observe its rites and ceremonies; but they do not consider the object and end of those rites. They sin, more through ignorance than malice: and this pleads in their excuse. By this fine apology for them, the apostle prepares them for the harsher truths which he was about to deliver.

Verse 3. For—being ignorant of God's righteousness] Not knowing God's method of saving sinners, which is the only proper and efficient method: and going about to establish their own righteousness; seeking to procure their salvation by means of their own contriving: they have not submitted; they have not bowed to the determinations of the Most High, relative to his mode of saving mankind, viz. through faith in Jesus Christ, as the only available sacrifice for sin; the end to which the law pointed.

Verse 4. For, Christ is the end of the law] Where the law ends, Christ begins. The law ends with representative sacrifices; Christ begins with the real offering. The law is our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ; it cannot save, but it leaves us at his door, where alone salvation is to be found. Christ as an atoning sacrifice for sin, was the grand object of the whole sacrificial code of Moses; his passion and death were the fulfilment of its great object and design. Separate this sacrificial death of Christ from the law, and the law has no meaning; for it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sins: wherefore the Messiah is represented as saying, Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; burnt-offering and sin-offering thou hast not required; then said I, lo I come to do thy will; a body hast thou prepared me, Psal. xl. 6. 7. Heb. x. 4—10. which proves, that God never designed that the sacrifices of the law should be considered the atonement for sin; but a type or representative of that atonement; and that THE atonement was the sacrifice offered by Christ. Thus he was the END of the law, in respect to its sacrifices. And as sacrifices were offered merely to procure pardon of sin, righteousness or justification; Christ is the end of the law for this justification to every one that believeth on him, as dying for their offences, and rising again for their justification, having made peace through the blood of his cross. Therefore every Jew who rejected Christ, rejected salvation, and that very salvation which the law witnessed and required; and which could not be had but through Christ alone.

Verse 5. For, Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law] The place to which the apostle refers, seems to be Levit. xviii. 5. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments; which if a man do, he shall live in them. These words seem to be spoken in answer to an objection which might be made by a Jew,—"Did not Moses give us a law, the observance of which would secure our salvation?" Such a law Moses undoubtedly gave, and that law promises life to those who perform its precepts: but, who can plead for life on this ground, who rejects that Christ who is the end of the law? No man ever did, nor ever can fulfil that law, so as to merit salvation by the performance of it: for, as all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; they are all under the curse of the law, which says, Cursed is every one who continueth not in all the things that are written in the book of the law to do them, Deut. xxvii. 26. Gal. iii. 10. therefore by the deeds of this law, none can be justified; because all are in a state of condemnation for transgressions already committed against it. If, therefore, there was not such a provision as is made by the death of Christ, no soul could be saved.

Verse 6. But the righteousness which is of faith] As it is most evident, that there can be no justification by works, as all are sinful, and all in a guilty state; if God will grant salvation at all, it must be by faith: but faith must have an object and a reason, for its exercise—the object is Jesus Christ—the reason is the infinite merit of his passion and death. Who shall ascend into heaven, &c.] As Christ is the end of the law for justification, to every one that believes; no observation of the law can procure him. Who, by the practice of the law can bring Christ down from heaven? or when brought down, and crucified and buried, as a sacrifice for sin, who can bring him up again from the dead? And both his death and resurrection are essentially necessary for the salvation of a lost world. Or the sense of the apostle may be this: they who will not believe in Christ crucified, must in effect be seeking another Messiah to come down from heaven with a different revelation; or they who will not credit the doctrine that we preach concerning his resurrection, seem in effect to say, Christ yet remains to be raised from the dead, and reign over the Jews as a mighty secular sovereign; subjecting the Gentile world to the sway of his righteous sceptre.

Verse 8. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee] There is no occasion to seek high or low for the saving power; the word of reconciliation is nigh. The way of salvation is now both plain and easy. The law is magnified and made honourable by the death of Christ; and the doctrine of faith in his death and resurrection is fully proclaimed and amply proved to be effectual to the purpose for which it was revealed. By the preaching of the gospel, the doctrine of salvation is nigh thee, and the saving influence is at hand: it is in thy mouth, easy to be understood, easy to be professed: and in thy heart, if thou art upright before God, sincerely desiring to be saved on his own terms, not striving to establish thy own method of justification by the law, which must for ever be ineffectual, but submitting to the method of justification which God has devised.

Verse 9. That if thou shalt confess, &c.] Acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Saviour. Believe in thy heart that he who died for thy offences, has been raised for thy justification; and depend solely on him for that justification, and thou shalt be saved.

Verse 10. For, with the heart man believeth, &c.] And fession is made unto salvation.

11 For, the scripture saith, [a] Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For, [b] there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for [c] the same Lord over all [d] is rich unto all that call upon him.

be sincere in this: for with the heart, duly affected with a sense of guilt, and of the sufficiency of the sacrifice which Christ has offered; man believeth unto righteousness, believeth to receive justification; for this is the proper meaning of the term here, and in many other parts of this Epistle; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. He who believes aright in Christ Jesus, will receive such a full conviction of the truth, and such an evidence of his redemption, that his mouth will boldly confess his obligation to his Redeemer, and the blessed persuasion he has of the remission of all his sins, through the blood of the cross. One grand object of the apostle is to show the simplicity of the gospel scheme of salvation; and at the same time, its great efficacy. It is simple, and very unlike the law, which was full of rites, ordinances, ceremonies, &c. each of which required to be perfectly fulfilled: and yet, after all, even those who had the utmost zeal for God, and, as conscientiously as possible, observed all the precepts of the law, had not attained to justification, nor peace of conscience. Whereas both Jews and Gentiles who had believed on the Lord Jesus, according to the simple declarations of the gospel, were freely justified from all things from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses: and they had the witness in themselves, that they were passed from death to life.

Verse 11. For, the scripture saith] And howsoever the Jews may despise this gospel, because it comes not unto them with pomp and ceremony; it puts those who receive it, into possession of every heavenly blessing: and this is according to the positive declarations of the prophets; for it is written, Isaiah xxviii. 16. xlix. 23, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed—He shall neither be disappointed of his hope nor ashamed of his confidence; because he has that faith which is the evidence of things not seen, the subsistence of things hoped for, Heb. xi. 1. See note on chap. i. 16.

Verse 12. For, there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek] All are equally welcome to this salvation. Here the Jew has no exclusive privilege: and from this, the Greek is not rejected. One simple way of being saved, is proposed to all, viz. faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, because he is the same Lord who has made all and governs all; and is rich in mercy, to all that call upon him.

Verse 13. For, whosoever shall call, &c.] Nor shall any one who hears this doctrine of salvation, and credits it as he is commanded, be permitted to pray or supplicate the throne of grace in vain: for the prophet Joel hath declared, chap. ii. 32. whosoever shall call upon, invoke, the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Saviour of sinners, shall be saved: shall have his guilt pardoned, his heart purified; and if he abide in the faith, rooted and grounded in him, showing forth the virtues of him who has called him out of darkness into his marvellous light; he shall be saved with all the power of an eternal life.

"Believing in Christ, or God, ver. 11. and calling upon God, ver. 12, 13, 14. are in effect the same thing: as calling upon God, necessarily connects and supposes faith in him; and he who duly believes in Christ, has such a sense of his dependance upon Divine grace, that he looks unto God and trusts in his power and goodness alone for happiness: which is the true religion of the gospel." Dr. Taylor.

It is evident that St. Paul understood the text of Joel as relating to our blessed Lord; and therefore his word Κυριος must answer to the prophet's word יהוה Yehovah; which is no mean proof of the Godhead of Jesus Christ. If the text be translated, Whosoever shall invoke in the name of the Lord, which translation יקרא בשם יהוה yikra ba-shem Yehovah, will certainly bear; yet still the term Yehovah, the incommunicable name, is given to Christ; because invoking in the name, signifies soliciting one in the name or on the account of another. He, who is invoked is God; he, in whose name he is invoked, is Jesus Christ, who is here called Yehovah. He who asks mercy from God, in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ, shall get his soul saved.

Verse 14. How then shall they call on him] As the Apostle had laid so much stress on believing in order to salvation; and as this doctrine, without further explanation, might be misunderstood; it was necessary to show how this faith was produced; and therefore he lays the whole doctrine down in a beautifully graduated order.

1. There can be no salvation without the gospel: a dispensation of mercy and grace from God alone, here called, ver. 15. The gospel of peace; glad tidings of good things.

2. This must be preached, proclaimed in the world for the obedience of faith.

3. None can effectually preach this, unless he have a divine mission; for how shall they preach unless they be SENT, ver. 15. The matter must come from God; and the person who proclaims it, must have both authority and unction from on high.

4. This divinely commissioned person must be heard; it is the duty of all, to whom this message of salvation is sent, to hear it with the deepest reverence and attention.

5. What is heard, must be credited: for they who do not believe the gospel, as the record which God has given of his Son, cannot be saved, verse 14.

6. Those who believe must invoke God by Christ, which they cannot do, unless they believe in him; and in this way alone, they are to expect salvation. Professing to believe in Christ, without earnest importunate prayer for salvation, can save no man. All these things the apostle lays down as essentially necessary: and they all follow from his grand proposition, Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. But, says the apostle, How shall they CALL upon him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they BELIEVE in him, of whom they have not heard? And how shall they HEAR without a preacher? And how shall they PREACH except they be sent? And with what message, which can bring salvation, can they be sent, but with the GOSPEL OF PEACE, the GLAD TIDINGS OF GOOD THINGS. When, therefore, there is first, a proper MESSAGE; 2dly, a proper MESSENGER; 3dly, the message PREACHED, proclaimed, or properly delivered by him; 4thly, the proclamation properly HEARD and attentively considered by the people; 5thly, the message which they have heard, conscientiously BELIEVED; 6thly, the name of the Lord Jesus, by whom alone this salvation is provided, most fervently INVOKED: then, 7thly, salvation, or redemption from sin and misery, and the enjoyment of peace and happiness, will be the result of such calling, believing, hearing, preaching, sending, and message sent:—and thus, the doctrine of salvation by grace through faith, is guarded from abuse.

Verse 15. How beautiful are the feet of them that preach] Dr. Taylor remarks on this quotation, which is taken from Isai. lii. 7. that, "feet are variously used in Scripture; and sometimes have respect to things internal and spiritual. For, as the life of man, and the practice of piety, is compared to walking, Psal. i. 1. so his feet may signify the principles on which he acts, and the dispositions of his mind. Eccles. v. 1. Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God. Agreeably to this, the feet of the messengers in Isaiah, and of the apostles in this verse, may signify the validity of their mission, the authority upon which they acted; and any character or qualifications, with which they were invested."

Verse 16. But they have not all obeyed the gospel] This seems to be the objection of a Jew; as if he had said, A divine mission would be attended with success: whereas there are numbers who pay no attention to the glad tidings you preach. To this the apostle answers, that the Spirit of God by Isaiah, chap. liii. 1. foretold it would be so, even in the case of the Jews themselves, when he said, Lord, who hath believed our report? For, although God brings the message of salvation to men, he does not oblige them to embrace it. It is proposed to their understanding and conscience; but it does not become the means of salvation, unless it be affectionately credited.

Verse 17. So then, faith cometh by hearing] Preaching the gospel is the ordinary means of salvation; faith in Christ is the result of hearing the word, the doctrine of God preached. Preaching, God sends; if heard attentively, faith will be produced; and if they believe the report, the arm of the Lord will be revealed in their salvation.

Verse 18. But I say, Have they not heard?] But to return to the objection: you say, they have not all BELIEVED: I ask, have they not all HEARD? Have not the means of salvation been placed within the reach of every Jew in Palestine; and within the reach of all those who sojourn in the different Gentile countries where we have preached the gospel; as well to the Jews as to the Gentiles themselves? Yes: for we may say of the preaching of the gospel, what the Psalmist has said (Psalm xix. 2, 3.) of the heavenly bodies; Their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the end of the world. As the celestial luminaries have given testimony of the eternal power and godhead of the Deity to the habitable world; the gospel of Christ has borne testimony to his eternal goodness and mercy, to all the land of Palestine; and to the whole Roman empire. There is not a part of the Promised Land in which these glad tidings have not been preached; and there is scarcely a place in the Roman empire in which the doctrine of Christ crucified has earth, [a] and their words unto the ends of the world.

19 But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, [b] I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a [c] foolish nation I will anger you.

not been heard: if therefore the Jews and Gentiles have not believed, the fault is entirely their own; as God has amply furnished them with the means of faith and of salvation.

In Psalm xix. 4. the Psalmist has קום kavam, their line, which the Septuagint, and the apostle who quotes from them, renders φθογγος, sound; and hence some have thought, that the word in the Psalm was originally קולם, kolam, their voice. But that קו, kav, is used for word or speech, is sufficiently evident from Isaiah xxviii. 10. line upon line, precept upon precept, &c. where קו is analogous to word, or direction. It is very remarkable that these words of David, quoted by St. Paul, are mentioned in Sohar Genes. fol. 9. where it is said עברי משיחא אינון מלין Abdey maschicha einun millin. "These words are the servants of the Messiah, and measure out both the things above and the things beneath." To this notion of them the apostle may refer in his use of them in this place; and, to a Jew, the application would be legitimate.

Verse 19. But I say, did not Israel know?] You object to this preaching among the Gentiles; but is not this according to the positive declaration of God? He, foreseeing your unbelief and rebellion, said by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 21. I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. As you have provoked me to jealousy, with worshipping those that are no gods; I will provoke you to jealousy by those which are no people. This most evidently refers to the calling or inviting of the Gentiles to partake of the benefits of the gospel: and plainly predicts the envy and rage which would be excited in the Jews, in consequence of those offers of mercy made to the Gentiles.

Verse. 20. But Esaias, (the Greek orthography for Isaiah,) is very bold] Speaks out in the fullest manner and plainest language; chap. lxv. 1. notwithstanding the danger to which such a declaration exposed him, among a crooked, and perverse, and dangerous people; I was found of them that sought me not; I put my salvation in the way of those (the Gentiles) who were not seeking for it, and knew nothing of it: thus, the Gentiles which followed not after righteousness, have attained to the law of righteousness, chap. ix. 30. and they have found that redemption which the Jews have rejected.

Verse 21. But to Israel he saith] In the very next verse, (Isai. chap. lxv. 2.) All day long I have stretched forth my hands, manifesting the utmost readiness and willingness to gather them all together under my protecting care; but I stretched forth my hands in vain, for they are a disobedient and gainsaying people. They not only disobey my command, but they gainsay and contradict my prophets. Thus the apostle proves, in answer to the objection made ver. 16. that the infidelity of the Jews was the effect of their own obstinacy. And the opposition which they are now making to the gospel, was foretold and deplored 700 years before: and that their opposition, far from being a proof of the insufficiency of the gospel, proved, that this was the grand means which God had provided for their salvation; and having rejected this, they could expect no other. And this gives the apostle opportunity to speak largely concerning their rejection in the following chapter.

I. In the preceding chapter are several quotations from the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms; and as the apostle seems to take them with considerable latitude of meaning, it has been thought that he only uses their words, as being well calculated to express his sense; without paying any attention to their original import. This principle is too lax, to be introduced in such solemn circumstances. Dr. Taylor has made some judicious and useful distinctions here. After observing, that if we allow this principle, no argument can be built on any of the apostle's quotations; and that it must have been an indifferent thing with him, whether he did or did not understand the scripture; as, on this supposition, they would serve him as well without, as with the true meaning; he adds, the apostle was a strict and close quoter of the scripture: but he did not always quote them in the same manner, or for the same purpose.

1. Sometimes his intention goes no farther than using the same strong expressions, as being equally applicable to the point in hand. So, verses 6, 7, and 8. of this chapter, he uses the words of Moses, not to prove any thing; nor, as if he thought Moses spoke of the same subject; but only as intimating, that the strong and lively expressions which Moses used concerning the doctrine he taught, were equally applicable to the faith of the gospel. So in the same manner, verse 18. he quotes Psal. xix. 4. though it is likely, (see the note in that place,) that those expressions were used by the ancient Jews in application to the Messiah, as the apostle applies them.

2. Sometimes the design of the quotation is only to show that the cases are parallel: or, that what happened in his times, corresponded with what happened in former days. So chap. ii. 24.—viii. 36.—ix. 27, 28, 29.—xi. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10.—xv. 21.

3. Sometimes the quotation is only intended to explain a doctrinal point, as chap. i. 17.—iv. 6, 7, 8—18—21.——ix. 20, 21.—x. 15.—xv. 3.

4. Sometimes the quotation is designed to prove a doctrinal point. Chap. iii. 4, 10—19.—iv. 3—17.—v. 12, 13, 14.—ix. 7, 9. 12, 13, 15, 17.—x. 5, 11, 13.—xii. 19, 20.—xiii. 9.—xiv. 11.

5. Sometimes it is the intention of the quotation to prove that something was predicted, or properly foretold in the prophetic writings, as chap. ix. 25, 26, 33.—x. 16, 19, 20, 21.—xi. 26, 27.—xv. 9—13.

These things duly considered, it will appear, that the apostle has every where shown a just regard to the true sense of the scripture he quotes, in the view in which he quotes them.

These rules may help to vindicate the quotations in all the apostolic writings. And it is evident that we cannot form a true judgment upon any quotation, unless we take in the intention of the writer, or the view in which he quotes.

II. The apostle here makes a just and proper distinction between the righteousness or justification that is of the law, and that which is by faith in Christ. And, in his view of the former, shows it to be absolutely impossible; for if no man is to live thereby, to have spiritual and eternal life, but he who does these things; then, salvation on that ground, must be impossible—for, 1. the law makes no provision for the pardon of sin—2. It affords no helps for the performance of duty—3. It makes no allowances for imperfections in duty, or for imperfections in our nature—4. Its commandments, necessarily, suppose a righteous soul, and a vigorous body; and it does not lower its claims to the fallen state of man—5. It requires perfect obedience, not only in all things, but in all places and circumstances. The man who comes up to this standard, has ever been in it, and has never swerved from it, shall, by the law, live for ever. But no man since the fall, ever did so, or ever can do so. Therefore, salvation by the works of the law, is absolutely impossible. But 1. The righteousness or justification, which is by faith, receives Christ as an atoning sacrifice, by which all past sin is pardoned. 2. Receives continual supplies of grace from Christ by the eternal Spirit, through which the man is enabled to love God with all his heart, soul, mind, and strength, and his neighbour as himself. 3. This grace is afforded in sufficient degrees suited to all places, times, and circumstances, so that no trial can happen too great to be borne, as the grace of Christ is ever at hand to support and to save to the uttermost. The law is the letter that killeth; the gospel is the spirit that giveth life. Reader, let thy whole soul say, with the apostle, thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

CHAPTER XI.

God has not universally nor finally rejected Israel; nor are they all at present rejecters of the gospel, for there is a remnant of true believers now, as there was in the days of the prophet Elijah, 1—5. These have embraced the gospel, and are saved by grace, and not by the works of the law, 6. The body of the Israelites having rejected this, are blinded, according to the prophetic declaration of David, 7—10. But they have not stumbled, so as to be finally rejected; but through their fall, salvation is come to the Gentiles, 11—14. There is hope of their restoration, and that the nation shall yet become a holy people, 15, 16. The converted Gentiles must not exult over the fallen Jews; the latter having fallen by unbelief, the former stand by faith, 17—20. The Jews, the natural branches, were broken off from the true olive, and the Gentiles having been grafted in in their place, must walk uprightly, else they also shall be cut off, 21, 22. The Jews, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be again grafted in; and when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, the great Deliverer shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, according to the covenant of God, 23—27. For the sake of their fore-fathers, God loves them, and will again call them, and communicate His gifts to them, 28, 29. The gospel shall be again sent to them, as it has now been sent to the Gentiles, 30—32. This procedure is according to the immensity of the wisdom knowledge, and unsearchable judgments of God, who is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things, and to whom all adoration is due, 33—36.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

This chapter is of the prophetic kind. It was by the Spirit of prophecy, that the apostle foresaw the rejection of the Jews, which he supposes in the two preceding chapters; for when he wrote the Epistle, they were not in fact rejected; seeing their polity and church were then standing. But the event has proved that he was a true prophet; for we know that in about ten or eleven years after the writing of this letter, the temple was destroyed, the Jewish polity overthrown, and the Jews expelled out of the promised land, which they have never been able to recover to the present day.

This—1. confirms the arguments which the apostle had advanced to establish the calling of the Gentiles. For the Jews are, in fact, rejected; consequently, our calling is, in fact, not invalidated by any thing they suggested, relative to the perpetuity of the Mosaic dispensation. But that dispensation being wholly subverted, our title to the privileges of God's church and people stands clear and strong; the Jewish constitution only, could furnish objections against our claim; and the event has silenced every objection from that quarter.

2. The actual rejection of the Jews proves Paul to be a true apostle of Jesus Christ, and that he spoke by the Spirit of God; otherwise, he could not have argued so fully upon a case which was yet to come, and of which there was no appearance in the state of things when he wrote this Epistle. And this very circumstance should induce us to pay great attention to this chapter, in which he discourses concerning the extent and duration of the rejection of his countrymen, to prevent their being insulted and despised by the Gentile Christians. (1.) As to the extent of this rejection, it is not absolutely universal; some of the Jews have embraced the gospel, and are incorporated into the Christian church, with the believing Gentiles. Upon the case of these believing Jews he comments, ver. 1—7. (2.) As to the duration of it, it is not final and perpetual for all Israel, or the nation of the Jews, which is now blinded, shall one day be saved, or brought again into the kingdom or covenant of God. Upon the state of these blinded Jews he comments, ver. 7. to the end of the chapter. His design in discoursing upon this subject, was not only to make the thing itself known; but partly to engage the attention of the unbelieving Jew; to conciliate his favour, and if possible, to induce him to come into the gospel scheme, and partly to dispose the Gentile Christians not to treat the Jews with contempt; (considering that they derived all their present blessings from the patriarchs, the ancestors of the Jewish nation, and were engrafted into the good olive-tree, whence the Jews had been broken, and to admonish them to take warning by the fall of the Jews, to make a good improvement of their religious privileges, lest, through unbelief, any of them should relapse into heathenism, or perish finally at the last day.

The thread of his discourse leads him into a general survey and comparison of the several dispensations of God towards the Gentiles and Jews; and he concludes this survey with adoration of the depths of the divine knowledge and wisdom exercised in the various constitutions erected in the world, ver. 30—36. See Taylor's notes, p. 340.

Verse 1. I say then, hath God cast away his people?] Has he utterly and finally rejected them? for this is necessarily the apostle's meaning, and is the import of the Greek word απωσατο, which signifies to thrust or drive away; from απο, from, and ωθεω, to thrust or drive; has he thrust them off, and driven them eternally from him? God forbid, by no means. This rejection is neither universal nor final. For, I also am an Israelite, I am a regular descendant from Abraham, through Israel or Jacob, and by his son Benjamin. And I stand in the church of God; and in the peculiar covenant; for the rejection is only of the obstinate and disobedient; for those who believe on Christ, as I have done, are continued in the church.

Verse 2. God hath not cast away his people, which he foreknew] God has not finally and irrecoverably rejected a people, whom he has loved, (or approved) so long, ὃν προεγνω, for this is evidently the meaning of the word in this place, as we have already seen, chap. viii. 29. and is a very general meaning of the original verb ידע yadâ, in Hebrew, and γινωσκω, in Greek: as I have had often occasion to notice in different parts of this work, and what none will deny, who consults the original. See Schleusner, Parkhurst, &c.

Wot ye not what the scripture saith] Ουκ οιδατε, do ye not know what the scripture saith: The reference is to 1 Kings xix. 10, 14. And the apostle's answer to the objecting Jew, is to the following effect; God hath not universally thrust away his people, for whom, in the promise to Abraham, he intended, and to whom decreed to grant his special favour and blessing; but the case is now, much as it was in the days of Elijah; that prophet, in his addresses to God, made his complaint against Israel thus:

Verse 3. Lord, they have killed thy prophets] They will

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

what the scripture saith [a] of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying,

3 [b] Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? [c] I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

A. M. cir. 4062. A. D. cir. 58. An. Olymp. cir. CCIX. 2. A. U. C. cir. 811.

5 [d] Even so then, at this present time also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

6 And [e] if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace:

[a] Gr. in Elias?——[b] 1 Kings 19. 10, 14.——[c] 1 Kings 19. 18.

[d] Ch. 9. 27.——[e] ch. 4. 4, 5. Gal. 5. 4. See Deut. 9. 4, 5.

not permit any person to speak unto them in thy name; and they murder those who are faithful to the commission which they have received from thee.

Digged down thine altars] They are profligate and profane beyond example, and retain not the slightest form of religion.

I am left alone] There is no prophet besides myself left, and they seek to destroy me.

Verse 4. But what saith the answer of God] The answer which God made, assured him that there were seven thousand, that is, several or many thousands, for so we must understand the word seven, a certain, for an uncertain number. These had continued faithful to God; but because of Jezebel's persecution, they were obliged to conceal their attachment to the true religion; and God, in his providence, preserved them from her sanguinary rage.

Who have not bowed the knee] Baal was the god of Jezebel; or, in other words, his worship was then the worship of the state; but there were several thousands of pious Israelites, who had not acknowledged this idol; and did not partake in the idolatrous worship.

Verse 5. Even so then, at this present time] As in the present day, the irreligion of the Jews is very great; yet there is a remnant, a considerable number, who have accepted of the grace of the gospel.

According to the election of grace] And these are saved just as God has saved all believers from the beginning; they are chosen by his grace; not on account of any worth or excellence in themselves, but through his goodness are they chosen to have a place in his church, and continue to be his people, entitled to all the privileges of the new covenant. The election of grace simply signifies God's gracious design in sending the Christian system into the world, and saving under it all those who believe in Christ Jesus, and none else. Thus, the believers in Christ are chosen to inherit the blessings of the gospel; while those who seek justification by the works of the law, are rejected.

Verse 6. And if by grace] And let this very remnant of pious Jews, who have believed in Christ Jesus, know that they are brought in, precisely in the same way as God has brought in the Gentiles; the one having no more worthiness to plead than the other; both being brought in, and continued in, by God's free grace, and not by any observance of the Mosaic law.

And this is done according to the election of grace, or the rule of choosing any persons to be the people of God upon the footing of grace; which takes in all that believe in his Son Jesus Christ: some of the Jewish people did so believe; therefore, those believing Jews are a remnant according to the election of grace. They are saved in that way, in which alone, God will save mankind.

And if by grace] Then let these very persons remember, that their election and interest in the covenant of God, has no connexion with their old Jewish works; for, were it of works, grace would lose its proper nature, and cease to be what it is, a free undeserved gift.

But if it be of works] On the other hand, could it be made appear that they are invested in these privileges of the kingdom of Christ, only by the observance of the law of Moses, then GRACE would be quite set aside; and if it were not, work, or the merit of obedience, would lose its proper nature, which excludes favour and free gift. But it is not, and cannot be of WORKS; for those very Jews who now believe, and are happy in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ are so, according to the election of grace, which does not mean a particular act of God's sovereignty, which has singled out some of the Jews who deserved to have been cast off, as well as the rest; but it is that general scheme of grace, according to which God purposed to take into his church and kingdom, any among either Jews or Gentiles, who should believe on Christ. And the remnant here mentioned were not selected from their countrymen, by such a sovereign act of God's grace as might have taken in the whole if it had so pleased; but they were admitted into, and received the privileges of the Messiah's kingdom; because they believed on the Lord Jesus, and received him as their only Saviour, and thus came into that scheme of election which God had appointed. And we may observe farther, that out of this election, otherwise work is no more work.

7 What then? [a] Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were [b] blinded

8 (According as it is written, [c] God hath given them the spirit of [d] slumber, [e] eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear;) unto this day.

they, as well as the others, would have been excluded, had they, like the rest, remained in unbelief; and into this election of grace all the Jews, to a man, notwithstanding they were all sinners, would have been taken, had they believed in Christ Jesus. This is the true notion of the election of grace. See Taylor.

Verse 7. What then] What is the real state of the case before us? Israel, the body of the Jewish people, have not obtained that which they so earnestly desire, i. e. to be continued, as they have been hitherto, the peculiar people of God; but the election hath obtained it; as many of them as have believed in Jesus Christ, and accepted salvation through him; this is the grand scheme of the election by grace; God chooses to make those his peculiar people who believe in his Son, and none other shall enjoy the blessings of his kingdom. Those who would not receive him are blinded; they have shut their eyes against the light, and are in the very circumstances of those mentioned by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xxix. 10.

Verse 8. God hath given them the spirit of slumber] As they had wilfully closed their eyes against the light; so God has, in judgment, given them up to the spirit of slumber. The very word and revelation of God which should have awakened their consciences, and opened their eyes and ears, have had a very different effect; and because they did not receive the truth in the love thereof, that, which would otherwise have been the savour of life unto life, has become the savour of death unto death; and this continues to the present day.

Verse 9. And David saith, Let their table, &c.] And from their present disposition, it is reasonable to conclude, that the same evils will fall upon them as fell upon the disobedient in former times, as predicted by David, Psalm lxix. 22, 23. that their very blessings should become curses to them; and their temporal mercies be their only recompense; and yet, even these earthly blessings, by not being enjoyed in the Lord, should be a stumbling-block, over which they should fall; and instead of being a blessing, should be the means of their punishment. They would have a worldly Messiah, and therefore they rejected him, whose kingdom was not of this world.

Verse 10. Let their eyes be darkened] All these words are declarative, and not imprecatory. God declares what will be the case of such obstinate unbelievers; their table, their common providential blessings, will become a snare, a trap, a stumbling-block, and the means of their punishment. Their eyes will be more and more darkened, as they persist in their unbelief, and their back shall be bowed down always; far from becoming a great and powerful nation, they shall continue ever in a state of abject slavery and oppression, till they acknowledge Jesus as the promised Messiah; and submit to receive redemption in his blood.

Verse 11. Have they stumbled that they should fall] Have the Jews, now for their disobedience and unbelief rejected, so sinned against God, as to be for ever put out of the reach of his mercy? By no means. Are they, as a nation, utterly irrecoverable? This is the sense of the place, and here the prophecy of the restoration of the Jewish nation commences.

But rather, through their fall salvation is come] The church of God cannot fail; if the Jews have broken the everlasting covenant, Isaiah xxiv. 5. the Gentiles shall be taken into it; and this very circumstance shall be ultimately the means of exciting them to seek and claim a share in the blessings of the new covenant; and this is what the apostle terms provoking them to jealousy, i. e. exciting them to emulation, for so the word should be understood. We should observe here, that the fall of the Jews was not, in itself, the cause or reason of the calling of the Gentiles; for whether the Jews had stood or fallen, whether they had embraced or rejected the gospel; it was the original purpose of God to take the Gentiles into the church; for this was absolutely implied in the covenant made with Abraham: and it was in virtue of that covenant, that the Gentiles were now called; and not BECAUSE of the unbelief of the Jews. And hence we see that their fall was not the necessary means of the salvation of the Gentiles; for certainly the unbelief of the Jews could never produce faith in the Gentiles. The simple state of the case is; the Jews, in the most obstinate and unprintheir fall, salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

12 Now, if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the [a] diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness?

13 For, I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as [b] I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office:

cipled manner, rejected Jesus Christ and the salvation offered them in his name: then the apostles turned to the Gentiles, and they heard and believed. The Jews themselves perceived that the Gentiles were to be put in possession of similar privileges to those which they, as the peculiar people of God, had enjoyed; this they could not bear, and put forth all their strength in opposition and persecution. The calling of the Gentiles, which existed in the original purpose of God, became in a certain way accelerated, by the unbelief of the Jews, through which they forfeited all their privileges, and fell from that state of glory and dignity in which they had been long placed as the peculiar people of God. See Taylor.

Verse 12. Now, if the fall of them] The English reader may imagine that, because fall is used in both these verses, the original word is the same. But their fall, and the fall of them, is παραπτωμα, the same word which we render offence, chap. v. 15, 17, 18. and might be rendered lapse. Whereas that they should fall, (ver. 11.) is, ινα πεσωσι· Now, πιπτω to fall, is used in a sense so very emphatical as to signify being slain. So Homer, Il. viii. ver. 475.

Ηματι τῳ, οτ' αν οι μεν επι πρυμνησι μαχωνται,
Στεινει εν αινοτατῳ, περι πατροκλοιο π ε σ ο ν τ ο ς·

COWPER.

It is well known, that to fall in battle, means to be killed. It is in such a sense as this, that St. Paul used the word fall, when he says, Have they stumbled that they should FALL? he means a fall quite destructive and ruinous; whereas by their fall, and the fall of them, he means no more than such a lapse as was recoverable; as in the case of Adam's offence. See Dr. Taylor.

The riches of the world] If, in consequence of their unbelief, the riches of God's grace and goodness be poured out on the whole Gentile world; how much more shall that dispensation of grace and mercy enrich and aggrandize the Gentiles, which shall bring the whole body of the Jews to the faith of the gospel. Here the apostle supposes, or rather predicts, that such a dispensation shall take place; and that, therefore, the Jews have not so stumbled as to be finally irrecoverable.

Verse 13. This, and the following verse, should be read in a parenthesis. St. Paul, as the apostle of the Gentiles, wished to show them the high pitch of glory and blessedness to which they had been called, that they might have a due sense of God's mercy, in calling them to such a state of salvation; and, that they might be jealous over themselves, lest they should fall as the Jews had done before them: and he dwells particularly on the greatness of those privileges which the Gentiles had now received, that he might stir up the minds of his countrymen to emulation; and might be the means of saving some of them, as he states in the following verse.

I magnify mine office] This is a very improper translation of την διακονιαν μου δοξαζω, which is, literally, I honour this my ministry. Dr. Taylor has justly observed, that magnify, except when applied to the Most High, carries with it, in our language, the idea of stretching beyond the bounds of truth. Whereas the apostle simply means that he does justice to his ministry, by stating the glorious things which he was commissioned to preach among the Gentiles: blessings which the Jews, by their obstinacy, had forfeited.

Verse 14. Might save some of them.] And yet all these were among the reprobate, or rejected; however, the apostle supposed that none of them was irrecoverably shut out from the Divine favour; and that some of them, by his preaching, might be disposed to receive salvation by Christ Jesus.

Verse 15. But life from the dead] If the rejection of the Jews became the occasion of our receiving the gospel, so conciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

16 For, if the [a] first-fruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

17 And, if some [b] of the branches be broken off, and [c] thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed in [d] among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree;

18 [e] Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in.

20 Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith.

that we can even glory in our tribulations, though they themselves became chief instruments of our sufferings; yet so far must we feel from exulting over them, that we should esteem their full conversion to God as great and choice a favour as we would the restoration of a most intimate friend to life, who had been at the gates of death.

The restoration of the Jews to a state of favour with God, to which the apostle refers, and which is too plainly intimated by the spirit of prophecy, to admit of a doubt, will be a most striking event. Their being preserved, as a distinct people, is certainly a strong collateral proof that they shall once more be brought into the church of God: and their conversion to Christianity will be an incontestable proof of the truth of Divine revelation; and doubtless will become the means of converting multitudes of deists, who will see the prophecies of God which had been delivered so long before, so strikingly fulfilled in this great event. We need not wonder if a whole nation should then be born, as in a day.

Verse 16. For, if the first-fruit be holy] As the consecrating the first-fruits to God, was the means of drawing down his blessing upon the rest; so the conversion of Abraham to the true faith, and the several Jews who have now embraced Christianity, are pledges that God will, in process of time, admit the whole Jewish nation into his favour again, so that they shall constitute a part of the visible church of Christ.

If the root be holy, so are the branches.] The word holy in this verse, is to be taken in that sense which it has so frequently in the Old and New Testaments, viz. consecrated, set apart to sacred uses. It must not be forgotten that the first converts to Christ were from among the Jews; these formed the root of the Christian church; these were holy, ἁγιοι, consecrated to God, and those who among the Gentiles were converted by their means, were also ἁγιοι, consecrated; but the chief reference is to the ancestors of the Jewish people, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and as these were devoted to God, and received into his covenant; all their posterity, the branches which proceeded from this root, became entitled to the same privileges: and as the root still remains, and the branches also, the descendants from that root still remain; they still have a certain title to the blessings of the covenant; though, because of their obstinate unbelief, these blessings are suspended, as they cannot, even on the ground of the old covenant, enjoy these blessings but through faith: for, it was when Abraham believed God, that it was accounted to him for righteousness; and thus he became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith.

Verse 17. And, if some of the branches, &c.] If the present nation of the Jews, because of their unbelief, are cut off from the blessings of the church of God, and the high honour and dignity of being his peculiar people; and thou being a wild olive—ye Gentiles, being without the knowledge of the true God, and consequently bringing forth no fruits of righteousness; wert grafted in among them, are now inserted in the original stock, having been made partakers of the faith of Abraham, and consequently of his blessings; and enjoy, as the people did who sprang from him, the fatness of the olive tree, the promises made to the patriarchs, and the spiritual privileges of the Jewish church:

Verse 18. Boast not against the branches] While you are ready to acknowledge that you were included in the covenant made with Abraham, and are now partakers of the same blessings with him; do not exult over, much less insult the branches, his present descendants, whose place you now fill up, according to the election of grace: for, remember ye are not the root, nor do ye bear the root, but the root bears you. You have not been the means of deriving any blessing on the Jewish people; but through that very people which you may be tempted to despise, all the blessings and excellencies which you enjoy, have been communicated to you.

Verse 19. Thou wilt say then, &c.] You may think that you have reason to exult over them; because it is a fact that God has been displeased with them, and therefore has broken them off; has cast them out of the church, and taken you into it in their place:—

Verse 20. Well; because of unbelief, &c.] This statement is all true: but then, consider, why is it that they were [a] Be not high-minded, but [b] fear: 21 For, if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

22 Behold, therefore, the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but towards thee, goodness, [c] if thou continue in his goodness:

cast out? Was it not because of their unbelief? And you stand by faith: you were made partakers of these blessings by faith; be not high-minded; let this humble, not exalt you in your own estimation; for if the blessings were received by faith, consequently not by works: and if not by works, you have no merit; and, what you have received, is through the mere mercy of God. They once stood by faith; they gave place to unbelief, and fell: you stand now by faith, but it is as possible for you to be unfaithful, as it was for them; and consequently you may fall under the Divine displeasure, as they have done; be not high-minded, but fear; watch over yourselves with godly jealousy.

Verse 21. For, if God spared not the natural branches] If He, in his infinite justice and holiness, could not tolerate sin in the people whom he foreknew, whom he had so long loved, cherished, miraculously preserved, and blessed; take heed lest he also spare not thee. Be convinced that the same righteous principle in him will cause him to act towards you as he has acted towards them, if you sin after the similitude of their transgression: and to this, self-sufficiency, and self-confidence, will soon lead you. Remember, therefore, the rock whence you were hewn; and the hole of the pit whence ye were digged. Depend incessantly on God's free grace, that ye may abide in his favour.

Verse 22. Behold, therefore, the goodness] The exclamation, behold the goodness of God! is frequent among the Jewish writers, when they wish to call the attention of men to particular displays of God's mercy; especially towards those who are singularly unworthy. See several instances in Schoettgen.

And severity of God] As χρηστης, goodness, signifies the essential quality of the Divine nature, the fountain of all good to men and angels; so αποτομια, severity, as it is here translated, signifies that particular exercise of his goodness and holiness which leads him to sever from his mystical body whatsoever would injure, corrupt, or destroy it. The apostle in these verses uses a metaphor taken from engrafting, εγκεντρισις, whence the verb εγκεντριζω, from εν in, and κεντριζω to puncture, because engrafting was frequently done by making a puncture in the bark of a tree, and then inserting a bud taken from another. This was the practice in the Roman agriculture, as we learn from Virgil, Georg. ii. ver. 73.

Nam quà se medio tradunt de cortice gemmæ,
Et tenues rumpunt tunicas; angustus in ipso
Fit nodo sinus: huc alienâ ex arbore germen
Includunt; udoque docent inolescere libro.

For where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows;
Just in that space, a narrow slit we make,
Then other buds from bearing trees we take;
Inserted thus, the wounded rind we close;
In whose moist womb, the admitted infant grows.
DRYDEN.

In all countries the principle is the same, though the mode is various.

The apostle having adopted this metaphor as the best he could find, to express that act of God's justice and mercy, by which the Jews were rejected, and the Gentiles elected in their stead; and, in order to show that though the Jewish tree was cut down, or its branches lopped off, yet it was not rooted up, he informs the Gentile believers that, as it is customary to insert a good cion in a bad or useless stock, they who were bad, contrary to the custom in such cases, were grafted in a good stock, and their growth and fruitfulness proclaimed the excellence and vegetative life of the stock in which they were inserted. This was the goodness of the heavenly Gardener to them; but it was severity, αποτομια, an act of excision to the Jews.

The Reader will observe that this term belongs to engrafting: often, in this operation, a part of a branch is cut off; in that part which remains in connexion with the tree, a little slit is made, and then a small twig or branch taken from another tree, is, at its lower end, shaved thin, wedge-like, and then inserted in the cleft, after which the whole is tied together, clayed round, &c. and the bark unites to bark; and the stock and the cion become thus one tree, the juices of the old stock circulating through the tubes of the newly inserted twig; and thus both live, though the branch inserted bears a very different fruit from that which the parent stock bore. I have often performed this operation, and in this very way, with success. And I cannot conceive that the apostle could have chosen a more apt, or a more elegant metaphor. The Jewish tree does not bring forth proper fruit; but it will answer well to engraft a proper fruit-bearing tree on. The Gentiles are a wild olive, which is a tree that bears no fruit; but it may be made to bear if grafted on the Jewish stock. Some of the branches were cut off, that the branches of this wild olive might be inserted: the act by otherwise, [a] thou also shalt be cut off.

23 And they also, [b] if they abide not in unbelief, shall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again.

24 For, if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature; and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural which this insertion is made, is termed χρηστοτης goodness, benignity: the act by which the branches of the original stock are broken off, is termed αποτομια excision, from απο from, and τεμνω, I cut, still keeping the metaphor, taken from engrafting, in view. Now, let the apostle's mode of reasoning be observed; the tree is cut down, or its branches are lopped off; but the tree is not rooted up. The Jews have stumbled, but not so as to fall irrecoverably; for, if they abide not still in unbelief, they shall be grafted in, ver. 23. The Gentiles, which are grafted in, on these cut-off branches, like the cion inserted in another stock, partake of the root, which absorbs from the earth the nutritious juices, and the fatness of the Jewish tree, the blessings and privileges which that people have long enjoyed, in consequence of the Abrahamic covenant, ver. 17. the root, the Jewish covenant, bears them; not they the root, ver 18. As, therefore, the continuance of the Gentiles, as the church and people of God, depends upon their interest in the Abrahamic covenant, the blessings of which they derive through the medium of the Jews; they should be grateful to God, and tolerant to those through whom they have received such blessings. And as in the case of grafting, the prosperity of the engrafted cion depends on the existence of the parent stock; so the continuance of the Gentiles in this state of favour, (following the metaphor,) in a certain way, depends on the continuance of the Jewish people: and they are preserved, as so many cions, which are, in process of time, to be engrafted on the Gentiles; and thus the Gentiles shall become the means of salvation to the Jews; as the Jews have been the means of salvation to the Gentiles. Following, therefore, the metaphor a little further, which seems to have been so well chosen in all its parts; the continued existence of the Jews, as a distinct people, together with the acknowledgment of the Gentiles, that they have derived their salvation and state of blessedness through them; of which Jesus Christ, born of the stock of David, is the author; and the Jewish scriptures, which the Gentiles receive as inspired by God, are the evidence; then, the restoration of the Jews, to the favour of God, is a necessary consequence; and, indeed, seems to be the principal end in reference to which the apostle reasons. The Gentiles, however, are to take care that the restoration of the Jews be not at their expense; as their calling and election were at the expense of the Jews: the latter being cut off, that the former might be grafted in, ver. 19. Of this there is no kind of necessity, for the original stock, the Abrahamic covenant, is sufficient to receive them all; and so Jews and Gentiles become one eternal flock, under one Bishop and Shepherd of all their souls.

Verse 23. If they abide not in unbelief] So, we find that their rejection took place in consequence of their wilful obstinacy: and, that they may return into the fold, the door of which still stands open.

For God is able to graff them in again.] Fallen as they are, and degraded, God can, in the course of his providence and mercy, restore them to all their forfeited privileges; and this will take place if they abide not in unbelief; which intimates, that God has furnished them with all the power and means necessary for faith; and that they may believe on the Lord Jesus whenever they will. The veil now continues on their heart, but it is not a veil which God has spread there, but a veil occasioned by their own voluntary and obstinate unbelief; and, when they shall turn to the Lord (Jesus) the veil shall be taken away. See what the apostle has said, 2 Cor. iii. 6—18.

Verse 24. The olive tree, which is wild by nature] Which is κατα φυσιν, naturally wild and barren; for, that the wild olive bore no fruit, is sufficiently evident from the testimony of the authors who have written on the subject; hence the proverb Ακαρποτερος αγριπποs; more unfruitful than the wild olive. Λακωνες γαρ αγριαν ελαιαν, αγριπτον καλουσι· for the Lacedemonians term the wild olive αγριπτον. See SUIDAS. And hence HESYCHIUS interprets Αγριελαιος, the wild olive, (the word used here by St. Paul,) by ακαρπος, unfruitful: and the reason given in DIOGEN. Proverb. Cent. ii. n. 63, is φυτον γαρ εστιν ὁ αγριπποs ακαρπον· for the wild olive is an unfruitful tree. On this account the apostle very properly says, thou wert cut, εκ της κατα φυσιν αγριελαιου, out of that olive which is uncultivated, because it is barren: the κατα φυσιν does not refer here to its being naturally barren; but to its being commonly, or customarily permitted to remain so. And, that this is the import of the phrase here, is evident from the next clause of the verse.

And wert graffed contrary to nature] Παρα φυσιν, contrary to all custom; for a cion taken from a barren or useless tree, is scarcely ever known to be grafted into a good stock: but here the Gentiles, a fruitless and sinful race, are grafted on the ancient patriarchal stock. Now, if it was possible to effect such a change in the state and disposition of the Gentiles, who were αθεοι εν τω κοσμω, Ephes. ii. 12. without God, ATHEISTS in the world: how much more possible is it, speaking after the manner of men, to bring about a similar change in the Jews, who acknowledge the one, only, and true God; and receive the law and the prophets as a revelation from him. This seems to be the drift of the apostle's argument.

Verse 25. I would not—that ye should be ignorant of this mystery] Mystery μυστηριον, signifies any thing that is hidden or covered, or not fully made manifest. The Greek word seems to have been borrowed from the Hebrew מסתר mister, from the root סתר satar, to hide, conceal, &c. though some derive it from μυεσθαι, to be initiated into sacred rites, from μυειν, to shut up. In the New Testament it signifies, generally, any thing, or doctrine that has not, in former times, been fully known to men: or, something that has not been heard of; or which is so deep, profound, and difficult of comprehension, that it cannot be apprehended without special direction and instruction: here, it signifies the doctrine of the future restoration of the Jews, not fully known in itself, and not at all known as to the time in which it will take place. In chap. xvi. 25. it means the Christian religion, not known till the advent of Christ. The apostle wished the Romans not to be ignorant of this mystery, viz. that such a thing was intended: and, in order to give them as much instruction as possible on this subject, he gives them some characteristic, or sign of the times when it was to take place.

Lest ye should be wise in your own conceits] It seems from this, and from other expressions in this Epistle, that the converted Gentiles had not behaved towards the Jews with that decorum and propriety which the relation they bore to them required. In this chapter the apostle strongly guards them against giving way to such a disposition.

Blindness in part is happened to Israel] Partial blindness, or blindness to a part of them; for they were not all unbelievers: several thousands of them had been converted to the Christian faith; though the body of the nation, and especially its rulers, civil and spiritual, continued opposed to Christ and his doctrine.

Until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.] And this blindness will continue till the church of the Gentiles be fully completed; till the gospel be preached through all the nations of the earth, and multitudes of heathens every where, embrace the faith. The words πληρωμα των εθνων, may be borrowed from the מלא הגוים melo hagoyim, a multitude of nations, which the Septuagint translate by πληθος εθνων. By the πληρωμα, or fulness, a great multitude may be intended; which should be so dilated on every hand as to fill various regions. In this sense the words were understood by Solomon ben Melec, מהם ארצות הגוים שימלאו The nations of the Gentiles shall be filled with them: the apostle, therefore, seems to give this sense of the mystery, that the Jews will continue in a state of blindness till such time as a multitude of nations, or Gentiles, shall be converted to the Christian faith; and the Jews, hearing of this, shall be excited, by a spirit of emulation, to examine and acknowledge the validity of the proofs of Christianity; and embrace the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We should not restrict the meaning of these words too much, by imagining—1. That the fulness must necessarily mean all the nations of the universe; and all the individuals of those nations: probably, no more than a general spread of Christianity over many nations which are now under the influence of Pagan or Mohammedan superstition, may be what is intended. 2. We must not suppose, that the coming in here mentioned, necessarily means what most religious persons understand by conversion, a thorough change of the whole heart and the whole life; the acknowledgment of the Divine mission of our Lord, and a cordial embracing of the Christian religion, will sufficiently fulfil the apostle's words. If we wait for the conversion of the Jews, till such a time as every Gentile and Mohammedan soul shall be, in this especial sense, converted to God, then—we shall wait for ever.

Verse 26. And so all Israel shall be saved] Shall be brought into the way of salvation, by acknowledging the Messiah; for the word certainly does not mean eternal glory: for, no man can conceive that a time will ever come in which every Jew, then living, shall be taken to the kingdom of glory. The term saved, as applied to the Israelites in different parts of the Scripture, signifies no more than their being gathered out of the nations of the world; separated to God, and possessed of the high privilege of being his peculiar people. And we know that this is the meaning of the term, by finding it applied to the body of the Israelites, when this alone was the sum of their state. See the Preface, pag. viii, &c.

28 As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes: but as touching the election, they are [b] beloved for the fathers' sakes.

29 For, the gifts and calling of God are [c] without repentance.

30 For, as ye [d] in times past have not [e] believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief:

31 Even so have these also now not [f] believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

on this head, by a quotation from Scripture, which, in the main, is taken from Isai. lix. 20. The Deliverer shall come out of Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Now this cannot be understood of the manifestation of Christ among the Jews; or of the multitudes which were converted before, at, and for some time after, the day of Pentecost; for these times were all past when the apostle wrote this Epistle, which was probably about the 57th or 58th year of our Lord: and, as no remarkable conversion of that people has since taken place, therefore, the fulfilment of this prophecy is yet to take place. In what manner Christ is to come out of Zion; and in what way, or by what means he is to turn away transgression from Jacob, we cannot tell; and to attempt to conjecture, when the time, occasion, means, &c. are all in mystery, would be more than reprehensible.

Verse 27. For, this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.] The Reader, on referring to Isai. chap. lix. 20, 21. will find that the words of the original are here greatly abridged. They are the following:

And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord. As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord, My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.

For the manner in which St. Paul makes his quotations from Scripture, see the observations at the end of the preceding chapter. The whole of these two verses should be read in a parenthesis, as I have marked them in the text; for it is evident that the 25th verse should be immediately connected with the 28th.

It may not be amiss to subjoin here a collection of those texts in the Old Testament, that seem to point out a restoration of the Jewish commonwealth, to a higher degree of excellence than it has yet attained.—Isai. ii. 2—5. xix. 24. 25. xxv. 6, &c. xxx. 18. 19, 26. lx. throughout: lxv. 17. to the end: Jerem. xxxi. 10, 11, 12. xlvi. 27, 28. Ezek. xx. 34, 40, &c. xxviii. 25, 26. xxxiv. 20, &c. xxxvi. 8—16. xxxvii. 21—28. xxxix. 25, &c. Joel iii. 1, 2, 17, 20, 21. Amos ix. 9. to the end: Obad. ver. 17, 21. Micah iv. 3—7. vii. 18, 19, 20. Zeph. iii. 19, 20.

Verse 28. As concerning the gospel] The unbelieving Jews, with regard to the gospel, which they have rejected, are at present enemies to God, and aliens from his kingdom, under his Son Jesus Christ, on account of that extensive grace which has overturned their peculiarity, by admitting the Gentiles into his church and family: but with regard to the original purpose of election, whereby they were chosen and separated from all the people of the earth, to be the peculiar people of God, they are beloved for the fathers' sake; he has still favour in store for them, on account of their forefathers, the Patriarchs.

Verse 29. For, the gifts and calling of God, &c.] The gifts which God has bestowed upon them; and the calling, the invitation with which he has favoured them, he will never revoke. In reference to this point, there is no change of mind in him; and, therefore, the possibility and certainty of their restoration to their original privileges of being the people of God, of enjoying every spiritual blessing with the fulness of the Gentiles, may be both reasonably and safely inferred.

Repentance, when applied to God, signifies simply change of purpose relative to some declaration made subject to certain conditions. See this fully explained and illustrated by himself, Jer. xviii. 7, 8, 9.

Verse 30. For, as ye in times past] The apostle pursues his argument in favour of the restoration of the Jews. As ye Gentiles, in times past, for many ages back;

Have not believed] Were in a state of alienation from God; yet, not so as to be totally and for ever excluded:

Have now obtained mercy] For ye are now taken into the kingdom of the Messiah; through their unbelief, by that method which, in destroying the Jewish peculiarity, and fulfilling the Abrahamic covenant, has occasioned the unbelief and obstinate opposition of the Jews.

Verse 31. Even so have these also] In like manner the Jews are, through their infidelity, shut out of the kingdom of God:—

That through your mercy] But this exclusion will not be everlasting, but this will serve to open a new scene, when, through farther displays of mercy to you Gentiles, they also may obtain mercy; shall be received into the kingdom of God again; and this shall take place whenever they shall consent to acknowledge the Lord Jesus, and see it their privilege to be fellow-heirs with the Gentiles, of the grace of life.

As sure, therefore, as the Jews were once in the kingdom, and the Gentiles were not; as sure as the Gentiles are now in the kingdom, and the Jews are not; so surely will the Jews be brought back into that kingdom.

Verse 32. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief] Συνεκλεισε γαρ ο Θεος, God hath shut or locked them all up under unbelief. This refers to the guilty state of both Jews and Gentiles. They had all broken God's law; the Jews, the written law; the Gentiles, the law written in their hearts; see chap. i. 19, 20. and ii. 14, 15. They are represented here as having been accused of their transgressions; tried at God's bar; found guilty on being tried; condemned to the death they had merited; remanded to prison, till the sovereign will, relative to their execution, should be announced; shut, or locked up, under the jailer Unbelief: and there, both continued in the same state, awaiting the execution of their sentence; but God, in his own compassion, moved by no merit in either party, caused a general pardon by the gospel, to be proclaimed to all. The Jews have refused to receive this pardon, on the terms which God has proposed it; and therefore continue locked up under unbelief. The Gentiles have welcomed the offers of grace, and are delivered out of their prison. But, as the offers of mercy continue to be made to all, indiscriminately, the time will come, when the Jews, seeing the vast accession of the Gentile world to the kingdom of the Messiah, and the glorious privileges which they in consequence enjoy, shall also lay hold on the hope set before them, and thus become with the Gentiles, one flock under one Shepherd and Bishop of all their souls. The same figure is used Gal. iii. 22, 23. But the Scripture hath concluded συνεκλεισεν, locked up all under sin, that the promise, by faith of Christ Jesus, might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept, εφρουρουμεθα, we were guarded as in a strong hold, under the law; shut up, συγκεκλεισμενοι locked up together unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. It is a fine and well chosen metaphor in both places; and forcibly expresses the guilty, helpless, wretched state of both Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!] This is a very proper conclusion of the whole preceding discourse. Wisdom may here refer to the designs of God; knowledge, to the means which he employs to accomplish these designs. The designs are the offspring of infinite wisdom, and therefore they are all right: the means are the most proper, as being the choice of an infinite knowledge that cannot err: we may safely credit the goodness of the design, founded in infinite wisdom: we may rely on the due accomplishment of the end, because the means are chosen and applied by infinite knowledge and skill.

Verse 34. For who hath known the mind of the Lord?] Who can pretend to penetrate the counsels of God; or fathom the reasons of his conduct? His designs and his counsels are like himself, infinite; and, consequently, inscrutable. It is strange that, with such a Scripture as this before their eyes, men should sit down, and coolly and positively write about counsels and decrees of God, formed from all eternity, of which they speak with as much confidence and decision as if they had formed a part of the council of the Most High; and had been with him in the beginning of his ways! A certain writer, after having entered into all these counsels, and drawn out his black-lined scheme of absolute and eternal reprobation, with all its causes and effects; and then his light-lined scheme of absolute and eternal ELECTION, with all its causes and effects; all deduced in the most regular and graduated order, link by link, concludes with ver. 33, O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How UNSEARCHABLE are his judgments, and his ways PAST FINDING OUT! But this writer forgot that he had searched out God's judgments in the one case, and found out his ways in the other; and that he had given, as a proof of the success of his researches, a complete exhibition of the whole scheme! This conduct is worthy of more than mere reprehension: and yet he who differs from such opinions, gives, in the apprehension of some, this proof of his being included in some of the links of the black list! We may rest with the conviction, that God is as merciful and good in all his ways, as He is wise and just. But, as we cannot comprehend him, neither can we his operations: it is our place, who are the objects of his infinite mercy and kindness, to adore in silence, and to obey with alacrity and delight.

Verse 35. Or, who hath first given to him] Who can pretend to have any demands upon God? To whom is he indebted? Have either Jews or Gentiles any right to his blessings? May not he bestow his favours as he pleases, and to whom he pleases? Does he do any injustice to the Jews in choosing the Gentiles? And was it because he was under obligation to the Gentiles, that he has chosen them in the place of the Jews? Let him who has any claim on God, prefer it; and he shall be compensated.

But how can the CREATOR be indebted to the creature? How can the CAUSE be dependent on the effect? How can the AUTHOR of Providence, and the FATHER of every good and perfect gift, be under obligation to them for whom he provides, and who are wholly dependent on his bounty?

Verse 36. For of him, &c.] This is so far from being the case, for ἐξ αὐτου, OF him, as the original designer and author; and δι' αὐτου, BY him, as the prime and efficient cause; and εἰς αὐτον, TO him, as the ultimate end for the manifestation of his eternal glory and goodness, are all things in universal Nature, through the whole compass of time and eternity.

The emperor Marcus Antoninus, (εἰς ἑαυτον, lib. iv.) has a saying very much like this of St. Paul, which it is very probable he borrowed from this Epistle to the Romans. Speaking of Nature, whom he addresses as God, he says Ὦ φυσις, ἐκ σου παντα, ἐν σοι παντα, εἰς σε παντα; O, Nature! of thee are all things; in thee are all things; to thee are all things. Several of the Gentile philosophers had expressions of the same import, as may be seen in Wetstein's quotations.

To whom be glory] And let him have the praise of all his works, from the hearts and mouths of all his intelligent creatures, for ever; throughout all the generations of men. Amen, so be it; let this be established for ever!

I. The apostle considers the designs of God inscrutable; and his mode of governing the world incomprehensible. His designs, schemes, and ends, are all infinite; and, consequently, unfathomable. It is impossible to account for the dispensations either of his justice or mercy. He does things under both these characters which far surpass the comprehension of men. But, though his dispensations are a great deep, yet they are never self-contradictory: though they far surpass our reason, yet they never contradict reason; nor are they ever opposite to those ideas which God has implanted in man, of goodness, justice, mercy, and truth. But it is worthy of remark, that we can more easily account for the dispensations of his justice, than we can for the dispensations of his mercy. We can every where see 10,000 reasons why he should display his justice; but scarcely can we find one reason why he should display his mercy. And yet, these displays of mercy, for which we can scarcely find a reason, are infinitely greater and more numerous than his displays of justice; for which the reasons are, in a vast variety of cases, as obvious as they are multiplied. The sacrifice of Christ is certainly an infinite reason why God should extend, as he does, his mercy to all men; but Jesus Christ is the gift of God's love: who can account for the love that gave him to redeem a fallen world! The Jews have fallen under the displeasure of Divine justice; why they should be objects of this displeasure is at once seen, in their ingratitude, disobedience, unbelief, and rebellion. But a most especial Providence has watched over them, and preserved them in all their dispersions for 1700 years. Who can account for this? Again, these very persons have a most positive promise of a future deliverance, both great and glorious. Why should this be? The Gentile world was long left without a Divine revelation, while the Jews enjoyed one: Who can account for this? The Jews are now cast out of favour, in a certain sense, and the reasons of it are sufficiently obvious; and the Gentiles, without any apparent reason, are taken into favour. In all these things his judgments are unsearchable; and his ways past finding out.

II. Once more let it be remarked, that, although God is every where promising, and bestowing the greatest and most ennobling privileges, together with an eternal and ineffable glory, for which we can give no reason but his own endless goodness, through the death of his Son; yet, in no case does he remove those privileges, nor exclude from this glory but where the reasons are most obvious to the meanest capacity.

III. This Epistle has been thought, by some, to afford proofs that God, by an eternal decree, had predestinated to eternal perdition millions of millions of human souls, before they had any existence, except in his own purpose, and for no other reason but his sovereign pleasure! But such a decree can be no more found in this book, than such a disposition in the mind of Him who is the perfection, as he is the model, of wisdom, goodness, justice, mercy, and truth. May God save the Reader from profaning his name, by suppositions, at once so monstrous and absurd!

CHAPTER XII.

Such displays of God's mercy as Jews and Gentiles have received, should induce them to consecrate themselves to Him; and not be conformed to the world, 1, 2. Christians are exhorted to think meanly of themselves, 3. And each to behave himself properly in the office which he has received from God, 4—8. Various important moral duties recommended, 9—18. We must not avenge ourselves, but overcome evil with good, 19—21.

NOTES ON CHAP. XII.

The apostle having now finished the doctrinal part of this Epistle, proceeds to the practical: and here it may be necessary to take a view of his arguments in the preceding chapters.

The election, calling, and justification of the believing Gentiles, and their being admitted into the kingdom and covenant of God, and having an interest in all the privileges and honours of his children. (1.) That they have a clear and substantial title to all these he has proved in chap. i. ii. and iii. (2.) That this right is set on the same footing with Abraham's title to the blessings of the covenant, he proves chap. iv. (3.) That it gives us a title to privileges and blessings as great as any the Jews could glory in, by virtue of that covenant, chap. v. 1—12. (4.) He goes still higher, and shows that our being interested in the gift and grace of God in Christ Jesus, is perfectly agreeable to the grace which he has bestowed upon all mankind, in delivering them from that death of the body brought on them by Adam's transgression, chap. v. 12—21. (5.) He fully explains, both with regard to the Gentiles and Jews, the nature of the Gospel Constitution, in relation to its obligations to holiness; and the advantages it gives for encouragement, obedience, and support, under the severest trials and persecutions, chap. vi. vii. viii. (6.) As the pretences of the Jews, that "God was bound, by express promise, to continue them as his only people for ever; and that this was directly inconsistent with the election and calling of the Gentiles, on the condition of faith alone:" he demonstrates, that the rejection of the Jews is consistent with the truth of God's word, and with his righteousness: he shows the true cause and reason of their rejection; and concludes with an admirable discourse upon the extent and duration of it; which he closes with adoration of the Divine wisdom, in his various dispensations, chap. ix. x. xi. Thus, having cleared this important subject with surprising judgment, and the nicest art and skill in writing; he now proceeds, after his usual manner, in his Epistles and the apostolic method of preaching, to inculcate various Christian duties; and to exhort to that temper of mind, and conduct of life, which are suitable to the profession of the gospel, and the enjoyment of its privileges.

Dr. Taylor.

Verse 1. I beseech you, therefore, brethren] This address is probably intended both for the Jews and the Gentiles; though some suppose that the Jews are addressed in the first verse; the Gentiles, in the second.

By the mercies of God] Δια των οικτιρμων του Θεου· by the tender mercies, or compassions of God, such as a tender father shows to his refractory children; to whom, on their humiliation, he is easily persuaded to forgive their offences. The word Οικτιρμος comes from οικτος, compassion; and that from εικω, to yield; because he that has compassionate feelings, is easily prevailed on to do a kindness, or remit an injury.

To present your bodies] A metaphor taken from bringing sacrifices to the altar of God. The person offering picked out the choicest of his flock, brought it to the altar, and presented it there as an atonement for his sin. They are exhorted to give themselves up in the spirit of sacrifice; to be as wholly the Lord's property as the whole burnt-offering was; no part being devoted to any other use.

A living sacrifice] In opposition to those dead sacrifices which they were in the habit of offering, while in their Jewish state: and that they should have the lusts of the flesh mortified, that they might live to God.

Holy] Without spot or blemish; referring still to the sacrifice required by the law.

Acceptable unto God] Ευαρεστον, the sacrifice being perfect in its kind; and the intention of the offerer being such, that both can be acceptable and well-pleasing to God, who searches the heart. All these phrases are sacrificial, and show that there must be a complete surrender of the person; the body, the whole man, mind and flesh, to be given to God: and that he is to consider himself no more his own, but the entire property of his Maker.

2 And [a] be not conformed to this world: but [b] be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may [c] prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.

3 For, I say, [d] through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, [e] not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think [f] soberly, according as God hath dealt [g] to every man the measure of faith.

Your reasonable service.] Nothing can be more consistent with reason, than that the work of God should glorify its author. We are not our own; we are the property of the Lord, by the right of creation and redemption: and it would be as unreasonable as it would be wicked, not to live to his glory, in strict obedience to his will. The reasonable service, λογικην λατρειαν, of the apostle, may refer to the difference between the Jewish and Christian worship. The former religious service consisted chiefly in its sacrifices, which were δι' αλογων, of irrational creatures; i. e. the lambs, rams, kids, bulls, goats, &c. which were offered under the law. The Christian service of worship is λογικη, rational, because performed according to the true intent and meaning of the law; the heart and soul being engaged in the service. He alone lives the life of a fool and a madman, who lives the life of a sinner against God: for, in sinning against his Maker, he wrongs his own soul, loves death, and rewards evil unto himself.

Verse 2. And be not conformed to this world] By this world, αιωνι τουτῳ, may be understood that present state of things both among the Jews and Gentiles: the customs and fashions of the people who then lived; the Gentiles particularly, who had neither the power nor the form of godliness; though some think that the Jewish œconomy, frequently termed עולם הזה ôlam hazzeh, this world, this peculiar state of things, is alone intended. And the apostle warns them against reviving usages that Christ had abolished; this exhortation still continues in full force. The world that now is, THIS present state of things, is as much opposed to the spirit of genuine Christianity, as the world that then was. Pride, luxury, vanity, extravagance in dress, and riotous living, prevail now, as they did then; and are as unworthy of a Christian's pursuit, as they are injurious to his soul, and hateful in the sight of God.

Be ye transformed] Μεταμορφουσθε, be ye metamorphosed, transfigured, appear as new persons, and with new habits; as God has given you a new form of worship, so that ye serve in the newness of the Spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter. The word implies a radical, thorough, and universal change, both outward and inward. SENECA, Epist. vi. shows us the force of this word, when used in a moral sense. Sentio, says he, non EMENDARI me tantùm, sed TRANSFIGURARI; "I perceive myself not to be amended merely, but to be transformed:" i. e. entirely renewed.

By the renewing of your mind] Let the inward change produce the outward. Where the spirit, the temper and disposition of the mind, Eph. iv. 23. is not renewed; an outward change is but of little worth, and but of short standing.

That ye may prove] Εις το δοκιμαζειν, that ye may have practical proof and experimental knowledge of the will of God; of his purpose and determination, which is good in itself; infinitely so. Acceptable, ευαρεστον, well-pleasing to, and well-received by every mind that is renewed and transformed.

And perfect] Τελειον, finished and complete: when the mind is renewed, and the whole life changed, then the will of God is perfectly fulfilled: for this is its grand design in reference to every human being.

These words are supposed by Schoettgen to refer entirely to the Jewish law. The Christians were to renounce this world, the Jewish state of things; to be transformed, by having their minds enlightened in the pure and simple Christian worship, that they might prove the grand characteristic difference between the two covenants; the latter being good, in opposition to the statutes which were not good, Ezek. xx. 25. acceptable, in opposition to those sacrifices and offerings which God would not accept, as it is written, Psal. xl. 6—8. and perfect, in opposition to that system which was imperfect, and which made nothing perfect; and was only the shadow of good things to come. There are both ingenuity and probability in this view of the subject.

Verse 3. Through the grace given unto me] By the grace given, St. Paul most certainly means his apostolical office, by which he had the authority, not only to preach the gospel; but also to rule the church of Christ. This is the meaning of the word, ἡ χαρις, in Eph. iii. 8. Unto me who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given; is conceded this office or employment, immediately by God himself; that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Not to think—more highly] Μη υπερφρονειν, not to act proudly; to arrogate nothing to himself on account of any grace he had received, or of any office committed to him.

But to think soberly] Αλλα φρονειν εις το σωφρονειν: the Reader will perceive here a sort of paronomasia, or play upon words; φρονειν, from φρην, the mind, signifies to think, mind, relish, to be of opinion, &c. and σωφρονειν, from σως, sound; and φρην, the mind, signifies to be of a sound mind; to think discreetly, modestly, humbly. Let no man think himself more, or greater than God has made him; and let him know that whatever he is, or has of good or excellence, he has it from God; and that the glory belongs to the giver, and not to him who has received the gift.

Measure of faith.] Μετρον πιστεως. It is very likely, as Dr. Moore has conjectured, that the πιστις, faith, here used, means the Christian religion; and the measure, the degree of knowledge and experience which each had received in it, and the power this gave him of being useful in the church of God. See ver. 6.

Verse 4. For as we have many members] As the human body consists of many parts, each having its respective office, and all contributing to the perfection and support of the whole; each being indispensably necessary in the place which it occupies, and each equally useful, though performing a different function.

Verse 5. So we, being many] We who are members of the church of Christ, which is considered the body of which he is the head, have various offices assigned to us, according to the measure of grace, faith, and religious knowledge which we possess: and, although each has a different office, and qualifications suitable to that office, yet all belong to the same body; and each has as much need of the help of another as that other has of his: therefore, let there be neither pride on the one hand, nor envy on the other. The same metaphor, in nearly the same words, is used in Synopsis Sohar, pag. 13. "As man is divided into various members and joints, united among themselves, and raised by gradations above each other, and collectively compose one body; so all created things are members orderly disposed; and altogether constitute one body. In like manner, the law, distributed into various articulations, constitutes but one body." See Schoettgen.

Verse 6. Having then gifts, differing, &c.] As the goodness of God, with this view of our mutual subserviency and usefulness, has endowed us with different gifts and qualifications; let each apply himself to the diligent improvement of his particular office and talent; and modestly keep within the bounds of it, not exalting himself, or despising others.

Whether prophecy] That prophecy, in the New Testament, often means the gift of exhorting, preaching, or of expounding the Scriptures, is evident from many places in the Gospels, Acts, and St. Paul's Epistles, see 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5. and especially 1 Cor. xiv. 3. He that prophesieth, speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and to comfort. This was the proper office of a preacher; and it is to the exercise of this office that the apostle refers in the whole of the chapter, from which the above quotations are made. See also Luke i. 76. vii. 28. Acts xv. 32. 1 Cor. xiv. 29. I think the apostle uses the term in the same sense here—Let every man who has the gift of preaching and interpreting the Scriptures, do it in proportion to the grace and light he has received from God; and, in no case, arrogate to himself knowledge which he has not received; let him not esteem himself more highly on account of this gift, or affect to be wise above what is written; or indulge himself in fanciful interpretations of the word of God.

Dr. Taylor observes, that the measure of faith, ver. 3. and the proportion of faith, ver. 6. seem not to relate to the degree of any gift considered in itself, but rather in the relation and proportion which it bore to the gifts of others. For, it is plain, that he is here exhorting every man to keep soberly within his own sphere. It is natural to suppose that the new converts might be puffed up with the several gifts that were bestowed upon them; and every one might be forward to magnify his own, to the disparagement of others. Therefore, the apostle advises them to keep, each within his proper sphere; to know and observe the just measures and proportion of the gift entrusted to him, not to gratify his pride, but to edify the church.

The Αναλογια της πιστεως, which we here translate the proportion of faith, and which some render the analogy of faith, has been understood to mean, the general and consistent plan or scheme of doctrines delivered in the Scriptures; where every thing bears its due relation and proportion to another. Thus the death of Christ is commensurate, in its merits, to the evils produced by the fall of Adam. The doctrine of justification by faith, bears the strictest analogy, or proportion, to the grace of Christ, and the helpless, guilty, condemned state of man. Whereas, the doctrine of justification by WORKS, is out of all analogy to the demerit of sin, the perfection of the law, the holiness of God, and the miserable, helpless state of man. This may be a good general view of the subject; but when we come to inquire what those mean by the analogy of faith, who are most frequent in the use of the term, we shall find that it means neither more nor less than their own creed: and, though they tell you that their doctrines are to be examined by the Scriptures, yet they give you roundly to know, that you are to understand these scriptures in precisely the same way as they have interpreted them. "To the law and to the testimony," says Dr. Campbell. "is the common cry; only every one, the better to secure the decision on the side he has espoused, would have you previously resolve to put no sense whatever on the law and the testimony but what his favourite doctor will admit. Thus they run on in a shuffling circular sort of argument; which, though they studiously avoid exposing, is, when dragged into the open light, neither more nor less than this: 'you are to try our doctrine by the Scriptures only: but then you are to be very careful that you explain the Scripture solely by our doctrine.' A wonderful plan of trial, which begins with giving judgment, and ends with examining the proof, wherein the whole skill and ingenuity of the judges are to be exerted in wresting the evidence, so as to give it the appearance of supporting the sentence pronounced before hand." See Dr. Campbell's Dissertations on the Gospels, Diss. iv. sect. 14. vol. i. pag. 146. 8vo. edit. where several other sensible remarks may be found.

Verse 7. Or ministry] Διακονια simply means the office of a deacon; and what this office was, see in the note on Acts vi. 4. where the subject is largely discussed.

Or he that teacheth] The teacher, Διδασκαλος, was a person whose office it was to instruct others, whether by catechising, or simply explaining the grand truths of Christianity.

Verse 8. Or he that exhorteth] Ὁ παρακαλῶν, The person who admonished, and reprehended the unruly or disorderly; and who supported the weak and comforted the penitents, and those who were under heaviness through manifold temptations.

He that giveth] He who distributeth the alms of the church, with simplicity; being influenced by no partiality; but dividing to each according to the necessity of his case.

He that ruleth] Ὁ προϊσταμενος. he that presides over a particular business: but as the verb προϊσταμαι, also signifies to defend, or patronize, it is probably used here to signify receiving and providing for strangers; and especially the persecuted, who were obliged to leave their own homes, and were destitute, afflicted, and tormented. It might also imply the persons whose business it was to receive and entertain the apostolical teachers who travelled from place to place, establishing and confirming the churches. In this sense the word προστατις is applied to Phœbe, chap. xvi. 2. She hath been a SUCCOURER of many, and of myself also. The apostle directs that this office should be executed with diligence; that such destitute persons should have their necessities as promptly and as amply supplied as possible.

He that showeth mercy] Let the person who is called to perform any act of compassion, or mercy to the wretched, do it, not grudgingly, nor of necessity, but from a spirit of pure benevolence and sympathy. The poor are often both wicked and worthless; and, if those who are called to minister to them as stewards, overseers, &c. do not take care, they will get their hearts hardened with the frequent proofs they will have of deception, lying, idleness, &c. And on this account it is that so many of those who have been called to minister to the poor in parishes, work-houses, and religious societies, when they come to relinquish their employment, find that many of their moral feelings have been considerably blunted; and perhaps the only reward they get for their services, is the character of being hard hearted. If, whatever is done in this way, be not done unto the Lord, it can never be done with cheerfulness.

Verse 9. Let love be without dissimulation] Η αγαπη ανυποκριτος· Have no hypocritical love; let not your love wear a mask: make no empty professions. Love God and your neighbour; and, by obedience to the one, and acts of benevolence to the other, show that your love is sincere.

Abhor that which is evil] Αποστυγουντες το πονηρον. Hate sin as you would hate that hell to which it leads. Στυγεω, signifies to hate, or detest with horror; the preposition απο, greatly strengthens the meaning. Στυξ, Styx, was a feigned river in hell, by which the gods were wont to swear; and if any of them falsified this oath, he was deprived of his nectar and ambrosia for a hundred years: hence the river was reputed to be hateful; and στυγεω, signified to be as hateful as hell. Two MSS. read μισουντες, which signifies hating, in the lowest sense of the term. The word in the text is abundantly more expressive; and our translation is both nervous and appropriate.

Cleave to that which is good] Κολλωμενοι τῳ αγαθῳ: be CEMENTED, or GLUED to that which is good; so the word literally signifies. Have an unalterable attachment to whatever leads to God, and contributes to the welfare of your fellow-creatures.

Verse 10. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love] It is difficult to give a simple translation of the original: τῃ φιλαδελφια εις αλληλους φιλοστοργοι. The word φιλαδελφια, signifies that affectionate regard which every Christian should feel for another, as being members of the same mystical body. Hence it is emphatically termed the love of the brethren. When William Penn, of deservedly famous memory, made a treaty with the Indians in North America, and purchased from them a large woody tract, which, after its own nature and his name, he called Pennsylvania: he built a city on it, and peopled it with Christians of his own denomination; and called the city from the word in the text, φιλαδελφια PHILADELPHIA; an appellation which it then bore with strict propriety: and still it bears the name.

The word φιλοστοργος, which we here translate kindly affectioned; from φιλος and στοργη, signifies that tender, and indescribable affection, which a mother bears to her child: and which almost all creatures manifest towards their young: and the word φιλος, or φιλεω, joined to it, signifies a delight in it. Feel the tenderest affection towards each other; and delight to feel it. "Love a brother Christian with the affection of a natural brother."

In honour preferring one another] The meaning appears to be this: consider all your brethren as more worthy than yourself; and let neither grief nor envy affect your mind at seeing another honoured and yourself neglected. This is a hard lesson, and very few persons learn it thoroughly. If we wish to see our brethren honoured; still it is with the secret condition in our own minds, that we be honoured more than they. We have no objection to the elevation of others, providing we may be at the head. But who can bear even to be what he calls neglected? I once heard the following conversation between two persons, which the Reader will pardon my relating in this place, as it appears to be rather in point. "I know not," said one, "that I neglect to do any thing in my power to promote the interest of true religion in this place; and yet I seem to be held in very little repute, scarcely any person even noticing me." To which the other replied: "My good friend, set yourself down for nothing, and if any person takes you for something, it will be all clear again." I thought, this is a queer saying; but how full of meaning and common sense! Whether the object of this good counsel was profited by it I cannot tell; but I looked on it, and received instruction.

Verse 11. Not slothful in business] That God, who forbad working on the seventh day, has, by the same authority, enjoined it on the other six days. He who neglects to labour during the week, is as culpable as he is who works on the sabbath. An idle, slothful person can never be a Christian.

Fervent in spirit] Τῳ πνευματι ζεοντες: do nothing at any time, but what is to the glory of God; and do every thing as unto him; and in every thing let your hearts be engaged. Be always in earnest, and let your heart ever accompany your hand.

Serving the Lord] Ever considering that his eye is upon you, and that you are accountable to him for all that you do; and that you should do every thing so as to please him. In order to this, there must be simplicity in the INTENTION; and purity in the AFFECTIONS.

Instead of τῳ Κυριῳ δουλευοντες, serving the Lord. Several MSS. as DFG. and many editions, have τῳ καιρῳ δουλευοντες, serving the time, embracing the opportunity. This reading Griesbach has received into the text; and most critics contend for its authenticity. Except the Codex Claromontanus, the Codex Augiensis, and the Codex Boernerianus, the first a MS. of the 7th or 8th century; the others of the 9th or 10th, marked in Griesbach by the letters DFG. all the other MSS. of this Epistle have Κυριῳ, the Lord; a reading in which all the Versions concur. Καιρῳ, the time, is not found in the two original editions; that of Complutum, in 1514, which is the first edition of the Greek Testament ever printed; and that of Erasmus, in 1516, which is the first edition published; the former having been suppressed for several years, after it was finished at the press. As in the ancient MSS. the word Κυριῳ is written contractedly ΚΩ some appear to have read it καιρῳ instead of Κυριῳ, but I confess I do not see sufficient reason after all that the critics have said, to depart from the common reading.

Verse 12. Rejoicing in hope] Of that glory of God, that to each faithful follower of Christ shall shortly be revealed.

Patient in tribulation] Remembering that what you suffer as Christians, you suffer for Christ's sake; and it is to his honour, and the honour of your Christian profession that you suffer it with an even mind.

Continuing instant in prayer] Προσκαρτερουντες, making the most fervent and intense application to the throne of grace, for the light and power of the Holy Spirit; without which you can neither abhor evil, do good, love the brethren, entertain a comfortable hope, nor bear up patiently under the tribulations and ills of life.

Verse 13. Distributing to the necessity of saints] Relieve your poor brethren, according to the power which God has given you. Do good unto all men, but especially to them which are of the household of faith. Instead of χρειαις, necessities, some ancient MSS. have μνειαις, memorials; distributing to the memorials of the saints, which some interpret as referring to saints that were absent; as if he had said, do not forget those in other churches who have a claim on your bounty. But I really cannot see any good sense, which this various reading can make in the text; I therefore follow the common reading.

Given to hospitality.] Την φιλοξενιαν διωκοντες, pursuing hospitality, or the duty of entertaining strangers. A very necessary virtue in ancient times, when houses of public accommodation were exceedingly scarce. This exhortation might have for its object the apostles, who were all itinerants; and in many cases, the Christians flying before the face of persecution. This virtue is highly becoming in all Christians, and especially in all Christian ministers, who have the means of relieving a brother in distress, or of succouring the poor wherever he may find them. But providing for strangers in distress is the proper meaning of the term; and to be forward to do this, is the spirit of the duty.

Verse 14. Bless them which persecute you] Ευλογειτε, Give good words, or pray for them that give you bad words, καταρασθε, who make dire imprecations against you. Bless them, pray for them, and on no account curse them, whatever the provocation may be. Have the loving, forgiving mind that was in your Lord.

Verse 15. Rejoice with them that do rejoice] Take a lively interest in the prosperity of others. Let it be a matter of rejoicing to you when you hear of the health, prosperity, or happiness of any brother.

Weep with them that weep] Labour after a compassionate or sympathizing mind. Let your heart feel for the distressed; enter into their sorrows, and bear a part of their burthens. It is a fact, attested by universal experience, that by sympathy a man may receive into his own affectionate feelings, a measure of the distress of his friend; and that his friend does find himself relieved in the same proportion as the other has entered into his griefs. "But, how do you account for this?" I do not account for it at all; it depends upon certain laws of nature, the principles of which have not been, as yet, duly developed.

Verse 16. Be of the same mind] Live in a state of continual harmony and concord, and pray for the same good for all, which you desire for yourselves.

Mind not high things] Be not ambitious; affect nothing above your station; do not court the rich, nor the powerful; do not pass by the poor man to pay your court to the great man; do not affect titles or worldly distinctions; much less sacrifice your conscience for them. The attachment to high things and high men is the vice of little, shallow minds. However it argues one important fact, that such persons are conscious that they are of no worth and of no consequence in THEMSELVES; and they seek to render themselves observable and to gain a little credit by their endeavours to associate themselves with men of rank and fortune; and if possible to get into honourable employments; and if this cannot be attained, they affect honourable TITLES.

But condescend to men of low estate] Be a companion of the humble, and pass through life with as little noise and show as possible. Let the poor godly man be your chief companion: and learn from his humility and piety, to be humble and godly. The term συναπαγομενοι which we translate condescend, from συν together, and απαγω to lead; signifies to be led, carried, or dragged away to prison with another, and points out the state in which the primitive Christians were, despised and rejected of men; and often led forth to men of low estate. [a] Be not wise in your own conceits.

17 [b] Recompense to no man evil for evil. [c] Provide things honest in the sight of all men.

18 If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, [d] live peaceably with all men.

19 Dearly beloved, [e] avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is to prison and death. False, or man-pleasing professors would endeavour to escape all this disgrace and danger by getting into the favour of the great, the worldly, and the irreligious. There have not been wanting, in all ages of the church, persons, who losing the savour of divine things from their own souls, by drinking into a worldly spirit, have endeavoured to shun the reproach of the cross by renouncing the company of the godly, speaking evil of the way of life, and, perhaps, sitting down in the chair of the scorner with apostates like themselves. And yet, strange to tell, these men will keep up a form of godliness! for a decent outside is often necessary to enable them to secure the ends of their ambition.

Be not wise in your own conceits.] Be not puffed up with an opinion of your own consequence; for this will prove that the consequence itself is imaginary. Be not wise παρ' ἑαυτοις, by yourselves. Do not suppose that wisdom and discernment dwell alone with you. Believe that you stand in need both of help and instruction from others.

Verse 17. Recompense, &c.] Do not take notice of every little injury you may sustain. Do not be litigious. Beware of too nice a sense of your own honour; intolerable pride is at the bottom of this. The motto of the Royal Arms of Scotland is in direct opposition to this divine direction, Nemo me impunè lacesset; of which, "I render evil for evil to every man," is a pretty literal translation. This is both antichristian and abominable, whether in a state or in an individual.

Provide things honest] Be prudent; be cautious; neither eat, drink, nor wear, but as you pay for every thing. "Live not on trust; for that is the way to pay double?" and by this means the poor are still kept poor. He who takes credit, even for food or raiment, when he has no probable means of defraying the debt, is a dishonest man. It is no sin to die through lack of the necessaries of life, when the providence of God has denied the means of support; but it is a sin to take up goods without the probability of being able to pay for them. Poor man! suffer poverty a little; perhaps God is only trying thee for a time; and who can tell if he will not turn again thy captivity. Labour hard to live honestly; if God still appear to withhold his providential blessing, do not despair; leave it all to him; do not make a sinful choice; he cannot err. He will bless thy poverty, while he curses the ungodly man's blessings.

Verse 18. If it be possible] To live in a state of peace with one's neighbours, friends, and even family, is often very difficult. But the man who loves God must labour after this; for it is indispensably necessary even for his own sake. A man cannot have broils and misunderstandings with others, without having his own peace very materially disturbed. He must, to be happy, be at peace with all men, whether they will be at peace with him or not. The apostle knew that it would be difficult to get into and maintain such a state of peace, and this, his own words amply prove; and if it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably. Though it be but barely possible, labour after it.

Verse 19. Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves] Ye are the children of God, and he loves you, and because he loves you he will permit nothing to be done to you that he will not turn to your advantage. Never take the execution of the law into your own hands; rather suffer injuries. The Son of man is come, not to destroy men's lives, but to save; be of the same spirit. When He was reviled, he reviled not again. It is the part of a noble mind to bear up under unmerited disgrace; little minds are litigious and quarrelsome.

Give place unto wrath] Δοτε τοπον τῃ ὀργῃ, leave room for the civil magistrate to do his duty; he holds the sword for this purpose; and if he be unfaithful to the trust reposed in him by the state, leave the matter to God, who is the righteous judge; for by avenging yourselves, you take your cause both out of the hands of the civil magistrate, and out of the hands of God. I believe this to be the meaning of give place to wrath, ὀργη, punishment; the penalty which the laws, properly executed, will inflict. This is well expressed by the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, chap. xix. ver. 17. Admonish thy neighbour before thou threaten him, and not being angry, GIVE PLACE TO THE LAW OF THE MOST HIGH.

Vengeance is mine] This fixes the meaning of the apostle, and at once shows that the exhortation, rather give place to wrath or punishment means, leave the matter to the judgment of God; it is his law that, in this case, is broken; and to him the infliction of deserved punishment belongs. Some think it means, "Yield a little to a man when in a violent passion, for the sake of peace, until he grow cooler!"

I will repay] In my own time, and in my own way. But written, [a] Vengeance is mine: I will repay, saith the Lord.

he gives the sinner space to repent, and this long-suffering leads to salvation. Dr. Taylor, after Dr. Benson, conjectures that the apostle, in these directions, had his eye upon the indignities which the Jews, and probably the Christians too, (for they were often confounded by the heathen,) suffered by the edict of Claudius, mentioned Acts xviii. 2. which, "commanded all Jews to depart from Rome." Upon this occasion Aquila and Priscilla removed to Corinth, where Paul found them, and dwelt with them a considerable time. No doubt they gave him a full account of the state of the Christian church at Rome, and of every thing relating to the late persecution under Claudius. That emperor's edict probably died with him, if it were not repealed before, and then the Jews and Christians, (if the Christians were also expelled,) returned again to Rome; for Aquila and Priscilla were there when Paul wrote this epistle, chap. xvi. 3. which was in the fourth year of Nero, successor to Claudius.

Verse 20. If thine enemy hunger, feed him] Do not withhold from any man the offices of mercy and kindness; you have been God's enemy, and yet God fed, clothed, and preserved you alive; do to your enemy as God has done to you; if your enemy be hungry, feed him; if he be thirsty, give him drink; so has God dealt with you. And has not a sense of his goodness and long-suffering towards you, been a means of melting down your heart into penitential compunction, gratitude, and love towards him? How know you that a similar conduct towards your enemy, may not have the same gracious influence on him towards you? Your kindness may be the means of begetting in him a sense of his guilt; and from being your fell enemy, he may become your real friend. This I believe to be the sense of this passage, which many have encumbered with difficulties of their own creating. The whole is a quotation from Prov. xxv. 21, 22. in the precise words of the Septuagint; and it is very likely that the latter clause of this verse, thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, is a metaphor taken from smelting metals. The ore is put into the furnace, and fire put both under and over, that the metal may be liquified, and, leaving the scoriæ and dross, may fall down pure to the bottom of the furnace. This is beautifully expressed by one of our own poets, in reference to this explanation of this passage.

"So artists melt the sullen ore of lead,
By heaping coals of fire upon its head,
In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow,
And pure from dross, the silver runs below."

It is most evident from the whole connexion of the place, and the apostle's use of it, that the heaping of the coals of fire on the head of the enemy, is intended to produce not an evil, but the most beneficent effect; and the following verse is an additional proof of this.

Verse 21. Be not overcome of evil] Do not, by giving place to evil, become precisely the same character which thou condemnest in another. Overcome evil with good; however frequently he may grieve and injure thee, always repay him with kindness; thy good will, in the end, may overcome his evil.

1. Thomas Aquinas has properly said, vincitur à malo qui vult peccare in alium, quia ille peccavit in ipsum. "He is overcome of evil who sins against another; because he sins against himself." A moral enemy is more easily overcome by kindness, than by hostility. Against the latter he arms himself; and all the evil passions of his heart concentrate themselves in opposition to him who is striving to retaliate by violence, the injurious acts which he has received from him. But where the injured man is labouring to do him good for his evil; to repay his curses with blessings and prayers; his evil passions have no longer any motive, any incentive; his mind relaxes, the turbulence of his passions is calmed; reason and conscience are permitted to speak; he is disarmed, or, in other words, he finds that he has no use for his weapons; he beholds in the injured man a magnanimous friend, whose mind is superior to all the insults and injuries which he has received; and who is determined never to permit the heavenly principle that influences his soul to bow itself before the miserable, mean, and wretched spirit of revenge. This amiable man views in his enemy a spirit which he beholds with horror, and he cannot consent to receive into his own bosom a disposition which he sees to be so destructive to another; and he knows that as soon as he begins to avenge himself, he places himself on a par with the unprincipled man whose conduct he has so much reason to blame, and whose spirit he has so much cause to abominate. He who avenges himself, receives into his own heart all the evil and disgraceful passions by which his enemy is rendered both wretched and contemptible. There is the voice of eternal reason in "avenge not yourselves:—overcome evil with good;" as well as the high authority and command of the living God.

2. The reader will, no doubt, have observed with pleasure the skill and address, as well as the divine wisdom with which the apostle has handled the important subjects which he has brought forth to view in the preceding chapters. Nothing can be more regular or judicious than his plan of proceeding. He first shows the miserable, wretched, fallen, degraded state of man; next, the merciful provision which God has made for his salvation; and, lastly, the use which man should make of the mercies of his God. He shows us, in a most pointed manner, the connexion that subsists between the doctrines of the gospel, and practical piety. From the beginning of the first to the end of the eleventh chapter, he states and defends the grand truths of Christianity; and from the beginning of the 12th to the end of the Epistle, he shows the practical use of these doctrines. This is a point which is rarely considered by professors; multitudes run to the Epistle to the Romans for texts to prop up their peculiar system of doctrine; but how few go to this sacred book for rules relative to a holy life! They abound in quotations from the doctrinal parts, but seldom make that use of them which the apostle makes in this chapter; "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service; and be not conformed to this world, &c." Now, we learn, from the use which the apostle makes of his doctrines, that whatsoever teaching comes from God, leads to a holy and useful life. And if we hold any doctrine that does not excite us to labour after the strictest conformity to the will of God in all our tempers, spirit, and actions; we may rest assured that either that doctrine is not of God, or we make an improper use of it. He that knows God best, loves and resembles him most.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

To see with what propriety the apostle introduces the important subjects which he handles in this chapter, it is necessary to make a few remarks on the circumstances in which the church of God then was.

It is generally allowed that this Epistle was written about the year of our Lord 58, four or five years after the edict of the emperor Claudius, by which all the Jews were banished from Rome. And as in those early times, the Christians were generally confounded with the Jews, it is likely that both were included in this decree.

For what reason this edict was issued, does not satisfactorily appear. Suetonius tells us that it was because the Jews were making continual disturbances under their leader Chrestus. (See the note on Acts xviii. 2.) That the Jews were, in general, an uneasy and seditious people, is clear enough from every part of their own history. They had the most rooted aversion to the heathen government, and it was a maxim with them that the world was given to the Israelites; that they should have supreme rule every where, and that the Gentiles should be their vassals. With such political notions, grounded on their native restlessness, it is no wonder, if, in several instances, they gave cause of suspicion to the Roman government, who would be glad of an opportunity to expel from the city persons, whom they considered dangerous to its peace and security; nor is it unreasonable, on this account, to suppose with Dr. Taylor, that the Christians, under a notion of being the peculiar people of God, and the of God; [a] and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? [b] do that which is subjects of his kingdom alone, might be in danger of being infected with those unruly and rebellious sentiments; therefore the apostle shows them that they were, notwithstanding their honours and privileges as Christians, bound by the strongest obligations of conscience to be subject to the civil government. The judicious commentator adds; "I cannot forbear observing the admirable skill and dexterity with which the apostle has handled the subject. His views in writing, are always comprehensive on every point; and he takes into his thoughts and instructions, all parties that might probably reap any benefit by them. As Christianity was then growing, and the powers of the world began to take notice of it, it was not unlikely that this letter might fall into the hands of the Roman magistrates. And, whenever that happened, it was right not only that they should see that Christianity was no favourer of sedition; but likewise, that they should have an opportunity of reading their own duty and obligations. But as they were too proud and insolent to permit themselves to be instructed in a plain, direct way; therefore, the apostle, with a masterly hand, delineates, and strongly inculcates the magistrate's duty: while he is pleading his cause with the subject, and establishing his duty on the most sure and solid ground, he dexterously sides with the magistrate, and vindicates his power against any subject who might have imbibed seditious principles, or might be inclined to give the government any disturbance: and, under this advantage, he reads the magistrate a fine and close lecture, upon the nature and ends of civil government. A way of conveyance so ingenious and unexceptionable, that even Nero himself, had this epistle fallen into his hands, could not fail of seeing his duty clearly stated, without finding any thing servile or flattering on the one hand, or offensive or disgusting on the other.

"The attentive Reader will be pleased to see, with what dexterity, truth and gravity, the apostle, in a small compass, affirms and explains the foundation, nature, ends, and just limits of the magistrate's authority, while he is pleading his cause; and teaching the subject the duty and obedience he owes to the civil government." Dr. Taylor's Notes, pag. 352.

Verse 1. Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers] This is a very strong saying, and most solemnly introduced; and we must consider the apostle as speaking not from his own private judgment, or teaching a doctrine of present expediency; but declaring the mind of God on a subject of the utmost importance to the peace of the world; a doctrine which does not exclusively belong to any class of people, order of the community, or official situations; but to every soul: and, on the principles which the apostle lays down, to every soul in all possible varieties of situation, and on all occasions. And what is this solemn doctrine? It is this: Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. Let every man be obedient to the civil government, under which the Providence of God has cast his lot.

For, there is no power but of God] As God is the origin of power, and the Supreme Governor of the universe, he delegates authority to whomsoever he will; and though, in many cases, the governor himself may not be of God, yet, civil government is of him; for, without this, there could be no society, no security, no private property; all would be confusion and anarchy; and the habitable world would soon be depopulated. In ancient times, God, in an especial manner, on many occasions, appointed the individual who was to govern, and he accordingly governed by a Divine right; as in the case of Moses, Joshua, the Hebrew judges, and several of the Israelitish kings. In after times, and to the present day, he does that by a general superintending Providence, which he did before by especial designation. In all nations of the earth, there is what may be called a Constitution, a plan by which a particular country or state is governed; and this constitution is less or more calculated to promote the interests of the community. The civil governor, whether he be elective or hereditary, agrees to govern according to that constitution. Thus, we may consider, that there is a compact and consent between the governor and the governed: and, in such a case, the potentate may be considered as coming to the supreme authority in the direct way of God's Providence: and, as civil government is of God, who is the fountain of law, order, and regularity, the civil governor who administers the laws of a state according to its constitution, is the minister of God. But it has been asked, if the ruler be an immoral or profligate man, does he not prove himself, thereby, to be unworthy of his high office, and should he not be deposed? I answer—No: if he rule according to the constitution, nothing can justify rebellion against his authority. He may be irregular in his own private life; he may be an immoral man, and disgrace himself by an improper conduct; but if he rule according to the law; if he make no attempt to change the constitution, nor break the compact between him and the people; there is therefore, no legal ground of opposition to his civil authority; and every act against him is not only rebellion, in good, and thou shalt have praise of the same:

4 [a] For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for the worst sense of the word, but is unlawful, and absolutely sinful.

Nothing can justify the opposition of the subjects to the ruler but ouvert attempts on his part, to change the constitution, or to rule contrary to law. When the ruler acts thus, he dissolves the compact between him and his people; his authority is no longer binding, because illegal; and it is illegal, because he is acting contrary to the laws of that constitution, according to which, on being raised to the supreme power, he promised to govern. This conduct justifies opposition to his government: but I contend, that no personal misconduct in the ruler, no immorality in his own life, while he governs according to law, can either justify rebellion against him, or contempt of his authority. For his political conduct, he is accountable to his people: for his moral conduct, he is accountable to God, his conscience, and the ministers of religion. A king may be a good moral man, and yet a weak, and indeed a bad and dangerous prince. He may be a bad man, and stained with vice in his private life, and yet be a good prince. SAUL was a good moral man, but a bad prince; because he endeavoured to act contrary to the Israelitish constitution; he changed some essential parts of that constitution: as I have elsewhere shown, (see the Note on Acts xiii. ver. 22.) he was therefore lawfully deposed. James the IInd. was a good moral man, as far as I can learn, but he was a bad and dangerous prince: he endeavoured to alter, and essentially change, the British constitution, both in church and state; therefore, he was lawfully deposed. It would be easy, in running over the list of our own kings, to point out several who were deservedly reputed good kings, who in their private life were very immoral. Bad as they might be, in private life, the constitution was, in their hands, ever considered a sacred deposit; and they faithfully preserved it, and transmitted it unimpaired to their successors; and took care, while they held the reins of government, to have it impartially and effectually administered.

It must be allowed, notwithstanding, that, when a prince, howsoever heedful to the laws, is unrighteous in private life, his example is contagious: morality banished from the throne, is discountenanced by the community; and happiness is diminished in proportion to the increase of vice. On the other hand, when a king governs according to the constitution of his realms, and has his heart and life governed by the laws of his God, he is then a double blessing to his people; while he is ruling carefully according to the laws, his pious example is a great means of extending and confirming the reign of pure morality among his subjects. Vice is discredited from the throne; and the profligate dare not hope for a place of trust and confidence, (however in other respects he may be qualified for it,) because he is a vicious man.

As I have already mentioned some potentates by name, as apt examples of the doctrines I have been laying down; my Readers will naturally expect that, on so fair an opportunity, I should introduce another; one in whom the double blessing meets; one who, through an unusually protracted reign, during every year of which he has most conscientiously watched over the sacred constitution committed to his care; one who not only did not impair this constitution, but took care that its wholesome laws should be properly administered; and who, in every respect, acted as the father of his people: and, added to all this, the most exemplary moral conduct, perhaps ever exhibited by a prince, whether in ancient or modern times; not only tacitly discountenancing vice, by his truly religious conduct, but by his frequent proclamations, most solemnly forbidding sabbath-breaking, profane swearing, and immorality in general; more might be justly said, but when I have mentioned all these things, (and I mention them with exultation, and with gratitude to God,) I need scarcely add the venerable name of GEORGE the Third, king of Great Britain; as every Reader will at once perceive that the description suits no potentate besides. I may just observe, that notwithstanding his long reign has been a reign of unparalleled troubles and commotions in the world, in which his empire has always been involved; yet, never did useful arts, ennobling sciences, and pure religion, gain a more decided and general ascendancy: and much of this, under God, is owing to the manner in which this king has lived; and the encouragement he invariably gave to whatever had a tendency to promote the best interests of his people. Indeed, it has been well observed, that, under the ruling providence of God, it was chiefly owing to the private and personal virtues of the sovereign, that the House of Brunswick remained firmly seated on the throne, amidst the storms arising from democratical agitations, and revolutionary convulsions in Europe, during the years 1792—1794. The stability of his throne, amidst these dangers and distresses, may prove a useful lesson to his successors, and show them the strength of a virtuous character; and that morality and religion form the best bulwark against those great evils to which all human governments are exposed. This small tribute of praise to the character and conduct of the British king, and gratitude to God for such a governor, will not be suspected of sinister motive; as the object of it is, by an inscrutable Providence, placed in a situation to which neither envy, flattery, nor even just praise, can approach; and where the majesty of the man is placed in the most awful, yet respectable ruins.

But, to resume the subject, and conclude the argument: I wish particularly to show the utter unlawfulness of rebellion against a ruler, who, though he may be incorrect in his moral conduct, yet rules according to the laws; and the additional blessing of having a prince, who, while his political conduct is regulated by the principles of the constitution; his heart and life are regulated by the dictates of eternal truth, as contained in that revelation which came from God.

Verse 2. Whosoever resisteth the power] Ὁ ἀντιτασσομενος, he who sets himself in order against this order of God; τῃ του θεου διαταγῃ, and they who resist, οἱ ἀνθεστηκοτες, they who obstinately, and for no right reason, oppose the ruler; and strive to unsettle the constitution, and to bring about illegal changes, Shall receive to themselves damnation.] Κριμα, condemnation; shall be condemned both by the spirit and letter of that constitution; which, under pretence of defending or improving, they are indirectly labouring to subvert.

Verse 3. For rulers are not a terror to good works] Here the apostle shows the civil magistrate what he should be: he is clothed with great power, but that power is entrusted to him, not for the terror and oppression of the upright man, but to overawe and punish the wicked. It is, in a word, for the benefit of the community, and not for the aggrandizement of himself, that God has entrusted the supreme civil power to any man. If he should use this to wrong, rob, spoil, oppress, and persecute his subjects, he is not only a bad man, but also a bad prince. He infringes on the essential principles of law and equity. Should he persecute his obedient, loyal subjects, on any religious account, this is contrary to all law and right; and, his doing so, renders him unworthy of their confidence; and they must consider him not as a blessing, but a plague. Yet, even in this case, though in our country it would be a breach of the constitution, which allows every man to worship God according to his conscience; yet the truly pious will not feel, that even this, would justify rebellion against the prince; they are to suffer patiently, and commend themselves and their cause to him that judgeth righteously. It is an awful thing to rebel; and the cases are extremely rare that can justify rebellion against the constituted authorities. See the doctrine on ver. 1st.

Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power?] If thou wouldest not live in fear of the civil magistrate, live according to the laws; and thou mayest expect that he will rule according to the laws; and, consequently, instead of incurring blame, thou wilt have praise. This is said on the supposition that the ruler is himself a good man: such the laws suppose him to be; and the apostle, on the general question of obedience and protection, assumes the point, that the magistrate is such.

Verse 4. For he is the minister of God to thee for good] Here the apostle puts the character of the ruler in the strongest possible light. He is the minister of God: the office is by Divine appointment: the man who is worthy of the office will act in conformity to the will of God: and, as the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears open to their cry, consequently the ruler will be the minister of God to them for good.

He beareth not the sword in vain] His power is delegated to him for the defence and encouragement of the good, and the punishment of the wicked; and he has authority to punish capitally, when the law so requires; this, the term sword leads us to infer.

For he is a minister of God, a revenger] Θεου διακονος εστιν εκδικος, for he is God's vindictive minister, to execute wrath; εις οργην, to inflict punishment upon the transgressors of the law; and this according to the statutes of that law; for God's civil ministers are never allowed to pronounce or inflict punishment according to their own minds or feelings; but according to the express declarations of the law.

Verse 5. Ye must needs be subject] Αναγκη, there is a necessity that ye should be subject, not only for wrath, δια την οργην, on account of the punishment which will be inflicted on evil doers, but also for conscience sake; not only to avoid punishment, but also to preserve a clear conscience. For, as civil government is established in the order of God, for the support, defence, and happiness of society; they who transgress its laws, not only expose themselves to the penalties assigned by the statutes, but also to guilt in their own consciences; because they sin against God. Here are two powerful motives to prevent the infraction of the laws, and to enforce obedience. 1. The dread of punishment: this weighs with the ungodly. 2. The keeping of a good conscience, which weighs powerfully with every person who fears God. These two motives should be frequently urged both among professors and profane.

9 For this, [c] Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet: and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, [d] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

Verse 6. For this cause pay ye tribute also] Because civil government is an order of God, and the ministers of state must be at considerable expense in providing for the safety and defence of the community; it is necessary that those in whose behalf these expenses are incurred, should defray that expense; and hence nothing can be more reasonable than an impartial and moderate taxation, by which the expenses of the state may be defrayed, and the various officers, whether civil or military, who are employed for the service of the public, be adequately remunerated. All this is just and right; but there is no insinuation in the apostle's words in behalf of an extravagant and oppressive taxation, for the support of unprincipled and unnecessary wars; or the pensioning of corrupt or useless men. The taxes are to be paid for the support of those who are God's ministers, the necessary civil officers, from the king downwards, who are attending CONTINUALLY on this very thing. And let the Reader observe, that, by God's ministers, are not meant here the ministers of religion, but the civil officers, in all departments of the state.

Verse 7. Render, therefore, to all their dues] This is an extensive command. Be rigidly just; withhold neither from the king, nor his ministers, nor his officers of justice and revenue, nor from even the lowest of the community, what the laws of God and your country require you to pay.

Tribute to whom tribute] Φορος: this word probably means such taxes as were levied on persons and estates.

Custom to whom custom] Τελος· this word probably means such duties as were laid upon goods, merchandize, &c. on imports and exports; what we commonly call custom. Kypke on this place has quoted some good authorities for the above distinction and signification. Both the words occur in the following quotation from Strabo, Αναγκη γαρ μειουσθαι τα τελη, φορων επιβαλλομενων; it is necessary to lessen the CUSTOMS, if TAXES be imposed. Strabo, lib. ii. pag. 307. See several other examples in Kypke.

Fear to whom fear] It is likely that the word φοβον, which we translate fear, signifies that reverence which produces obedience. Treat all official characters with respect, and be obedient to your superiors.

Honour to whom honour.] The word τιμη, may here mean that outward respect which the principle reverence, from which it springs, will generally produce. Never behave rudely to any person; but behave respectfully to men in office: if you cannot even respect the man, for an important office may be filled by an unworthy person, respect the office, and the man on account of his office. If a man habituate himself to disrespect official characters, he will soon find himself disposed to pay little respect or obedience to the laws themselves.

Verse 8. Owe no man any thing, but to love another] In the preceding verses, the apostle has been showing the duty, reverence, and obedience, which all Christians, from the highest to the lowest, owe to the civil magistrate; whether he be emperor, king, pro-consul, or other state-officer; here, he shows them their duty to each other; but this is widely different from that which they owe to the civil government; to the first, they owe subjection, reverence, obedience, and tribute: to the latter, they owe nothing but mutual love; and those offices which necessarily spring from it. Therefore, the apostle says, owe no man; as if he had said, ye owe to your fellow-brethren nothing but mutual love: and this is what the law of God requires; and in this the law is fulfilled. Ye are not bound in obedience to them, as to the civil magistrate; for, to him ye must needs be subject, not merely for fear of punishment, but for conscience-sake: but to these ye are bound by love; and by that love especially, which utterly prevents you from doing any thing by which a brother may sustain any kind of injury.

Verse 9. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery] He that loves another, will not deprive him of his wife, of his life, of his property, of his good name; and will not even permit a desire to enter into his heart which would lead him to wish to possess any thing that is the property of another: for, the law, the sacred Scripture, has said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

It is remarkable, that ου ψευδομαρτυρησεις, thou shalt not bear false witness, is wanting here in ABDEFG. and several other MSS. Griesbach has left it out of the text. It is wanting also in the Syriac, and in several of the primitive Fathers. The generality of the best critics think it a spurious reading.

Verse 10. Love worketh no ill] As he that loves another will act towards that person as on a reverse of circumstances, he would that his neighbour should act towards him; therefore, this love can never work ill towards another; and, on this head, i. e. the duty we owe to our neighbour, love is the fulfilling of the law,

Verse 11. And that knowing the time] Dr. Taylor has given a judicious paraphrase of this and the following verses. "And all the duties of a virtuous and holy life we should the more carefully and zealously perform, considering the nature and shortness of the present season of life; which will convince us that it is now high time to rouse and shake off sleep; and apply, with vigilance and vigour, to the duties of our Christian life: for, that eternal salvation which is the object of our Christian faith and hope, and the great motive of our religion, is every day nearer to us, than when we first entered into the profession of Christianity."

Some think the passage should be understood thus: We have now many advantages which we did not formerly possess. Salvation is nearer; the whole Christian system is more fully explained, and the knowledge of it more easy to be acquired than formerly; on which account, a greater progress in religious knowledge, and in practical piety, is required of us: and we have, for a long time, been too remiss in these respects. Deliverance from the persecutions, &c. with which they were then afflicted, is supposed by others, to be the meaning of the apostle.

Verse 12. The night is far spent] If we understand this in reference to the heathen state of the Romans, it may be paraphrased thus: the night is far spent; heathenish darkness is nearly at an end. The day is at hand; the full manifestation of the Sun of righteousness, in the illumination of the whole Gentile world, approaches rapidly. The manifestation of the Messiah is regularly termed by the ancient Jews יום yom, day, because previously to this all is night. Bereshith rabba, sect. 91. fol. 89. Cast off the works of darkness; prepare to meet this rising light, and welcome its approach; by throwing aside superstition, impiety, and vice of every kind: and put on the armour of light; fully receive the heavenly teaching, by which your spirits will be as completely armed against the attacks of evil, as your bodies could be by the best weapons and impenetrable armour. This sense seems most suitable to the following verses, where the vices of the Gentiles are particularly specified; and they are exhorted to abandon them, and to receive the gospel of Christ. The common method of explanation is this: the night is far spent; our present imperfect life, full of afflictions, temptations, and trials, is almost run out; the day of eternal blessedness is at hand, is about to dawn on us in our glorious resurrection unto eternal life. Therefore, let us cast off, let us live as candidates for this eternal glory. But this sense cannot at all comport with what is said below; as the Gentiles are most evidently intended.

Verse 13. Let us walk honestly, as in the day] Let us walk, ευσχημονως, decently, from ευ well, and σχημα mien, habit, or dress. Let our deportment be decent, orderly, and grave; such as we shall not be ashamed of in the eyes of the whole world.

Not in rioting and drunkenness] Μη κωμοις και μεθαις· Κωμος, rioting, according to Hesychius, signifies ασελγη ασματα, πορνικα συμποσια, ωδαι, unclean and dissolute songs; banquets, and such like. Μεθαις, signifies drunken festivals, such as were celebrated in honour of their gods; when after they had sacrificed (μετα το θυειν, SUIDAS,) they drank to excess, accompanied with abominable acts of every kind. See Suidas and Hesychius, under this word.

Not in chambering] This is no legitimate word, and conveys no sense till, from its connexion in this place, we force a meaning upon it. The original word κοιταις, signifies whoredoms, and prostitution of every kind.

And wantonness] Ασελγειαις, all manner of uncleanness, and sodomitical practices.

Not in strife and envying] Μη εριδι και ζηλῳ, not in contentions and furious altercations, which must be the consequence of such practices as are mentioned above. Can any man suppose that this address is to the Christians at Rome? That they are charged with practices almost peculiar to the bering and wantonness, [a] not in strife and envying.

heathens? And practices of the most abandoned and dissolute sort? If those called Christians at Rome were guilty of such acts, there could be no difference, except in profession, between them and the most abominable of the heathens. But it is impossible that such things should be spoken to the followers of Christ; for the very grace that brings repentance, enables the penitent to cast aside and abominate all such vicious and abominable conduct.

The advices to the Christians may be found in the preceding chapter; those at the conclusion of this chapter, belong solely to the heathens.

Verse 14. Put ye on the Lord Jesus] This is in reference to what is said ver. 13, Let us put on decent garments: let us make a different profession, unite with other company; and maintain that profession by a suitable conduct. Putting on, or being clothed with Jesus Christ, signifies receiving and believing the gospel; and, consequently, taking its maxims for the government of life: having the mind that was in Christ. The ancient Jews frequently use the phrase putting on the Shechinah, or Divine Majesty, to signify the soul's being clothed with immortality, and rendered fit for glory.

To be clothed with a person, is a Greek phrase, signifying to assume the interests of another, to enter into his views, to imitate him, and be wholly on his side. St. Chrysostom particularly mentions this as a common phrase, ὁ δεινα τον δεινα ενεδυσατο, such a one, hath put on such a one; i. e. he closely follows and imitates him. So Dionysius Hal. Antiq. lib. xi. pag. 689. speaking of Appius, and the rest of the Decemviri, says, ουκετι μετριαζοντες, αλλα τον Ταρκυνιον εκεινον ενδυομενοι, They were no longer the servants of Tarquin, but they CLOTHED THEMSELVES WITH HIM: they imitated and aped him in every thing. Eusebius, in his life of Constantine, says the same of his sons, they put on their father; they seemed to enter into his spirit and views, and to imitate him in all things. The mode of speech itself is taken from the custom of stage-players; they assumed the name and garments of the person whose character they were to act; and endeavoured as closely as possible to imitate him in their spirit, words, and actions. See many pertinent examples in Kypke.

And make not provision for the flesh] By flesh we are here to understand, not only the body, but all the irregular appetites and passions which led to the abominations already recited. No provision should be made for the encouragement and gratification of such a principle as this.

To fulfil the lusts thereof.] Εις επιθυμιας, in reference to its lusts; such as the κωμοι, κοται, μεθαι, and ασελγειαι, rioting, drunkenness, prostitutions, and uncleanness, mentioned ver. 13. to make provision for which, the Gentiles lived and laboured, and bought and sold, and schemed and planned; for it was the whole business of their life to gratify the sinful lusts of the flesh. Their philosophers taught them little else; and the whole circle of their deities, as well as the whole scheme of their religion, served only to excite and inflame such passions, and produce such practices.

I. In these four last verses there is a fine metaphor, and it is continued and well sustained in every expression. 1. The apostle considers the state of the Gentiles under the notion of night; a time of darkness, and a time of evil practices. 2. That this night is nearly at an end, the night is far spent. 3. He considers the gospel as now visiting the Gentiles, and the light of a glorious day about to shine forth on them. 4. He calls those to awake who were in a stupid, senseless state, concerning all spiritual and moral good; and those who were employed in the vilest practices that could debase and degrade mankind. 5. He orders them to cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armour; οπλα, the habiliments of light, of righteousness: to cease to do evil; to learn to do well. Here is an allusion to laying aside the night-clothes; and putting on their day-clothes. 6. He exhorts them to this, that they may walk honestly, decently habited; and not spend their time, waste their substance, destroy their lives, and ruin their souls, in such iniquitous practices as those which he immediately specifies. 7. That they might not mistake his meaning concerning the decent clothing which he exhorts them to walk in, he immediately explains himself by the use of a common form of speech, and says, still following his metaphor, put on the Lord Jesus Christ; receive his doctrine, copy his example, and seek the things which belong to another life; for the Gentiles thought of little else than making provision for the flesh or body, to gratify its animal desires and propensities.

II. These last verses have been rendered famous in the Christian church, for more than 1400 years, as being the instrument of the conversion of St. Augustin. It is well known that this man was, at first, a Manichean, in which doctrine he continued till the 32d year of his age:—he had frequent conferences and controversies on the Christian religion with several friends, who were Christians; and with his mother Monica, who was incessant in her prayers and tears for his conversion. She was greatly comforted by the assurance given her by St. Ambrose, bishop of Milan, where her son Augustin was then professor of rhetoric; that a child of so many prayers and tears could not perish. He frequently heard St. Ambrose preach, and was affected not only by his eloquence, but by the important subjects which he discussed; but still could not abandon his Manicheanism. Walking one day in a garden with his friend Alypius, who it appears had been reading a copy of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and had left it on a bank near which they then were, (though some say that Augustin was then alone,) he thought he heard a musical voice calling out distinctly, TOLLE et LEGE! TOLLE et LEGE! take up and read! take up and read! He looked down, saw the book, took it up, and hastily opening it, the first words that met his eye were these—Μη κωμοις και μεθαις, &c. Not in rioting and drunkenness, &c but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ. He felt the import and power of the words, and immediately resolved to become a follower of Christ; he, in consequence, instantly embraced Christianity; and afterwards boldly professed and wrote largely in its defence; and became one of the most eminent of all the Latin fathers. Such is the substance of the story handed down to us from antiquity concerning the conversion of St. Augustin. He was made bishop of Hippo in Africa, in the year 395, and died in that city Aug. 28, 430, at the very time that it was besieged by the Vandals.

III. After what I have said in the Notes, I need add nothing on the great political question of subordination to the civil powers; and of the propriety and expediency of submitting to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake. I need only observe, that it is in things civil, this obedience is enjoined: in things religious, God alone is to be obeyed. Should the civil power attempt to usurp the place of the Almighty, and forge a new creed, or prescribe rites and ceremonies not authorized by the word of God; no Christian is bound to obey. Yet, even in this case, as I have already noted, no Christian is authorized to rebel against the civil power; he must bear the persecution; and, if needs be, seal the truth with his blood; and thus become a martyr of the Lord Jesus. This has been the invariable practice of the genuine church of Christ. They committed their cause to Him who judgeth righteously. See further on this subject on Matt. xxii. 20, &c.

CHAPTER XIV.

In things indifferent, Christians should not condemn each other, 1. Particularly with respect to different kinds of food, 2—4. And the observation of certain days, 5, 6. None of us should live unto himself, but unto Christ, who lived and died for us, 7—9. We must not judge each other; for all judgment belongs to God, 10—13. We should not do any thing by which a weak brother may be stumbled or grieved; lest we destroy him for whom Christ died, 14—16. The kingdom of God does not consist in outward things, 17, 18. Christians should endeavour to cultivate peace and brotherly affection, and rather deny themselves of certain privileges, than be the means of stumbling a weak brother, 19—21. The necessity of doing all in the spirit of faith, 22, 23.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIV.

It seems very likely, from this, and the following chapter, that there were considerable misunderstandings between the Jewish and Gentile Christians at Rome, relative to certain customs which were sacredly observed by the one, and disregarded by the other. The principal subject of dispute was, concerning meats and days. The converted Jew, retaining a veneration for the law of Moses, abstained from certain meats, and was observant of certain days; while the converted Gentile, understanding that the Christian religion laid him under no obligations to such ceremonial points, had no regard to either. It appears farther, that mutual censures, and uncharitable judgments, prevailed among them; and that brotherly love, and mutual forbearance, did not generally prevail. The apostle, in this part of his Epistle, exhorts, that in such things, not essential to religion; and in which both parties, in their different way of thinking, might have an honest meaning, and serious regard to God, difference of sentiments might not hinder Christian fellowship and love: but that they would mutually forbear each other, make candid allowance, and especially not carry their gospel liberty so far as to prejudice a weak brother, a Jewish Christian, against the gospel itself; and tempt him to renounce Christianity. His rules and exhortations are still of great use, and happy would the Christian world be, if they were more generally practised. See Dr. Taylor, who farther remarks, that it is probable, St. Paul learnt all these particulars from Aquila and Priscilla, who were lately come from Rome, Acts xviii. 2, 3. and with whom the apostle was familiar for a considerable time. This is very likely, as there is no evidence that he had any other intercourse with the church at Rome.

Verse 1. Him that is weak in the faith] By this the apostle most evidently means the converted Jew; who must indeed be weak in the faith, if he considered this distinction of meats and days essential to his salvation. See on ver. 21.

Receive ye] Associate with him; receive him into your religious fellowship; but when there, let all religious altercations be avoided.

Not to doubtful disputations.] Μη εις διακρισεις διαλογισμων. These words have been variously translated and understood: Dr. Whitby thinks the sense of them to be this, Not discriminating them by their inward thoughts. Do not reject any from your Christian communion, because of their particular sentiments on things which are in themselves indifferent. Do not curiously inquire into their religious scruples, nor condemn them on that account. Entertain a brother of this kind rather with what may profit his soul, than with curious disquisitions on speculative points of doctrine. A good lesson for modern Christians in general.

Verse 2. One believeth that he may eat all things] He believes that whatsoever is wholesome and nourishing, whether herbs or flesh; whether enjoined or forbidden by the Mosaic law, may be safely and conscientiously used by every Christian.

Another, who is weak, eateth herbs.] Certain Jews, lately converted to the Christian faith, and having as yet little knowledge of its doctrines, believe the Mosaic law relative to clean and unclean meats, to be still in force; and therefore, when they are in a Gentile country, for fear of being defiled, avoid flesh entirely, and live on vegetables. And a Jew, when in a heathen country, acts thus, because he cannot tell whether the flesh which is sold in the market, may be of a clean or unclean beast; whether it may not have been offered to an idol; or whether the blood may have been taken properly from it.

Verse 3. Let not him that eateth] The Gentile, who eats flesh, despise him, the Jew, who eateth not flesh, but herbs. And let not him, the Jew, that eateth not indiscriminately, judge, condemn him, the Gentile, that eateth indiscriminately, flesh or vegetables.

For God hath received him.] Both being sincere and upright, and acting in the fear of God, are received as heirs of eternal life, without any difference on account of these religious scruples or prejudices.

Verse 4. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant?] Who has ever given thee the right to condemn the servant of another man, in things pertaining to his own master? To his own master he standeth or falleth. He, not thou, is to judge him; thy intermeddling in this business, is both rash and uncharitable.

Yea, he shall be holden up] He is sincere and upright, and God, who is able to make him stand, will uphold him; and so teach him, that he shall not essentially err. And it is the will of God that such upright, though scrupulous persons, should be continued members of his church.

Verse 5. One man esteemeth one day above another] Perhaps the word ημεραν, day, is here taken for time, festival, and such like; in which sense it is frequently used. Reference is made here to the Jewish institutions, and especially their festivals; such as the pass-over, pentecost, feast of tabernacles, new moons, jubilee, &c. The converted Jew still thought these of moral obligation; the Gentile Christian, not having been bred up in this way, had no such prejudices. And as those who were the instruments of bringing him to the knowledge of God, gave him no such injunctions, consequently he paid to these, no religious regard.

Another] The converted Gentile esteemeth every day;

6 He that [a]regardeth [b]the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for [c]he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.

7 For [d]none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

considers that all time is the Lord's; and that each day should be devoted to the glory of God; and that those festivals are not binding on him.

We add here alike, and make the text say what I am sure was never intended, viz. that there is no distinction of days, not even of the Sabbath: and that every Christian is at liberty to consider even this day to be holy, or not holy, as he happens to be persuaded in his own mind.

That the Sabbath is of lasting obligation, may be reasonably concluded from its institution: see the note on Gen. ii. 3. and from its typical reference. All allow that the sabbath is a type of that rest in glory which remains for the people of God. Now, all types are intended to continue in full force till the anti-type, or thing signified, take place; consequently, the sabbath will continue in force till the consummation of all things. The word alike should not be added; nor is it acknowledged by any MS. or ancient Version.

Let every man be fully persuaded] With respect to the propriety, or non-propriety of keeping the above festivals, let every man act from the plenary conviction of his own mind; there is a sufficient latitude allowed: all may be fully satisfied.

Verse 6. He that regardeth the day] A beautiful apology for mistaken sincerity, and injudicious reformation. Do not condemn the man for what is indifferent in itself: if he keep these festivals, his purpose is to honour God, by the religious observance of them. On the other hand, he who finds that he cannot observe them in honour of God, not believing that God has enjoined them; he does not observe them at all. In like manner, he that eateth any creature of God, which is wholesome and proper for food, gives thanks to God, as the author of all good. And he who cannot eat of all indiscriminately, but is regulated by the precepts in the Mosaic law, relative to clean and unclean meats, also gives God thanks. Both are sincere; both upright; both act according to their light; God accepts both: and they should bear with each other.

Verse 7. None of us liveth to himself] The Greek writers use the phrase ἑαυτῷ ζην, to signify acting according to one's own judgment, following one's own opinion. Christians must act in all things according to the mind and will of God, and not follow their own wills. The apostle seems to intimate that, in all the above cases, each must endeavour to please God; for he is accountable to him alone for his conduct in these indifferent things. God is our master, we must live to him; as we live under his notice, and by his bounty: and when we cease to live among men, we are still in his hand. Therefore, what we do, or what we leave undone, should be in reference to that eternity which is ever at hand.

Verse 9. Christ both died, and rose] That we are not our own, but are the Lord's, both in life and death, is evident from this, that Christ lived and died, and rose again, that he might be the Lord of the dead and the living; for his power extends equally over both worlds: separate as well as embodied spirits, are under his authority; and he it is who is to raise even the dead to life: and thus all, throughout eternity, shall live under his dominion.

The clause και ανεστη, and rose, is wanting in several reputable MSS. and certainly is not necessary to the text. Griesbach omits the words, and reads απεθανε και εζησεν, died and lived; of which professor White says, lectio indubiè genuina: "this reading is indisputably genuine."

Verse 10. But why dost thou] Christian Jew, observing the rites of the Mosaic law; judge, condemn thy brother, Christian Gentile, who does not think himself bound by this law?

Or why dost thou] Christian Gentile, set at nought thy Christian Jewish brother, as if he were unworthy of thy regard, because he does not yet believe that the gospel has set him free from the rites and ceremonies of the law?

It is a true saying of Mr. Heylin, on this verse: the superstitious are prone to judge; and those who are not superstitious, are prone to despise.

We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.] Why should we then judge and condemn each other? We are accountable to God for our conduct, and shall be judged at his bar; and let us consider that whatever measure we mete, the same shall be measured unto us again.

Verse 12. Every one of us shall give account of himself] We shall not, at the bar of God, be obliged to account for the conduct of each other,—each shall give account of himself: and let him take heed that he be prepared to give up his accounts with joy.

Verse 13. Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more] Let us abandon such rash conduct; it is dangerous; it is uncharitable: judgment belongs to the Lord, and he will condemn those only, who should not be acquitted.

That no man put a stumbling-block] Let both the converted Jew and Gentile consider, that they should labour to promote each other's spiritual interests; and not be a means of hindering each other in their Christian course; or of causing them to abandon the Gospel, on which, and not on questions of rites and ceremonies, the salvation of their souls depends.

Verse 14. I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus] After reasoning so long and so much with these contending parties, on the subject of their mutual misunderstandings; without attempting to give any opinion, but merely to show them the folly and uncharitableness of their conduct; he now expresses himself fully, and tells them that nothing is unclean of itself, and that he has the inspiration and authority of Jesus Christ to say so; for to such an inspiration he must refer in such words as, I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus. And yet after having given them this decisive judgment, through respect to the tender mistaken conscience of weak believers, he immediately adds, But to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean; because if he act contrary to his conscience, he must necessarily contract guilt; for he who acts in opposition to his conscience in one case, may do it in another; and thus even the plain declarations of the word of God may be set aside on things of the utmost importance as well as the erroneous though well-intentioned dictates of his conscience, on matters which he makes of the last consequence; though others, who are better taught, know them to be indifferent.

It is dangerous to trifle with conscience, even when erroneous; it should be borne with and instructed; it must be won over, not taken by storm. Its feelings should be respected, because they ever refer to God, and have their foundation in his fear. He who sins against his conscience in things which every one else knows to be indifferent, will soon do it in those things in which his salvation is most intimately concerned. It is a great blessing to have a well-informed conscience; it is a blessing to have a tender conscience, and even a sore conscience is infinitely better than none.

Verse 15. If thy brother be grieved] If he think that thou dost wrong, and he is, in consequence, stumbled at thy conduct;

Now walkest thou not charitably] Κατα αγαπην, according to love; for, love worketh no ill to its neighbour; but by thy eating some particular kind of meat, on which neither thy life nor well-being depend; thou workest ill to him by grieving and distressing his mind, and therefore thou breakest the law of God in reference to him, while pretending that thy Christian liberty raises thee above his scruples.

Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died.] This puts the uncharitable conduct of the person in question, in the strongest light; because it supposes that the weak brother may be so stumbled, as to fall and perish finally; even the man for whom Christ died. To injure a man in his circumstances is bad; to injure him in his person is worse; to injure him in his reputation is still worse; and to injure his soul is worst of all. No wickedness, no malice can go farther than to injure and destroy the soul; thy uncharitable conduct may proceed thus far; therefore thou art highly criminal before God.

From this verse we learn that a man for whom Christ died may perish, or have his soul destroyed; and destroyed with such a destruction as implies perdition; the original is very emphatic, μη—εκεινον απολλυε, υπερ ου Χριστος απεθανε. Christ died in his stead; do not destroy his soul. The sacrificial death is as strongly expressed as it can be, and there is no word in the New Testament that more forcibly implies eternal ruin, than the verb απολλυω, from which is derived that most significant name of the Devil, ὁ Απολλυων, the DESTROYER, the great universal murderer of souls.

Verse 16. Let not then, your good be evil spoken of] Do not make such a use of your Christian liberty as to subject the gospel itself to reproach. Whatsoever you do, do it in such manner, spirit, and time as to make it productive of the greatest possible good. There are many who have such an unhappy method of doing their good acts, as not only to do little or no good by them, but a great deal of evil. It requires much prudence and watchfulness to find out the proper time of performing even a good action.

Verse 17. For, the kingdom of God] That holy religion which God has sent from heaven, and which he intends to make the instrument of establishing a counter part of the kingdom of glory among men: see on Matt. iii. 2.

Is not meat and drink] It consists not in these outward and indifferent things. It neither particularly enjoins, nor particularly forbids such.

But righteousness] Pardon of sin, and holiness of heart and life.

And peace] In the soul, from a sense of God's mercy, peace regulating, ruling, and harmonizing the heart.

And joy in the Holy Ghost.] Solid spiritual happiness; a joy which springs from a clear sense of God's mercy; the love of God being shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost. In a word, it is a happiness brought into the soul by the Holy Spirit, and maintained there by the same influence. This is a genuine counterpart of heaven; righteousness without sin, PEACE without inward disturbance, JOY without any kind of mental agony, or distressing fear. See the note on Matt. iii. 2.

Verse 18. For, he that in these things] The man, whether Jew or Gentile, who in these things, righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost, serveth Christ, acts according to his doctrine, is acceptable to God, for he has not only the form of godliness in thus serving Christ, but he has the power, the very spirit and essence of it, in having righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost; and therefore the whole frame of his mind, as well as his acts, must be acceptable to God.—And approved of men; for although religion may be persecuted, yet the righteous man, who is continually labouring for the public good, will be generally esteemed. This was a very common form of speech among the Jews; that he who was a conscientious observer of the law was pleasing to God, and approved of men. See several examples in Schoettgen.

Verse 19. Let us therefore follow] Far from contending about meats, drinks, and festival times, in which it is not likely that the Jews and Gentiles will soon agree; let us endeavour, to the utmost of our power, to promote peace and unanimity, that we may be instrumental in edifying each other; in promoting religious knowledge and piety, instead of being stumbling-blocks in each other's way.

Verse 20. For meat, destroy not the work of God] Do not hinder the progress of the gospel, either in your own souls, or in those of others, by contending about lawful or unlawful meats. And do not destroy the soul of thy Christian brother, ver. 15. by offending him so as to induce him to apostatize.

All things indeed are pure] This is a repetition of the sentiment delivered, ver. 14. in different words. Nothing that is proper for aliment, is unlawful to be eaten: but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence; the man who either eats contrary to his own conscience, or so as to grieve and stumble another, does an evil act; and however lawful the thing may be in itself, his conduct does not please God.

Verse 21. It is good neither to eat flesh, &c.] The spirit and self-denying principles of the gospel teach us, that we should not only avoid every thing in eating or drinking which may be an occasion of offence or apostacy to our brethren, but even to lay down our lives for them, should it be necessary.

Whereby thy brother stumbleth] Προσκοπτει, from προς, against, and κοπτω, to strike, to hit the foot against a stone in walking, so as to halt, and be impeded in one's journey. It here means spiritually, any thing by which a man is so perplexed in his mind, as to be prevented from making due progress in the divine life. Any thing by which he is caused to halt, to be indecisive, and undetermined; and under such an influence no man has ever yet grown in grace, and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Or is offended] Η σκανδαλιζεται, from σκανδαλον, a stumbling-block; any thing by which a person is caused to fall, especially into a snare, trap, or gin. Originally the word signified the piece of wood, or key in a trap, which being trodden on, caused the animal to fall into a pit, or the trap to close upon him. In the New Testament it generally refers to total apostacy from the Christian religion, and this appears to be its meaning in this place.

Or is made weak.] Η ασθενει, from α negative, and σθενος, strength, without mental vigour; without power sufficiently to distinguish between right and wrong, good and evil, lawful and unlawful. To get under the dominion of an erroneous conscience, so as to judge that to be evil or unlawful which is not so. The two last terms are omitted by two excellent MSS. (the Codex Alexandrinus and the Codex Ephraim,) by the Syriac of Erpen, the Coptic and the Æthiopic, and by some of the primitive fathers. It is very likely that they were added by some early hand by way of illustration. Griesbach has left them in the text with a note of doubtfulness.

Verse 22. Hast thou faith] The term faith seems to signify, in this place, a full persuasion in a man's mind that he is right, that what he does is lawful, and has the approbation of God and his conscience. Dr. Taylor has a judicious note on this passage. "There is no necessity," says he, "for reading the first clause interrogatively; and it seems to be more agreeable to the structure of the Greek, to render it, thou hast faith; as if he had said, 'I own thou hast a right persuasion.' Further, there is an anadiplosis in εχεις, and εχε, the first simply signifies thou hast, the latter, hold fast. Thou hast a right persuasion concerning thy Christian liberty; and I advise thee to hold that persuasion steadfastly, with respect to thyself, in the sight of God. Εχω, have, has frequently this emphatical signification. See Matt. xxv. 29, &c."

Happy is he that condemneth not, &c.] That man only can enjoy peace of conscience who acts according to the full persuasion which God has given him of the lawfulness of his conduct: whereas, he must be miserable who allows himself in the practice of any thing, for which his conscience upbraids and accuses him. This is a most excellent maxim, and every genuine Christian should be careful to try every part of his conduct by it. If a man have not peace in his own bosom, he cannot be happy; and no man can have peace who sins against his conscience. If a man's passions or appetite allow or instigate him to a particular thing, let him take good heed that his conscience approve what his passions allow; and that he live not the subject of continual self-condemnation and reproach. Even the man who had the too scrupulous conscience, had better, in such matters as are in question, obey its erroneous dictates, than violate this moral feeling, and live only to condemn the actions he is constantly performing.

Verse 23. And he that doubteth] This verse is a necessary part of the preceding, and should be read thus, But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith. The meaning is sufficiently plain. He that feeds on any kind of meats prohibited by the Mosaic law, with the persuasion in his mind that he may be wrong in so doing, is condemned by his conscience for doing that which he has reason to think God has forbidden.

For whatsoever is not of faith, is sin] Whatever he does, without a full persuasion of its lawfulness, (see ver. 22.) is to him sin, for he does it under a conviction that he may be wrong in so doing. Therefore, if he makes a distinction in his own conscience between different kinds of meats, and yet eats of all indifferently, he is a sinner before God; because he eats either through false shame, base compliance, or an unbridled appetite; and any of these is, in itself, a sin against the sincerity, ingenuousness, and self-denying principles of the gospel of Christ.

Some think that these words have a more extensive signification, and that they apply to all who have not true religion and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; every work of such persons being sinful in the sight of a holy God, because it does not proceed from a pure motive. On this ground our church says, Artic. xiii. "Works done before the grace of Christ, and the inspiration of his Spirit, are not pleasant to God, forasmuch as they are not of faith in Jesus Christ; yea, for that they are not done as God hath willed and commanded them to be done, we doubt not but they have the nature of sin." To this we may add, that without faith it is impossible to please God; every thing is wrong where this principle is wanting.

There are few readers who have not remarked that the three last verses of this Epistle, (ch. xvi. 25, 26, 27.) appear to stand in their present place, without any obvious connexion; and apparently after the Epistle is concluded. And it is well known to critics that two MSS. in uncial letters, the Cod. A. and I. with upwards of 100 others, together with the Sclavonic, the latter Syriac, and Arabic, add those verses at the end of the 14th chapter. The transposition is acknowledged by Cyril, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Theophylact, Theodulus, Damascenus, and Tertullian, see Wetstein. Griesbach inserts them at the end of this chapter as their proper place; and most learned men approve of this transposition. It may be necessary to repeat the words here that the Reader may see with what propriety they connect with the subject which terminates the fourteenth chapter as it now stands. Chap. xiv. ver. 23. And he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith; for whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

Chap. xvi. ver. 25. Now, to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, (according to the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began, Verse 26. But now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith;)

Verse 27. To God only wise be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. Amen. Chap. xv. 1. We then, that are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, &c.

These words certainly connect better with the close of the 14th chapter, and the beginning of the 15th, than they do with the conclusion of the 16th, where they are now generally found; but I shall defer my observations upon them till I come to that place, with only this remark, that the stablishing mentioned chap. xvi. ver. 25, corresponds well with the doubting, chap. xiv. ver. 23. and indeed the whole matter of these verses agrees so well with the subject so largely handled in the preceding chap. that there can be very little doubt of their being in their proper place, if joined to the end of this chap. as they are in the preceding MSS. and Versions.

NOTES ON CHAP. XV.

Verse 1. We then, that are strong] The sense of this verse is supposed to be the following. We, Gentile Christians, who perfectly understand the nature of our gospel liberty, not only lawfully may, but are bound in duty to bear any inconveniences that may arise from the scruples of the weaker brethren, and to ease their consciences by prudently abstaining from such indifferent things as may offend and trouble them; and not take advantage from our superior knowledge to make them submit to our judgment.

Verse 2. Let every one of us please his neighbour] For it should be a maxim with each of us to do all in our power to please our brethren; and especially in those things in which their spiritual edification is concerned. Though we should not indulge men in mere whims and caprices, yet we should bear with their ignorance and their weakness; knowing that others had much to bear with from us before we came to our present advanced state of religious knowledge.

5 [d] Now, the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one towards another [e] according to Christ Jesus:

Verse 3. For, even Christ pleased not himself] Christ never acted as one who sought his own ease or profit; he not only bore with the weakness, but with the insults, of his creatures; as it is written in Psalm lxix. 9. The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell upon me. I not only bore their insults, but bore the punishment due to them for their vicious and abominable conduct. That this Psalm refers to the Messiah and his sufferings for mankind, is evident, not only from the quotation here, but also from John xix. 28, 29. when our Lord's receiving the vinegar, during his expiatory suffering, is said to be a fulfilling of the Scripture, viz. of verse 22. of this very Psalm: and his cleansing the temple, John ii. 15—17. is said to be a fulfilment of verse 9, For the zeal of thy house hath eaten me up, the former part of which verse the apostle quotes here.

Verse 4. For, whatsoever things were written aforetime] This refers not only to the quotation from the 69th Psalm, but to all the Old Testament scriptures; for it can be to no other scriptures that the apostle alludes. And from what he says here of them, we learn that God had not intended them merely for those generations in which they were first delivered; but for the instruction of all the succeeding generations of mankind. That we through patience and comfort of the scriptures: That we, through those remarkable examples of patience exhibited by the saints and followers of God, whose history is given in those scriptures; and the comfort which they derived from God in their patient endurance of sufferings brought upon them through their faithful attachment to truth and righteousness, might have hope; that we shall be upheld and blessed as they were; and our sufferings become the means of our greater advances in faith and holiness; and consequently our hope of eternal glory be the more confirmed. Some think that the word παρακλησις, which we translate comfort, should be rendered exhortation; but there is certainly no need here to leave the usual acceptation of the term, as the word comfort makes a regular and consistent sense with the rest of the verse.

Verse 5. Now, the God of patience and consolation] May that God who endued them with patience, and gave them the consolation that supported them in all their trials and afflictions; grant you to be like-minded, give you the same mode of thinking, and the same power of acting towards each other, according to the example of Christ.

Verse 6. That ye, Jews and Gentiles, with one mind] thinking the same things, and bearing with each other after the example of Christ; and one mouth, in all your religious assemblies, without jarring or contentions; glorify God, for calling you into such a state of salvation, and showing himself to be your loving, compassionate Father, as he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It is very likely that the apostle refers here to religious acts in public worship, which might have been greatly interrupted by the dissentions between the converted Jews and the converted Gentiles; these differences he labours to compose; and after having done all that was necessary in the way of instruction and exhortation, he now pours out his soul to God, who alone could rule and manage the heart; that he would enable them to think the same things, to be of the same judgment, and that all feeling their obligation to him, they might join in the sweetest harmony in every act of religious worship.

Verse 7. Wherefore, receive ye one another] Προσλαμβανεσθε have the most affectionate regard for each other; and acknowledge each other as the servants and children of God Almighty.

As Christ also received us] Καθως και ὁ Χριστος προσελαβετο ημας. In the same manner, and with the same cordial affection as Christ has received us into communion with himself; and has made us partakers of such inestimable blessings, condescending to be present in all our assemblies. And as Christ has received us thus to the glory of God; so should we, Jews and Gentiles, cordially receive each other, that God's glory may be promoted by our harmony and brotherly love.

Christ also received us to the glory of God.

8 Now I say that [a] Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, [b] to confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

9 And [c] that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, [d] For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

13 Now, the God of hope fill you with all [h] joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in [d] Ps. 18. 49.——[e] Deut. 32. 43.——[f] Ps. 117. 1.——[g] Isai. 11. 1, 10. Rev. 5. 5. & 22. 16.——[h] ch. 12. 12. & 14. 17.

Verse 8. Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision] To show the Gentiles the propriety of bearing with the scrupulous Jews, he shows them here, that they were under the greatest obligations to this people; to whom, in the days of his flesh, Jesus Christ confined his ministry; giving the world to see, that he allowed the claim of the Jews as having the first right to the blessings of the gospel. And he confined his ministry thus to the Jews, to confirm the truth of God, contained in the promises made unto the Patriarchs; for God had declared that thus it should be; and Jesus Christ, by coming according to the promise, has fulfilled this truth, by making good the promises: therefore, salvation is of the Jews, as a kind of right conveyed to them through the promises made to their fathers. But this salvation was not exclusively designed for the Jewish people; as God by his prophets had repeatedly declared.

Verse 9. And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy] As the Jews were to glorify God for his truth; so the Gentiles were to glorify God for his mercy. The Jews received the blessings of the gospel by right of promise; which promise God had most punctually and circumstantially fulfilled. The Gentiles had received the same gospel, as an effect of God's mere mercy, having no right, in consequence of any promise or engagement made with any of their ancestors; though they were originally included in the covenant made with Abraham: and the prophets had repeatedly declared that they should be made equal partakers of those blessings with the Jews themselves; as the apostle proceeds to prove.

I will confess to thee among the Gentiles] This quotation is taken from Psalm xviii. 49. and shows that the Gentiles had a right to glorify God for his mercy to them; and we shall see the strength of this saying further, when we consider a maxim of the Jews delivered in Megillah, fol. 14. "From the time that the children of Israel entered into the promised land, no Gentile had any right to sing a hymn of praise to God. But after that the Israelites were led into captivity, then the Gentiles began to have a right to glorify God." Thus the Jews themselves confess that the Gentiles have a right to glorify God: and this, on account of being made partakers of his grace and mercy. And if, says Schoettgen, we have a right to glorify God; then it follows that our worship must be pleasing to him: and, if it be pleasing to him, then it follows, that this worship must be good; otherwise God could not be pleased with it.

Dr. Taylor gives a good paraphrase of this and the three following verses. As you Jews glorify God for his truth, so the Gentiles have a right to join with you in glorifying God for his mercy. And you have scripture authority for admitting them to such fellowship: for instance, David says, Psal. xviii. 49. Therefore will I give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the Gentiles; and sing praises unto thy name. And again, Moses himself says, in Deuter. chap. xxxii. 43. Rejoice, O ye Gentiles, with his people. And again, it is evident, from Psal. cxvii. that praise to God is not to be confined to the Jews only; but that all people, as they all share in his goodness, should also join in thanks to their common benefactor; O praise the Lord all ye nations, (Gentiles,) praise him all ye people; for his merciful kindness is great towards us; and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever. Again, the prophet Isaiah expressly and clearly declares, chap. xi. ver. 10. There shall be a root of Jesse, (that is, the Messiah,) and he shall rise to reign over the Gentiles, and in him shall the Gentiles hope: ελπιουσιν. And thus the apostle proves both to the Jews and to the Gentiles, who were probably unwilling to join with each other in religious fellowship; that they had both an equal right to glorify God; being equally interested in his mercy, goodness, and truth: and that, from the evidence of the above scriptures, the Gentiles had as much right to hope in Christ, for the full enjoyment of his kingdom, as the Jews had; and taking occasion from the last word hope, ελπιοσι, which we impro-hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

14 And [a] I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, [b] filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, [c] because of the grace that is given to me of God, perly translate trust, he pours out his heart in the following affectionate prayer.'

Verse 13. Now the God of hope, &c.] Ο δε Θεος της ελπιδος, may the God of this hope, that God who caused both Jews and Gentiles to hope that the gracious promises which he made to them should be fulfilled; and who, accordingly, has fulfilled them in the most punctual and circumstantial manner:

Fill you with all joy] Give you true spiritual happiness; peace in your own hearts, and unity among yourselves; in believing, not only the promises which he has given you, but believing in Christ Jesus, in whom all the promises are yea and amen.

That ye may abound in hope] That ye may be excited to take more enlarged views of the salvation which God has provided for you, and have all your expectations fulfilled by the power of the Holy Ghost, enabling you to hope and believe; and then sealing the fulfilment of the promises upon your hearts.

Verse 14. And I—am persuaded of you] This is supposed to be an address to the Gentiles; and it is managed with great delicacy; he seems to apologize for the freedom he had used in writing to them; which he gives them to understand proceeded from the authority he had received by his apostolical office: the exercise of which office respected them particularly. So they could not be offended, when they found themselves so particularly distinguished.

Ye—are full of goodness] Instead of αγαθωσυνης, goodness: some MSS. of good repute, have αγαπης, love. In this connexion both words seem to mean nearly the same thing. They were so full of goodness and love, that they were disposed, of themselves, to follow any plan that might be devised, in order to bring about the most perfect understanding between them and their Jewish brethren.

Filled with all knowledge] So completely instructed in the mind and design of God, relative to their calling, and the fruit which they were to bring forth to the glory of God; that they were well qualified to give one another suitable exhortations on every important point.

Instead of αλληλους, one another, several MSS. have αλλους, others; which gives a clearer sense: for, if they were all filled with knowledge, there was little occasion for them to admonish one another; but by this they were well qualified to admonish others; to impart the wisdom they had, to those who were less instructed.

Verse 15. Nevertheless—I have written] Notwithstanding I have this conviction of your extensive knowledge in the things of God, I have made bold to write to you in some sort, απο μερους, to a party among you, as some learned men translate the words, who stand more in need of such instructions than the others: and I do this, because of the grace, δια την χαριν, because of the office which I have received from God; namely, to be the apostle of the Gentiles. This authority gave him full right to say, advise, or enjoin any thing which he judged to be of importance to their spiritual interests. This subject he pursues farther in the following verse.

Verse 16. Ministering the gospel of God] Ιερουργουντα, acting as a priest. Here is a plain allusion, says Dr. Whitby, to the Jewish sacrifices offered by the priest, and sanctified, or made acceptable by the libamen offered with them. For, he compares himself in preaching the gospel, to the priest performing his sacred functions, preparing his sacrifice to be offered. The Gentiles converted by him, and dedicated to the service of God, are his sacrifices and oblation. The Holy Spirit is the libamen poured upon this sacrifice, by which it was sanctified, and rendered acceptable to God. The words of Isaiah, lxvi. 20. And they shall bring all your brethren for an OFFERING unto the Lord, out of all NATIONS, might have suggested the above idea to the mind of the apostle.

Verse 17. I have therefore, whereof I may glory] Being sent of God on this most honourable and important errand, I have matter of great exultation, not only in the honour which he has conferred upon me; but in the great success with which he has crowned my ministry.

Verse 18. For I will not dare to speak] If the thing were not as I have stated it, I would not dare to arrogate to myself honours which did not belong to me. But God has made me the apostle of the Gentiles; and the conversion of the Gentiles is the fruit of my ministry; Christ having wrought by me, for this purpose.

By word and deed] Λογῳ και εργῳ· These words may refer to the doctrines which he taught; and to the miracles which he wrought among them. So they became obedient to the doctrines, on the evidence of the miracles with which they were accompanied.

Verse 19. Through mighty signs and wonders] This more fully explains the preceding clause; through the power of the Holy Ghost, he was enabled to work among the Gentiles mighty signs and wonders; so that they were fully convinced that both his doctrine and mission were divine; and, therefore, they cheerfully received the gospel of the Lord Jesus.

Round about unto Illyricum] Among ancient writers, this place has gone by a great variety of names, Illyria, Illyrica, Illyricum, Illyris, and Illyrium. It is a country of Europe, extending from the Adriatic gulf to Pannonia; according to Pliny, it extended from the river Arsia to the river Drinius, thus including Liburnia on the west, and Dalmatia on the east. Its precise limits have not been determined by either ancient or modern geographers. It seems, according to an inscription in Gruter, to have been divided by Augustus into two provinces, the upper and lower. It now forms part of Croatia, Bosnia, Istria, and Sclavonia. When the apostle says that he preached the gospel from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum, he intends his land journies chiefly; and by looking at the Map annexed to the Acts of the Apostles, the Reader will see that from Jerusalem, the apostle went round the eastern coast of the Mediterranean sea, and that he passed through Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, Cilicia, Pamphylia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Pontus, Paphlagonia, Phrygia, Troas, Asia, Caria, Lycia, Ionia, Lydia, Thrace, Macedonia, Thessaly, and Achaia; besides the isles of Cyprus and Crete. And, no doubt, he visited many other places which are not mentioned in the New Testament.

I have fully preached the gospel] Πεπληρωκεναι το ευαγγελιον, I have successfully preached: I have not only proclaimed the word, but made converts, and founded churches. See the Note on Matt. v. 17. where this sense of the word πληρουν is noticed; for it signifies not only fully or perfectly, but also to teach with prosperity and success.

Verse 20. So have I strived to preach the gospel] Ουτω δε φιλοτιμουμενον, for I have considered it my honour to preach the gospel where that gospel was before unknown. This is the proper import of the word φιλοτιμεισθαι, from φιλος a friend, and τιμη honour. As I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, so I esteem it an honour to preach it; and especially to proclaim it among the heathen; not building on another man's foundation; not watering what another apostle had planted; but cheerfully exposing myself to all kinds of dangers and hardships, in order to found new churches.

Verse 21. But as it is written] These words, quoted from Isai. lii. 15. the apostle applies to his own conduct; not that the words themselves predicted what Paul had done, but that he endeavoured to fulfil such a declaration by his manner of preaching the gospel to the heathen.

Verse 22. For which cause, &c.] My considering it a point of honour to build on no other man's foundation; and finding that the gospel has been long ago planted at Rome, I have been prevented from going thither, purposing rather to spend my time and strength in preaching where Christ has not, as yet, been proclaimed.

Having nothing farther at present that I can do, for τοπον εχειν signifies not merely to have a place of residence, or the like, but convenience, opportunity; which is a frequent meaning of the phrase among the best Greek writers: having no large place or city where Christianity has not yet been planted, in which I can introduce the gospel. The apostle was then at Corinth; and, having evangelized all those parts, he had no opportunity of breaking up any new ground.

Verse 24. Whensoever I take my journey into Spain] Where it is very likely the gospel had not yet been planted; though legendary tales inform us, that St. James had planted the gospel there, long before this time; and had founded many bishoprics! But this is as unfounded as it is ridiculous and absurd: for nothing like what is now termed a bishopric, nor even a parish, was founded for many years after this. An itinerant preacher might, with more propriety, say travelling circuits were formed, rather than bishoprics. Whether the apostle ever fulfilled his design of going to Spain, is unknown; but there is no evidence whatever that he did; and the presumption is, that he did not undertake this voyage. Antiquity affords no proof that he fulfilled his intention.

I will come to you] Ελευσομαι προς υμας; these words are wanting in almost every MS. of note: and in the Syriac of Erpen, Coptic, Vulgate, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Itala. If the first clause of this verse be read in connexion with the latter clause of the preceding, it will fully appear that this rejected clause is useless. Having a great desire, these many years, to come unto you whensoever I take my journey into Spain: for I trust to see you in my journey, &c.

Somewhat filled with your company.] The word εμπλησθω which we translate filled, would be better rendered gratified: for εμπλησθηναι, signifies to be satisfied, to be gratified, and to enjoy. ÆLIAN. Hist. Anim. lib. v. c. 21. speaking of the peacock spreading out his beautiful plumage, says εἰ γαρ εμπλησθηναι της θεας τον παρεσωτα· "He readily permits the spectator to gratify himself by viewing him." And MAXIMUS TYRIUS, Dissert. 41. pag. 413. "That he may behold the heavens, και εμπλησθη λαμπρου φωτος, and be gratified with the splendour of the light." HOMER uses the word in the same sense—

Η δ' εμε ουδε περ υιος ενιπλησθηναι ακοιτις
Οφθαλμοισιν εασε. Odyss. lib. xi. ve. 451.

"But my wife never suffered my eyes to be delighted with my son."

The apostle, though he had not the honour of having planted the church at Rome; yet expected much gratification from the visit which he intended to pay them.

Verse 25. Now I go unto Jerusalem] From this, and the two following verses, we learn that the object of his journey to Jerusalem was, to carry a contribution made among the Gentile Christians of Macedonia and Achaia, for the relief of the poor Jewish Christians at Jerusalem. About this affair he had taken great pains, as appears from 1 Cor. xvi. 1—4. 2 Cor. viii. and ix. chapters. His design in this affair is very evident, from 2 Cor. ix. 12, 13. where he says, The administration of this service, not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God; whilst, by the experiment of this ministration, they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ; and for your liberal distribution unto them, and unto all men. The apostle was in hopes that this liberal contribution, sent by the Gentile Christians, who had been converted by St. Paul's ministry, would engage the affections of the Jewish Christians, who had been much prejudiced against the reception of the Gentiles into the church, without being previously obliged to submit to the yoke of the law. He wished to establish a coalition between the converted Jews and Gentiles; being sensible of its great importance to the spread of the gospel; and his procuring this contribution, was one laudable device to accomplish this good end. And this shows why he so earnestly requests the prayers of the Christians at Rome; that his service which he had for Jerusalem, might be accepted of the saints. See Dr. Taylor.

Verse 27. For, if the Gentiles have been made partakers, &c.] It was through, and by means of the Jews, that the Gentiles were brought to the knowledge of God, and the gospel of Christ. These were the spiritual things which they had received: and the pecuniary contribution was the carnal things which the Gentiles were now returning.

Verse 28. When, therefore, I have performed this] Service: And have sealed, faithfully delivered up to them, this fruit of the success of my ministry, and of your conversion to God; I will come by you into Spain: this was in his desire; he had fully purposed it, if God should see meet to permit him; but it does not appear that he ever went. See ver. 24.

Ver. 29. In the fulness of the blessing (of the gospel) of Christ.] The words του ευαγγελιου του, of the gospel, are wanting in almost every MS. of importance. Griesbach has left them out of the text. There is no doubt they should be omitted. The fulness of the blessing of Christ is really more than the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ. He hoped to come to them not only with the blessing of the gospel, but endued with the gifts and graces of the Lord Jesus himself; which he was now a constant instrument in the hand of God, to dispense among those who were converted to the Christian faith.

Verse 30. For the love of the Spirit] By that love of God which the Holy Spirit sheds abroad in your hearts.

That ye strive together] Συναγωνισασθαι, that ye agonize with me. He felt that much depended on the success of his present mission to the Christians at Jerusalem; and their acceptance of the charitable contribution which he was bringing with him in order to conciliate them to the reception of the Gentiles into the church of God, without obliging them to submit to circumcision.

Verse 31. That I may be delivered from them that do not believe] He knew that his countrymen, who had not received the gospel, lay in wait for his life: and, no doubt, they thought they should do God service by destroying him; not only as an apostate in their apprehension, from the Jewish religion; but as one who was labouring to subvert and entirely destroy it.

And that my service] Διακονια; but several eminent MSS. read δωροφορια, the gift which I bear. This probably was a gloss, which in many MSS. subverted the word in the text, for διακονια service, in its connexion here, could refer to nothing else, but the contribution which he was carrying to the poor saints at Jerusalem.

Verse 32. That I may come unto you with joy] That his apprehensions of ill usage were not groundless, and the danger to which his life was exposed, real, we have already seen in the account given of this visit, Acts xxi. xxii. xxiii. and xxiv. And that he had such intimations from the Holy Spirit himself, appears from Acts xx. 23. xxi. 11. and xx. 38. Should his journey to Jerusalem be prosperous, and his service accepted, so that the converted Jews and Gentiles should come to a better understanding, he hoped to see them at Rome with great joy. And if he got his wishes gratified through their prayers, it would be the full proof that this whole business had been conducted according to the will of God.

Verse 33. The God of peace be with you] The whole object of the Epistle is to establish peace between the believing Jews and Gentiles: and to show them their mutual obligations, and the infinite mercy of God to both: and now he concludes, with praying that the God of peace, he from whom it comes, and by whom it is preserved, may be for ever with them. The word Amen, at the end, does not appear to have been written by the apostle: it is wanting in some of the most ancient MSS.

1. In the preceding chapters the apostle enjoins a very hard but a very important and necessary duty, that of bearing with each other; and endeavouring to think, and let think, in those religious matters which are confessedly not essential to the salvation of the soul. Most of the disputes among Christians have been concerning non-essential points. Rites and ceremonies, even in the simple religion of Christ, have contributed their part in promoting those animosities by which Christians have been divided. Forms in worship, and sacerdotal garments, have not been without their influence in this general disturbance. Each side has been ready to take out of the 14th and 15th chapters of this Epistle, such expressions as seemed suitable to their own case; but few have been found who have taken up the whole. You believe that a person who holds such and such opinions is wrong; pity him, and set him right; lovingly, if possible. He believes you to be wrong, because you do not hold those points: he must bear with you. Both of you stand precisely on the same ground, and are mutually indebted to mutual forbearance.

2. Beware of contentions in religion; if you dispute concerning any of its doctrines, let it be to find out truth; not to support a preconceived and pre-established opinion. Avoid all polemical heat and rancour; these prove the absence of the religion of Christ. Whatever does not lead you to love God and man more, is most assuredly from beneath. The God of peace is the author of Christianity: and the Prince of peace, the priest and sacrifice of it: therefore love one another; and leave off contention before it be meddled with. On this subject, the advice of pious Mr. Herbert is good:—

Be calm in arguing; for fierceness makes Error a fault, and truth discourtesy.
Why should I feel another man's mistakes
More than his sickness or his poverty?
In love I should; but anger is not love?
Nor wisdom neither:—therefore g-e-n-t-l-y m-o-v-e.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Apostle commends to the Christians at Rome, Phœbe, a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea, 1, 2. Sends greetings to Aquila and Priscilla, of whom he gives a high character; and greets also the church at their house, 3—5. Mentions several others by name, both men and women, who were members of the church of Christ at Rome, 6—16. Warns them to beware of those who cause dissentions and divisions, of whom he gives an awful character, 17, 18. Extols the obedience of the Roman Christians, and promises them a complete victory over Satan, 19, 20. Several persons send their salutations, 21—23. To whose good wishes he subjoins the apostolic blessing; commends them to God; gives an abstract of the doctrines of the gospel; and concludes with ascribing glory to the only wise God, through Christ Jesus, 24—27.

NOTES ON CHAP. XVI.

Verse 1. I commend unto you Phœbe] As the apostle had not been at Rome, previously to his writing this Epistle; he could not have had a personal acquaintance with those members of the church there, to whom he sends these friendly salutations. It is likely that many of them were his own converts; who, in different parts of Asia Minor and Greece, had heard him preach the gospel, and afterwards became settlers at Rome.

Phœbe is here termed a servant, διακονον, a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea. There were deaconesses in the primitive church, whose business it was to attend the female converts at baptism; to instruct the catechumens, or persons who were candidates for baptism; to visit the sick, and those who were in prison; and, in short, perform those religious offices for the female part of the church, which could not with propriety be performed by men. They were chosen in general out of the most experienced of the church, and were ordinarily widows, who had borne children. Some ancient Constitutions required them to be forty, others fifty, and others sixty years of age. It is evident that they were ordained to their office, by the imposition of the hands of the bishop; and the form of prayer used on the occasion is extant in the apostolical Constitutions. In the tenth or eleventh century, the order became extinct in the Latin church; but continued in the Greek church till the end of the twelfth century. See Broughton's Dictionary, article deaconess.

Cenchrea was a sea-port on the east side of the Isthmus, which need of you; for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

3 Greet [a] Priscilla and Aquila my helpers in Christ Jesus:

4 Who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles.

joined the Morea to Greece; as the Lecheum was the sea-port on the west side of the same Isthmus. These were the only two havens and towns of any note next to Corinth, that belonged to this territory. As the Lecheum opened the road to the Ionian sea, so Cenchrea opened the road to the Ægean; and both were so advantageously situated for commerce, that they were very rich. It was on the Isthmus, between those two ports, which was about six miles wide, that the Isthmean games were celebrated; to which St. Paul makes such frequent allusions.

Verse 2. Succourer of many] One who probably entertained the apostles and preachers who came to minister at Cenchrea; and who was remarkable for entertaining strangers. See on chap. xii. 8.

Verse 3. Greet Priscilla and Aquila] This pious couple had been obliged to leave Rome, on the edict of Claudius, see Acts xviii. 2. and take refuge in Greece. It is likely that they returned to Rome at the death of Claudius, or whenever the decree was annulled. It seems they had greatly contributed to assist the apostle in his important labours. Instead of Priscilla, the principal MSS. and Versions have Prisca, which most critics suppose to be the genuine reading.

Verse 4. Who have for my life laid down their own necks] What transaction this refers to we know not; but it appears that these persons had, on some occasion, hazarded their own lives to save that of the apostle; and that the fact was known to all the churches of God in that quarter; who felt themselves under the highest obligations to these pious persons, for the important service which they had thus rendered.

Verse 5. The church that is in their house] In these primitive times, no such places existed as those which we now term churches; the word always signifying the congregation, or assembly of believers, and not the place they assembled in. See the term defined at the end of the Notes on Matt. xvi.

Epenetus—the first-fruits of Achaia] In 1 Cor. xvi. 15. the house, or family of Stephanas, is said to be the first-fruits of Achaia: how then can it be said here, that Epenetus was the first-fruits, or first person who had received the gospel in that district? Ans.—Epenetus might have been one of the family of Stephanas; for, it is not said that Stephanas, was the first-fruits, but his house or family; and there can be no impropriety in supposing that one of that house or family was called Epenetus: and that this person being the only one of the family now at Rome, might be mentioned as the first-fruits of Achaia; that is, one of that family which first received the gospel in that country. This would rationally account for the apparent difficulty, were we sure that Αχαιας, Achaia, was the true reading: but this is more than doubtful, for Ασιας Asia, is the reading of ABCDEFG, some others; the Coptic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala; and some of the chief of the Fathers. On this evidence, Griesbach has admitted it into the text. Yet, the other reading is sufficiently natural, for the reasons already assigned.

Verse 6. Greet Mary, who bestowed much labour on us.] Who this Mary was, or what the labour was, which she bestowed upon the apostles, we know not. Her works, though hidden from man, are with God; and her name is recorded with honour in this book of life.

Verse 7. Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen] As the word συγγενεις signifies relatives, whether male or female, and as Junia may probably be the name of a woman, the wife of Andronicus, it would be better to say relatives than kinsmen. But probably St. Paul means no more than that they were Jews; for in chap. ix. 3. he calls all the Jews his kinsmen according to the flesh.

My fellow-prisoners] As Paul was in prisons often, it is likely that these persons shared this honour with him on some occasion, which is not distinctly marked.

Of note among the apostles] Whether this intimates that they were noted apostles, or only highly reputed by the apostles is not absolutely clear; but the latter appears to me the most probable. They were not only well-known to St. Paul, but also to the rest of the apostles.

In Christ before me.] That is, they were converted to Christianity before Paul was; probably at the day of pentecost, or by the ministry of Christ himself, or by that of the seventy disciples.

14 Salute Asyncritus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

[a] Or, friends.——[b] Or, friends.

[c] 2 John 1.

Verse 8. Amplias, my beloved in the Lord] One who is my particular friend; and also a genuine Christian.

Verse 9. Urbane, our helper] Who this Urbanus was, we know not: what is here stated, is, that he had been a fellow-labourer with the apostles.

Stachys my beloved.] One of my particular friends.

Verse 10. Apelles approved in Christ] A man who, on different occasions, had given the highest proofs of the sincerity and depth of his religion. Some suppose that Apelles was the same with Apollos. Whoever he was, he had given every demonstration of being a genuine Christian.

Of Aristobulus' household.] It is doubted whether this person was converted; as the apostle does not salute him, but his household; or, as the margin reads, his friends. He might have been a Roman of considerable distinction: who, though not converted himself, had Christians among his servants or his slaves. But, whatever he was, it is likely that he was dead at this time, and therefore those of his household only are referred to by the apostle.

Verse 11. Herodion my kinsman] Probably another converted Jew. See on ver. 7.

Of the household of Narcissus] Probably dead also, as we have supposed Aristobulus to have been at this time.

Which are in the Lord.] This might intimate that some of this family were not Christians; those only of that family that were converted to the Lord, being saluted. There was a person of the name of Narcissus, who was a freed man of the emperor Claudius, mentioned by Suetonius, in his life of that prince, cap. 37. And by Tacitus, An. lib. xii. cap. 57. But there does not seem any reason to suppose that this was the person designed by St. Paul.

Verse 12. Tryphena and Tryphosa] Two holy women, who it seems were assistants to the apostle in his work; probably by exhorting, visiting the sick, &c. Persis was another woman, who, it seems, excelled the preceding; for, of her it is said, she laboured much in the Lord. We learn from this, that Christian women, as well as men, laboured in the ministry of the word. In those times of simplicity, all persons, whether men or women, who had received the knowledge of the truth, believed it to be their duty to propagate it to the uttermost of their power. Many have spent much useless labour in endeavouring to prove that these women did not preach. That there were some prophetesses, as well as prophets, in the Christian church, we learn; and that a woman might pray or prophesy, provided she had her head covered, we know; and that whoever prophesied, spoke unto others to edification, exhortation, and comfort, St. Paul declares, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. And that no preacher can do more, every person must acknowledge; because, to edify, exhort, and comfort, are the prime ends of the gospel ministry. If women thus prophesied, then women preached. There is, however, much more than this implied in the christian ministry; of which men only, and men called of God, are capable.

Verse 13. Rufus chosen in the Lord] Τον εκλεκτον; one of great excellence in Christianity; a choice man, as we would say. So the word εκλεκτος, often signifies. Psal. lxxviii. 31. They smote, τους εκλεκτους, the chosen men that were of Israel.—So Εκλεκτα μνημεια, are choice sepulchres, Gen. xxiii. 6.—Εκλεκτα των δωρων, choice gifts, Deut. xii. 11. And ανδρες εκλεκτοι, choice men, Judges xx. 6. By the same use of the word, the companions of Paul and Barnabas are termed chosen men, εκλεξαμενους ανδρας· persons in whom the church of God could confide. See Whitby.

His mother and mine.] It is not likely that the mother of Rufus was the mother of Paul; but while she was the natural mother of the former, she acted as a mother to the latter. We say of a person of this character, that she is a motherly woman. Among the ancients, he or she, who acted a kind, instructing, and indulgent part to another, was styled the father or mother of such an one. So Terence—

Naturâ tu illi pater es, consiliis ego.
Adelphi. Act. i. scen. 2. ver. 47.

Thou art his father by nature; I, by instruction.

Verse 14. Salute Asyncritus, &c.] Who these were we know not. Hermas was probably the same to whom a work called the Shepherd, is attributed: a work with this title is still extant, and may be found among the writings of the apostolical fathers. But it is vain to look for identity of persons in similarity of names; for, among the Greeks and Romans, at this time, there were many persons who bore the same names mentioned in this chapter.

Verse 15. Salute Philologus, &c.] Of these several persons, though much has been conjectured, nothing certain is known. Even the names of some are so ambiguous, that we know not whether they were men or women. They were persons well known to St. Paul; and undoubtedly were such as had gone from different places where the apostle had preached, to sojourn or settle at Rome. One thing we may remark, that there is no mention of St. Peter, who, according to the Roman and papistical catalogue of bishops, must have been at Rome at this time: if he were not now at Rome, the foundation stone of Rome's ascendancy, of Peter's supremacy, and of the uninterrupted succession, is taken away; and the whole fabric falls to the ground. But, if Peter were at Rome at this time, Paul would have sent his salutations to him in the first place: and if Peter were there, he must have been there according to the papistical doctrine, as bishop and vicar of Jesus Christ; but if he were there, is it likely that he should have been passed by, while Andronicus and Junia are mentioned as of note amongst the apostles, ver. 7. and that St. Paul should call on the people to remedy the disorders that had crept in among themselves; should not these directions have been given to Peter, the head of the church? And if there were a church in the papistical sense of the word, founded there, of which Peter was the head, is it likely that that church should be in the house of Priscilla and Aquila, ver. 5. But it is loss of time to refute such ridiculous and groundless pretensions. It is very likely that Peter, so far from being universal bishop at Rome, never saw the city in his life.

Verse 16. Salute one another with a holy kiss] In those early times the kiss, as a token of peace, friendship, and brotherly love, was frequent among all people; and the Christians used it in their public assemblies, as well as in their occasional meetings. This was at last laid aside, not because it was abused, but because the church becoming very numerous, the thing was impossible. In some countries the kiss of friendship is still common; and in such countries it is scarcely ever abused; nor is it an incentive to evil, because it is customary and common. Shaking of hands is now substituted for it, in almost all Christian congregations.

The churches of Christ salute you.] The word πασαι ALL, is added here by some of the most reputable MSS. and principal Versions; and Griesbach has received it into his text. St. Paul must mean here, that all the churches in Greece and Asia, through which he had passed, in which the faith of the Christians at Rome was known, spoke of them affectionately and honourably: and probably knowing the apostle's design of visiting Rome, desired to be kindly remembered to the church in that city.

Verse 17. Mark them which cause divisions] Several MSS. read ασφαλως σκοπειτε, look sharply after them: let them have no kiss of charity nor peace; because they strive to make divisions, and thus set the flock of Christ at variance among themselves: and from these divisions, offences, σκανδαλα, scandals are produced; and this is contrary to that doctrine of peace, unity, and brotherly love which you have learned. Look sharply after such, that they do you no evil: and avoid them: give them no countenance, and have no religious fellowship with them.

Verse 18. They serve not our Lord Jesus] They profess to be apostles, but they are not apostles of CHRIST; they neither do his will, nor preach his doctrine; they serve their own belly. They have intruded themselves into the church of Christ, that they might get a secular support; it is for worldly gain alone, that they take up the profession of the ministry: they have no Divine credentials; they convert not the heathen nor the ungodly; they have no Divine unction; but by good words and fair speeches, (for they have no miraculous nor saving powers,) deceive the hearts of the simple, perverting Christian converts, that they may get their property; and thus secure a maintenance for themselves. The church of God has ever been troubled with such pretended pastors; men who FEED themselves, not the flock; men who are too proud to beg, and too lazy to work: who have neither grace nor gifts to plant the standard of the cross on the devil's territories; and by the power of Christ, make inroads upon his kingdom, and spoil him of his subjects. On the contrary, by sowing the seeds of dissentions, by means of doubtful disputations, and the propagation of scandals; by glaring and insinuating speeches, χρησολογιας, for they affect elegance and good breeding, they rend Christian congregations, form a party for themselves, and thus live on the spoils of the church of God.

Should it be asked whom do you intend by this description? I answer, no soul, nor party, but such as the description suits. Irasceris?—De TE fabula narratur.

Verse 19. For your obedience is come abroad] The apostle gives this as a reason why they should continue to hear and heed those who had led them into the path of truth; and avoid those false teachers whose doctrines tended to the subversion of their souls.

Yet, I would have you wise] I would wish you carefully to discern the good from the evil, and to show your wisdom, by carefully avoiding the one, and cleaving to the other.

Verse 20. The God of peace] Who neither sends nor favours such disturbers of the tranquillity of his church, Shall bruise Satan] Shall give you the dominion over the great adversary of your souls; and over all his agents, who, through his influence, endeavour to destroy your peace, and subvert your minds.

Several critics suppose that the word Satan is a sort of collective term here, by which all opposers and adversaries are meant; and especially those false teachers to whom he refers above.

The grace of our Lord] That you may be truly wise; simple, obedient, and steady in the truth; may the favour, or gracious influence, of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you! without which you cannot be preserved from evil, nor do any thing that is good.

Here the apostle appears to have intended to conclude his Epistle: but afterwards he added a postscript, if not two, as we shall see below. Several ancient MSS. omit the whole of this clause, probably thinking that it had been borrowed from ver. 24. but on the ground that the apostle might have added a postscript or two, not having immediate opportunity to send the Epistle, there is no need for this supposition.

Verse 21. Timotheus my work-fellow] This is on all hands allowed to be the same Timothy to whom St. Paul directs the two Epistles which are still extant. See some account of him in the Notes on Acts xvi. 1, &c.

Lucius] This was probably Luke, the evangelist, and writer of the book called The Acts of the Apostles. For a short account of him, see the Preface to that book.

Jason] It is likely that this is the same person mentioned Acts xvii. 7. who, at Thessalonica, received the apostles into his house, and befriended them at the risk both of his property and life.

Sosipater] He was a Berean, the son of one Pyrrhus, a Jew by birth; and accompanied St. Paul from Greece into Asia; and probably into Judea. See Acts xx. 4.

Verse 22. I Tertius, who wrote this epistle] Some eminent commentators suppose Tertius to be the same with Silas, the companion of St. Paul. If this were so, it is strange that the name which is generally given him elsewhere in Scripture, should not be used in this place. I have already noticed, (Preface, pag. iv.) that some learned men have supposed that St. Paul wrote this Epistle in Syriac; and that Tertius translated it into Greek: but this can never agree with the declaration here; I Tertius, who wrote γραψας την επιστολην, this Epistle; not translated or interpreted it. It appears that St. Paul dictated it to him; and he wrote it down from the apostle's mouth: and here introduces himself as joining with St. Paul in affectionate wishes for their welfare.

Salute you in the Lord.] I wish you well, in the name of the Lord: or I feel for you that affectionate respect which the grace of the Lord Jesus inspires. It is not clear whether the two following verses be the words of Tertius, or St. Paul.

Verse 23. Gaius, mine host] Gaius, in Greek, is the same as Caius in Latin, which was a very common name among the Romans. St. Luke, Acts xix. 29. mentions one Gaius of Macedonia, who was exposed to much violence at Ephesus in the tumult excited by Demetrius the silversmith, against St. Paul and his companions; and it is very possible that this was the same person. He is here called not only the host ξενος, the entertainer of St. Paul, or Tertius, (if he wrote this and the following verse,) but also of the whole church: that is, he received and lodged the apostles who came from different places, as well as the messengers of the churches. All made his house their home; and he must have been a person of considerable property to be able to bear this expense; and of much piety and love to the cause of Christ, else he had not employed that property in this way.

Erastus, the chamberlain of the city] Treasurer of the city of Corinth, from which St. Paul wrote this Epistle. This is supposed to be the same person as is mentioned Acts xix. 22. He was one of St. Paul's companions, and, as appears from 2 Tim. iv. 20. was left about this time by the apostle at Corinth. He is called the chamberlain, οικονομος, which signifies the same as treasurer; he to whom the receipt and expenditure of the public money was entrusted. He received the tolls, customs, &c. belonging to the city, and out of them paid the public expenses. Such persons were in very high credit, and if Erastus was at this time treasurer, it would appear that Christianity was then in considerable repute in Corinth. But if the Erastus of the Acts were the same with the Erastus mentioned here, it is not likely that he now held the office, for this could not at all comport with his travelling with St. Paul. Hence several, both ancients and moderns who believe the identity of the persons, suppose that Erastus was not now treasurer, but that having formerly been so, he still retained the title. Chrysostom thought that he still retained the employment.

Quartus, a brother] Whether the brother of Erastus or of Tertius we know not; probably nothing more is meant than that he was a Christian, one of the heavenly family, a brother in the Lord.

Verse 24. The grace of our Lord] This is the conclusion of Tertius, and is similar to what St. Paul used above. Hence it is possible that Tertius wrote the whole of the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th verses, without receiving any particular instructions from St. Paul, except the bare permission to add his own salutations with those of his particular friends.

There is a great deal of disagreement among the MSS. and Versions relative to this verse; some rejecting it entirely, and some of those which place the following verses at the end of chap. xiv. inserting it at the end of the 27th verse in that place. The Reader who chooses, may consult Wetstein, and Griesbach on these discordances.

Verse 25. Now to Him] In the note at the end of chap. xiv. I have shown that this and the following verses are, by the most reputable MSS. and Versions, placed at the end of that chapter; which is supposed, by most critics, to be their proper place. Some of the arguments adduced in favour of this transposition, may be found in the note above-mentioned. I shall therefore refer to Griesbach, and proceed to make a few short remarks on the verses as they occur here.

Of power to stablish you] To that God without whom nothing is wise, nothing strong; who is as willing to teach, as he is wise; as ready to help, as he is strong.

According to my gospel] That gospel which explains and publishes God's purpose of taking the Gentiles to be his people under the Messiah, without subjecting them to the law of Moses. This is what he here calls the preaching of Jesus Christ, for without this he did not think, as Mr. Locke observes, that Christ was preached to the Gentiles as he ought to be; and therefore in several places of his Epistle to the Galatians, he calls it the truth, and the truth of the gospel, and uses the like expressions to the Ephesians and Colossians. This is that mystery which he is so much concerned that the Ephesians should understand and adhere to firmly; and which was revealed to him according to that gospel whereof he was made a minister. And it is probable that this grand mystery of bringing the Gentiles into the kingdom of God, without passing through the rites of the Mosaic law, was revealed more particularly to St. Paul, than to any other of the apostles; and that he preached it more pointedly, and certainly with more success. See Taylor and Locke.

Which was kept secret] This purpose of calling the Gentiles, and giving them equal privileges to the Jews, without obliging them to submit to circumcision, &c.

Verse 26. But now is made manifest] Now, under the New Testament dispensation, and by my preaching.

By the Scriptures of the prophets] Hints relative to this important work being scattered up and down through all their works, but no clear revelation that the Gentiles who should be admitted into the church, should be admitted without passing under the yoke of the Mosaic law. This was the point which was kept secret: as to the calling of the Gen-commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for [a] the obedience of faith:

tiles, this was declared in general terms by the prophets, and the apostle quotes and makes a most important use of their predictions; but the other was a point on which the prophets gave no information, and it seems to have been peculiarly revealed to St. Paul, who received the commandment of the everlasting God to make it known εις παντα τα εθνη, to all the Gentiles; all the people of the earth that were not of Jewish extraction. And it was to be made known for the obedience of faith, that they might believe its doctrines and obey its precepts; its universal voice requiring repentance towards God, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and circumcision of the heart, in the place of all Jewish rites and ceremonies.

Verse 27. To God only wise] This comes in with great propriety. He alone, who is the fountain of wisdom and knowledge, had all this mystery in himself, and he alone who knew the times, places, persons, and circumstances could reveal the whole; and he has revealed all in such a way as not only to manifest his unsearchable wisdom, but also his infinite goodness. Therefore, to him be glory for his wisdom in devising this most admirable plan; and his goodness in sending Christ Jesus to execute it; to Him, through Christ Jesus be glory for ever! Because this plan is to last for ever; and is to have no issue but in eternal glory.

Written to the Romans from Corinthus, &c.] That this Epistle was written from Corinth is almost universally believed. That Phœbe was a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea, we have seen in the first verse of this chapter; and that the Epistle might have been sent by her to Rome is possible; but that she should have been the writer of the Epistle as this subscription states, εγραφη δια Φοιβης, is false, for the 22nd verse shows that Tertius was the writer, though by inserting the words and sent, we represent her rather as the carrier than the writer. This subscription, however, stands on very questionable grounds. It is wanting in almost all the ancient MSS. and even of those which are more modern, few have it entirely, as in our common editions. It has already been noted that the subscriptions to the sacred books are of little or no authority; all having been added in latter times, and frequently by injudicious hands. The most ancient have simply To the Romans, or, the Epistle to the Romans is finished. The word Amen was seldom added by the inspired writers, and here it is wanting in almost all the ancient MSS. As this was a word in frequent use in religious services, pious people would naturally employ it in finishing the reading or copying of this Epistle, as they would thereby express their conviction of the truth of its contents, and their desire that the promises contained in it might be fulfilled to them and to the church at large; and in this sense the word is not only harmless, but useful. May the fulness of the Gentiles be brought in, and may all Israel be saved! This is treated of at large in this Epistle; and to this prayer let every pious reader say AMEN! See the observations on this word at the end of the gospel of John.

Before I conclude this work, I shall beg leave to add several important observations, chiefly extracted from Dr. Taylor.

1. Paul, the apostle, writes to all the Christians at Rome, without distinction, as being called of Jesus Christ; beloved of God, called saints, as justified by faith, and having peace with God, as standing in the grace of the gospel, chap. v. 1, 2. as alive from the dead, chap. vi. 13, &c. He gives them various exhortations, Walk in newness of life. Let not sin reign in your mortal body. Yield yourselves unto God, chap. xii. 1, &c. I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service, chap. xiv. 10, 12. We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. Every one of us shall give account of himself to God, chap. xiii. 11, 12, 13, 14. It is high time to awake out of sleep; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness; let us not walk in rioting and drunkenness, in chambering and wantonness, in strife and envying; Make no provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof, viii. 13. For, if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; Μελλετε αποθνησκειν, ye shall hereafter die, meaning in the world to come. But if ye, through the Spirit, do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

2. The rites and ceremonies of the law of Moses were incorporated into the civil state of the Jews, and so might be considered as national and political usages. Now, as the gospel did not interfere with, or subvert any national polity upon earth; but left all men, in all the several countries of the globe, to live, in all things, not sinful, according to the civil constitution under which it found them; so it left the Jews also at liberty to observe all the rites and injunctions of the law of Moses, considered as a part of the civil and political usages of the nation. And in this respect, they remained in force so long as the Jews were a nation, having the temple, the token of God's presence and residence, among them. But when the temple was destroyed, and they were expelled the land of Canaan, their polity was dissolved, and the Mosaic rites were quite laid aside. And as the time in which this happened was near, when the Epistle to the Hebrews was written, therefore the apostle saith, The first covenant, or Mosaical dispensation, was then decaying and waxing old, and ready to vanish away, Heb. viii. 13.

3. But though the gospel was not, in itself, intended to unchurch the Jews; yet the Jews everywhere warmly opposed the preaching of it, though not for the same reasons. Some Jews opposed it totally, and rejected the whole gospel as unnecessary, judging the Mosaical constitution, and their conformity to the law there delivered, completely sufficient for justification or salvation, without any further provision made by the grace of God. These accounted Christ our Lord an impostor, and the gospel a forgery; and therefore persecuted the apostles with the utmost assiduity and outrage, as deceivers who had no divine mission. Such were the Jews who put Stephen to death, Acts vi. vii. chapters. Such were they at Antioch in Pisidia, who were filled with envy, and spake against the things that were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming, Acts xiii. 45, 50. Such were the Jews at Iconium, Acts xiv. 2, 19.—at Thessalonica, xvii. 5.—at Corinth, xviii. 5, 6. and in other places. And such a Jew was Paul himself before his conversion. He consented to the death of Stephen, made havoc of the church, Acts viii. 3. and breathed out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, ix. 1. xxii. 4. xxvi. 9, 10, 11.

4. What Paul's principles, and those of the unbelieving Jews were, we may learn, if we observe that the first persecution, raised against the apostles at Jerusalem was, partly, on account of their preaching through Jesus the resurrection from the dead, Acts iv. 1, 2. This gave great offence to the Sadducees; and, partly, because they openly affirmed that Jesus, whom the rulers of the Jews slew and hanged on a tree, was the Messiah, whom God had exalted to be a prince and a Saviour. This disgusted all the council and senate of the Jews, Acts v. 21, 28, 29, 30, 31. But with regard to these two particulars, the indignation of the Jews seems, for some time, abated; till the doctrine the apostles taught was better understood; and Stephen, in his dispute with some learned Jews, had suggested that the gospel was intended to abrogate the Mosaical constitution, Acts vi. 9—15. This irritated the Jews afresh; especially the Pharisees, the strictest, and most numerous sect among them. And Saul, one of that sect, (Acts xvi. 5. xxiii. 6.) being then a young man, just come out of Gamaliel's school, having finished his studies in the law, and being fully persuaded that the Jewish dispensation was instituted by God, never to be altered, but to abide for ever, he really believed that Jesus and his followers were deceivers, and that it was his duty to oppose them, and to stand up courageously for God and his truth. Thus he honestly followed the dictates of his own conscience. How far other unbelieving Jews were, or were not, upright in their opposition to the gospel, God only knows; but their professed principles seem to be nearly the same. In short, they were for seizing on the inheritance, (Mat. xxi. 38.) and for engrossing all salvation, and the favour of God, to themselves. The Jews, they judged, were the only people of God; and the Jewish nation the only true church, out of which there was no salvation. No man could be in a state of acceptance with God, without observing the law of Moses. The works of the law, moral and ceremonial, must be performed, in order to his being a member of God's church and family, and having a right to future and eternal happiness. They expected the Messiah indeed and his kingdom: but not as if either had a reference to another world. The law, and a punctual observation of it, was the ground of their expectations in a future world. And as for the Messiah, they supposed his coming and kingdom related only to the temporal prosperity and grandeur of the Jewish nation, and the perpetual establishment of their law, by rescuing them out of the hands of the Gentile powers, who had greatly embarrassed and distressed their Constitution. Thus they endeavoured to establish their own righteousness, (Rom. x. 3.) salvation or interest in God; an interest which they imagined for themselves, and which excluded men of all other nations, who, they thought, were, in fact, utterly excluded from the Divine favour, and eternal life, as quite lost and hopeless. Against us Gentiles, they had the strongest prejudices, accounting us as perfectly vile, as nothing, as abandoned of God, only because we were not included in their peculiarity; while they imagined themselves to be vastly superior to us, and the only people beloved of God, purely on account of their external privileges, and relation to God as the seed of Abraham; being circumcised, enjoying the law, the promises and ordinances of worship, &c.

5. And this was another ground of their opposition to the gospel, when it was preached to the Gentiles. Indeed the apostles themselves and the first Christians among the Jews had, for some time, no notion of the gospel's being preached to the Gentiles; till God, in a vision, convinced Peter it was his will that it should, Acts x. But the unbelieving Jews regarded the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, or the declaring that they were, upon their faith in Christ, pardoned and admitted into the church of God, and to the hopes of eternal life almost in the same manner as we should regard the preaching of the gospel to brute creatures. They could not bear the thought that the Gentiles, any barbarous nations, should, only by faith, have an equal interest in God, and the blessings of his covenant with themselves. They did not indeed deny the possibility of their being taken into the church, and of obtaining salvation. But it must be only by their becoming Jews; they must first submit to the law, and yield obedience to its precepts and obligations, before they could be the qualified objects of God's mercy. There was no grace, no part in the kingdom of God, either here or hereafter, for a Gentile, unless he first became a Jew, and performed the works of the Mosaical law. By these sentiments they were led to do all they could to oppose the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles, and became very bitter enemies to Paul, who was the apostle particularly selected and commissioned for that purpose. They could not allow the Gentiles to have any access to the privileges of God's church and people, but through the door of the law; and to introduce them any other way, was not only to overthrow their law and peculiarity; but to deceive the Gentiles. Therefore they did all in their power to withstand the apostle; and to persuade the Gentiles every where that he was an odious impostor, that his gospel was a forgery, destitute of divine authority; that he proposed admitting them into the church and covenant of God in a way which had no foundation in the declared will of God. Their law was the only divine establishment, and obedience to it the only means to introduce them into the kingdom of God; and Paul could have no commission from Heaven to teach otherwise, whatever he might pretend, or what miracles soever he might work. Of this sort of Jews the apostle speaks, 1 Thes. ii. 14, 15, 16.

Other Jews there were who believed the gospel, and agreed that it ought to be preached to the Gentiles. But so that the Gentiles at the same time they accepted the gospel, were obliged to submit to the law of Moses in every part; otherwise they could not be saved or have any interest in the kingdom and covenant of God, Acts xv. 1. These taught that the gospel was insufficient without the law. They differed from the fore-mentioned Jews in that they embraced the faith of Jesus Christ. But agreed with them in this, that the law of Moses was to be in force for ever, and the observance of all its rituals absolutely necessary to a standing in the church of God, and the hopes of eternal life. And for this reason, they were upon pretty good terms with the unbelieving Jews; and avoided the persecution, to which those, who adhered to the pure and unmixed gospel, were exposed, Gal. vi. 12. These Jews who were for joining law and gospel together, were also great enemies to our apostle. He speaks of them, Phil. iii. 2, 3, &c.

6. Now against the mistakes of the infidel Jews, the apostle thus argues in the Epistle to the Romans: Jews, as well as Gentiles, have corrupted themselves, and are become obnoxious to the Divine wrath; and if they repent not, will certainly fall under the wrath of God in the last day. Consequently, as both are obnoxious to wrath, both must be indebted to grace and mercy for any favour shown them. The continuance of the Jews in the church, as well as the admittance of the Gentiles into it, is wholly of grace; mere grace, or favour. Upon which footing, the Gentiles must have as good a right to the blessings of God's covenant, as the Jews themselves. And why not? Is not God the Creator and governor of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews? And, if both Jews and Gentiles have corrupted themselves by wicked works, it is impossible that either should have a right to the privileges of God's church and people, on account of WORKS, or obedience to the law of God, whether natural or revealed. It must be pure mercy, accepted by faith, through Christ, or a persuasion of that mercy on their part, which gives that right. All must be indebted to grace. The works of the law never gave the Jews themselves a right to the privileges and promises of the covenant. Even Abraham himself, (the head of the nation, who was first taken into God's covenant, and from whom the Jews derive all their peculiar blessings and advantages,) was not justified by works of the law. It was free grace, or favour, which at once admitted him and his posterity into the covenant and church of God. And that the grace of the gospel actually extends to all mankind, appears from the universality of the resurrection; which is the effect of God's grace or favour in a Redeemer; and is the first and fundamental part of the new dispensation, with regard to the gift of eternal life. For, as all were involved in death, in consequence of Adam's sin, so shall all be restored to life at the last day, in consequence of Christ's obedience. And therefore, it is certain that all men actually have a share in the mercy of God in Christ Jesus.—Thus the apostle argues.

7. And we ought particularly to observe; how he combats the engrossing temper of the Jews, in his argument. They could not engross all virtue to themselves, for they were as bad as other people; they could not engross God and his favour to themselves, for he was the governor and Creator of Gentiles as well as Jews; they could not engross Abraham, and the promise made to him, to themselves, for he is the father of many nations, and the believing Gentiles are his seed, as well as the Jews; they could not engross the resurrection, the necessary introduction to eternal life to themselves, because it is known, and allowed, to be common to all mankind.

8. And he had good reason to be so large and particular in confuting the mistakes of the infidel Jews. For, had their principles prevailed, the gospel could not have maintained its ground. For, if we must have performed the works of the law, before we could have been interested in the blessings of the covenant, then the gospel would have lost its nature and force. For then it would not have been a motive to obedience, but the result of obedience; and we could have had no hope towards God, prior to obedience. Therefore, the apostle has done a singular and eminent piece of service to the church of God, in asserting and demonstrating the free grace and covenant of God, as a foundation to stand upon, prior to any obedience of ours, and as the grand spring and motive of obedience. This sets our interest in the covenant, or promise of God, upon a foundation very clear and solid.

9. To understand rightly the Epistle to the Romans, it is further necessary to observe; that the apostle considers mankind as obnoxious to the Divine wrath, and as standing before God, the Judge of all. Hence it is, that he uses forensic, or law terms, usual in Jewish courts; such as the LAW, RIGHTEOUSNESS or JUSTIFICATION, being JUSTIFIED, JUDGMENT to CONDEMNATION, JUSTIFICATION of LIFE, being made SINNERS, and being made RIGHTEOUS. These I take to be forensic or court-terms; and the apostle, by using them, naturally leads our thoughts to suppose a court held, a judgment-seat to be erected by the most high God, in the several cases whence he draws his arguments. For instance; chap. v. 12—20. he supposes Adam standing in the court of God, after he had committed the first transgression; when the judgment passed upon him for his offence, came upon all men to condemnation; and when he and his posterity, by the favour, and in the purpose of God, were again made righteous, or obtained the justification of life. Again, chap. iv. he supposes Abraham standing before the bar of the Supreme Judge: when, as an idolater, he might have been condemned; but, through the pure mercy of God, he was justified; pardoned, and taken into God's covenant, on account of his faith. He also supposes, chap. iii. 19—29. all mankind standing before the universal Judge, when Christ came into the world. At that time, neither Jew nor Gentile could pretend to justification, upon the foot of their own works of righteousness; having both corrupted themselves, and come short of the glory of God. But, at that time, both had righteousness or salvation prepared for them in a Redeemer; namely, the righteousness which results from the pure mercy or grace of God; the Lawgiver and Judge. And so both, (instead of being destroyed,) had admittance into the church and covenant of God, by faith, in order to their eternal salvation.

10. But, besides these three instances, in which he supposes a court to be held by the Supreme Judge, there is a fourth to which he points, chap. ii. 1—17. and that is the final judgment, or the court which will be held in the day when God will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ. And it is with regard to that future court of judicature, that he argues, chap. ii. 1—17. But in the other cases, whence he draws his arguments, he supposes the courts of judicature to be already held: and, consequently, argues in relation to the œconomy, constitution, or dispensation of things in this present world. This is very evident with regard to the court, which he supposes to be held when our Lord came into the world, or when the gospel-constitution was erected in its full glory. For, speaking of the justification, which mankind then obtained through the grace of God in Christ, he expressly confines that justification to the present time, chap. iii. 26, To demonstrate, I say, his righteousness, Εν ΝΥΝ καιρῳ, at the PRESENT TIME. This plainly distinguishes the righteousness, or salvation, which God then exhibited, from that righteousness or justification, which he will vouchsafe in the day of judgment, to pious and faithful souls.

11. Before the coming of our Lord, the peculiar kingdom of God was confined to the Jewish nation, and to such only of the heathens as were incorporated among them by becoming Jews, and observing the whole law of Moses. And the Jews firmly believed it would always continue in the same state.

But when our Lord came, the mystery of God, which had been concealed both from Jews and Gentiles, was revealed; namely, that the Gentiles also, even men of all nations, should be freely admitted into it. This was an act of great favour, considering the darkness, idolatry, and wickedness, into which the heathen world was then sunk.

But God mercifully passed over their former sins, and our Lord commissioned his apostles, and particularly St. Paul, to promulge a general pardon; and to call, or invite, all who repented, and accepted of the grace, to all the blessings and privileges of his kingdom; confirming their interest in those blessings, by pouring out the Holy Ghost upon them, in various miraculous gifts, or endowments, above the ordinary capacity of men. This was a very evident seal to them, (and to us too,) of a title to the blessings of God's kingdom and covenant, Gal. iii. 2—5.

And it had such an effect upon the Christian Jews at Jerusalem, that, though they were at first greatly disgusted at Peter, for treating the first uncircumcised Gentile converts as members of the kingdom of God, (Acts xi. 2, 3.) yet, when they heard that the Holy Ghost was fallen upon those converts, they were much surprised, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted, (the benefit of,) repentance unto, (eternal,) life; which, before this, they verily believed, could not have been granted unto them without obedience to the law of Moses, by being circumcised.

But the unbelieving Jews paid no regard to this, or any other argument in favour of the uncircumcised Gentiles. The notion of admitting them into the kingdom and congregation of God, only upon faith in Christ, they opposed and persecuted every where, with great zeal and bitterness. And it was not long before good impressions wore off, and old prejudices revived, among even the believing Jews. Numbers of them very stiffly, and with much warmth and contention, endeavoured to persuade the Gentile converts, that, except they were circumcised after the manner of Moses, they could not be saved, or admitted to the privileges of the kingdom of God, and the hope of eternal life, Acts xv. 1, 2.

The Gentiles, even the most learned and wise amongst them, were wholly ignorant in the affair. They were perfect strangers to the gospel scheme: they had no notion or expectation of being received into the kingdom and covenant of God; and could have no knowledge of it but what they received from some or other of the Jews; nor could they have any objection against it, worth regarding, but what came from that quarter. And the Jews had a considerable influence among them, having synagogues in most, if not all, the great towns in the empire, from the Euphrates, as far as Rome itself; which numbers of the Gentiles frequented, and so had received impressions in favour of the Jewish religion.

But had the Jewish notion prevailed, that no part of mankind could have any share in the blessings of God's covenant, the pardon of sin, and the hope of eternal life, but only such as were circumcised, and brought themselves under obligations to the whole law of Moses; had this notion prevailed, the extensive scheme of the gospel would have been ruined, and the gracious design of freeing the church from the embarrassments of the law of Moses, would have been defeated. The gospel, or glad tidings of salvation, must not only have been confined to the narrow limits of the Jewish peculiarity, and clogged with all the ceremonial observances belonging to it, which, to the greatest part of mankind, would have been either impracticable, or excessively incommodious; but, which is still worse, must have sunk and fallen with that peculiarity. Had the gospel been built upon the foundation of the Jewish polity, it must have been destroyed, when that was demolished; and the whole kingdom of God in the world, would have been overthrown and extinct at the same time; and so all the noble principles it was intended to inspire, to animate, and comfort our hearts, would have been lost; and all the light it was calculated to diffuse, throughout the world, would have been quite extinguished.

It was therefore the apostle's duty to vindicate and assert the truth of the gospel, which he was commissioned to preach to the Gentiles; and of very great consequence to prove, that we Gentiles are the children of God, interested in his covenant; and all the honours, blessings, and privileges of his family and kingdom here upon earth; only by faith in Christ, without coming under any obligations to the law of Moses as such. Which is the main drift and subject of this Epistle.

12. It is worth notice, that there is this difference, in one respect, between the Gospels and Epistles; namely, That our Lord, in the Gospels, represents the doctrines and principles of the Christian religion, chiefly in an absolute sense; or, as they are in themselves. But in the Epistles, those doctrines and principles are chiefly considered in a relative view; as they respect, partly, the foregoing Jewish dispensation, and partly the future corruption of the Christian church; but principally, as they respect the different state of Jews and heathens; showing how just, true, and necessary they are with reference to both; and directing and exhorting both to value them, and to make a right use of them. This was absolutely necessary to a full explication of the gospel, to guard it against all objections, and to give it a solid establishment in the world.

And we must not forget, that in the Epistle to the Romans, the gospel is presented in this relative view, as adapted to the circumstances of us Gentiles, and obliging us to all virtue and piety.

13. Further, we can neither duly value this Epistle, nor be sensible how much we are indebted to the author of it, unless we make this sentiment familiar to our thoughts: namely, That St. Paul is the Patron and Defender of all that is by far the most valuable and important to us in the world, against the only opposition that could be made to our title and claim. Give me leave to explain this by an easy comparison.—A person, to me unknown, leaves me at his death a 1000*l.* a year; I myself can have no objection against the noble donative: and the good pleasure of the donor, who had an undoubted right to dispose of his own, may silence any of the cavillers' surmises. But a person claiming, as heir at law, gives me the greatest uneasiness. He alleges, the estate was entailed, and that he has a prior title, which renders the donation to me invalid. Here I want an able advocate, to prove that his pretensions are ill-grounded, and that my title is perfectly good and firm. St. Paul is that advocate: he argues, and strongly proves, that we, believing Gentiles, have a just and solid title to all the blessings of God's covenant; and effectually establishes us in possession of all the noble principles, motives, comfort, hope, and joy of the gospel. The sum of what he demonstrates is comprehended in 1 Pet. ii. 8, 9, 10. They, the Jews, stumble, and lose their ancient honours and privileges: but ye, Gentiles are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who has called you out of heathenish darkness, into his marvellous light. Thus, on the authority of God, we Gentiles have an indisputable right to all the blessings of the Gospel; and, if we receive by Christ Jesus, that grace which pardons and cleanses the soul, we shall pass from the church militant into the church triumphant.

At the conclusion of my Notes on this very important Epistle, I feel it necessary to make a few additional remarks. I have sincerely and conscientiously given that view of the Apostle's work which I believe to be true and correct. I am well aware that many great and good men have understood this portion of Divine revelation, differently, in many respects, from myself: they have the same right of private judgment which I claim; and to publish those opinions which they judge to accord best with their views of the gospel.—My business is to give what I think to be the mind of my author; and every where I have laboured to do this without even consulting any pre-established creed. I hope my Readers will take in good part what is honestly intended. I wish to avoid controversy: I give my own views of Divine truth. The plan on which I have endeavoured to expound this Epistle, shows it a beautiful, highly important, and consistent whole: a work which casts the clearest light on the grand original designs of God, relative to the diffusion of the Gospel, and its blessings over the face of the earth; illustrating many apparently dark and unaccountable providences; fully proving that, though clouds and darkness are often round the Supreme Being, yet, righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne. Where this grand view of this Epistle is not taken, the major part of its beauties are lost. God, who is not the God of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles, shows by his apostle in this admirable Epistle, that from the beginning he had purposed to call to the whole Gentile world to that salvation which he appeared for a time to restrain to the Jews alone; and which they imagined should be exclusively theirs for ever. This prejudice the apostle overturns; and shows that the Gentiles also had an equal share in the election of grace. We should be careful how we make that partial and exclusive which shows the Fountain of Goodness to be no respecter of persons, or even ultimately of nations: who, like the sun, the faint, though brightest image of his glory in this lower world, shines equally upon the just and the unjust. God, with the same benevolent design, orders his gospel to be preached to every creature under heaven.

The peculiar phraseology of this Epistle I have also endeavoured to explain; and where this could not be conveniently done in the Notes, I have generally stated it at the end of the chapters. And, for the explanations of difficult points, or articles which may have been but slightly handled in the Notes, I beg to refer to those concluding observations; and particularly to those at the end of chapters viii. and ix.—But it is necessary to make some remarks on this Epistle, as an Epistle directed to the Romans; that is, to the church of God, founded at Rome. Though the gospel was preached and established there long before either the apostle had visited this city, or written this Epistle; yet we may rest assured that the doctrine contained here was the doctrine of the church of Rome, and therefore that church was holy and apostolic. If it do not continue to walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing, it is no longer so: in a time then, when the Roman church that now is, invites the attention of the Christian world, by making great and bold pretensions; assuming to itself the titles of holy, catholic, and apostolic; representing Rome as the fountain whence pure truth and apostolical authority emanate; it may be useful to examine whether such pretensions are well founded; and not permit confident assumption, noise, and parade, to carry away our understandings; and occupy the place of reason, argument, and truth. This, however, cannot be done to any extent in this place; only it may be necessary to state, that, as the doctrines, &c. of the Roman church profess to be apostolic, they must be found in the Epistle to the ROMANS, this being the only apostolic work directed to that church. If they are not to be met with here, it would be absurd to look for them any where else. But there is not one distinguishing doctrine, or practice of the Romish church, found in this Epistle. Here is no Pope, no exclusive churchship, no peterpence, first-fruits, legatine levies, dispensations, pardons, indulgences, reliques, Agnus Dei's, jubilees, pilgrimages, crusades, carnivals, canonizations, abbeys, monasteries, cells, shrines, privileged altars, auricular confessions, purgatories, masses, prayers for the dead, requiems, placebos, dirges, lamps, processions, holy water, chrisms, baptism of bells, justification by works, penances, transubstantiation, works of supererogation, extreme unction, invocation of saints and angels, worship of images, crossings of the body, rosaries, albs, stoles, &c. nor the endless orders of priests, abbots, monks, friars, nuns, anchorets, hermits, capuchins, &c. &c. Here are no inquisitions, no writs de hæretico comburendo, no auto da fès, no racks, gibbets, tortures, nor death in all variable and horrid forms, for those who may differ from this Mother church, in any part of their religious creed. In vain will the Reader look into this Epistle for any thing that is not consistent with sound sense, inflexible reason, and the justice, purity, and endless benevolence, of the Great God, the equal Father of the spirits of all flesh. Here, indeed, he will see the total fall and degeneracy of all mankind strongly asserted and proved: the utter helplessness of the human race, to rescue itself from this state of corruption; the endless mercy of God, in sending Christ Jesus into the world to die for sinners; the doctrine of justification by faith in the blood of the Lamb; regeneration by the energy of the Divine Spirit, producing that holiness without which no man can see God. Here, the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ, takes place of all Jewish sacrifices, and works or sufferings of man, in reference to justification. Here is nothing puerile, nugatory, or superstitious; no dogma degrading to the understanding; no religious act unworthy of the spirit and dignity of the Gospel; nothing that has not the most immediate tendency to enlighten the mind, and mend the heart of man: in a word, every thing is suitable to the state of man, and worthy of the majesty, justice, and benevolence of that God from whom this Epistle came. Here, indeed, is the model of a pure church. What a pity it is not more closely followed by all, whether Protestant or Popish, that profess the faith of Christ crucified. Alas! that a church which was once pure and apostolic, and still retains all the essential doctrines of the Gospel, should compound them with others, which are not only the commandments and inventions of men, but which so counteract the influence of the truths still retained, as to destroy their efficacy; and no wonder, when this foreign admixture is an assemblage of rites and ceremonies, borrowed partly from the Jews, and partly from the ancient heathens; rendered palatable by a small proportion of Christianity.

THE END OF THE ROMANS.

A SHORT EXPLANATION

OF THE FOLLOWING

ANCIENT ROMAN CALENDAR,

WITH THE

FESTIVALS, &c. of the present Romish Church.

Instead of Chronological Tables, which the subject of this Epistle neither admits nor requires, for it was probably all written in the course of a few days; (and I have entered the supposed year at the top of every page,) I here insert the ancient Roman Calendar, regularly distinguished into all its Calends, Nones, and Ides, with the different festivals observed in honour of their gods, goddesses, &c. in each month, and their principal astronomical notes. The modern Roman Calendar I have also introduced, with as many of the festivals, saints' days, &c. as the margin would receive. The Reader will no doubt be struck with the conformity that subsists between ancient and modern ROME on this subject; on which, in this place, I shall make no farther remarks.

This Calendar, which was made by Julius Cæsar, in the year of Rome 708, and before Christ 45, is still exceedingly useful, especially for understanding the writers of antiquity, particularly those of the Latin church; as well as for ascertaining the precise dates of bulls, diplomas, and public acts in general.

The Roman month, the Reader will observe, is divided into Calends, Nones, and Ides; all of which are reckoned backward. The Calends are the first day of the month; as Calendis Januariis, is the first day of January; Pridie Calendarum, or Calendas, is the 31st of December; iii. Cal. the 30th; iv. Cal. the 29th; v. Cal. the 28th, &c.

The Nones, which are four, follow the Calends; as iv. Nonas Januarii, is Jan. 2, iii. Nonas Januarii, is Jan. 3, Pridie Nonas Jan. is Jan. 4, and Nonis Januarii, is Jan. 5. But in March, May, July, and October, there are SIX Nones.

After these, the Ides in each month are eight; as viii. Id. Jan. (Octavo Idus, or Iduum Januarii,) is January the 6th; vii. Id. Jan. (Septimo Idus, or Iduum Januarii,) is January the 7th; vi. Id. Jan. (sexto Idus, or Iduum Januarii,) is January the 8th; and so on, till you come to the Ides themselves, Idibus Januarii, being January the 13th.

Observe—1. When the accusative case is used, as Nonas, Idus, Calendas, the preposition ante before, which governs this case, is understood; as tertio ante Calendas, the third day before the Calends; quarto ante

Calendas, the fourth day before the Calends, &c. Observe—2. That after the Ides which are on the 13th day of January, February, April, June, August, September, November, and December; and on the 15th of March, May, July and October, which have six Nones a-piece, the Calends following are to be reckoned to the next month.

The first column in each month, contains the regular days of that month; the next column, the Calends, Nones and Ides; and the slightest inspection will show how the days of these denominations answer to the common days of the month in their regular order.

The Nundinal Letters I have not inserted, as they only refer to the custom of administering law, or trying causes, holding public assemblies, electing magistrates, &c. among the ancient Romans. I have thought it best to fill up that place with other matters belonging to this calendar, in which general readers might find more interest.

The last column, the Reader will perceive, is the modern Roman Calendar, copiously filled with the days of real and reputed saints: these, however, are not the whole whose festivals are observed, and whose protection is implored in that church; as, upon an average, there are not fewer than five of these real or imaginary beings to every day of the year!

The Saints' days and Festivals of the Romish Church are taken from Mr. Alban Butler's Lives of the Saints, (one of the best publications of this kind,) conferred with the Connaissance des Temps, edited by La Lande.

The ancient Roman Calendar has been taken chiefly from Ainsworth; the two copies, one English the other Latin, in his second volume, being collated together, and mutually corrected.

Observations on the Progressive Improvement of the Roman Calendar; from the days of Romulus, about 730 Years before Christ, to the present Time.

THE ROMAN CALENDAR, before the time of Julius Cæsar, was very defective: in the reign of Romulus, the first king of Rome, the science of astronomy was so little understood in Italy, that the Calendar was made to consist of ten months, and the year of only 304 days. The names of the ten months were in order as follows:—March, April, May, June, Quintilis, Sextilis, September, October, November, and December. Besides the 304 days, Romulus is said to have intercalated days without name, to make up the number of 360; but whether this was the case, or in what way these days were intercalated, cannot be determined; as history, with reference to this point, is extremely obscure. The months March, May, Quintilis, and October, contained 31 days each; and the other six, only 30 days each; as may be seen in the following Table, which exhibits the state of the Roman Calendar about 730 years previously to the Incarnation:

In the reign of Numa Pompilius, the second king of the Romans, the Calendar was very much improved. This monarch, by means of the instructions he received from Pythagoras, the prince of the Italian philosophers, adopted very nearly the same kind of year which the Greeks then used; with this principal exception, that he assigned to every one of his years 355 days, which is one day more than the Grecian and Rabbinical years usually contained. The reformation of the Calendar of Romulus, consisted in taking away one day from April, June, Sextilis, September, November, and December; (the day after the Ides of these months being named the xviith before the Calends of the ensuing one,) and then adding these six days to the 51 which the year of Romulus wanted, to make up his own of 355 days: with these 57 days he made two new months, viz. January and February, the former of which was the first, and the other the last month of his year; assigning to the former 29, and to the latter 28 days. In order to make his year equal to that which the Greeks used in their Olympiads, Numa is said to have intercalated 82 days in every eight years, in the following manner—At the end of the first two years, an intercalation of 22 days; at the end of the next two, an intercalation of 23 days; at the end of the third two, an intercalation of 22 days; and at the end of the last two, an intercalation of the remaining 15 days.

The Calendar of Numa Pompilius, (with the slight variation in it at the time of the Decemviri, about 452, B. C. which consisted in constituting February the second instead of the last month,) continued in use among the Romans till the time of Julius Cæsar, who, perceiving the great inconveniences that resulted from not making the civil year equal in length to the solar revo- ration through the 12 signs of the zodiac, employed Sosigenes of Alexandria, (esteemed the greatest astronomer of his time,) to reform the Calendar in such a way that the seasons of the year might perpetually correspond to the same months. As, according to the calculations of Sosigenes, the solar ecliptical revolution took up about 365 days six hours, it was found necessary to lengthen the civil year at least ten days, making it to consist of 365 days, instead of 355; and to make a proper compensation for the six hours which the solar year exceeds 365 days, every fourth year was proposed to be an intercalary one, containing 366 days. Julius Cæsar, by public edict, accordingly ordered these corrections to be made; and the Calendar, thus corrected, is the same as that already given in the preceding Table, with the Festivals, &c. of the ancient Romans.

In consequence of the ignorance of the priests, a considerable error was committed in the first 36 years after the Julian reformation of the Calendar; for the priests imagined that the fourth year in which the intercalation should be made, was to be computed from that in which the preceding intercalation took place, by which means they left only two common years instead of three between the two intercalary ones. Consequently, twelve days, instead of nine, were intercalated in 36 years, an error too considerable to escape the notice of the Augustan age; and, accordingly, the emperor directed that no intercalation should be made for the first twelve years, that the three superfluous days might be gradually dropped, and that the intercalations should be afterwards regulated in such a manner that three common years should continually intervene. This last alteration of the Calendar continued without any interruption till the pontificate of Gregory XIII. in the latter part of the 16th century, when he gave orders that the Roman Calendar should be again reformed.

The necessity for this reformation originated in Sosigenes, who assigned precisely 365 days six hours, for the sun's passage through the twelve signs of the zodiac; instead of 365 days, five hours, 48 minutes, and 48 seconds, as ascertained by the more perfect observations of modern astronomers. The error of Sosigenes, of about eleven minutes in the length of the solar year, amounts to a whole day in 134 years, insomuch that from the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, to the time of Gregory XIII. ten days too many had crept into the Calendar, the vernal equinox which, in 325, was fixed on the 21st of March, happening, in 1582, on the 11th, though the Calendar constantly placed it on the 21st.

To remedy this defect, Pope Gregory ordered that ten days should be suppressed in the almanac of 1582, the 5th of October being denominated the 15th, as in these days, fewer festivals occurred than in any other ten consecutive days in the year; and to prevent the recurrence of this error for the future, it was directed, by a public bull, that every three centurial years out of four, after A. D. 1600, (which in the Julian calendar are leap-years,) should be only common years of 365 days each. Thus 1700, 1800, and 1900, are styled common years, 2000 a bissextile, 2100, 2200, and 2300, common years, 2400 a bissextile, &c. &c.

By this last correction of the Calendar, the Gregorian year is so nearly commensurate with the revolution of the earth round the sun, that an error of a day cannot be made in less than 3,600 years. If the intercalations be made according to the calculations of the late M. de la Lande, and other eminent astronomers of the last and present centuries, an error of a day need not be committed in less than a million of years!

The papal bull, by which this alteration is made, is thus intituled.—"Constitutio Gregorii Papæ XIII. pro approbatione et introductione novi Kalendarii ad usum universæ Ecclesiæ Romanæ; quâ, inter plura cætera præcipit et mandat, ut de mense Octobris hujus anni 1582, decem dies inclusivè a III Nonarum usque ad Pridie Idus eximantur, et dies qui festum S. Francisci IV. Nonas celebrari solitum sequitur, dicatur Idus Octobris, Datum Tusculi, Anno Incarnationis Dum. 1582, sexto Kal. Martii. Pontif. sui anno X."

"The Constitution of Pope Gregory XIII. for the approval and introduction of the New Calendar for the use of the Romish church universally; in which, among many other things, he decrees and commands, that ten days be struck off from the month of October of this present year 1582; namely, from the third of the Nones, (Oct. 5,) to the day before the Ides (Oct. 14,) both inclusive; and that the day which follows the festival of St. Francis, usually celebrated as the IVth of the Nones, should be called the Ides of October. Given at Tusculum, in the year of the Incarnation of our Lord 1582, on the sixth of the Calends of March, (Feb. 24,) and in the tenth year of his Pontificate." See Suppl. au Corps Diplomatique, Tome II. Part I. pp. 187, 188.

This alteration of the Calendar was not adopted by the British till 1752, in which year, the day after the second of September was called Sept. 14. All the nations of Europe have adopted this mode of reckoning except the Russians, who follow the Julian account, introduced among them by Peter the Great, instead of the Constantinopolitan æra, by which their chronology had been previously regulated.

The Commentator should make an apology to his Readers for the introduction of the preceding Tables and Calculations; as having, apparently, but little relation to the subject of the Epistle to the Romans: but the very obvious utility of what is here inserted, will more than plead his excuse.
